Mr. Kershner would not thank us or any other paper to speak of his journal as the "evangelist," or even the "Christian-evangelist." We presume not even the most rampant of the "little d" cult would want to go as far as "christian-evangelist." A people, like an individual or a journal, has a right to its appropriate name. The Disciples are a body of Christians with a history, an organization and various agencies for the advancement of their work. As such they have the right to the title which time and usage as well as their own choice have conferred upon them. No one who wishes to think clearly will desire to confuse the Disciples, as this body of people is called, with the disciples of Jesus Christ, of every name throughout the world.

Nor is there the slightest progress toward unity in so ungrammatical a procedure. A writer must always be at pains to explain in some manner whether he means the one thing or the other when he indulges in such confusing terms. We have no objection to the right of any man to indulge himself in whimsical and eccentric conduct, so long as he does not take himself too seriously, or try to represent others. But a paper of the history and position of the Christian-Evangelist cannot afford to take a step so lacking in linguistic precision and good taste.

We are not interested in censoring the theology of the Christian-Evangelist, but in calling its attention to a matter of good English.

WORD FROM THE EDITOR

IT IS Mr. Morrison's expectation that he will reach New York from South America, on Friday of this week.

It has been a disappointment to him that he has been unable to send more material for the Christian Century. He writes: "I am hoping to get off a 'Visitor' article by this same boat, but if I fail, it will be due to the high pressure under which these Congresses keep me. I have no time either for sight-seeing or Century writing."

We are not surprised at this. But with his return to the office at the end of the week we can promise our readers the resumption of his interrupted writings, both editorial and descriptive.

THE WIDENING OF THE DOOR

Still others there are who have determined to face fully the implications of the plea of the Disciples for Christian unity, and have ceased all hesitation regarding the reception of members of any evangelical church who come with suitable credentials. In all such cases of which we know, immersion is the only baptism employed in the church. But the right and responsibility of the individual to stand upon his own convictions as to previous compliance with the institution of baptism is conceded without question.

The number of churches that have taken opportunity to put into operation one or another of these forms of recognition of the formerly unnoticed group who are really members of our churches, is considerable, and is constantly increasing. Most of them have inaugurated the practice, whatever it may be in their particular cases, with no desire to depart from the custom of the Disciples, but with a sense of loyalty to the plea so strong that they wish to make it convincingly in spite of the danger of misinterpretation on the part of brethren whom they love and for whom they have the utmost regard. And we are in position to know that the number of preachers and laymen committed in mind to some such plan is large and constantly increasing.

The Christian Century has its own views on this subject, and has not hesitated to give them frank utterance on occasion. Here we are merely chronicling facts. If anyone believes that this question is negligible or likely to subside for lack of concern about it, he has only to talk with the first dozen informed Disciples he meets. He will not find unity of opinion. But he will find awareness and concern. What will the sentiment and the usage be in another decade?

It is when we feel all broken up and wasted, and that we can only bring the bits to God, that he says, "Come," and He will take us and mend us and make us whole again.—Mrs. A. D. T. Whitney.

The Larger Christian World

A DEPARTMENT OF INTERDENOMINATIONAL ACQUAINTANCE :: By Orvis F. Jordan

Raymond Robins Talks to College Students.

A religious personality of unique significance is Raymond Robins, the settlement worker of Chicago. A lawyer with established reputation, once a gold-hunter in the Klondike, he is now an apostle of humanity and a witness for Jesus Christ. He has just concluded a tour of the colleges of the country where marked religious results have been achieved. He interprets modern social Christianity with telling effect to young people.

Wants to Throw Out Whole Presbytery.

Excommunication by wholesale is what is demanded by the Cincinnati presbytery of the Presbyterian church. In preparing an overture to the Grand Assembly they said: "The presbytery of New York, being guilty of deliberate and long-continued disloyalty to the doctrinal standards of the Presbyterian church, and being persistently disobedient to the mandates of the General Assembly, the General Assembly is requested by the presbytery of Cincinnati to take such steps as may be necessary to cut off from the Presbyterian church in the U. S. A., the presbytery of New York, if no other methods will prevail." An overture asking Assembly to obtain a determination of the validity of the compact of 1870 with the theological seminaries was adopted, with overtures asking Assembly to secure enforcement of trusts imposed upon the funds of Union Seminary and asking Assembly to exclude from the ministry those who are assailing the fundamental truths of the gospel.

Summer Vacation Bible Schools.

Already a number of Chicago Sunday-schools in different denominations are planning to hold week-day schools of religion with a broad program of recreation and uplift, during the coming summer. The idea was started by the Baptists, they claim, but the Presbyterians have done much in the development of the idea. Fly traps will be manufactured in Presbyterian schools this year and the campaign against the housefly will receive marked attention in every way.

Death of Dr. Josiah Strong in New York.

The Rev. Josiah Strong, president since 1902 of the American Institute for Social Service, president of the Social Center Association of America, former president of the American Foreign and Christian union, editor and author, died in a New York hospital last week. Dr. Strong was born at Naperville, Ill., in 1847, was graduated from Western Reserve college in 1869 and from Lane Theological seminary in 1871. He was ordained to the Congregational ministry the same year. He held pastorates in Sandusky and Cincinnati, O., was from 1881 to 1884 secretary of the Home Missionary Society for Ohio, Kentucky, West Virginia and western Pennsylvania, and for ten years was secretary of the Evangelical Alliance for the United States. He was also at one time a trustee of Oberlin college, and during residence in Wyoming chaplain of the Wyoming house of representatives. Dr. Strong wrote a number of books dealing with social betterment and religious subjects.

Considers Work of Church After the War.

The Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America has already taken into account the mission of America to Europe in spiritual things after the war is over. They recently sent general secretary, Dr. Chas. S. Macfarland, on a tour of the stricken countries of Europe and while there he met the great religious leaders in the large cities. He reports that America is still largely misinformed with regard to the whole situation. American Red Cross nurses and physicians are helping to beget good feeling which will give America religious influence after the war.

Congregationalists Mourn Death of President Angell.

The death on April 8, of James Burrill Angell, of the University of Michigan, removed a figure of great significance to the church as well as to the educational world. Dr. Angell was born in Scituate, R. I., Jan. 7, 1829. He graduated from Brown University in 1849 where he was the professor of modern languages for seven years. From 1860 to 1866 he was editor of the "Providence Journal," from 1866 to 1871 president of the University of Vermont and in 1871 began his long and illustrious career as president of the University of Michigan. He was United States Minister to China in 1880-1881 and Minister to Turkey in 1897. He was president of the Second International Congregational Council which met in Boston in 1899.

Heretical Bishop Dies.

The bishop whose removal from office was demanded by the Bishop of Zanzibar, died recently. He was Rt. Rev. William George Peel, of Mombasa, Africa. Around him raged the famous Kikuyu controversy of recent years. His offence (!) was that he recognized as Christians at the communion table some others than confirmed Episcopalians. In his diocese there are 8,000 natives who are now followers of Christ. He has served as bishop since 1899 and his life has been notably useful in building up not only his denomination, but the larger cause of Christianity.

Catholic Institutions Criticized.

The State Board of Charities of New York has made a report recently through their agent, Commissioner Strong, with regard to the condition of some Roman Catholic institutions. As the report was adverse, the Catholics have been holding mass meetings and making vigorous protest. Statements were published by patients of the Heights hospital that nurses were at times intoxicated and unfit for duty, and neglected patients to their serious injury. Mayor Mitchell is himself a Roman Catholic, but he defends the report of Commissioner Strong and calls him a "fearless and unprejudiced gentleman of high standing in the community." Father Farrell, head of Catholic charities, has led the attack on Commissioner Strong.

Presbyterians Are Thrifty.

Presbyterians live up to their tradition of Scotch canniness and have no deficits in their missionary treasuries. In these war days when philanthropies all feel the pull of the situation, both Home and Foreign Missionary Societies of the Presbyterian denomination have their annual budget met up to March 31 and some thousands of dollars left over in each treasury.

Optimistic About Ministerial Supply.

The supply of ministers for the churches has been a subject concerning which there was much pessimism in recent years. Dr. Talcott Williams, of the School of Journalism of Columbia University, is authority for the statement that the number of ministers has increased in thirty years by a larger percentage than either lawyers or physicians. The number of preachers has doubled, which shows their profession has grown faster than the population. In Germany, the theological students have decreased nearly fifty per cent in the past generation, and in England the number has been about stationary.

Great Rusian Churches Growing in America.

The coming of many Russians to America is resulting in the formation of strong Orthodox congregations in this country. Recently, it is reported, the choir of the Russian Cathedral of St. Nicholas, of New York, sang in Springfield, Mass., before four thousand people. The program was entirely from Russian church music and was rendered in the ancient Slavonic tongue of the ritual. The concert was complimentary on the part of the Russian Archbishop and the expenses of the occasion were met by Mr. Charles R. Crane, of Chicago. This indicates something of the activity of this old church so new in America.

English Quakers Do Their Part in War.

The historic protest against war has not abated among English Quakers but they are showing that their patriotism is not to be impeached. Some of these men are serving in the hospital service, and many more are busy in the work of repairing the ravages of war in the sections which have been devastated by the armies. There are now in France 150 English Friends working without salary to help the poverty-stricken people in their efforts to restore their homes.

The world likes best a religion that has its claws cut and its teeth drawn; that is simply ornamental, and offends nobody. But if my religion is one that gets the praise of completely unsanctified men, because, as they say, it is so reasonable and sane and moderate, always "kept in its proper place," never making any protest against iniquity and wrong, I may surely ask myself with serious concern, whether that is the kind of religion under the power of which my Master lived and died, or the kind of religion that should satisfy me as his disciple.—Rev. G. H. Knight.

THE CRIPPLE OF LYSTRA.
Lesson for May 21.

Golden Text: He giveth power to the faint; and to him that hath no might he increaseth strength. Isaiah 40:29. Lesson Acts 14: verses 8-20 printed.

Memorize verses 8-10.

(8) And at Lystra there sat a certain man impotent in his feet, a cripple from his mother's womb, who never had walked. (9) The same heard Paul speaking; who, fastening his eyes upon him, and seeing that he had faith to be made whole (10) Said with a loud voice, Stand upright on thy feet. And he leaped up and walked. (11) And when the multitude saw what Paul had done, they lifted up their voice, saying in the speech of Lycaonia, The gods are come down to us in the likeness of men. (12) And they called Barnabas, Jupiter; and Paul, Mercury, because he was the chief speaker. (13) And the priest of Jupiter whose temple was before the city, brought oxen and garlands unto the gates, and would have done sacrifice with the multitudes. (14) But when the apostles, Barnabas and Paul, heard of it, they rent their garments, and sprang forth among the multitude, crying out (15) and saying, Sirs, why do ye these things? We also are men of like passions with you, and bring you good tidings, that ye should turn from these vain things unto a living God, who made the heaven and the earth and the sea, and all that in them is: (16) who in the generations gone by suffered all the nations to walk in their own ways. (17) And yet he left not himself without witness, in that he did good and gave you from heaven rains and fruitful seasons, filling your hearts with food and gladness. (18) And with these sayings scarce restrained they the multitudes from doing sacrifice unto them.

But there came Jews thither from Antioch and Iconium: and having persuaded the multutudes, they stoned Paul, and dragged him out of the city, supposing that he was dead. (20) But as the disciples stood round about him, he rose up, and entered into the city: and on the morrow he went forth with Barnabas to Derbe.

VERSE BY VERSE.

8. At Lystra sat a certain man. As in the story in Acts 3:2; the lame man sat at some familiar place on the street begging.—Who never had walked. The history of the man was well known; he was not a pretender

9. Heard Paul speaking. Doubtless he had been in the habit of hearing Paul speak before the healing faith came to him.—Fastening his eyes upon him. He was paying close attention to what Paul had to say and thus attracted Paul's attention.—He had faith to be made whole. Faith has many possibilities and both Paul and Jesus were always on the lookout for the faintest indication of faith, that they might encourage it.

10. Said with a loud voice. This may have been to call attention to what was about to happen.—Stand upright on thy feet. Just the thing he had not been able to do.—Leaped up and walked. The tense of the first word denotes a single act, while that of the second denotes continuous action.

11. They lifted up their voice. The multitude spoke with one mighty voice.—In the speech of Lycaonia. Paul had been speaking to them in Greek. When talking to each other they used their own dialect. It would be natural in their excitement to use the most familiar form of speech.—In the likeness of men. A remnant of the earlier pagan belief that the gods visited the earth in human form. What they said was true in a sense.

12. Barnabas, Jupiter and Paul, Mercury. The Greek names of these deities were Zeus and Hermes. Mercury is the god of skill in speech. He was the spokesman for the gods.

13. The priests of Jupiter. It is unnecessary to supply "temple." The god was regarded as present in his temple.—Unto the gates. What gates are intended is very uncertain. Some say, the city gates; others, the temple gates; and still others the doors of the house, where Paul and Barnabas were residing.

14. They rent their garments. A sign of their horror at the sacrilege.—Sprang forth among the multitude crying out. They probably ran from their home into the company and with inarticulate shouts attracted their attention.

15. Sirs, why do ye these things? Literally: Men, what are you doing? They were doing this because they did not know better. "These things" refers to the rites about to be offered.—Of like passions. We are of similar natures.—These vain things. These useless things of adoration.—Who made, etc. These words speak of God's power of creation. It is simply an earnest protest against idolatry, and a proclamation of one living God.

16. Suffered all the nations. In this statement Paul intends to show God's forbearance and long-suffering. The nations may refer to the Gentiles.

17. He left not himself without witness. They were not without witness, for the works of God testified in his behalf. If the power of God failed for one season the world would starve.

18. Scarce restrained they the multitude. The people saw real values in what the apostles were saying to them.

19. There came Jews thither from Antioch and Iconium. Probably they were traveling merchants who came upon Paul again by chance.—Having persuaded the multitude. It is very difficult to comprehend the malignity of these Jews. And they are not all dead!

20. As the disciples stood round about him. Here we have an indication that the preaching of these men was fruitful.—He rose up. The disciples supposed him to be dead, and were greatly surprised to see him rise and go into the city. To Derbe.—Only a short distance.

The Gospel Among Barbarians

The Lesson in Today's Life.

BY ASA McDANIEL.

PAUL and Barnabas were preaching in Lystra when they met the lame man. He was obviously no professional mendicant, but one whose sad history was well known. It was an extraordinary case and one that received special attention. The man was found in the street at some public resort where he could receive aid. Paul found the people here and preached to them. Too long we have been content with just a few in the community while the masses go untouched. Some one has said that it is a crime to have fewer members in our Bible-school than we ought to have. At any rate, Paul sought the people.

Among his hearers was this lame man, full of all sorts of need. We are unable to tell how many needy men are continually in our neighborhood, until we meet them face to face. Paul was the instrument in God's hand to help the poor and unfortunate, and who knows but what such a task could be ours almost every day if only we were willing that God should use us as he did Paul.

When the people of Lystra saw the healing of the lame man they could not express themselves in the Greek readily enough, so used their native tongue to give vent to their surprise. Like so many, they lost sight of the real power which wrought the healing and sought to worship the instruments God was using. It is perfectly natural that this should be so for they had not cultivated their spiritual vision.

Many centuries of history have passed teaching us the better way and yet we are in danger of worshiping the church, book and organizatian rather than the spirit of God which gives them their real and effective power. This is seen very often in modern evangelism. When the evangelist has gone some of the so-called converts have gone also.

Having learned what the priests and the people were about to do, Paul and Barnabas, being enlightened Christian men, sensitive to the majesty of the Divine, and viewing with alarm any approach of idolatry, "rent their garments" in utter astonishment at their conduct. Paul's strong protest succeeded in restraining the people from carrying out their designs; but they did not succeed in getting a deep hold upon their hearts as subsequent movements abundantly prove.

Their effort to restrain the people from an undue regard for them should be a lesson for modern evangelists and ministers of all sorts under the same temptation.

Paul and Barnabas were meeting with success at Lystra until some people from a former field came to give the people a little unsought advice. These people never go to the sober-minded men of the community, but seek the fickle and untutored in which to plant their seed of contention and discord. Here they stirred up the crowd which is always fickle. In such chaos the trouble makers would find fertile soil and the mob soon began to manifest itself in true barbaric fashion by stoning Paul.

It happens sometimes that the Lord's servants have to go through some severe trials, but if they endure they come out "pure gold."

Disciples Table Talk

Southern Disciples Will Have an Assembly Near Shreveport.

The Southern Christian Assembly, to be permanently located on the State Encampment Grounds near the city of Shreveport, is now an assured fact, writes Claude L. Jones, state secretary. The opening session will be held June 15-23. The program this first year will provide for a School of Methods, giving definite, systematic instruction on all branches of Bible-school work, and, in addition a Christian congress feature, which will be in connection with the School of Methods. The Louisiana Disciples believe that the time has come for a closer bond of sympathy and greater co-operation among their scattered forces in the South. There are many problems peculiar to the South which can better be solved in a great get-together occasion for mutual council and inspiration. The city of Shreveport is quite central so far as southern territory is concerned, and by it many railroad lines are easily accessible from all points. The grounds comprise fifty-one acres of a beautifully wooded and well-watered tract of land within one hundred yards of a depot on the Kansas City railroad. The fine springs of water and shady hills and valleys make it an ideal place for a Summer Assembly. A lake well stocked with fish is situated on the grounds. Boating and other recreation and games will be provided for. A good dining hall and floored tents with canvas cots will insure the comfort of all in attendance, and that, too, at a minimum cost. Mr. Jones will be glad to furnish further information to any who may write him. He may be addressed at Shreveport.

Geo. W. Wise Reports Illinois State Bible-school Work.

Since the resignation of Clarence L. DePew as State Bible-school superintendent, the work of this department has been in the hands of the Bible-school committee, of which Geo. W. Wise is chairman. The committee is composed of busy pastors, and yet they have been giving as much time as possible to the work in an effort to keep it up until the time of the State Convention in Peoria, in September, when it is hoped that a new superintendent may be put in the field. Special stress is being put on the new "Standard of Efficiency," and it is the hope of the committee that 100 schools will have reached the Standard by September. Literature has been sent to the schools, containing wall charts, leaflets and report blanks with requests that these blanks be filled out and sent to the chairman of the committee at Camp Point, Ill. The committee has secured the service of some of the very best Bible-school workers for the State Convention program. Mr. Wise writes that the special need just now is that all the schools rally to the financial support of this work that a good leader may be secured for this department.

Geo. A. Campbell as a Spiritual Leader.

"Spiritual leadership" is the way H. G. Burgess, pastor at Canton, Mo., describes the work of George A. Campbell, of First church, Hannibal, in his pre-Easter devotional and inspirational meetings at Canton. "There are few things of greater value to a church," writes Mr. Burgess, "than the meetings we have just had. Themes heretofore considered only for the 'unconverted' were made to apply with a vital, forceful meaning to the life of the church member. These sermons deepened the life of every church member who heard them. Practically only mmbers heard them. Our church has a higher sense of its duty and obligations as a church because of these services. Mr. Campbell is one of the great preachers of his day. He has a splendid vision of his task and a personality that can make that vision real and live in the hearts of his people."

Norfolk, Va., Church Has High Aims for 1916.

The following "Aim" has been set for 1916 by the Bible-school at First church, Norfolk, Va., where Chas. M. Watson ministers: "1. An enrollment of 650 by second anniversary in October. 2. An attendance of 400 on Children's day in June. 3. An average offering of 5 cents per member attending. 4. Every member of the church a member of the Bible-school. 5. Every eligible member of the Bible-school a member of the church.

Rev. Graham Frank, of Liberty, Mo., who was elected president of the Disciples Congress at the recent session. F. E. Lumley was reelected secretary.

6. A special Decision week resulting in 25 added to the church. 7. All officers and teachers in attendance at departmental and workers' conference held at regularly appointed times. 8. A Missionary program adapted to the departments of the whole school. 9. A Social Service program adapted to departments of the whole school. 10. All officers, teachers and workers attendants of the Tuesday night School of Religious Training and Social Service.

H. K. Pendleton, Farmer-Preacher.

H. K. Pendleton, pastor of Central church, Houston, Tex., is both a progressive church man and a progressive farmer. He is a great believer in the possibilities of agricultural development in South Texas through the diversification of crops, reports a Houston daily. On his farm of 160 acres a few miles southwest of Houston, which he has had scientifically drained, he grows corn, cane, peanuts, sweet potatoes, and several other crops, including enough hay for all the stock on the place, which includes 100 head of hogs and ten head of high grade Jersey cows. He is a strong advocate of better stock for South Texas farms and has recently brought in some blooded stock. Mr. Pendleton is a son of the late Dr. W. K. Pendleton, and is a brother-in-law of the late Justice Lamar, of the United States supreme court.

Red Cross Work at Christian College.

Ten sections numbering, each, from ten to fifteen resident students, have been formed to do Red Cross work for sufferers from the European war. Each section will meet for an hour and a half on Monday of each week. Other Christian College notes: At the time that the Men and Millions team visited Columbia a great meeting was held at the college. In response to the appeals made by the speakers for enlistment for Christian service, fifty-one life cards were signed by the students. Mrs. Elizabeth Ross, Mrs. O. W. Lawrence and Miss Bertha Lacock representing the interests of the C. W. B. M. in a campaign in Missouri, were guests of the college during their visit to Columbia, on a recent date. Miss Lacock made an address on Latin America before the faculty and student body at the chapel hour recently.

Two Big Features at Bethany Assembly.

Prof. A. W. Taylor, Bible College, Columbia, Mo., will deliver several addresses at Bethany Assembly on Social Problems. Two of these will be illustrated with stereopticon views taken from real life. Prof. Taylor is recognized as an authority in this realm of thought. Frank M. Lowe, Kansas City, Mo., the new National Field Secretary for Christian Endeavor of the Disciples of Christ, assisted by C. E. Hill, the National Secretary, will hold a ten days' school for Endeavorers at Bethany Assembly, Aug. 8-18. This will be the third year that the school has been held. Indications now point to a large attendance. Mr. Lowe will soon enter upon a tour of Indiana and adjoining states in the interest of the school.

Death of S. M. Hunt, a Leader Among the Disciples for a Half-Century.

With the death of S. M. Hunt in Pasadena, Cal., on April 6, another leader passes from the Disciple ranks. Mr. Hunt had an unusual career. He "shipped before the mast" from Boston in 1850, at the age of fifteen. He "rounded" Cape Horn seven times and circumnavigated the globe three times. After eight years' experience at sea, during which he was promoted to first mate, he resigned and entered business in Chicago. Here he was burned out in the great fire in 1875. He then removed to Springfield, Mass., where he continued in business until the time of his death. During one of his visits home, between voyages, he united with the Dudley St. Baptist church, Boston, at the age of 19. This marked the beginning of his long, active career as a Disciple of Christ. He served in the battle fields of the Civil War as a member of the Christian Commission. While in this service, he made the acquaintance of Dwight L. Moody and became one of his active assistants in his great work in Chicago. Mr. Hunt was always catholic in spirit. He chafed under denominational restraint and limitation. He longed and prayed for the unity of the followers of Christ. Being in Rochester, N. Y., one day on business, he chanced to notice an announcement of a meeting that was in progress in the city under the leadership of Frank Talmage. Mistaking the name of the evangelist for that of T. DeWitt Talmage, he decided that he would go to hear the famous Brooklyn preacher. When he reached the place of the meeting he was greatly disappointed to find the meeting was being held in a second floor hall, the audience a few dozen people, and the preacher one of whom he had never heard before. As he left the hall, after the meeting, O. G. Hartzog, who was the minister of the little congregation, invited him to return and handed him a tract which he put in his pocket and at once forgot. Taking a train the next morning before he had time to buy a paper, he thought of the tract, which proved to be "Our Position," by Isaac Errett. He was so delighted with it that he read it two or three times. The principles set forth in this tract appealed to him so strongly that he determined at once to look up the people who held such views and to unite with them. Upon inquiry he found that there was a congregation of these people in Boston and that George Darsie was its minister. By previous arrangements, through correspondence, he made a special trip from Springfield to Boston to identify himself with a people who stood for nonsectarian Christianity. For fifteen years, from 1887 to 1902, he served as Secretary of the New England Christian Missionary Society, serving at his own charges. J. H. Mohorter writes that Mr. Hunt probably did more than any other single Disciple to plant the cause in the New England States. He had much to do with the establishment of the churches at Bridgeport, Conn., at Brockton and Everett, Mass. He took the lead in the organization, in the house of Dr. Detchon, of the church in Springfield, Mass. He gave liberally to every enterprise among our people in New England. He was a generous supporter of all of our organized work. He influenced a number of young men to enter the ministry.

Central Church, New York, Gives Chinese Students Reception.

A committee of seven college officials, all members of Central church, New York, arranged an informal reception for the nearly one hundred Chinese young men and women students in the colleges of New York City. The reception was given on Friday evening, April 28, in the church parlors. Greetings were given by representatives of Nanking University, Drake University, Bethany College, and other schools. There was a brief program of music including several numbers by Chinese students, and a social hour with refreshments. Dr. Finis Idleman, of the church, is a trustee of Drake University, and is greatly interested in student work. The New York Alumni of Drake attended the reception. P. F. Jerome is chairman of the committee.

Noted Temperance Leader at New York Church.

Mr. John G. Wooley, the noted temperance advocate, spoke at Central church, New York, April 30. This meeting was one of the first in the series of one thousand meetings just inaugurated in a nation wide campaign for prohibition of the liquor traffic. Finis Idleman, the pastor, presided.

BRIEF NEWS NOTES.

—The congregation of First church, Paris, Tex., has presented its pastor, J. N. Wooten, with a Maxwell car.

—"The most successful year in the history of the church in many respects"—that is the way Galen L. Rose, pastor at Cimarron, Kan., describes the two-weeks pre-Easter meetings at that church, although at the same time he mentions the fact that the numerical results were small The attendance at the meetings was very large, and the spirit of harmony unusual. Mr. Rose writes that one of the best results of the series was the elimination of local prejudice toward the work of the Disciples.

—Beginning with the dedication of the church at Bellefontaine, O., Traverce Harrison, pastor, G. L. Snively is dedicating nine new churches in as many Lord's days, concluding with W. G. Montgomery at Campbellsville, Ky. Mr. Snively is now in a meeting with G. A. Long, at Mt. Vernon, O., following the dedication of a $45,000 plant there.

—H. M. Stansifer, pastor at Flemingsburg, Ky., reports that, due to the every member canvass, this church has given as much for missions in the first six months of the missionary year as was given throughout last year. During these six months, in addition, there has been at all times from $150 to $700 in the treasury, with all bills paid. Mr. Stansifer has found the preparation of a printed quarterly report of the standing of each every-member-canvass pledger a great help in keeping pledges paid up.

—The Kentucky Female Orphan School has received a gift of $18,000 from James M. Tisdale.

—F. Z. Burkette, pastor at Greensburg, Ind., delivered a sermon for the local chapter of the Red Men, his theme being "Freedom, Friendship and Charity."

—The Ladies' Aid of West St. church, Tipton, Ind., will build a $5,000 parsonage

—L. J. Marshall, of Wabash Ave. church, Kansas City, gave a Chautauqua address at the Butler, Mo., church on the theme, "The Futility of Militarism."

—On Easter day, at Euclid Ave. church, Cleveland, O., fifty persons came into the church at the regular meetings, with no special evangelistic appeal. Thirty-one of these came from the Sunday-school. J. H Goldner is the spiritual leader in this great church.

—O. A. Smith has been at Hubbard, Tex., but a little over a month, but he has already revived the C. W. B. M. organization and young woman's circle, and the regular prayer-meeting service. A week of prayer was recently observed, with a thank-offering at the close. There is a live Bible-school at Hubbard, also a fine Ladies' Aid.

—Jackson Blvd. church, Chicago, Austin Hunter, minister, closed a campaign of decision with 26 persons added to the church membership on two Sundays. This church is known as a continuous revival church.

—Central church, Peoria, H. E. Sala, pastor, will dedicate its new $65,000 home June 4.

—The Norwood, O., congregation has raised the salary of its pastor, C. R. Stauffer, $400.

—Among the Disciples on the program at the National Missionary Congress held at Washington last week were A. E. Cory and R. A. Doan. The Congress will be reported fully in next week's issue.

—I. W. Spencer, of Lexington, Ky., was the chief speaker at the Northern Texas Ministers' Meeting, on May 1.

—E. M. Waits, pastor at Magnolia Ave., Ft. Worth Tex., recently delivered an address on "Browning's Idea of Immortality" before the local Browning class.

A Story of Christlike Devotion

THE PAUL AUSTIN MEMORIAL FUND.

Established May 2nd, 1916.

The Thirty-Third Name Fund for Church Extension.

There are only two classes in whose memory monuments may be built,—the living and the dead. If a living father and mother, in memory of a departed son, erect a monument that monument may be a dead stone or a living church. If that same father and mother erect a Five Thousand Dollar Memorial Fund in our Church Extension Work it will be the greatest living monument of all, because, through the money going and returning every five years, by the Church Extension plan, this $5,000 fund will in the course of a quarter of a century erect 85 church buildings in which thousands hear the Living Word preached and, accepting it, take the new life in Christ and these in turn go on as evangels of Jesus.

Brother and Sister E. M. Austin of Litchfield, Illinois, chose to create a Memorial Fund in our Church Extension Work in memory of Paul Austin, their dearly beloved son, who departed this life last July, rather than erect a dead monument of stone at a great price. This $5,000 might have erected a stately mausoleum on which could have been engraved "To the memory of Paul Austin." But that stately monument of dead granite would be at the cost of hundreds of living churches in the years to come. Vandal hands and the gnawing tooth of time would destroy the monument of granite but the "Paul Austin Memorial Fund" becomes, in a peculiar sense, a living monument, more lasting than brass or granite, more precious than gold or silver or gems. Unlike all other monuments this one to Paul Austin is imperishable, everlasting, going forth to help and bless mankind in the highest possible sense. In the presence of his Master, Paul Austin will now be looking upon this world throughout the centuries yet to come in joyful satisfaction because there is more joy in heaven over one church builded in Christ's name than over ninety and nine marble monuments that need not have been built.

In sending the $5,000 cash on April 15, Bro. Austin writes: "This is the happiest day of my life. The day when my dear, precious boy who died last July commences to live again in the Memorial Fund which will be constantly building churches. He does not begin to live again in the flesh but his influence for good for all time begins today. No wonder his parents are rejoicing. So many parents could do the same thing if they would. A very few have done it. I pray that our example may be emulated by many others so that the Cause of our Dear Lord may be advanced since their children, now gone before, are blessing the world through funds given to perpetuate their names."

Paul Austin leaped into a partially empty swimming pool in Lexington, Ky., while attending Transylvania University. Striking a cement bottom his system received such a jolt that he never fully recovered. He was a peculiarly consecrated Christian and was expecting to be a teacher after graduating at Transylvania and Harvard. Through all his suffering, which could not be relieved by the best medical and surgical skill, he led a patient, consecrated Christ-like life. Paul would have been a mighty influence for good had he lived and the only motive his parents had in making this sacrifice now in advancing this money, which would have been Paul's had he lived, is to do good as Paul would have done had he lived. Mr. Austin said, "We feel it would have been almost a crime to hoard it up, when, by sacrifice, we can get along without it."

A separate ledger account of the "Paul Austin Fund" will be kept on the Church Extension Books and an exhibit made each year in the Board's published report showing the number of churches aided by this Fund. The annual totals from the beginning will indicate how effectiveness accumulates with years. The General Drake Fund established in 1889 with only $1,000 cash, and the remaining $4,000 paid in at the rate of $500 a year, has done the work of $44,495 by the money coming and going. 86 churches have been built and the interest at 4 per cent on the church loans has amounted to $6,328.86 which added to the original $5,000 now makes the Drake Fund $11,328.86. The Paul Austin Fund will do more than the Drake Fund in the same period of time since it starts with $5,000 cash. Reports will be made to Brother and Sister Austin from time to time. With what keen interest they will watch this Fund do work while they live and when they stand on the river's brink with unspeakable joy they can look on the church buildings erected by this Fund whose influence goes on for all time.

jected to the use of their names but were persuaded by the writer to allow their use that their act might persuade others to do the same good work with their money. There are scores of men and women who could follow the example of these good people and establish Name Funds of $5,000 by paying the amount at once or in payments of $500 annually for ten years. We pray the Lord of the harvest may raise up others very soon to do this noble thing. G. W. Muckley, Cor. Sec'y., 603 New England Bldg., Kansas City, Mo.

—Workers from the several churches of Painesville, O., have been meeting weekly for the past two months to study and discuss topics of general interest to such workers. The results have been so beneficial that a course of study for the coming fall and winter has been arranged and will be pushed. State Bible-school Superintendent Wilford H. McLain gave an address at the last meetng of the series just closed.

—Beginning May 1 the following Ohio schools are engaging in a prolonged contest: Findlay, First; Fostoria, Tiffin, Bowling Green, Lima, Van Wert, Kenton. The per cent of increase in attendance attained by a school will determine its standing.

—Ernest H. Wray, of Steubenville, O., First church, reports that Easter Sunday was observed as Decision Day there. There were fifteen additions to the church. This congregation sent Mr. Wray as a delegate to the Laymen's Congress, Washington, D. C., April 26-30.

—Prof. W. B. Taylor, Dean of the Bible department of Bethany College, is supplying the pulpit at the church at Beaver Falls, Pa., in the absence of the pastor, C. M. Smith. His discourses are highly spoken of by the people.

—The Men and Millions leaders at Indianapolis secured a gift of ten thousand dollars from President Howe, of Butler College.

—Randolph Cook, pastor of the church at Albuquerque, N. Mex., has been invited to teach a Young Men's Bible Class at the State University on Tuesday night of each week. The class is only a few weeks old and has an enrollment of twenty-four.

—Madison A. Hart, of Columbia, Mo., will be the lecturer at the annual Seventh District Retreat which is held each summer at Camden Point.

—The "Ever Faithful Class" of the Bible-school at Coldwater, Kan., is leading in the completion and fitting up the church basement for class rooms and social gatherings.

—Bedford and Chagrin Falls, O., began a contest Easter Sunday to continue twelve weeks. The points at issue are Bible-school attendance, new pupils, and church attendance of Bible-school pupils.

—Easter features at First church, Paris, Ill., included a continuous church and Bible-school service, with brief sermon and a call for "decisions;" also an orchestra concert in the evening.

—Jefferson St. church, Buffalo, N. Y., featured a preparedness service two weeks ago, at which the pastor, B. S. Farrall, preached a sermon advocating the right brand of preparedness. Two thousand persons were present.

—W. D. Van Voorhis, pastor at Parkersburg, W. Va., writes enthusiastically in praise of Martin Weekly, recently pastor of the First Methodist church, Wellsville, N. Y., but who has come into the Disciples' ministry. Mr. Weekly made a fine record as a preacher at Parkersburg, and at Wellsville. He is about 38 years of age, a born preacher and a splendid leader. Mr. Van Voorhis believes he should be put to work at once in a Disciple pulpit.

—Frank W. Lynch, formerly of Galesburg, Kan., has left the evangelistic field because of ill health, and has taken the pastorate at Sharon, Kan. Mr. Lynch is preaching a series of sermons on "The Many Sided Christ," to large audiences. Mr. Lynch recently delivered a lecture on "Schools I Have Seen in Other Lands," before the Sharon Parent-Teacher Association.

—Arthur Dillinger, pastor at Altoona, Ia., has been given a leave of absence for three months by his congregation, that he may lecture from the Chautauqua platform.

—Claire L. Waite, recently called to First church, Colorado Springs, Colo., writes that great credit is due George B. Van Arsdall for his masterly work as temporary pastor of this church, following the resignation of S. E. Brewster. During the past few weeks, under Mr. Van Arsdall's leadership, the church has revised its roll; put on the every member canvass and installed most successfully a new financial system; conducted a week of services preceding Easter, during which forty-one persons responded to the invitation, under Mr. Van Arsdall's preaching, most of these being by confession and baptism; arranged an installation service for the new pastor and a reception for the new pastor and family on May 5, when Mr. Waite began at Colorado Springs. Mr. Waite closed his work at Central, Cincinnati, O., April 30. On Easter Sunday at this church, A. McLean led the congregation most happily in raising the entire current indebtedness of $600. This was done in about five minutes.

—S. F. Houtchens, pastor at Riverside church, Fort Worth, Texas., has hit upon a splendid committee idea in his men's class. He calls three committees the medical, legal and employment departmnts.

—After hearing Bert Wilson and others in a missionary rally recently, Miss Mary Miller, daughter of Col. Miller, well-known Disciple of Texas, announced that she would deny herself the summer trip planned and the extra costumes she expected to buy and support a missionary on her own account.

—North Eaton, a rural church near Cleveland, O., which under the leadership of C. M. Ford has been making rapid progress, made an enviable record April 16. Over 200 people were present for Bible-school on time.

—"There is a dawning consciousness on the part of many that the church, without a professional evangelist, is able to enlist recruits for the Lord's army," writes Allen T. Shaw, pastor at Mt. Sterling, Ill., reporting the fine success of the pre-Easter week of home preaching at his church. W. H. Talley, of Keokuk, assisted with the singing. There were 32 persons added to the church membership through this series.

—High Street, Akron, L. N. D. Wells, pastor, is having a veritable pentecost. Ninety-five persons responded to the gospel invitation on the first day of a two-weeks' meeting with home forces. There were 1,447 present at the Bible-school on Easter day, with 545 in the men's class, which Mr. Wells teaches.

—H. O. Pritchard gave an address at the annual meeting of the church at Janesville, Wis.

—The Christian Worker, of Des Moines, has recently celebrated its thirtieth birthday; the Texas Courier also has just passed its twenty-eighth anniversary.

—A feature of the Easter celebration with Broadway church, Los Angeles, was afternoon communion services held in the homes of invalid members. C. F. Hutslar, the pastor, writes that during the day's services three of his Bible-school teachers gave their lives to Christ.

—S. S. McCahill, of San Francisco, Cal., writes that the following names should have been added to the list of Disciple ministers recently published in these columns having received the D.D. degree: Geo. W. Brewster, Jr.; Peter Colvin, Frank S. Ford, J. J. Evans, P. C. Macfarlane, L. A. Pier and J. J. White. All of these received the degree from Berkeley Bible Seminary, where T. A. Boyer and D. A. Russell also received their degrees.

—Perry L. Schuler, minister at Second church, Cedar Rapids, Ia., writes that First church will join with Second in the coming dedication of its new church home, George L. Snively, being in charge of the dedication services. The new plant cost $35,000.

SPECIAL MINISTERS' MEETING.

A Special Ministers' Meeting of extraordinary importance and interest will be held on Monday, May 8, at 2 p. m., in the First Methodist church, corner Clark and Washington Sts. The Illinois Vigilance Association has secured for this occasion some moving picture films showing in a marvelous way the ravages which are being wrought by venereal diseases. One film is entitled "Germs at Work in the Human Flesh." Another "Germs in the Blood and the Warfare Which the Blood Wages Against Them." There will also be displayed a thousand feet of film taken in a hospital showing the progress of these diseases in their various stages.

These pictures are of such great interest and of such scientific accuracy that they will be displayed later in the week before the physicians of the city. Mr. F. O. Clements, of the National Cash Register Company, will deliver the lecture.

Preceding the lecture Mr. Frederick W. Peabody, a Boston lawyer, will speak for ten minutes upon "The Absurdities of Christian Science."

While the meeting is primarily for ministers, everybody, both men and women who are interested, are cordially invited to attend.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR NOTES.

The church at Uhrichsville, O., is a living link in the Foreign Christian Missionary Society, supporting Mr. A. R. Bowman at Wu Wei Chow, China. The faithful Endeavor Society wanting to assist as much as possible, will provide $50, for one of Brother Bowman's native helpers, thus becoming a "life-line" society.

The society of the Bismark Ave. church, Indianapolis, Ind., wishing to assume definite work on the foreign field, has given the $20 necessary for Escharan in the orphanage at Damoh, India. This is a blessed, helpful relationship with the foreign field. Elmer L. Griffith recently went out from this society as a missionary to Cuba.

The Endeavor Societies continue to make splendid gains in their gifts over last year to the Foreign Christian Missionary Society. The gain to April 20 is $2,200. Endeavorers are beginning to feel the watchword of the year. "Ten Thousand Dollars from the Endeavor Societies by September 30, 1916" is in sight. A continuation of the present interest will insure the victory.

Nine Great Departments of Modern Home Missions

1. EVANGELISM.

   Meetings held by capable evangelists for opening up new fields and for developing mission churches. Pioneer missions in cities and on frontier. A. M. Harvout, Chairman, Commission on Evangelism.

2. MAINTENANCE.

   Regular financial assistance, upon a reduction scale, appropriated to Mission Churches until brought to self-support. Strong churches in forty of our largest cities have thus been developed. Grant K. Lewis, Secretary.

3. EDUCATIONAL.

   The Bible School Department with its twenty-three field workers in twenty-five states, its trained specialists in departmental Bible School efficiency, and its Schools of Methods and its Commission on Standardization. Robert M. Hopkins, Bible School Secretary.

4. SUPERVISORY.

   Through National, State, Provincial and City Boards and Secretaries to provide adequate supervision of the churches and Bible Schools, advising, assisting and protecting them and their interests. F. W. Burnham, President.

5. IMMIGRANT MISSIONS.

   Actual work among Immigrant peoples under competent leadership with constructive policy and sound, conservative methods. A commission to thoroughly investigate the entire field and to report to the Convention. Finis S. Idleman, Chairman, Commission on Immigration.

6. FOREIGN RELATIONS.

   A Commission appointed at Toronto Convention to study and to foster relations with Movements like our own in other lands, especially Russia and Scandinavia. Z. T. Sweeney, Chairman, Commission on Foreign Relations.

7. THE RURAL CHURCH.

   Attempting to understand and to help solve the problem of the rural church. The co-operation and co-ordination of forces for religious development of rural life in America. Alva W. Taylor, Secretary, Commission on Social Service and Rural Church.

8. CO-OPERATION.

   Through the Home Missions Council and kindred agencies maintaining co-operative work at ports of entry, among the Indians, in Army and Navy, in prisons and lumber camps. Grant K. Lewis, Secy.

9. STATISTICAL.

   The constant gathering, correcting and collecting of statistics of our people and our churches—of vital importance to every agency, periodical, college, church and preacher among us. The Annual Year Book.

The above Nine Departments indicate the scope of the work now being carried forward by The American Christian Missionary Society. The field is great. The needs are appealing. The task is imperative.

.ANNUAL OFFERING IN THE CHURCHES FIRST LORD'S DAY IN MAY.

What the American Society is Doing

Last Year's Work.

During the year closing with September 30, 1915, the society assisted in the support of 315 missionaries, who baptized 5,893 persons, and added otherwise 4,414 making a total of 10,307 additions. These workers in the field organized 54 churches, and raised for property and current expenses $1,549,301.31.

Departments of Service.

With the great industrial and social developments of recent years has come a widening horizon of Home Missions. The society is making an organized effort to meet present day demands. The following departments of service are worthy of mention:

Sunday-school Department.

Our Bible-school department was organized in 1910. In five years the number of contributing schools has increased from 1,204 to 2,534, yet there are over 5,000 Sunday-schools that sent no offering last year. Our present year's budget will require $50,000 from the Sunday-schools. We have twenty-three men and women doing field work under this department. There are twenty-five states in which we assist financially in the maintenance of Bible-school work. Almost all the other states are asking for and needing such assistance. We are helping to make efficient the Bible-schools in all our churches everywhere. We have in our employ a trained specialist in the elementary, secondary and adult departments of service. We have a negro field secretary giving all his time to the 700 negro churches. Teacher training, graded lessons, organized classes, schools of methods, and missionary education receive thoughtful, competent direction.

Church Efficiency.

"Efficiency Expert" is only a new name for an ancient servant in the Church. Our state secretaries are in a class by themselves. They are the general utility men, ready at a moment's notice to hasten at the call for help that they might set things in order. The members of this valiant corps of specialists are located in every state and province of the North American continent, and more than any other workers in our energetic brotherhood are helping our churches to reach definite standards of efficiency. They have an annual midyear meeting which does much to fix definite lines of progress for all our work.

Immigration.

The American Society is outlining an aggressive policy for reaching the foreigners in our country. The Los Angeles Convention authorized the appointment of a commission to thoroughly study the problem of immigation and to outline a definite policy of procedure and report at a future convention. The society has four important points of contact with foreigners as follows: Among the Bulgarians in Chicago, where Basil Keusseff is missionary; among Bohemians in Cleveland, where F. D. Butchart is missionary; among the Russians in New York City, where John Johnson is missionary; and among the mixed population of the coke regions in West Pennsylvania, where R. G. Manley ministers. Only in Cleveland is our foreign work properly equipped.

Social Service and Rural Church.

This commission was organized in 1912. Its members are a guarantee of practical service and is constituted as follows: J. H. Mohorter, chairman; Prof. F. E. Lumley, H. H. Peters, O. F. Jordan, J. W. Street, and Alva W. Taylor, executive secretary. This commission has secured the appointment of a committee in each state, and out of the work of these committees already has come a marked appreciation of social problems in both country and city communities. The commission has related itself to the Federal Council of Churches and has had an active part in influencing legislation in behalf of one day's rest in seven and the improvement of conditions generally for the laboring people. The conservation of our forces in rural places, is fundamental to the Disciples of Christ. The American Society has set itself to this task and hopes soon to have a man devoting his entire time to this work.

Commission on Foreign Relations.

Growing out of our mission among the Russians in New York City has come the discovery of a movement in Russia similar to ours in America. This but illustrates the world-wide reach of American missions. Realization of a constantly growing fellowship is coming to us as a direct result of our work among foreigners in America. Correspondence and personal visitation has already discovered to us a movement similar to our own not only in Russia, but in Germany, Italy, Austria, and other European countries. A commission has already been organized of which Z. T. Sweeney is chairman, and M. M. Amunson is secretary. Because of the war and financial conditions some activities of this commission have been temporarily suspended.

The officers of the society are as follows:
Fredk. W. Burnham, Pres.
Grant K. Lewis, Secy.
Robert M. Hopkins, Bible-school Secy.
Benj. Sebastian, Treas.
H. L. Loomis, attorney.

All eyes are now focusing on the first Sunday in May and doubtless the most generous offerings of the history will be forthcoming.

DISCIPLES PUBLICATION SOCIETY, PROPRIETORS, : 700 EAST 40th STREET, CHICAGO

Disciples Publication Society

The Disciples Publication Society is an organization through which churches of the Disciples of Christ seek to promote undenominational and constructive Christianity.

The relationship it sustains to the Disciples is intimate and organic, though not official. The Society is not a private institution. It has no capital stock. No individuals profit by its earnings.

The charter under which the Society exists determines that whatever profits are earned shall be applied to agencies which foster the cause of religious education, although it is clearly conceived that its main task is not to make profits but to produce literature for building up character and for advancing the cause of religion.

The Disciples Publication Society regards itself as a thoroughly undenominational institution. It is organized and constituted by individuals and churches who interpret the Disciples' religious reformation as ideally an unsectarian and unecclesiastical fraternity, whose common tie and original impulse are fundamentally the desire to practice Christian unity with all Christians.

The Society therefore claims fellowship with all who belong to the living Church of Christ, and desires to co-operate with the Christian people of all communions as well as with the congregations of Disciples, and to serve all.

The Christian Century, the chief publication of the Society, desires nothing so much as to be the worthy organ of the Disciples' movement. It has no ambition at all to be regarded as an organ of the Disciples' denomination. It is a free interpreter of the wider fellowship in religious faith and service which it believes every church of Disciples should embody. It strives to interpret all communions, as well as the Disciples, in such terms and with such sympathetic insight as may reveal to all their essential unity in spite of denominational isolation. The Christian Century, though published by the Disciples, is not published for the Disciples alone. It is published for the Christian world. It desires definitely to occupy a catholic point of view and it seeks readers in all communions.

Toward the Land of the Incas

Note: The mail service with South America has been considerably interrupted by the withdrawal of a number of steamers from this side of the water to render service to the Allies in the European war. This fact accounts for the delay in receiving this installment of Mr. Morrison's correspondence. We feel safe in promising a regular weekly article from this time forward.—Office editor.

ON THE closing Sunday morning of the Panama Congress it was my pleasure to preach for the Union church of Balboa, the American city built by General Goethals, just outside Panama City. This was the third of these union churches in which I had spoken during my stay on the Isthmus, in addition to three large churches for colored people. I have already written of my impressions of the colored congregation and in view of the special interest taken in these union churches by a considerable group of delegates to the Congress, I feel like saying a word to Christian Century readers about this very important work.

Stretching across the Isthmus there are five of these congregations. The one at Balboa is much larger than the rest. It is there that Dr. Mott preached on his first Sunday in Panama and President King of Oberlin College, on the opening Sunday of the Congress. These men were so much impressed with the work done and yet to be done by this congregation that they joined with others in a special meeting, at which Dr. Speer presided, which passed resolutions approving the union character of the congregation and recommended to the various denominations of the United Stated a plan involving the expenditure of something like $250,000 to provide adequate buildings for the five groups.

It is to this congregation at Balboa that our good friends, Mr. and Mrs. D. C. Nutting belong. I referred to them in a former letter. It was in their home that six or eight Disciple delegates were given hospitality during the Congress, and from them many scores of delegates received courtesies that will always be remembered. Mr. Nutting is deeply interested in the Union Church, of which he is a trustee. He feels that in promoting its success and in opposing the introduction of denominational churches into the canal zone, he is not only standing for the obvious interests of the cause of Christ, but is carrying out the essential principles for which the Disciples of Christ have always stood. And in this the Disciple delegates at Panama seemed to agree with him.

I never see a union church but I feel that it is a church of my own fellowship. Its basis of union may not agree on all points with other congregations of the Disciples, but the fact that it has set the practice of Christian unity ahead of every other ecclesiastical practice makes it a true church of the Disciples. I cannot help wishing that we Disciples were known to be so truly an undenominational people that we could extend our fellowship to all union churches everywhere without thereby awakening suspicion that we were trying to denominationalize them. What these union churches need is fellowship with other union churches. For the lack of such fellowship many of them are led sooner or later to abandon their union ideals and to attach themselves to one denomination or another. Every church of the Disciples should be so unmistakably a union church that all union churches would naturally find with us the fellowship they need.

The Union Church in Balboa will be wanting a pastor soon. I wish we Disciples would contribute a strong leader to the work there. He would enter into a great opportunity. The American colony on the Isthmus is shut off from the means of culture and moral uplift which obtain in the United States, and there is a genuine hunger among the people for leadership in the things of the higher life. A church program projected on lines of social inspiration under competent leadership could be made to minister to this large and homogeneous community with satisfying success. I promised some of the workers that I would do what I could to find a leader for them, and I will be glad to receive suggestions from those who read these lines.

But we must leave Balboa and the City of Panama and this beautiful Isthmus and begin our long journey round the vast continent of South America. Our deputation is not going as tourists, but as students and councillors; we are to meet the missionary workers of all the South American fields in a series of four Regional Conferences, planned on the same general lines as the Congress at Panama and with the same purposes—except that we are to come into first-hand contact with actual conditions on the field.

As we board the steamship "Huallaga," of the Peruvian Line, we discover that our entire company consists of some forty-five persons, twenty of whom are the official members of our deputation, the remainder being missionaries and South American leaders who are returning to their fields of labor and their homes. This will give us a large company for our first conference which is to be held at Lima, the capital of Peru. Some of these will drop out of our company from time to time—at Guayaquil, at Lima, at Mollendo, and a considerable number at Valparaiso and Santiago, so that by the time we have left Buenos Aires and Montevideo and made our last stand at Rio de Janeiro in Brazil in the middle of April, there will be left in our traveling company only the members of the deputation itself. This gradual decrease in the number of travelers will find compensation, however, in the increasing strength of the evangelical communities in the successive regions we are to visit. In Peru, where we make our first stop, the missionary forces are weakest. In Chile they are much stronger, but not so numerous as in Argentina and Uruguay, and in Brazil we will find a well established and substantial Protestant work, with a number of strong churches and a company of leaders to confer with us larger than in any other country of the continent.

The chairman of our deputation is Dr. A. W. Halsey, colleague of Dr. Robert E. Speer and Dr. Arthur Judson Brown in the secretaryship of the Presbyterian Board of Foreign Missions. Our secretary is Mr. Charles J. Ewald, of Montevideo, who has been for a dozen years the Continental Secretary of the Y. M. C. A. for South America. We will have daily conferences on the boat as we approach Lima and should be ready on arrival there to take up the work of the Regional Conference without delay.

But meantime other thoughts stir our souls. Leaving these Balboa docks at the Pacific end of the Panama Canal, we are striking out into that South Sea upon which Vasco Nunez de Balboa himself first looked from Darien's height almost exactly 400 years ago. It was this same journey we are to make that Pizarro attempted again and again, conquering one disaster after another with renewed effort until at last success crowned his perseverance by the discovery of the rich and wonderful civilization of the Incas. It was by this same route that Spanish ships brought vast wealth of gold and silver filched by force or cunning from Inca temples and palaces, and sent to Spain. These treasure-ships landed at old Panama, some of whose ruins we visited on the opposite side of the bay, about three miles from the present city of Panama. What a story of adventure, of conquest as if by magic, of plunder in the name of religion, is that told us by Prescott in his undying classic, "The Conquest of Peru!" Other books there are treating of this forever fascinating period in the history of this Western World, some more careful in their treatment of details, but none so interesting—so altogether delightful—as this. The glamour of that story has remained with most of us since our adolescent days, though many of its details have been long since forgotten. As we start out on this voyage to the land of the Incas, we find ourselves sitting in groups on

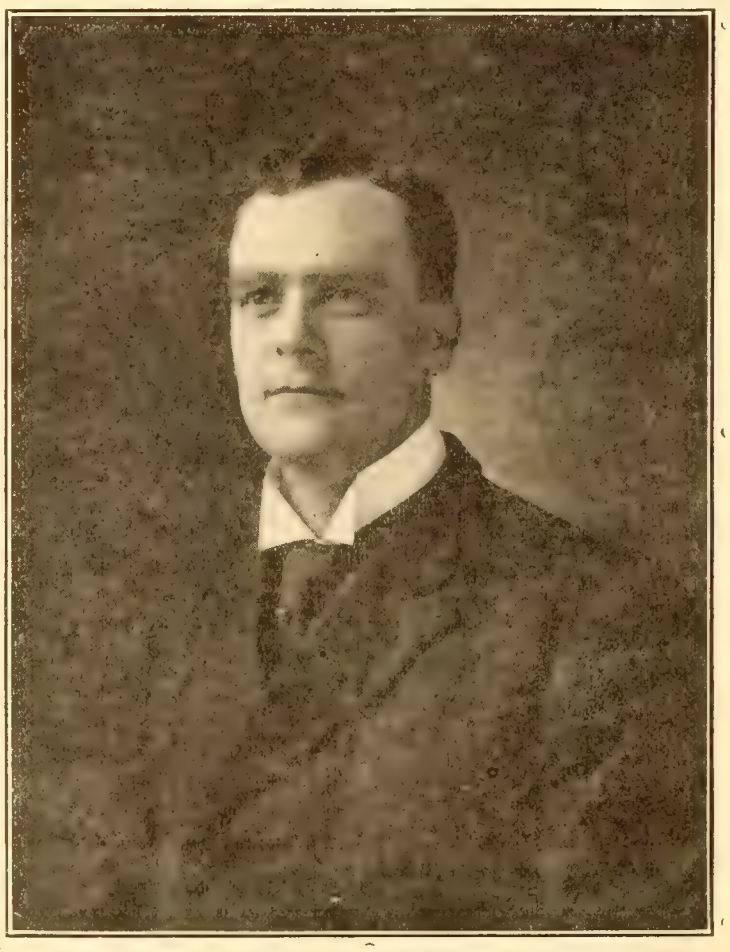
Science and Faith



By ARTHUR HOLMES

IN A recent issue of The Christian Century the editorial on "Science and Faith" remarks the "curious" fact that very little has been done by "those who follow the paths of empirical investigation" upon the world-old problem of life after death. The editor assigns for this paucity of scientific investigation into the most vitally interesting problem open to human speculation, the fact that modern science, and especially our present methods of biological study, are new.

That is one reason, and that time will force a change, I have no doubt. But brevity of scientific history is not the fundamental cause of the neglect.

The fact is, as the editor further pointed out, much work has been done in the face of assaults by the "higher criticism" let go all his religion, but is now teaching a Bible-class in the Christian Association. He found his way back to Christianity through psychical research, into which he entered with enthusiasm but in which he could not continue openly lest he should ruin his chances ever to secure any standing as a philosopher or a scientist.

Only those scientists who have already reached an impregnable position dare openly to confess their faith in such utterly non-scientific endeavors as the quest of human immortality. Those with faltering reputations must still avow their orthodoxy by disavowing miracles conceived under the ancient definition of license against the laws of nature, or moving molecules from their beaten paths, etc., etc.

but not by science. The society for Psychological Research has heaped experiment upon experiment, and massed evidence with evidence, searching the world over for incidents and subjecting the evidence offered to the most searching tests of verification by witnesses under oath and by laboratory methods. The researches have been compiled, not in one volume, but many, and have led not to one theory, but to several. Some of the most "exasperatingly sceptical" minds have led in this research, and some of the most sanely balanced and best trained scientists of the age have been convinced that "there is something in it."

"A GLIMMER OF LIGHT."

Even a religious sceptic, Mr. Archer, of England, admits that he has been brought to see "a glimmer of light" beyond the black-mouthed tunnel of death. I know a professor of philosophy in a large university who, fifteen years ago,

What is the real cause of all this indifference and open opposition of science to research looking toward human immortality as one of its aims? The editor of the "Century" touched the real cause in his phrase, "empirical investigation." It is the METHOD of science that makes it essentially and necessarily, consciously or unconsciously, indifferent or antagonistic to all phenomena involving spirits. Science is built upon facts; not ALL facts, but MEASURED facts. The senses must discover the fact and then measure the fact. Science goes as far as it can SEE; to the end of a yardstick, and not an inch farther. At least that is what orthodox science pretends to do, and it pretends that most vociferously when any daring soul undertakes to lead it out into the spiritual world, brilliant with truth not to be seen, heard or handled. Then, like that other owlet, science,

"Drops his blue-fringed lids and holds them close,
And hooting at the glorious sun in heaven,
Cries out, 'Where is it?'"

SCIENCE AND THE FUTURE LIFE.

This is the real reason why science neglects questions of another life. So far it has not discerned how it may build its theory of another life upon sensuously discerned, yardstick facts. Just as soon as it does it will quite willingly take to its embraces the now despised "facts" of psychical research. In the meantime, since science arrogates to itself the sovereignty of the whole domain of knowledge, explored and unexplored, past, present and future, and yet has not found a way to bring psychical facts under the sway of the measuring rod, it must complacently ignore the facts, or must assume a polite scepticism when they are mentioned. But as Professor James humorously said, when the "cat jumps that way," what a scramble there will be among scientists to claim the glory of fathering a new science!

For a new science will then be born. Witness how psychology remained a poor relation of philosophy until Weber's Law made it possible mathematically to relate spiritual things like sensations and feelings, to outer actions that could be callipered and chronoscoped. Then psychology set up housekeeping for herself and talked pityingly of poor metaphysics, and the new physiological-psychologists filled up her house with prodigious numbers of facts, weighed, measured and tagged.

But psychical research is tenfold worse than a poor relation. A poor relation may be old and may be respectable. Psychical research is neither. It is a young, bold thing, not minding the well-established conventions of science and brazenly mixing with religionists, spiritualists, hypnotists, telepathists, ghosts, hobgoblins, and many another evil companion and vehemently reviled by the elect. When, therefore, giants like Lord Kelvin, Sir Oliver Lodge, Dr. Osler and the late Professor James, touch these unclean things, in the eyes of pure science they become defiled; they are for the moment not scientists.

SCIENCE "IN TERMS OF REALITY."

Nevertheless, when we see that these heroes are also human, we poor laymen take heart, and continue to believe that there are exceeding great and precious facts of experience in no wise amenable to material measurement, truths deep as the soul and not based upon sensuously observed facts, ideals that transcend induction and create new worlds, pioneer faiths that lead the souls of men on journeys beyond the stars.

And possibly if we keep right on believing it, science will eventually outgrow its dry husks of present formularies and undertake to describe the phenomena of the universe not in the fewest terms, nor terms limited to the sensuous or the possibly sensuous, but in terms of reality, regardless of their number and their kind. In such a science there may be room for the souls of just men made perfect. As the canons of religion have been changed more than once to fit the facts of science, should not the canons of science be changed sometimes to fit the facts of religion?

Liberty and Church Fellowship among the Disciples of Christ

By WILLIAM DUNN RYAN

Editorial Note: This is the conclusion of Mr. Ryan's paper on "Christian Liberty and Church Fellowship," read at the recent Chicago Congress. The earlier portion was published in last week's issue of The Christian Century.

A RELIGIOUS movement, such as our own, born in liberty and dedicated to the proposition that all Christ's followers should be one in him, is of necessity deeply concerned in the modern demand for liberty, and emphasis upon the vital and ethical. No one can read the Declaration and Address and fail to be impressed with the fact that its writers were men who were trying with passionate zeal to follow Christ just where he would lead and to point out a way in which all Christians might walk together in mutual forbearance of differing opinions, in service and in love. That loftier ideals have sometimes been lost sight of, because things of lesser import have loomed so large, is not surprising.

In an age of controversy, such as the first three-fourths of the 19th century, the temptation to invoke external authority by laying emphasis upon the letter instead of the spirit, was well nigh overmastering. While they have had no written creeds to outgrow and revise yet the Disciples have experienced as radical changes in the last fifty years as have been witnessed within any body of believers.

FIFTY YEARS AGO.

"The Living Pulpit of the Christian Church," a volume published in 1867, contains twenty-eight sermons by as many of our representative preachers of that day. This no doubt presents the best and most generally accepted thought of the Disciples of that period. The extent to which legalism had obscured the idea of liberty will be indicated in a few quotations.

This from W. H. Hopson: "But will I be damned if I am not baptized? Certainly. Why not? The baptized penitent believer, according to the Savior's promise, will receive remission of sins. No other man will." When it is remembered that by baptism these men meant "immersion, nothing more nor less" it will be seen how vast a number of good folk are by the above assertion condemned to the eternal flames.

In his sermon on, "The Church—Its Identity," Benj. Franklin declares that a "Community not founded in the right place is not a Church of Christ; a community not founded at the right time is not a Church of Christ; a community not founded by the right persons is not a Church of Christ." He then proceeds to show that Methodists, Presbyterians and all other communions except his own were not established in the right place, at the right time, nor by the right persons and hence cannot be Churches of Christ. Thus "the Church" is reduced to his own communion, and he further declares: "To be out of the Church is to be separated from God, Christ, the Holy Spirit, the life of Christ, the blood of Christ and justification."

THE LARGER FAITH.

Forty-six years afterward, at the international convention in Louisville, C. M. Chilton, as President of the American Christian Missionary Society, made the following deliverance, which seemed to represent the point of view of the great body of contemporary Disciples: "In this new situation how shall we regard those of other communions? Shall they be enemies and rivals or friends and co-laborers? Shall they be Christians and Christian churches or strangers from the covenants of promise? . . . Our present tendency is in the direction of charity; we are growing kindlier toward others, if indeed we are not beginning to feel that it is a part of our task to create and encourage friendliness. . . . Let us then prefer charity and regard all these churches as churches of Christ, all imperfect, some more imperfect; but perhaps none fallen entirely from the way. Are they not all seekers after God, at the worst only belated travelers by the way? There is a larger faith, which sees Christ at work in all communions, patiently bringing his sheep into one fold. They are good words of the Declaration and Address in which Thomas Campbell says: You are all brethren equally included as the objects of our love and esteem. With you all, we desire to unite in the bonds of an entire Christian unity."

FROM LEGALISM TO LIBERTY.

It is a far cry from Hopson and Franklin to Chilton. It represents the change from the court of law to the garden of flowers, from legalism to freedom, from doctrine to life. Strangely enough, it looks backward as well as forward. Thomas Campbell is again speaking his message of brotherly love, and unhindered by jot and tittle of law, our Lord is witnessing in his disciples a finer sympathy and deeper spiritual power.

The change has brought to us serious and urgent problems. We are set for the defense of the Gospel.

THE FORM OF BAPTISM.

With unswerving loyalty we must adhere to Christ and the teaching of his apostles. We must uphold the divine standards and appeal for the larger liberty and complete unity in him. The Apostolic church had no written documents which it followed slavishly. It sought to know the mind of Christ through the means at its disposal. So must we. "However numerous our theologies, there is only one Gospel," says Dean Mathews. "The New Testament is to be carried over bodily into our religious thinking." This is not for us a code of laws, but the instrument through which we learn of Christ's life and will. We do well to insist that those whom we induct into the Christian life shall follow the New Testament program; that their faith and repentance and confession and baptism, and manner of life shall be in strict accord with its teachings.

In regard to our fellowship with Christians of other communions, however, the form of whose baptism we do not recognize as Scriptural, a new problem arises. Our fathers, sharing the view of Hopson and Franklin, were logical enough in contending that they must be baptized by immersion, otherwise they were unregenerate aliens and could not be regarded as members of Christ's Church. They had not legally qualified.

A. CAMPBELL ON LIBERTY.

We cannot avail ourselves of the logic of this crass legalism. We acknowledge them to be Christians, and their churches as churches of Christ. Moreover, we recoil from the feeling that baptism is nothing more than an immersion. We are sure that it has a spiritual content scarcely dependent upon the manner of performing a physical act. We recall Mr. Campbell's distinction between "real and formal remission of sins," and we have a passion for reality and a disregard for the formal which men of his day did not have. We also share with Campbell his feelings expressed in these words: "I cannot, therefore, make any one duty the standard of Christian state or character, not even immersion into the name of the Father, of the Son and of the Holy Spirit, and in heart regard all that have been sprinkled in infancy, without their knowledge or consent, as aliens from Christ and the well grounded hope of heaven."

That a large number of our leaders are becoming restive under our present custom of demanding immersion of those coming to us by letter from other communions, seems to me clearly indicated by responses to a questionnaire I sent out some months ago. This was sent to one hundred of our representative pastors in various parts of the country. They minister to churches in city, county-seat, town and open country in twenty-seven different states. I was guided in the selection of names, solely by the consideration that they were serving important churches and were making good in their ministry according to records in the "Year Book." The membership of their churches aggregates 77,500 or the average church ministered to by them has 750 members and their churches raised $120,000 for missions last year. They were assured that their names would not be used and were urged to speak with utmost frankness.

A SIGNIFICANT SURVEY.

Whatever may be its short-comings, this questionnaire represents an honest and unprejudiced effort to gain from a most representative group of our leaders an expression on the question of a broader basis of fellowship. Ninety-one of the one hundred replied. In a few cases the answers could not be classified as either yes or no, and I have classified them as indefinite, and in a few instances correspondents failed to reply to every question.

The questions and tabulation of results follow:

1. (a) Is it your observation that the Disciples of Christ are becoming increasingly liberal in their attitude toward other communions? 79 answered yes. 5 answered no. 5 answered indefinitely. 2 failed to answer.

(b) Does this seem to indicate that a change might ultimately come in their terms of fellowship with them? 46 yes. 36 no. 7 indefinite. 2 failed to answer.

2. (a) Do you feel that the Disciples of Christ are consistent in demanding immersion as a condition of admission to membership, of persons whom they recognize as Christians, coming by letter from other Christian bodies? 42 yes. 40 no. 5 indefinite. 4 failed to answer.

(b) Apart from all questions of expediency, would you consider that our churches were doing wrong in receiving such persons into membership without raising the question as to the form of their baptism? 40 yes. 38 no. 10 indefinite. 3 failed to answer.

3. In your judgment, what effect would the practice of the sort of fellowship indicated in question number 2 have upon our plea for the union of all Christians? Would it increase or decrease its effectiveness? 31 increase. 43 decrease. 3 chances even. 11 uncertain. 3 failed to answer.

The last question was answered with various degrees of emphasis, one might almost say of vehemence; some asserting it would wreck our movement, "it would vitiate our plea," etc. Others were equally sure it would make the plea of the Disciples irresistible. Two answered that they would raise the question of baptism with candidates from other churches, but failing to convince them that they should be immersed, would receive them without.

A CHANGE IN THOUGHT REGISTERED.

When the opinion of so large and representative a group of our pastors is found to be almost equally divided on these questions, we cannot take seriously the assertion that the Disciples are not, except in rare and isolated cases, concerned with the matter. Even those whose answers are indefinite are evidently dissatisfied with the old conditions, and are undergoing a change in thought.

The fact that less than half of these ninety-one men will say that our present practice is consistent, or that it would be wrong to admit Christians from other communions without immersion, does not mean that they are forthwith going to force the matter to an issue in their congregations. It does not mean that a controversy is going to be precipitated in any considerable number of our churches. In answers received, many notes of caution were sounded by men who were sure that a change would ultimately come. Nor does it mean that these men, and a vast number who would agree with them, are moved to this position through spineless amiability, nor that they are less loyal to the ideals of the Disciples, or of Christ, than others.

It simply means that, living in the twentieth century, trying to apprehend the will of Christ as related to questions of their day, they cannot attach great importance to form and ceremony, and are open-minded, ready to be led into a freer, richer fellowship with God and man.

Many of Christ's utterances we interpret in the light of his life. When he said: "I came not to send peace on earth, but a sword," we are very sure he did not mean to justify war. His life of love, and bequest of peace are a negation of that. He meant to show the inevitable conflict between right and wrong. When he said, "Ye ought also to wash one another's feet," we would perhaps all agree that he was declaring in a dramatic and powerful way the importance of humble service. With our knowledge of his denunciations of externals and forms, we are quite sure that when he speaks of baptism he is chiefly concerned with it as a spiritual experience, and it may be he would not regard it as invalid, though one should innocently make a mistake as to its form.

ARGUMENTS USED BY CORRESPONDENTS.

Many of my correspondents who feel that the present practice of the Disciples is consistent, and that the change mentioned would be wrong, defend their positions by arguments which might be summed up under these heads:

1. Such action would rob us of our plea and wreck our movement. When one recalls that the Disciples had stated their principles to the world and were in existence three years before the question of immersion was raised, and that they were ostensibly a movement within the Church to bring about unity, it is rather difficult to see how they could lose their plea by getting back nearer to their original position. Judged historically the question cannot be called fundamental.

2. Comparison is made between the Christian connections who have grown slowly and the Disciples who have grown rapidly, to prove that insistence on immersion brings success.

In this connection it is instructive to note that according to the statistician, H. K. Carroll, the following denominations have decreased in membership in the last decade: Seventh Day Baptist, Winebrennarian, Church of God and Saints of Christ, Primitive Baptist, Free Will Baptist, Conservative Dunkards, Old Order Dunkards.

Now, every one of these denominations insists strenuously upon immersion, as a prerequisite to membership. But this does not indicate that their loss is due to insistence upon immersion, any more than it could be claimed that the slow growth of the Christian connection body is due to lack of insistence upon it. The simple fact is that if a comparison between Christian connection and Disciples is to be instructive the parallelism must be carried further than a single item of doctrine.

WEIGHING THE OBJECTIONS.

The two objections just stated, of course, imply that the question is not of principle but of expediency. If this be all, it assumes an importance scarcely greater than the question as to whether the prayer-meeting shall be held on Wednesday night or on Thursday night. But this is not all. The third objection has to do with loyalty and liberty. It may be stated thus: "We are under the authority of Christ, and dare not recognize as members of the Church any who have not fully obeyed him." Now, it would be interesting to know just when, where and by whom we were set at the door of Christ's Church as authoritative guardians, debarring those who fail, in our judgment, to qualify; while granting to all the utmost liberty at the Lord's table. We need go no further than the second chapter of Acts to learn that in Pentecostal days it was the Lord who added to the Christian community such as were being saved, and there is no evidence that he placed upon any man the responsibility of passing upon another's fitness.

There are various criteria of discipleship mentioned in the New Testament. that you are my disciples, by the love Christ says, "By this shall all men know that you have one for another." Paul says, "He that hath not the spirit of Christ is none of his." James mentions yet another touchstone of pure religion and undefiled. If it be our prerogative to debar men from church fellowship on the ground of incomplete obedience in one item of doctrine, how can we justify ourselves for failing to consider other elements of fitness which the New Testament mentions as being essential to Christian discipleship? Probably no one measures up fully to these high standards. In dealing with those who seem to be striving in sincerity to follow Christ, shall we not do well to heed the injunction, "Let us, therefore, not judge one another any more?"

WHAT IS CHURCH FELLOWSHIP?

What, after all, constitutes church fellowship? In an editorial in the "Christian Evangelist," for February 18, 1915, I find this statement: "The fundamental meaning of the word 'fellowship' is partnership or sharing in common." If this be true, surely we already have, in almost all our churches, people in fellowship with us who have not been immersed. They share in common our worship, including communion at the Lord's table. They are in partnership with us in raising our local budget, in supporting our missionaries, in planning our work. They hold office in our auxiliary societies. They teach in our Bible-schools. They preach in our pulpits. We withhold from them formal recognition of this fellowship. We customarily deny them two privileges and only two. One is to come forward in the church and receive "the right hand of fellowship." The other to have their names recorded in our church membership list.

But what authority have we in the New Testament for giving "the hand of fellowship" to any one or withholding it from any one? None. What authority have we for writing one's name in a particular place, or refusing to write it there? None. Admittedly these both are human expedients. Being human expedients and failing to give expression to the fellowship that in our hearts we feel impelled to give to some of our brethren in Christ, it is reasonable to believe that ultimately these two customs will be modified or cease to be. My judgment is that any change that may come will come just here.

Through influences innumerable, and through all of which the divine spirit is doubtless working, the church is coming nearer to a realization of the glorious liberty that is to be found in Christ Jesus than she has been since the first century. This liberty can be furthered but little by argument; and not at all by controversy. But where the spirit of the Lord is, there is liberty.

AS TO THE FUTURE.

Viewed from the vantage ground of historic perspective, the present situation is full of hope. We shall do most to bring about complete Christian liberty by laying large emphasis upon the spiritual, by manifesting sufficient faith in the good purposes of God to await the leading of his Spirit into a larger knowledge of his Truth. Our surest way to delay the coming of larger liberty would be to endeavor to hasten it unduly. Men of varying views grow up to it together, and be patient with each other, the while.

May I close with a paragraph from Brierley's, "Our City of God": "When the Church reaches once more that first temper; when it offers to men what the first believers offered, its great moment will have come again.

"It has centuries of lost time to make up. It has to retrace long leagues of wandering in order to get back to the track. We need not trouble about the revelation of truth. That is streaming in upon us from all quarters. What we want is to enter again into the Gospel's open secret. When the Church has caught afresh its first great rapture of love set forth in the works that follow there will be no infidels in sight."

The National Missionary Congress

Report of the First Day's Sessions of the great Assembly held at Washington, D. C., April 26-30.

BY F. W. HAROLD.

A GREAT throng of men, earnest, consecrated, purposeful, ready, were present at the opening of the National Missionary Congress of the Laymen's Missionary Movement in Memorial Continental Hall, Thursday evening, April 26. President Wilson was present throughout the session and listened most attentively to the addresses. When the chairman prayed for the President, Mr. Wilson sat with bowed head. Near the close of the session the members of the Congress rose to their feet to honor the Chief Executive.

James M. Speers, of New York, chairman of the Executive Committee of the Laymen's Missionary Movement, is the chairman of the Congress, and presided at the opening session.

After a devotional service led by the chairman, William B. Millar, General Secretary of the Movement, presented his report covering the ten years' work of the movement. He made an earnest appeal for the churches to arise and meet the crisis and challenge of the present world situation.

DR. MOTT'S ADDRESS.

Dr. John R. Mott, Chairman of the Continuation Committee of the Edinburgh Conference, and General Secretary of the International Committee of Young Men's Christian Associations, delivered a most impressive address on the topic, "The Added Missionary Responsibility of American Laymen Occasioned by the War." Mr. Mott began by referring to the momentous days in which we are living, calling the war in Europe literally a life and death grapple. He spoke of the far-reaching influence of the struggle on America, of the enormous financial expenditure, and declared that if the economic basis of Christian work is to be maintained the great burden of it must fall upon America. He contended also that in view of the great sacrifice of life it is clear that America must send an increased number of men into aggressive missionary work. Most of all, Mr. Mott contended, American men must enter more deeply into the sufferings of their fellows in Europe.

At the Thursday morning session, April 27, "The Possibilities of Missionary Achievement, as Illustrated by Actual Experiences in Parishes, in Groups of Parishes and in Entire Communions," was the subject of a conference conducted by Fred B. Fisher, Associate General Secretary of the Laymen's Missionary Movement. Those who participated were John M. Moore, Secretary of the Department of Missionary Education of the Northern Baptist Convention; John W. Wood, Secretary of the Board of Missions of the Episcopal Church; Charles A. Rowland, of the Southern Presbyterian Church; J. L. Clark, a Lutheran layman of prominence; George Heber Jones, Editorial Secretary of the Methodist Board of Foreign Missions; W. P. Schell, Secretary of the Presbyterian Board of Foreign Missions and A. E. Cory, of the Disciples of Christ. Multiplied instances were given by these men of the value of the principles and methods for which the Laymen's Missionary Movement stands.

PRESIDENT WILSON RECEIVES THE DELEGATES.

On Thursday afternoon at 2 o'clock President Wilson received the delegates and their wives in the East Room of the White House, more than a thousand persons shaking hands with him.

Silas McBee, editor of the Constructive Quarterly, was chairman of the afternoon session on Thursday. The topic was "The Present Day Appeal to American Laymen." Dr. James L. Barton, of the American Board, brought the appeal from the Moslem world. He declared that Mohammedanism has failed in its work, and that the followers of The Prophet are turning to Christianity.

John P. Jones, for thirty-eight years a missionary in India, and the author of several authoritative books on India's people, life and thought, described the conditions in the Hindu world. He declared that Christianity had permeated to the lowest castes of Indian life, and that in four years 500,000 people had been brought into Christian missions.

S. Harrington Littell, a missionary in China for seventeen years under the Protestant Episcopal Board, described the characteristics of Buddhism in China and Japan. He said that Buddhism is failing and that Buddhist leaders were imitating the methods of Christianity without avail.

Bishop Francis J. McConnell of the Methodist Church, speaking for the Christian world, said the best way America can save the world in the present crisis is to be Christian throughout, maintaining faithful adherence to Christian principles in our lives.

The evening session on Thursday was presided over by Lieutenant-Colonel Elijah W. Halford, Vice Chairman of the Laymen's Missionary Movement. There were two addresses upon the general theme of "The Christward Movement in the Non-Christian World." William F. Oldham, Corresponding Secretary of the Methodist Board of Foreign Missions, former bishop in India and Malaysia, described the irresistible movement toward Christianity among the masses of people in India. George Sherwood Eddy, Secretary for Asia for the International Committee of the Young Men's Christian Association, spoke of "The Christward Movement Among the Educated Classes" in non-Christian lands, describing particularly his experiences in conducting great evangelistic meetings among the natives in China and in India. Mr. Eddy referred to the deep interest of student and official classes in China, and of the great throngs that attended Christian meetings at which he spoke in India.

A feature of the Congress was the presentation of missionary work by means of motion pictures at the opening of the evening sessions. This most effective demonstration was under the direction of Sumner R. Vinton. The singing was under the direction of Ernest W. Naftzger, and the Association Quartette gave selections at each session.

If it be consoling to be much in the thoughts of a revered earthly friend, what must it be to occupy the thoughts of One, better than the best, more loving than the most loving human relative? An earthly father writes his son in a distant land, "You are never absent from my thought." Such, too, is the comforting declaration of our Father in heaven. The humblest and lowliest of His children on earth can say, "I am poor and needy, yet the Lord thinketh upon me."—Macduff.

Until a man's conscience is refilled with power from on high, until his soul is restored with energy out of the Holy Ghost, there is no sure pledge that his conduct and his sentiment will advance, and that they will finally come into keeping with the law of God.—George A. Gordon.

At the close of a course of lectures on the Greek philosophers, Prof. George H. Palmer of Harvard said to his class: "If I have made all these subjects clear to you, I have failed." This suggests another putting of the same thought: "They see not the clearliest who see all things clear."—The Congregationalist.

THE DANGER OF PREACHING

RECENTLY there fell under our notice this interesting sentence in a letter: "I could have been a religious man, if I had not been compelled to preach so many sermons."

The remark was not made in levity, nor was it a complaint of too much work. It was the simple registering of the fact that one of the deadly dangers of the moral life is the necessity of speaking constantly upon the high themes of conduct and faith without the time or the capacity to make them vital in one's own character.

It is a tremendous responsibility which one assumes when he undertakes to speak twice or even once a week on the most holy things in the world. If his speech were part of a ritual, to which he need give no particular thought or emotion, save as to the proper performance of the service, there would still be grave responsibility, but it would be more easily borne.

With the preacher in the free churches the task is more difficult. He must prepare his message, and if it is to be worthful, he must prepare it out of his own life. No man ever preaches a greater sermon than his own inner life and outward conduct can guarantee. If by chance he finds some other man's sermon and tries to galvanize it into reality for himself, discerning hearers know the fraud, and inwardly give him his due appraisal. If he tries to preach a sermon which his own life cannot verify, those who are aware detect the false note and make their verdict. And if by any chance he alone knows the secret, there is the accusing sense of insincerity in his own heart.

Yet how can a man really preach to a modern church with its intelligence and taste without transgressing the line of reality and personal experience? How can a man speak for God who has not spoken with God? That is the question that is driving many sensitive and humbled souls to their knees and to the inner place for strength and refilling.

They begin to understand, as life matures, the subtle danger of speaking much and realizing for themselves little of the holy life. They come to have a haunting fear of insincerity and professionalism. They search their hearts as with candles to see if their motives are pure and their faith is strong. They watch themselves as they go into the pulpit to detect that false note of "the pulpit manner" which betrays them into the "holy tone" and the ministerial pose.

Learning to hate these affectations with the loathing which all forthright and sincere natures feel for the veneer of religion, they ask for grace to preach no more than they have made vital in their own souls. Thus alone can they save themselves from the death that cannot die, and their people from the subtle disbelief in the things of religion.

THE BIBLE ANNIVERSARY

LAST Sunday was the centennial anniversary of the American Bible Society. It was widely observed throughout the land. In many of the leading cities anniversary services of a union nature called the attention of the public to the very great service which this admirable organization has rendered to our Christian faith.

This society was not without an example and an inspiration. One of the earliest causes to which the great energies of the Oxford and Cambridge presses were set in the beginnings of the art of printing was the publication of the Holy Scriptures. Edition after edition passed through the hands of the printers even before the days of the Authorized Version of 1611.

Later on the British and Foreign Bible Society was organized, and its notable building, a stone's throw from St. Paul's, has been for generations the repository of rare and interesting copies of the Bible, as well as of the hundreds of examples of translation into the languages of the most distant nations.

Out to the ends of the earth have gone the discoverer, the trader and the pioneer. Fast upon their trail has journeyed the missionary, and his first task has always been to master as well and swiftly as he was able the new tongue, and then turn some portion of Holy Scripture, a Gospel, some of the Psalms, or some other useful part, into the dialect just gotten. Back to the presses came this fragment, and it has been the proud boast of the directors, both of the English and the American Bible Societies, that no part of the Bible has ever come knocking at their doors in vain.

This wonderful, but almost silent labor, has gone on with amazing results. The discerning traveler in the ends of the earth makes it one of his first objects to call at the headquarters of the American or the British Bible Society to interview the workers and inspect the stock. And he comes away with a new joy in the work to which he has contributed for years. Truly, "Their line has gone out to all the earth, and their words to the ends of the world."

MR. ROOSEVELT'S VISIT

A FEW days ago Chicago enjoyed the sensation and satisfaction of a brief call from the former president. He was here only thirty-six hours, but in that short time he covered a very large amount of territory, both geographically and oratorically, and met a host of peolpe.

At all times his immense popularity was in evidence. People like Mr. Roosevelt, because he is always a picturesque figure, and leaves nothing to the imagination concerning the dramatic possibilities of any situation in which he is involved.

With his usual vigor he preached the doctrine of preparedness, a doctrine which just at this moment is a theme to fire the emotions of a very large class of people. Moreover, no man in public life is a more admirable illustration of a doctrine than is our great ex-President of this.

If there was any jarring note in Mr. Roosevelt's Chicago speeches it was his rather harsh and discourteous references to the President, and what he regarded as the too conservative policy of the administration. Of course something must be permitted to the dash and passion of extempore speech. Furthermore, Mr. Roosevelt represents the anti-Democratic point of view, whether he is to be regarded as a Progressive or a Republican. And as a great political campaign is under way, one must not expect altogether smooth words from political rivals.

But we are always of the opinion that the office of President merits a certain dignity of treatment, even from opponents, particularly when those opponents are men who are of the presidential class. One may pardon in a ward boss or a partisan newspaper language which is unbecoming in a man who is supposedly a statesman. We find that public opinion regarding Mr. Roosevelt reveals this one element of regret mingled with very sincere admiration for a most forceful and valuable personality.

In spite of all partisan feelings and utterances, we all have the feeling at the back of our minds that our President has carried himself with great dignity and poise during many months of the most trying conditions. He has not always done what some of us would have had him do, but we have always respected his motives and admired the constancy of purpose with which he has adhered to them. And even those of us who are least in accord with his political party and traditions are compelled to express our admiration for the success with which he has kept our nation out of the perils which no one could foresee and few would have been able to avert.

If ex-President Roosevelt, who is undoubtedly one of the ablest, if not the very ablest, of our public leaders at the present moment, could show again some of his former large-hearted appreciation of other leaders, and especially of a President who has shown himself to a notable degree the man of the hour, public opinion would delight to place him again in the foremost rank of our national counsellors. If he fails of his undoubted hope to regain the highest position in the gift of the nation today, it will be due in no small degree to a growing dislike of his self-confidence, and his disdain of other honored men.

THE WIDENING DOOR

MUCH food for reflection will be found in the second section of Mr. Ryan's Congress paper which we publish this week.

We affirmed in our last issue that the subject of some sort of recognition of unimmersed Christians by churches of the Disciples is receiving far more consideration from our people than surface indications would suggest.

Mr. Ryan's inquiry makes this perfectly clear. The matter is believed by an increasing number of our people to be vital to a candid advocacy of Christian union and to a clear conscience within our own churches.

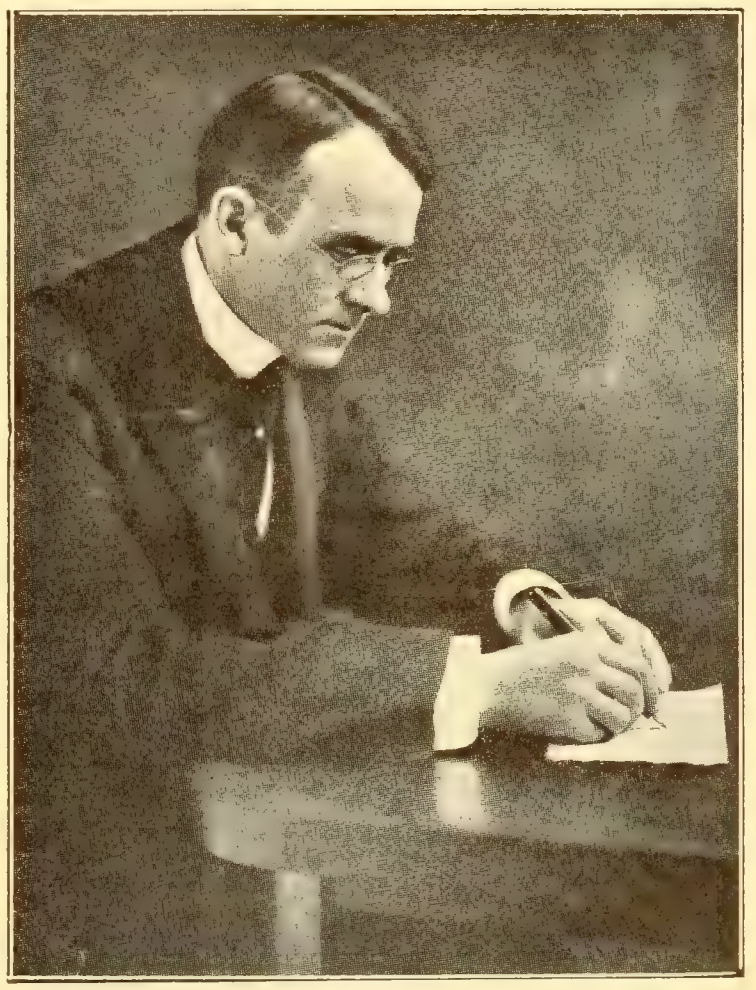
The only possible position for a people like our own to take in a time of new attention to the subject on the part of all Christians, is to face all the facts with intelligence and the desire to interpret fairly the ideals and teaching of Jesus, and to act with freedom and courage in the light of these facts.

THE REAL ISSUE

THE MILITARISTS would have us believe that we are spending next to nothing on our military establishment, and that we should have begun long ago to build up a military establishment that would terrify all other terrorists that might come to swallow us up.

How many people know that we have been spending more than two hundred millions annually for military purposes? Yet we are "criminally unready." What has been done with the money?

In the years 1914-'15 Germany's budget, with an army eight times greater than ours, was 293 million dollars, her navy budget was 114 millions. In 1915 our total budget for army and navy was 317 millions. France spent for army and navy 298 millions. Great Britain leads all the nations in military expenditures. During the past twelve years Britain is the only nation on earth whose war budget has been greater than our own. Yet we are a "defenceless" nation, at the mercy of other powers.



Why are these nations, some of whom expend less than we for military establishments, armed to the teeth, while we are so "pitifully" unprepared? What have our officials done with so much money to make such a miserable showing, according to their own tale of woe? Our budget for preparedness covering the next five years contemplates an expenditure of $2,239,401,212. This will mean a cost of $90 a year for five years for every family in this country.

But above and beyond all considerations just now, the friends of peace should insist upon an accounting for the manner in which these enormous sums have been expended, and the country left in a state of "appalling" unpreparedness. What guarantee have we that the country will be prepared with the expenditure of billions, when we are left at the mercy of the enemy after the annual expenditure of millions? What has been done with the money?

MR. MORRISON'S RETURN

A wire from New York, as we go to press, announces the arrival there of our editor on his return from the South American Regional Conferences, which followed the Panama Congress.

An article of his, the first he has been able to send us for some weeks, is being forwarded, and for its inclusion in this issue one of the forms will be held. If our usual order of material is modified slightly this week, it is for this reason.

Charles Clayton Morrison, Editor of The Christian Century, now returning to Chicago from a three- months' tour of Panama and South America.

He will remain in New York over Sunday, preaching for Dr. Idleman, and by the time this issue reaches our readers he will be once more in the "Century" office.

He will receive the warmest welcome from all the Century family, on his return from a notable experience and a profoundly important service to the causes of Christian Union and Missionary Education.

the deck of our steamer trying to piece out one another's recollections of the classic tale, when to the joy of all someone shyly brings forth from the depths of his trunk a copy of Prescott himself!

This book proves to be for the next week easily the most popular in our large library. Our deputation has perhaps a half hundred books dealing with South American history and present problems. It is our program on the long voyages between conferences to read and discuss the best things that have been written in interpretation of the lands and peoples we are to visit. It is hard to imagine that any country will afford so rich a lore as Peru.

The Pacific is indeed pacific. Our boat is a mere toy compared to the great vessels that ply between the United States and Europe. But small as she is, her going is steady enough in this placid sea. We spend three quiet, studious days without a stop when we awaken in the early morning of the fourth day to find ourselves in Gulf of Guayaquil, standing off the shore of the little island of Puno where Pizarro made a memorable landing and attached to his expedition the young Indian who became his interpreter in the critical situations he was soon to encounter with the natives.

When our pilot comes on board we ascend a muddy river to the city of Guayaquil where we had hoped to be allowed to disembark for a few hours' looking around, while the ship took on its cargo. But the health authorities forbade, unless we should be willing to pay the penalty of eight days in quarantine before landing at our destination. Guayaquil is one of the few remaining pest-ridden cities of South America. Yellow fever and the Bubonic Plague flourish there without any attempt to eradicate their causes. The low-lying, swampy ground on the shore of this turgid stream is peculiarly favorable for the cultivation of these diseases. But in the face of their complete conquest at Havana and Colon and Panama and Rio de Janeiro one can reasonably believe that like methods would eradicate them from Guayaquil also. It is reassuring to learn that the government of Ecuador is taking the first steps in a comprehensive and adequate plan for lifting from this ancient and still promising city the reputation of being the pest-house of the continent.

We stand all day in the Guayaquil harbor. Though we can not go on shore, we receive many visitors. Vendors of Panama hats hold the attention of all on board for a time. Contrary to popular belief, it is not in Panama but in Ecuador that these hats are made, and travelers make it a point to purchase them in quantities "for the loved ones at home" at Guayaquil or at Payta where the boat makes its next call.

Certain ones in our company had received "inside information" to the effect that Payta was the place to buy, and so the parleys with the bronze-skinned vendors resulted only in reducing their prices from $20 to $7 and $8 per hat, but not in many purchases, the rumor having gone about the boat that at Payta hats of equal value could be purchased for as low as two dollars and a half. Imagine the humiliation of the bargain-hunters when at Payta two days later they offered five dollars apiece for a large lot of fine hats and the swarthy owner disdainfully rowed away in his boat, not to return! This is the reason why scores at home who expect to be remembered with Panama hats as souvenirs of their friends' visit to South America will have to be content with such tokens as silver card cases and scarf pins and woven baskets and other not very interesting things searched for with great diligence by the ladies of our company in the shops of Callao and Lima.

But our day of waiting at Guayaquil will be marked in our recollection by a vivid and informing address by Mr. W. E. Reed, delivered to our deputation which gathered close about him in a cool spot in the bow of the ship. Advised by wireless of our presence on the "Huallaga," Mr. Reed came on board and told us the interesting story of his lonely work for Christ amid perils of fever and the hostile forces of the dominant church. Mr. Reed's work as a missionary is carried on parallel to his work as a teacher in the government schools, from which he derives his livelihood. Ecuador has only six or eight evangelical missionaries. With more workers and with something approaching adequate facilities for their work this neglected field offers large possibilities for Christian development.

Hardly do we get out of sight of the Gulf of Guayaquil when we find that a bracing coolness has come into the air which up to now has been what might be expected at the equator. We now realize that we are entering the Humboldt Current which plays so large a part in determining the climate and vegetation of the entire western coast of South America from the equator to the southern part of Chile, just as our Gulf Stream affects the western shores of Europe. For more than three thousand miles this cold Humboldt Current, starting somewhere in the Antarctic waters flows north along the coast toward the Gulf of Panama parallel to the Andes range of mountains. At a very few points the mountains come down to the sea, but in the main from the vicinity of the equator down to Valparaiso, a distance of over 2,000 miles, there is a strip of low-lying land along the shore which is absolutely sterile. Rain never falls upon it. The reason is that all the rain clouds from the east and southeast yield up their moisture to the thirsty plateaus of the Andes, and the clouds from the west precipitate their moisture as soon as they strike the cool air of the Humboldt Current. Hence this long strip of rich ground lies in perpetual dust and sterility, save in the few spots where cities have been made possible by irrigation. One cannot imagine a more barren and dreary coast than that upon which we look day after day in our voyage to Callao. Our ship calls at several ports, Payta, Salaverry, and one other. Little recesses in the mountains hold these towns in their embrace. Our ship anchors in each instance in practically an open roadstead, the harbors being nothing more than sickle-shaped bends in the shore line. With the glasses we can see that the few low, dull houses are made of adobe. A fertile valley extends up from Payta watered by a mountain stream, and the rich soil produces cotton which is shipped here at Payta. A [illegible] industry is carried on in the neighborhood, as it is also for some distance down the shore of Peru. We can make out abandoned wells at many points as we pass along.

After eight days of this "accommodation train" sort of sailing, stopping at small ports for cargo of cotton, sugar and cattle and to discharge merchandise we land at Callao, the port city of Lima the capital of Peru. Here we find something like a harbor, though by no means sufficiently cut off from the sea to protect vessels against the great swells that come rolling in like echoes of mighty storms far out on the deep. Our boat anchors about a half mile from shore. A launch has been provided especially for our deputation by the local committee of missionaries, and our trunks are taken in charge by a responsible fletero, or boatman, who is also a member of one of the mission churches. We pass through the customs without inconvenience and board the train for a ten mile ride along the River Rimac to Lima, where we find lunch (or as they call it here, breakfast) and comfortable arrangements awaiting our company at the Hotel Maury. A reception for us has been planned for the afternoon at the little mission hall where our conference is to be held and our sessions are schedule to open directly. But in the meantime we have an hour or two for looking about.

A PROPHET'S VISION.

The great calamity and danger of Europe today are the enormous armaments. No honest statesman can say that he sees in the present attitude of politics the necessity of war. No great Power is threatened. There is no menace to peace that could not be immediately dispelled by a firm protest of the peacefully disposed majority of nations. There would be, therefore, no danger to any people, but a vast and immediate gain to all from a general disarmament. It need not be simultaneous. It is idle to say that France fears an invasion from Prussia or Prussia from France, and an honest understanding among the western nations would help keep the peace from the eastern side. Why, then, is this awful waste of youth and treasure continued? I believe from no other motive than to sustain the waning power of kings. Armies are today only useful in Europe to overcome the people in peace, or by groundless wars to divert their attention from domestic misrule. With the disappearance of great armies, the welfare of the people would become the only mainspring of national action, and that false and wicked equilibrium by which the interest of one man weighs as heavily as those of millions of his fellow creatures would be utterly destroyed.—From the Life and Letters of John Hay.

It is said that the mountain whites in the South have the following picturesque motto, a new rendering of "Never do today what you can put off till tomorrow": "Don't ye fergit it: there's a hull day tomorrer that hain't been teched yet."—The Congregationalist.

An Englishman has said that for nearly a generation we have tried to make religion popular by making it easy. "We have tried to achieve prayer without fasting, life without the narrow way, discipleship without the cross. The humbling answer of experience is that 'we can't.'"

The Larger Christian World

A DEPARTMENT OF INTERDENOMINATIONAL ACQUAINTANCE :: By Orvis F. Jordan

Presbyterians Start Polish Church.

Although the Poles are now third in rank among the immigrants coming to this country, there is but little Protestant work among them. The first Presbyterian Polish church in the United States was formed at Baltimore in April. The charter membership is forty-five. Poles are slipping away from the Roman obedience, one-third of them in this country being outside that communion, but so far the various denominations have not known how to take advantage of the opportunity on account of lack of native workers.

Deny Bishops' Larger Power.

The strong democratic tendency in northern Methodism is seen in the recent refusal of the annual conferences to give the power of veto to the bishops. This power would enable them to veto acts of the General Conference which they regarded as unconstitutional. This privilege is exercised by the bishops of the Methodist Episcopal church, South. It seems probable that authorization will be given for the creation of "bishops for races and languages" to take care of the negro problem, and that dignified relation will be given retired ministers in their fellowship with the local church where they hold membership.

Dr. Grenfell Tells Army Officers Something.

Dr. Wilfred T. Grenfell, the practical missionary of the Labrador country, has been in service in France with the Harvard unit doing hospital service. He has told the army leaders that the waterproof cloth used in Labrador would be more practical for the army than the khaki which is in use. The suggestion is being seriously considered. Dr. Grenfell is back for his summer campaign among the fishermen to whom he has devoted his life.

Northwestern Christian Advocate Moves.

The editorial offices and presses of the Northwestern Christian Advocate, a leading journal of the Methodist Episcopal church in the middle west, is being moved outside the loop district about a mile to the north in Chicago. Henceforth the paper will be published from 740 Rush street. It was expected at first that all Methodist offices would go to the new building, but the bishop and other church leaders have thought it necessary to stay in the loop. The business loop is becoming very congested and this change is symptomatic of many which are being made which will enlarge the business center of Chicago.

Roosevelt Addresses New York Methodists.

The Social Union of New York Methodists was addressed recently by Hon. Theodore Roosevelt on "The Methodist Pioneers." The former president took occasion to say that this country wants peace but must have preparedness to maintain peace.

Next Meeting of Federal Council.

Announcements are already out for the next meeting of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America. It will be the third quadrennial meeting and will be held in the Second Baptist church of St. Louis.

Prominent Methodist Dies.

The press announces the death of Secretary Leonard, emeritus corresponding secretary of the Board of Foreign Missions of the Methodist Episcopal church. His demise occurred at Brooklyn, N. Y., on April 21. He has been known and loved throughout Methodism for his long faithful service as a missionary leader in his denomination.

The Disciples' Congress

THE Disciples' Congress convened at the Hotel Sherman in Chicago, April 25-27. There were men present from Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Iowa, Missouri, Kentucky and perhaps from other states. The attendance from outside the city was probably about the same as in recent years, but the local attendance was less owing to the sessions being held in the hotel. There was much greater intimacy of fellowship by reason of this plan, however, and it is thought that future sessions may be in the convention room of a hotel.

The Congress opened on Tuesday evening with a very noteworthy discussion on the future program of the Disciples.

Dr. Charles M. Sharpe frankly assumed the developmental conception of religious history and asked what the Disciples would teach with the notion of static religion gone. His paper breathed a warm faith that the movement would not be worse off, but rather better. He held that there are certain irreducible minimums which would abide throughout the development, among them the personality of Jesus. His reviewer was Editor F. D. Kershner, of the Christian Evangelist. He stated that there were three conceptions of religion abroad, the Evolutionary, the Static and the Typical. The latter introduced a new terminology to most of us. He defined Typical religion as a religion which had room for development, but held development will not be outside the genus. This he conceived to be the case with Christianity. The discussion revealed the fact that some did not believe either in the "irreducible minimums" of the first speaker or in the "development according to type" of the second speaker, but insisted that religious evolution went forward unhampered and according to the great law of survival. Dr. E. S. Ames and Rev. Andrew Scott criticised the discussion as lacking the practical note.

On Wednesday morning, the discussion of the Board of Education revealed some divergence of opinion as to the function of such a board. A number of ardent speeches were made, advocating a broader program for the Board of Education than the fostering of our college interests. It was felt that the situation in the state universities should receive attention, and some even advocated taking care of religious education in the Sunday-school through this board. The main address was by Dr. C. E. Underwood.

Rev. W. D. Ryan, of Youngstown, O., read a most astonishing paper on the question of "Church Fellowship and Christian Liberty." A referendum of a hundred leading pastors (judged by membership of the church, missionary offerings, etc.), revealed over fifty per cent of them in favor of some form of fellowship with unimmersed Christians.

The discussion of the question of the Kingdom of God was introduced by a thoughtful paper from the pen of Prof. W. C. Morro, of the College of the Bible, Lexington, Ky. He gave a statement of the matter largely from the standpoint of the Religionsgeschichte school, but his conclusions were temperate and constructive. The writer and Rev. A. L. Ward led the discussion of Mr. Morro's paper. Mr. Ward urged that some means be found for stating the eschatology of Jesus so it would not be abused by millennialists during the present crisis in world politics. His plea was that the statement of the doctrine of the kingdom of God was a practical need of the churches today.

Wednesday evening, Prof. G. B. Smith of the University of Chicago gave an address on "The Religious Experience of Jesus as Conceived Today." Professor Smith is a theologian whose position in the scholarly world grows more secure every year and the address showed the grasp of a speaker who has thought through his categories.

National preparedness was the theme at the Thursday morning session and it was presented by Rev. M. L. Pontius, of Jacksonville, Ill. He presented the arguments of the pacifists with telling force. Pres. H. O. Pritchard, the reviewer, refused to state his personal views, but said he would marshal the arguments on the other side. This was done with telling force. The Congress never takes a vote on questions under discussion, but a vote would probably have revealed a strong preponderance of pacifist sentiment, though the other point of view was not without its earnest advocates who held that they were the only practical pacifists.

The concluding session of the Congress was held at the University of Chicago on Thursday afternoon. The visitors viewed the buildings and grounds of the great university and Dr. Herbert L. Willett delivered an address on the oriental question.

The election of officers resulted in the choice of the following: President, Rev. Graham Frank, Liberty, Mo.; Vice-president, Dr. Chas. M. Sharpe, University of Chicago; Secretary, Dr. F. E. Lumley, Indianapolis, Ind.; Executive Board Members, Rev. C. H. Winders; Indianapolis; and Rev. F. D. Kershner, of St. Louis.

The question as to the frequency of the Congress was left with the executive committee and they will determine whether we shall have an annual Congress or a biennial meeting. Time and place are also left in their hands. Since entertainment is to be at a hotel henceforth, it is thought that the Congress will receive more invitations than it formerly did. O. F. J.

Disciples Table Talk

A New $60,000 Church for Ohio.

The building of the new church home at Bellefontaine is in many ways a remarkable achievement. The pastor, Traverce Harrison, came to this field only last year; when the former building was destroyed by fire on January 30, of that year, Mr. Harrison at once took the lead in the planning of a new and worthy building. At once $8,000 was pledged toward the enterprise; within less than a month pledges for $20,000 and $7,500 in cash were in hand. The dedication of the building, which required an outlay of $60,000, took place on April 30, and was in charge of George L. Snively. This structure has outside walls of Velvet Nap brick, with trimmings of Bedford stone. Decorations are in gold and ivory. The seating capacity of the church is 1,250. A fine $4,000 organ, a part donation of Carnegie, is a feature. Mr. Harrison is a graduate of Transylvania, having received A. B. and A. M. degrees there. The Bellefontaine church is fortunate in having an aggressive Ladies' Aid organization which pledged $5,000 on the new home. The dedication effort is reported to have been entirely successful.

East Dallas Church Will Hold Pastor.

John G. Slayter will remain with East Dallas, Tex., church as the result of urgent resolutions unanimously adopted by the elders and deacons and a remarkable demonstration of loyalty and love on the part of the congregation. Mr. Slayter requested the board to accept his resignation on March 27, without making known his personal reasons, and the board reluctantly granted his request. Since that action there has been a full and complete consideration of the pastor's reasons and it was the unanimous opinion of the board that his place is at the head of the church that he has led for four years in a phenomenal record of progress.

Huntington, Ind., Evangelists Tour County in Autos.

A feature of the evangelistic services held recently at Huntington, Ind., was a tour of the county by evangelists, pastors, and helpers in twenty-five automobiles. Elmer Ward Cole, Disciple pastor at Huntington, was the marshal of the day. Villages visited and treated to evangelistic services were: Markle, Brown's Corners, Warren, Majenica, Mt. Etna, Monument City and Andrews.

City Officials Attend Carthage, Mo., Church in a Body.

Carthage, Mo., is cleaning up and the Disciple pastor there, Charles H. Swift, invited the mayor and council to come to his church in a body and tell his people how they could assist in the good work. The invitation was accepted and the Disciple congregation is now working in entire co-operation in making Carthage a better town.

Ft. Worth Pastor Proves that Christianity is Practical.

L. D. Anderson, pastor at First church, Ft. Worth, Tex., has inaugurated a series of non-sectarian Sunday afternoon meetings, with the purpose of convincing the men of the community that religion is a practical asset in everyday life. Among addresses to be given by local leaders are the following: "Christianity in the Sick Room," "Christianity in Banking," "Christianity in Statesmanship" and "Christianity in Business."

The Indiana Convention at Danville.

Charles O. Lee, Danville, Ind., pastor is enthusiastic about the prospects of a successful state convention, which is to convene in his town, May 15-18. The Danville people are capable of taking care of a large attendance most efficiently. The church is one of the foremost in Indiana. Not only does it carry on its regular activities, but it believes also in applied Christianity. It has adopted the slogan: "A Servant of the Community," and seeks to make this slogan a reality in its work. It has one of the finest gymnasiums in the state. The building is also provided with club rooms for the social entertainment of the citizens of the community. It seeks to direct the recreational life of the young people into more wholesome channels. Danville is well chosen as a place to hold the convention at this time when the church is broadening the scope of its activities.

Evangelistic Interest at Massillon, O.

First church, Massillon, O., observed Holy Week by holding a series of decision services. H. E. Stafford, pastor, writes that the spirit of the meeting, the interest of the members and public and the results were so encouraging that the church is making all the regular services during the month of May evangelistic in a special campaign in the interest of those who may be led to take a definite stand for Christ. Massillon has been growing industrially at a very rapid rate and many people have come to work in the new mills from other cities. All pastors knowing of members having come to the town are asked to write Mr. Stafford. Mr. Stafford received a unanimous call from First church, Rochester, New York, but declined, recommending another. The church which he had visited asked him to reconsider his decision, but Mr. Stafford urged his recommendation of the other pastor.

Plans that Worked at Quincy, Ill.

When W. D. Endres came to First church, Quincy, Ill., in October, 1914, there were many problems to be solved. His ability is revealed in the fact that he has taken these, one by one, and has solved them all. The financial problem was taken care of by a thorough-going budget system and an every member canvass. Church attendance was secured by a "Go-to-Church" campaign. Then came the question of organizing and grading the Bible-school. Athearn's "Church School" was adopted as a text book for the study of the workers, the pastor leading in the course. The Athearn plan was followed and the school thoroughly graded. A campaign for souls was then inaugurated, with a goal of "50 Souls by Easter," and carried out successfully by personal work and group conferences. A successful solution of the "many meeting" problem is the midweek "church night" plan. On Wednesday evenings, from 7:45 to 8:15, a prayer service is held, then from 8:15 to 9:15 various group conferences; 9:15 to 9:45 is made a social hour. One of the leaders at Quincy writes enthusiastically of the power of the pastor in enlisting helpers in the work, and in effective use of the mails. Since his coming to Quincy 145 persons have been received into the congregation. Easter was made a great day in the church's history, 58 persons presenting themselves for membership.

Annual Report of Franklin Circle Church, Cleveland, O.

The 74th annual meeting of Franklin Circle church, Cleveland, O., was full of enthusiasm and prophetic utterances. The meeting was held in the assembly room of the new Bible-school and Community House building and was presided over by A. R. Teachout, chairman of the Board of Elders. The reports showed the following figures: 82 baptisms, 40 by letter, total number of additions, 122; 23 removals by letter, 9 by death, net gain, 90. Present resident membership, 901. Amount to missions and benevolences, $5,882; current expenses, $8,612; building fund, $21,112, total $35,606. The leaders in this work are: W. F. Rothenburger, pastor; Miss Jennie Jenkinson, pastor's assistant; Ira B. Penniman, director of music; Elmer Kyser, social director. Miss Jenkinson, who for the past four years has served most efficiently as assistant, has resigned that she may have an extended vacation, but she retains her membership in the church and continues as teacher of the large Outlook Class of young women. Miss Norma Williams has been elected as her successor. The living-links of the church are: One under the American Society; C. R. Lemon, at Sandusky, under the State Society; sixteen native Chinese workers at the Nantungchow Station, under the Foreign Society. The church begins its 75th year's history with a spiritualized program; with a splendid corps of trained and consecrated workers and helpers; a forward-looking membership which responds heroically to the challenge of a great city; and with a modern workshop and temple whose value exceeds $100,000.

Kokomo, Ind., Church in Forward Moves.

The various missionary societies of Kokomo, Ind., recently federated for the purpose of doing missionary work among the foreigners of the city, of whom there are some seven or eight hundred, mostly Italians and Roumanians. David H. Shields, Disciple pastor at Kokomo, writes that a house has been rented which will be maintained as a social center. Classes in English, kindergarten classes and classes in domestic science, etc., have been opened. The work is meeting with hearty response on the part of the foreigners. The movement is supported by a number of the churches, both by cash and by service. A Sunday-school is at work also. Mr. Shields writes that Messrs. Cory, Miller, Shaw, Derthick and Howe, and Mrs. Atwater—all of the Men and Millions Movement—were with the church at Kokomo, April 23, and a day or two following. Sixteen persons were added to the church during a week's meeting preceding Easter, ten coming into the church on Easter Sunday. The minister did the preaching, following the last week of Jesus' life under the theme, "The Way of Jesus." About 130 men and boys sat down at a "Father and Son" banquet Wednesday evening, April 26. The Sunday morning following was "Father and Son" day.

Study Food Values

Food provided for the family table deserves the careful thought of every housewife. Do you use thought when buying baking powder?

The quality of cake, biscuits and all quickly raised flour foods depends largely upon the kind of baking powder used.

Royal Baking Powder is made from cream of tartar derived from grapes. It is absolutely pure and has proved its excellence for making food of finest quality and wholesomeness for generations.

Royal Baking Powder contains no alum nor phosphate.

Your Summer Vacation

Bible-school workers can plan for no better summer vacation than attendance upon one of the summer schools for Bible-school workers.

There are three such summer schools under the auspices of our own Bible-school forces as follows:

Southern States: Lexington, Ky., June 8-16, W. E. Frazee, Dean, 410 Keller Bldg., Louisville, Ky.

Eastern States: Wellsville, N. Y., July 7-14, W. J. Clarke, Dean, 108 Carew Bldg., Cincinnati, Ohio.

A fourth school for the extreme south is being projected to be held near Shreveport, La., June 15-23, of which Claude L. Jones, Shreveport, La., will be the Dean.

The programs for all these schools combine recreational and educational features of a high order. The faculties will be strong, the fellowship fine and the cost at a minimum.

The Eastern School.

The school for the eastern states has previously been held at Keuka Park, N. Y., but this year it will be held at Wellsville, N. Y. Wm. A. Young and Paul B. Hanks with their fine co-workers there, are offering every inducement for the comfort and entertainment of those who come

The faculty for this school will comprise Finis Idleman, W. H. McLain, John R. Ewers, Marion Stevenson, Miss Lucy King DeMoss, Miss Hazel A. Lewis, Miss Cynthia Pearl Maus, W. J. Clarke and several others equally attractive. Interesting side trips are planned and the recreational features will be under the expert direction of Prof. John R. Bradshaw.

Reservations for all these summer schools should be made at an early date with the dean as assignments are made in the order applications are received. Plan your summer vacation in this way and you will not regret it. Write for further information.

—Albert Buxton, who ministers at Ipava, Ill., will deliver both the Baccalaureate and Memorial sermons at Ipava.

—W. M. Baker, of Central church, Marshalltown, Ia., preached a sermon on "If Christ Should Come to Marshalltown."

—Central church, Toledo, O., Grant W. Speer, pastor, raised a total of $6,000 on Easter day to provide needed improvements on the church plant. During twenty minutes of the morning service $4,300 was pledged. During the week preceding Easter $1,000 was donated to the church by a member, the condition being that $4,000 should be raised in addition. There were nearly 1,000 persons present at Bible-school on Easter morning.

—Greenville, Tex., Bible-school has a class of fifty girls which has organized a fine glee club which is a feature in all the services of the church and school.

—E. M. Austin, father of Paul Austin, whose death and church extension memorial were reported in last week's issue, has a class of 145 young men in the church at Litchfield, Ill.

—The new men's class at Norwood, O., taught by C. R. Stauffer, recently had present 300 lacking two.

—The Easter services of First church, Paris, Ill., were of unusual interest. The Bible-school attendance was 720 and the entire school except the Primary remained for the morning service. The Primary department had a special program. In the evening the large auditorium and Bible-school room were filled. More than 1,000 people attended the evening service. There were two confessions in the morning and two other additions to the church. Paris has recently had visits from President Frederick W. Burnham and Superintendent Robert M. Hopkins.

—The first sermon preached at Central, Des Moines, by the new pastor there, W. A. Shullenberger, was on the theme, "The Consciousness of God."

—The Philathea and Baraca classes at First church, Kansas City, Mo., hold open house from 5:30 to 6:30 on Sunday evenings.

—J. D. Garrison, pastor at Lawrenceburg, Ind., reports a combination service on Easter morning, with 226 present and four additions. Mr. Garrison preaches on Sunday afternoons at Bright, Ind., and on Easter Sunday raised over two hundred dollars to take care of improvements on the building there. A meeting will be held at Bright in August, Mr. Garrison doing the preaching.

—Automobiles were used to bring shut-ins to the Easter services at the Springfield, O., church. C. M. Burkhart pastor, reports: 53 persons at sunrise prayer-meeting and breakfast; 483 at Bible-school; capacity houses at morning and evening church services; N. B. A. offering of $40; 7 accessions, all adults.

—At a recent meeting of the Iowa Ministerial Association in Des Moines the following books were selected as a special "Reading Course" for the pastors: "The Meaning of Prayer," by Fosdick; "Studies in Acts," by Lhamon; "Evolution of the Country Community," by Wilson; "The Challenge of the Country," Fiske; "The Country Church," by Gill and Pinchot; "The Country Life Movement," Bailey; "Rural Life and Education," Cubberly; "The Country Church and Rural Problems," Butterfield.

—A secret organization for boys over 12 years of age, called "Knights of the Holy Grail," has been organized at Stuart St. church, Springfield, Ill. Arthur E. Spear, of Steubenville, O., is the organizer. The association started with forty charter members. The organization is an order of two degrees. The first is for boys of 12 years and the second is for young men of 16 years or over. A board of directors, consisting of not more than six members of the official board of the church, the minister being chairman of the board, constitutes the order in each church.

—Easter Sunday at Memorial church, Chicago, was a notable day. A missionary offering of $119 was taken in the Sunday-school. There were nineteen baptisms at the morning service of the church, and three other additions. The trustees have begun a campaign to clear the church of its building debt, amounting to $12,000, and to secure an endowment fund. The recent Every-Member visitation reached about ninety per cent of the church, and was a real success.

Notes from the Foreign Society

The Sunday-school of First church, Cedar Rapids, Iowa, has set its stakes for $750 for Foreign Missions on Children's Day. Abbott Book, the Sunday-school director of the church, thinks they will reach the goal. They have apportioned each department and class in the school, which is a very wise plan.

Dr. and Mrs. L. F. Jaggard, of Moneika, Africa, will soon start homeward on their furlough. Owing to the submarine campaign, around the British Isles, they plan to come by way of the Canary Islands and the West Indies.

The striking advance in the receipts of the Foreign Society seems to indicate that last year's experience was rather a "trough in the waves" and that from now on, missionary interest and missionary giving for all of the work will climb up rapidly to higher levels.

It will be a great satisfaction to the friends of the society to know that at the April executive meeting it was decided that all reductions in salaries should cease and the incomes of the workers restored to what they were before last year's crisis. It was with great regret that this necessary step in retrenchment was made last year and it is hoped that such measures will never be necessary again. The missionaries have uttered no word of complaint and assumed the heavy burden of last year loyally for the work's sake.

The churches have gained $20,000 over last year's receipts so far this year, and it is confidently expected that the Sunday-schools will gain at least $10,000. With the hearty co-operation of all the friends of the work, the receipts should reach the coveted $500,000 before the books close in September.

The Endeavor Societies continue to make splendid gains in their gifts over last year. The gain to April 20 is $2,200. Endeavorers are beginning to feel that the watchword of the year, "Ten Thousand Dollars from the Endeavor Societies by September 30, 1916," is in sight. A continuation of the present interest will insure the victory.

Arrangements have been made to purchase land at Fukushima, Japan, for a mission home This has long been needed.

Bert Wilson and R. A. Doan, representing the Foreign Society, attended the Laymen's Missionary Congress, Washington, D. C., April 26 to 30.

The Chinese mission has recently purchased a piece of property at Sanho, near Luchowfu. This is the consummation of some ten years of effort in this direction. The churches at Indianapolis and Rose Hill, Iowa, give liberally for this cause.

The church at Richmond, Ind., L. E. Murry pastor, will in the future support Justin E. Brown as their Living-Link missionary at Luchowfu, China.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR NOTES.

The Intermediate Society of the Tulsa, Okla., church has assumed the support of Elonga-eola, a native evangelist at Monieka, Africa, thus becoming a Life-line Society in the Foreign Christian Missionary Society.

The Foreign Society is preparing helpful literature on the Endeavor topic for May 28, "How Missions Are Blessing the World." This may be had free of charge by addressing S. J. Corey, Box 884, Cincinnati, O.

Ray E. Rice, missionary to India, in writing of the Orphanage at Damoh, states, "One of the most encouraging parts of the work in the Orphanage has been the growing spirit and the increasing interest in the Christian Endeavor work. Mrs. Rice is finding the Juniors to be a very interesting lot of boys. The fact that one of these little fellows can lead a meeting is a great thing. If one should go out in the districts where some of these boys live, he would really be amazed to know that one who came from such a place could over lead a meeting."

What North Carolina's Year Book Shows.

The year book of the North Carolina Disciples is just out and shows that there are 164 Churches of Christ in the state, with 17,760 members; there are Bible-schools in 118 of the churches, with total enrollment of 9,737, property valuation of the churches totals $3,466.25, on which a total debt is reported of $24,928. There are fifty-three active preachers, thirteen of whom give full time service to one church in their respective fields. Offerings from North Carolina sources for State Missions totaled $1,224.33. State Board and A. C. M. S., now assist the mission work at Wilmington, Littleton, Wendell, Fremont and Whitakers. Important cities in which our work is newly established are Charlotte, Raleigh and Greensboro. C. C. Ware is the state secretary.

Disciples Publication Society

The Disciples Publication Society is an organization through which churches of the Disciples of Christ seek to promote undenominational and constructive Christianity.

The relationship it sustains to the Disciples is intimate and organic, though not official. The Society is not a private institution. It has no capital stock. No individuals profit by its earnings.

The charter under which the Society exists determines that whatever profits are earned shall be applied to agencies which foster the cause of religious education, although it is clearly conceived that its main task is not to make profits but to produce literature for building up character and for advancing the cause of religion.

The Disciples Publication Society regards itself as a thoroughly undenominational institution. It is organized and constituted by individuals and churches who interpret the Disciples' religious reformation as ideally an unsectarian and unecclesiastical fraternity, whose common tie and original impulse are fundamentally the desire to practice Christian unity with all Christians.

The Society therefore claims fellowship with all who belong to the living Church of Christ, and desires to co-operate with the Christian people of all communions as well as with the congregations of Disciples, and to serve all.

The Christian Century, the chief publication of the Society, desires nothing so much as to be the worthy organ of the Disciples' movement. It has no ambition at all to be regarded as an organ of the Disciples' denomination. It is a free interpreter of the wider fellowship in religious faith and service which it believes every church of Disciples should embody. It strives to interpret all communions, as well as the Disciples, in such terms and with such sympathetic insight as may reveal to all their essential unity in spite of denominational isolation. The Christian Century, though published by the Disciples, is not published for the Disciples alone. It is published for the Christian world. It desires definitely to occupy a catholic point of view and it seeks readers in all communions.

OBJECTIVE POINTS.

The story is told of Napoleon the Great that he never went into a battle unprepared, both in respects to his own army and that of his enemy. It is said that he had spread out before him on a table a map of the country that he intended to conquer and that he would stick pins here and there in that map denoting by them the places where he would station his various battalions for the next day's fight so that they could trap the opposing force and become victorious. These pins were his Objective Points. * * * Napoleon was a great thinker, a man who planned ahead. He knew what he wanted to do, but he was wise enough in that he realized that he must also know HOW to do it. If life shall contain for us the essence of all that is best we must possess vision. We are always facing the new—a new day, record or experience. If the new day shall close and we are to sing "the end of a PERFECT day," then that day must have been planned for before hand. Nothing comes to us through haphazardness—but grief. Objective Points will glorify life and cause it to be fruitful in energies that will bless minkind. Toe your mark! Ready! GO!

A Historic Night in Historic Lima

AND so this is Lima! Ancient city founded by the terrible Pizarro himself nearly four hundred years ago, three quarters of a century before the landing at Jamestown! Here until one hundred years ago was the clearing house of Spain's political affairs and Rome's ecclesiastical affairs in all South America. So dominant was Lima in the days of Spanish rule in this continent that practically all goods shipped to Argentina and Uruguay, instead of being carried directly, were brought over the Atlantic to the Isthmus of Panama, reloaded on ships on the Pacific side of the Isthmus and carried to the port of Callao, Lima's port, and thence carried by pack trains over the Andes into the interior and even to the very shore of the Atlantic itself! Thus Lima, though situated on the western coast, was the chief port of the continent for trade with the mother country. Here the Church established the Inquisition, with subordinate tribunals in Chile and Argentina, and for two hundred years carried on in the western world the practices that make Spain's type of Catholicism a hiss and byword in history. Peru was the last of the South American countries to throw off the yoke of the Spaniard, and when in 1826 the Spanish flag was hauled down from the fortress of Callao the power of Iberian despotism was broken for all time in these lands.

With the founding of Lima, Cuzco, the far more ancient city situated far up in the Andean plateaus, was displaced as the capital of the country. Cuzco had, during the Inca rule, perhaps a million inhabitants and is still a city of some size—perhaps 75,000 people. Its ruins make it the most interesting point on the continent today, and it is the hope of our deputation to visit it if we can arrange to take the two weeks requisite for making the trip. But here we are in Lima, a city which seems to us to symbolize the whole vast historic adventure by which a small force of dauntless and conscienceless buccaneers displaced and ruined a peaceful, highly developed and well disposed civilization.

The reader will not forget that when Columbus discovered America and Balboa first looked out on the Pacific there were two spots on these continents where thrived well ordered Indian societies whose achievements in architecture, in education, in many industries, in art, in jurisprudence and in warfare mark them as in many ways the equals of the ancient Phoenicians. These two societies were the Aztecs in Mexico and the Incas in Peru. While Cortez was conquering and exploiting the Aztecs, Pizarro was conquering and exploiting the Incas. The conquest and the exploitation of both were complete. In Peru the rule of Spain was substituted for the paternalism of the Incas. All the inestimable wealth accumulated through many centuries changed hands. Much Indian blood was absorbed by the conquering race, but the great mass of the conquered reverted to their own type and have ever since lived in aboriginal primitiveness on the plateaus of the Andes and beyond, all ignorant of the glorious traditions which history is preserving for them some day to claim as their own. What a crime against God and man these Spanish Conquistadores perpetrated by their ruthless treatment of the Incas is indicated by the testimony of one Leguisamo, himself one of the last survivors of the Conquistadores. Sir Clements Markham in his book, "The Incas of Peru," generally regarded as the most authoritative study of this ancient society, quotes from the will of Leguisamo, made at Cuzco in 1589, the following extract:

> I took part in the conquest and settlement of these kingdoms when we drove out the Incas who ruled them as their own. We found them in such order, and the Incas governed them in such wise that there was not a thief nor vicious man nor adulterer nor bad woman among them. The men had honest and useful occupations. The lands, forests, mines, pastures, houses, and all kinds of products were regulated and distributed in such sort that each one knew his property without any one else seizing it, nor were there lawsuits. The operations of war, though numerous, never interfered with the interests of commerce or agriculture. All things from the greatest to the smallest had their proper place and order. The Incas were feared, obeyed, and respected by their subjects as men capable and versed in the arts of government. . . . We have subdued these kingdoms and we have destroyed by our evil example the people who had such a government as these natives enjoyed. They were so free from committing crimes that the Indian who had a large quantity of gold in his house left it open, only placing a small stick across the door as a sign that its master was absent. With that according to their custom no one could enter or take anything. But now they have come to such a pass, in offense of God, owing to the bad example we have set them in all things, that these nations have changed into people who do no good or very little."

No doubt our friend Leguisamo painted too nice a picture of the Inca society. Other parts of his will quoted by Sir Clements indicate that he had motives for making the picture of his erstwhile confederates as dark as the facts would possibly allow. But making due allowance for his mood, there is no doubt that the substance and spirit of his testimony are true to fact.

It is not my purpose in these very informal articles to attempt to re-write the history of the peoples we are visiting. We are a missionary deputation; our interest is in the conferences we are holding on Christian work in these South American countries. I am quite sure my readers have a greater interest in these regional conferences than in ancient history. But I have introduced this bit of ancient history because it seems to me to suggest more vividly than any descriptive words I could use just what is the nature of the social and moral problems the Christian gospel must meet and solve in Peru and in all these Latin Republics. The problems we will face in our regional conference in Lima are problems which have grown out of that historic situation. A conquering race, Roman Catholic, mixing with its blood the blood of the conquered heathen, exploiting them and for centuries living in luxury off them, baptizing them at wholesale but never really Christianizing them, and baptizing many of their heathen customs with them; a state church, rich in its own right, heavily subsidized by the government; a priesthood quite deficient in any sort of spiritual conception of religion, well known to be of a low order morally; a public intelligence slowly forming during the past century under more or less modern democratic and scientific ideals and shot through with disillusionment as to religion; the masculine portion of the community, generally, and especially the educated classes, attached to the Church only by considerations of social conformity but by no moral conviction; low standards of social morality resulting in a startlingly large percentage of illegitimate births—these are some of the makings of the problem which evangelical missions in Peru now confront.

Only a beginning has been made to establish or to interpret evangelical Christianity in Peru. Outside of Lima and Callao there are only a half-dozen points in the entire country where evangelical work is being done. The northern republics of South America have not received the same attention from North American and British missionary societies that has been given to Chile, Argentina, Uruguay and Southern Brazil. The Boards have seemed to be hesitant about pressing their work in these equatorial regions, and the political difficulties which long since were removed in the more progressive and stable republics of the South have only recently been set aside in the North. Freedom of worship is a long established right in Chile and Argentina, although in both these republics the Roman church is the State Church, receiving special protection and large annual grants from the public funds. In Brazil there is now complete separation of Church and State and it is generally understood that Uruguay's constitutional convention soon to be held will place that very progressive nation alongside Brazil in this respect. But here in Peru it is only nine months since liberty of worship was granted by the government. Less than twenty-five years ago Rev. F. G. Penzotti, who is attending our conference in Lima, was put in jail in Callao, where he was kept for six months, for distributing Bibles from house to house. In order to obtain his release it was necessary to set in motion the diplomatic machinery of the United States and Great Britain. The growth of Protestant missions in Peru has been greatly hindered by an article of the constitution which stated, in substance, that "the religion of the State is the Roman Catholic religion; the State protects it and permits no other form of public worship." In the interior parts of Peru it was almost impossible under this law to maintain Protestant worship of any sort, but in the larger cities of Lima, Callao, Arequipa and Cuzco a modest work has been kept up under semi-clandestine conditions.

Now, however, there is great rejoicing among the few missionaries and their evangelical congregations over the change recently made in the constitutional law of the land. The words, "and permits no other form of public worship" were stricken out of the constitution within the past year. This still leaves the Roman Catholic church in a unique position as the State church, but it enables Protestantism to come out of its discreet obscurity and worship God and preach the gospel in the open light of day.

The coming of our deputation was made the occasion of the first public Protestant meeting ever held in Peru outside the little mission halls. A theatre had been rented in the heart of Lima. Announcements had been made to all the evangelical groups of the two cities and a modest advertisement inserted in the newspapers. On the afternoon of our arrival we were given a reception at one of the mission halls, and that evening all went to the theatre meeting.

The place was packed. Our deputation sat on the stage. Bishop Kinsolving, of Brazil, presided, speaking in Portuguese, which language a Spanish speaking audience can understand almost as well as an American audience understands the brogue of a Scotchman from the Highlands. It was deemed advisable that no speeches be made in English. There was no singing, no prayer. The Bishop simply called the assembly to order with a gavel and made a short introductory address which was followed by three speeches.

Professor Eduardo Monteverde, of the University of Montevideo in Uruguay, who was president of the Panama Congress, Rev. Alvaro Reis, Presbyterian pastor of Rio de Janiero, whose church of 1,000 members is the largest evangelical congregation on the continent, and Rev. Frederico Barroetavena, Methodist pastor at Rosario in Argentina, a very effective orator in a land where eloquence is the common mode of speech—these were the speakers on that evening which celebrates a great new date in the history of Protestant missions in Peru.

We were all more or less vibrant with the feeling of novelty and uncertainty. What hostile elements might be present in the vast assembly, no one knew. The theatre faces a Plaza, and during the early part of our program a band was playing in this Plaza. A great crowd stood outside the theatre door as we entered. It was evident that the whole affair was felt to be a radical innovation—a Protestant meeting held publicly in a theatre and with police protection! Four sturdy officers stood at the door—as sturdy, that is to say, as could be furnished by the, to us, undersized policemen of that city—aiding us to get through the crowded doorway and keeping a fair degree of order in the curious crowd.

From our point of view on the stage we were made to feel the heterogeneous character of the audience. There were a very few Anglo-Saxon faces—some missionaries, ten or twelve Americans or Englishmen engaged in business in Lima, and about two-thirds back some one pointed out to me the interested countenance of the Hon. Benton McMillin, United States Minister to Peru. Mr. McMillin, by the way, is a Tennessee Disciple, formerly Governor of that state, and at one time representative in Congress. He exchanged calls with us during our stay in Lima, and I had an enjoyable talk with him about interests vital to us both. Then there were the humble and intelligently devout faces of the mission members. These seemed to constitute more than two-thirds of the audience.

Scattered through the house were many men whose cheers seemed to me to indicate not so much a positive attitude of favor and support for the evangelical ideals as a negative jeering of the Roman Catholic church, concerning which they had evidently experienced a bitter disillusionment. The number of men of this temper, if I am any judge, was very large. They are not evangelicals. They would probably call themselves liberals in religion, as well as in politics. The fact is that in religious faith they are quite out at sea, if not confessed atheists. In revolting from the only Church they know they feel, in many cases, that they are also revolting against religion itself.

It is to men of this type that we are mainly indebted for the revision of the constitution allowing liberty of worship. This right was not secured by the power of the Protestant movement in Peru, for that movement, though some of its leaders exercised great influence in gaining the revision, is still an almost negligible element in political affairs. But the Liberal party in politics stands for democracy, free speech, freedom of conscience and social progress through education. This party saw clearly that the repression of all forms of worship other than the Roman Catholic was plainly inconsistent with its fundamental principles and so lent itself as the instrument of religious freedom and brought about the revision of the constitution. Nevertheless, the affinities between this large body of liberals and the young evangelical Church are more than negative. The missionaries feel that in many ways these liberals are their allies, and the liberals in turn see possibilities of great good for their country implicit in the evangelical movement. Many of them go no further than to agree that with the growth of the evangelical movement there is bound to come a stirring up of the established church which will result in her purification in at least some degree. This makes them look with favor upon the Protestant propaganda. It was not strange, therefore, to find a considerable company of these men in attendance at our theatre meeting.

AT THE LIMA CONFERENCE

(2.) Theatre meeting at Lima on the first evening of the Conference. No such public meeting was ever held in Peru by Protestant people, liberty of worship having been gained in that Republic within the past year.

Perhaps I am wandering somewhat afield in telling my story, and so I come back to the theatre. While the first address was being made, we noticed a stir in the rear of the audience. Presently a priest, dressed in the robes of a Franciscan monk, emerged from the "standing room only" space and was led by an usher about half-way down the center aisle where there was a seat just made vacant by some one going out. Under his arm he carried a bundle of papers. He sat down and began forthwith, in a rather conspicuous fashion, to take his bearings. Without betraying the slightest embarrassment he craned his head in the direction of every part of the house, evidently sizing up the audience. Then he settled down, apparently to listen to the speakers. When the last speaker was announced the priest began to distribute to those in his neighborhood the papers which he carried. We saw a young man come to him and take a handful to one of the galleries and begin to distribute them there.

Of course there was just a little perturbation among those of us on the platform who knew the inflammable possibilities of this unaccustomed situation, and especially among us Spanish and Portuguese illiterates who did not know what the speakers were saying. When the chairman declared the meeting adjourned our priestly auditor was surrounded at once with a great crowd curious to get his circulars. He was doing a flourishing business with them when a youth, evidently of one of the evangelical missions, quickly seized the whole bundle from under the padre's arm and ran with it to the platform, assuming, of course, that he was doing us a favor. The whole crowd surged forward toward the stage. For several moments it looked as if there might be a riot. Some good woman on the stage called out to some one to start "Blest Be the Tie That Binds," but somebody else firmly said, "Do nothing of the sort." Bishop Shepard, of Kansas City, and I were standing at the very front of the stage ready to start down the steps leading into the center aisle. We proceeded to take up all the space there was on those steps so that those rushing down the aisle toward the stage could not get by without pushing us off, which somehow we felt sure they would not do.

The circulars reached the hands of some one on the stage who could read Spanish and this person had the wisdom to send them back into the crowd for distribution. All were completely satisfied and went off in peace. The priest, meantime, had vanished, but we learned from those who sat near him that he was clearly in a badly intoxicated condition. At our leisure in the hotel that night we examined the circular, which proved to be not so much an attack on Protestantism as on the Liberal party for granting the right of public worship to others than Roman Catholics. It was very vitriolic but very crude. If it represents the quality of intelligence possessed by those to whom the Roman church entrusts its defence against the propaganda of modernism and evangelicalism, it is safe to predict that these freer and more democratic movements will wax strong and powerful in the very near future.

Thus ended an incident that disturbed us for a moment only, and thus opened our series of conferences in South America. The next day we got down to business in the little hall of one of the missions and we studied and discussed the problems of missionary work in Peru for the next four days.

The National Missionary Congress

A Complete Report of the Recent Meeting at Washington, D. C.

BY F. W. HAROLD.

THE National Missionary Congress, convened by the Laymen's Missionary Movement, held its final session last night at Memorial Continental Hall. To-day the delegates are leaving for their homes in all parts of the country.

Announcement was made at last night's session that a total of 1,287 delegates had been registered, divided among practically every Protestant religious denomination in the United States, and representative of all States excepting Arizona, Delaware, Florida, Montana, Nevada, and Idaho.

No such body of men has been assembled in the United States to discuss missionary topics since the Congress held in Chicago in 1910. There was evidence that a powerful impression was made upon the delegates. The educational value was unusually great; fact after fact was given to the delegates by men who could speak with authority, and the mature judgment of leaders was made known on many different phases of work. In an unusual way the Congress made a spiritual impression upon its members, and this was especially true of sessions in which the spiritual note was uppermost in the addresses.

J. Campbell White, formerly General Secretary of the Movement, presided at the session on Friday morning, April 28, at which time the subject of "Stewardship" was discussed under the topic "Practical Ways in Which Laymen Can Best Use Their Property for the Extension of the Kingdom." Under four branches the topic was discussed by as many different speakers.

E. W. Poteat, president of Furman University, spoke upon "The Christian Doctrine of Property;" George Inness, of Philadelphia, discussed the second phase of the morning theme, "A Reasonable System of Accounting to God for Money;" R. A. Doan, of Cincinnati, another layman who has turned aside from active business to give his attention to missions as an unpaid worker, spoke upon "The Call We Must Answer;" Dr. John F. Goucher, of Baltimore, addressed the Congress upon "Investigation and Concentration in Giving."

Eben E. Olcott, of New York, treasurer of the Laymen's Missionary Movement, presided at the afternoon session, the general theme of which was "How May Christ More Largely Dominate All Contacts of American Life With the Non-Christian World?" The speakers were:

Hon. A. J. Wallace, ex-lieutenant-governor of California, who spoke upon "The Commercial Relation;" Hon. Amos P. Wilder, of the Yale Chinese Commission, United States Consul General in Hong Kong and Shanghai for many years, discussed the second phase of the subject, "Through Political Relations;" the third branch of the theme, "In Educational Circles," was presented by Charles D. Hurrey, of New York, General Secretary of the Committee on Friendly Relations Among Foreign Students.

Brief addresses by young men from foreign countries, students at American universities, were a feature of the session. The students were introduced by Mr. Hurrey, and included Dr. K. Kato, of Japan, Mr. Kuruvilla, of India. Luis Berenguer, of Cuba, and S. J. Chuan, of China.

MISSIONARY WORK.

Two great students and leaders of missionary work in the United States delivered addresses at the Friday evening session. William J. Schieffelin, of New York, presided. The first speaker was Harry F. Ward, of Boston, an authority on the relation of the church to social service problems, whose topic was "Facing the Social Results of the War." "Making America Christian" was the topic discussed by Dr. Hubert C. Herring, General Secretary of the National Council of the Congregational Churches.

The presiding officer of the Saturday morning session, April 29, was Fred B. Fisher, Associate General Secretary of the Laymen's Missionary Movement. Addresses were delivered by Silas McBee, of New York, editor of the Constructive Quarterly; Herbert S. Johnson, of Boston, and W. E. Doughty, Educational Secretary of the Laymen's Missionary Movement, on the subject, "How Increase Lay Initiative and the Sense of Responsibility for Missionary Tasks of the Church."

The report of the Committee on the Decennial Report of General Secretary Millar was presented at the close of the morning session. The Committee represented all parts of the United States and consisted of: E. L. Shuey, chairman, Dayton, Ohio; James D. Husted, Denver, Colo.; Harry R. King, Seattle, Wash.; E. M. Bowman, Chicago; Andrew McLeish, Chicago; E. C. Harley, Dayton, Ohio; George W. Watts, Durham, N. C.; W. F. Whalen, Buffalo, N. Y.; Edgar A. Emmons, Syracuse, N. Y.; J. Munford Keese, Syracuse, N. Y.; F. E. Fisher, Detroit, Mich.; C. C. Cartwright, Portland, Ind.; H. C. Theopold, Minnesota; Charles S. Bates, Exeter, N. H.; John P. Wallace, Des Moines, Iowa; J. M. Skinner, Atlanta, Ga., John P. Pettijohn, Lynchburg, Va.; Wm. S. Royster, Norfolk, Va.; James M. Montgomery, New York City.

The Committee's recommendations covered every one of the thirteen headings in the Secretary's report and were adopted by the Congress as the working program of the future for the Laymen's Missionary Movement.

The addresses at the evening session on Saturday were delivered by Dr. Shailer Mathews, President of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America, and Robert E. Speer, Chairman of the Congress on Christian Work in Latin America, held in Panama last February. Dr. Mathews' subject was "Missions an Illustration and a Method of Realizing Christian Unity," while Mr. Speer discussed "The Unity of the Two Americas."

Enlistment, prayer and witness as "The Bases of Effective Lay Service" were discussed at the Sunday afternoon session, April 30. Addresses were delivered by N. W. Rowell, K. C., Toronto, Canada, on the basis of "Enlistment;" S. D. Gordon, author of the "Quiet Talk" books, on the basis of "Prayer;" and Bishop Arthur S. Lloyd, of the Episcopal Church, on the basis of "Witness."

Three forceful addresses on "The Next Steps in Awakening the Latent Forces of the Churches" brought the Congress to a close at the night session on Sunday, April 30. William B. Millar, General Secretary of the Laymen's Missionary Movement, discussed the future program of work as one of the steps to be taken.

In a brilliant address, bristling with figures, J. Campbell White described the immeasurable latent human and material resources in the United States.

Christian Endeavor as Seen by a Layman

Notes of an Address at the National Christian Endeavor Convention at Hangchow, China, April 9, 1916.

BY CHARLES SUMNER LOBINGIER.

THE features of the Christian Endeavor movement which most impress me are its (1) interdenominationalism (2) internationalism and (3) pragmatism—by which latter I mean, of course, its practical tendencies.

In seeking to create a larger and broader Christianity rather than to promote particular sects or creeds it is fully in line with the most progressive thought of Christendom. The day of sectarianism is past, especially in China, and wise religious bodies now emphasize their points of agreement rather than their differences. The great leaders of the Christian world realize as never before that its crying need is unity—not necessarily in creed or cult but in action—union for practical progress. Like the Federal Council of Churches, Christian Endeavor is preparing for such union by teaching the younger generation to think in terms of catholicity and its founder, Dr. Clark, takes a long step in advance by advocating organic union between his own denomination, the Congregationalists, and the Disciples of Christ.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR AND INTERNATIONALISM.

(2) The movement reproduces the spirit of primitive Christianity by its internationalism. The great Apostle to the Gentiles recognized "neither Jew nor Greek, neither barbarian nor Scythian." And by that broad but simple formula what might have been a little sect of Judaism was transformed into the world faith.

As an American I naturally take pride in the fact that the Christian Endeavor movement started in America and that its honored founder is a fellow countryman of mine; just as, if I were an Englishman, I would feel especially gratified because the Young Men's Christian Association arose in England from the labors there of Sir George Williams. But neither organization belongs now to any one people; both have become assets of humanity.

The Christian Endeavor movement long since passed beyond national boundaries and one of its most significant features is the stupendous fact that it has spread to every country on the globe, where churches and missions are found; that in thirty-five years—barely a generation—it has grown from a single, small society at Portland, Maine, to more than 80,000 societies in all parts of the world; that its membership has increased from a handful then to over four and a half millions, representing almost every nationality. The ramifications of Christian Endeavor influence are epitomized in the ministrations of Dr. Clark himself who has traveled nearly a million miles and occupied the pulpits of such historic but widely separated shrines as Calvin's Cathedral at Geneva, the mother city of Protestantism; many state churches in Germany and France; the Glasgow cathedral of the Scottish Kirk; the Norwegian cathedrals of Trondhjem and Bergen, in the former of which the kings of Norway have all been crowned; and last but not least, the Lutheran cathedral at Helsingfors, Finland. Truly here are facts for the sociologist as well as the theologian. What a power for world peace, e. g., ought such an organization to become in time!

(3) But in becoming international, Christian Endeavor has not ceased to recognize nationality. One of its ideals, as announced in a message from Dr. Clark himself, is "patriotic national life." It aims to make better and more loyal Chinese, Americans, British—in each case a people more considerate of the interests of others but still not unmindful of their own and able to say with the poet:

"I honor every nation's name,
Respect its fortune and its fame,
But I love the land that bore me."

It is with extreme interest and satisfaction that I have observed some of the Christian Endeavor Societies of my own country turning their attention to our great social and political problems—trying to make better citizens, a better and cleaner city, a better and more wholesome civic life. In all this I see one of the most hopeful auguries for the future. For once let the church people of any Christian land resolve to work together for its practical betterment and many a great evil is doomed. The chief difficulty in the past has been that the moral forces were divided while those of evil are always united.

HELPS SOLVE SOCIAL PROBLEMS.

As a layman and a public servant I am naturally most interested in this phase of Christian Endeavor. I may be in error but it seems to me one which has been too long neglected by the church—that it has kept aloof too much from mundane concerns. I cannot help feeling that it is time to come down to earth and tackle problems that are "of the earth, earthy." If I read correctly the Sermon on the Mount it deals primarily with the present life and aims to teach us to live this life more abundantly. Surely then the Christian Endeavor movement is true to the primitive ideals of its faith when it grapples with the great problems of to-day and seeks to make life larger and easier for those who are to follow. For it is one of Christianity's goals, as visioned by its most sympathetic interpreter among the great modern poets, to "Ring out a slowly dying cause,

And ancient forms of party strife;
Ring in the nobler modes of life,
With sweeter manners, purer laws.

Ring out false pride in place and blood,
The civic slander and the spite;
Ring in the love of truth and right,
Ring in the common love of good.

Ring out old shapes of foul disease;
Ring out the narrowing lust of gold;
Ring out the thousand wars of old,
Ring in the thouand years of peace.

Ring in the valiant man and free,
The larger heart, the kindlier hand;
Ring out the darkness of the land,
Ring in the Christ that is to be."

Union Churches

Memorial Church of Christ, Chicago.

MEMORIAL Church of Christ was organized in June, 1908, and has therefore been in existence eight years. It was formed by the union of the First Christian Church and the Memorial Baptist Church. The former was worshipping in a hall on Grand Boulevard and 47th Street, and the latter owned a handsome property worth about $100,000, on Oakwood Boulevard, west of Cottage Grove Ave.

The question of union between these two organizations was first discussed in a preliminary gathering of a dozen men representing the two denominations. Later each church chose a committee of twelve, and this joint committee met and considered the question of union, particularly in reference to six points:

1. The name of the united church. It was pointed out by the Disciples that they would prefer a name in which the term "Baptist" did not occur, as it was not a New Testament designation of a church. This was readily assented to; and on the other hand, the Baptists requested that the name "Christian" should not be included in the title of the church, as that was also not a New Testament designation of the church. When the title, "Church of Christ" was suggested, this was readily assented to, and the word "Memorial" was added as descriptive of the church organized, worshiping in the building that was to be occupied by the united group.

RECEIVING NEW MEMBERS.

2. The plan of holding the communion service. The Disciples said they would like to observe the Lord's Supper each week, as was their custom. Several of the Baptist members said they had been reared in churches observing the weekly communion, and would be glad to have that custom prevail in the church. Further, as nearly all English Baptist churches observe the weekly communion, and many other churches, including the Episcopalian and Roman Catholic, it was decided the communion should be observed each Sunday without imposing any obligations to which the individual conscience could not assent.

3. The method of receiving new members into the Church. The Disciples have always extended the invitation after every preaching service. This was felt to be an appropriate custom, and was decided upon. The Baptists have been accustomed to inquire carefully into the motives and credentials of those who present themselves for membership, and to allow the congregation to express its opinion in reference thereto. This was also felt to be a very wise precaution, and was likewise adopted. The custom of the Church is therefore to present the names of those who offer themselves for membership, either by confession of faith and baptism, or by letter or statement, and to permit the congregation to act thereupon. This is usually a simple formality, but it has the value at least of removing from the minister the total responsibility of receiving people into the membership. At first the reception of members was limited to those who came for immersion or had been immersed elsewhere. Later the Church adopted a rule admitting to associate membership all unimmersed persons presenting themselves as members of evangelical churches.

4. The method of choosing officers. Little discussion was necessary regarding this matter. As far as possible the officers have been chosen equally from the two uniting groups, and within the church it is hard to distinguish Baptist from Disciple.

5. The division of missionary and philanthropic offerings. These are divided equally between the two denominations.

6. The financial matters involved in the union were disposed of by a subcommittee in a manner meeting entirely the wishes of both Disciples and Baptists, so that the church building formerly used by the Memorial Baptist Church became the property of the Memorial Church of Christ. Its debt was provided for, and its expenses have been paid by the united membership since that time. The property is held by three trustees chosen in the usual legal way.

Sometimes people have raised the question as to what is the denominational status of converts in the united Church. That is a question which is never raised, because it has no practical significance. When our people move elsewhere they unite with Disciples or Baptists just as they wish. In cases where Baptists have gone from our membership to another city and found a strong working church of Disciples they have united with it, and the reverse has also been true. We believe that every one of our members would find himself in full harmony with like-minded Christians, whether Baptists or Disciples.

The ministers of Memorial Church have been chosen indiscriminately from Baptist and Disciple ranks. It happens in this case that from the start one minister has been associated with the work of the church, but several others have at different times had part in its activities, and an effort has been made to be just to both denominational interests in this regard.

The Church in its experience of eight years has had a most fruitful and successful career. Its location is not the most fortunate, as it is in an ebb tide of population, but its opportunities are the greater for social service in this community. Within the Church the greatest harmony prevails. In all things that pertain to organized Baptist work it is a Baptist church, sending delegates to Baptist conventions and taking its regular part in Baptist activities. Equally in all things that relate to the work of the Disciples it is a Christian church. There seems no reason why two churches of tolerant spirit interested in the progress of the Kingdom of God, should not unite in just this manner.

Our endurance, our self-sacrifice, our bitter conquest of wrong, are latent forces that, set free in a changed air, become strength, ecstasy, the peace that passeth understanding.—Stopford A. Brooke.

Saintship is not innocence, it is conquest. It is the experience of men and women who have met many temptations, sometimes falling before them, but growingly their conqueror, until their days become organized victory.—W. C. Gannett.

We need the invisible, not the visible God for character. It is here, indeed, that we discern the meaning of all the doubts, the uncertainties, the lack of positive evidence that beset us on the way to faith. If the road were plain, we could get there easily enough. But where would be our training?—J. Brierley.

The Religion of the Bible

From an Address Delivered by Dr. Thomas Nicholson on "A Proposed Campaign of Christian Education."

THE OLD TESTAMENT as well as the New enunciates moral and religious truths of permanent and universal validity, exhibits the earlier stages of a great redemptive process in which God himself takes possession of human souls and through the operation of His Spirit becomes in man the inspiration of his thoughts and actions in such a way as to create a new moral personality. It abjures formalism and discloses religion as a practical force which becomes a powerful element in renovating human nature and in transforming human society.

Give these Scriptures a fair chance, and they will prove their own credentials in the form of a marvelous productivity of moral, social, and spiritual power, and of manifold movements for the enrichment of human life and the extension of these blessings which spring from a nobler and a more widely prevalent human brotherhood.

Christianity's ethical significance is not so much in its codes as such, as it is in the new conceptions of God, life, and morality, which it has given to the world. It affirms a divine origin and destiny for man. It invests life with an indefeasible sacredness because it makes it a divine service and a great mission. It makes all men children of a common Father, heirs alike of eternal life, and it opens the door to a new conception of perfection—a perfection in which men must under all conditions, always and universally, live in right relations before the ideal society can be realized.

Religion in its proper function is a force which awakens the sleeping conscience, reveals the secret things of the soul, tears the mask from moral perversion, humiliates false pride, and convinces man of the existence of a loving Father who has the power to lead him into a new life where sin is consumed in the flame of a higher emotional love which in turn becomes the source of an inward joy, the life of an undying hope, and the power of a new personality.

THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY

EDITORIAL

ON COMING HOME

IT SEEMS good to be at my desk again after nearly four months' absence. An experience that one might have looked forward to as the crown of one's years has been given me in the midst of my active service. I cannot think of it as a reward, but as an increase of spiritual capital to be used in the service of the cause that is dear to the heart of Christ. I will be trying for several weeks to tell the story of my trip to South American mission fields, but I imagine that the tale will seem to my own soul to be altogether unsatisfactory. Perhaps the real story of my journey will be read by sensitive readers between the lines of all my writing in the years that it may please God to stretch before me. That is the hope of my heart—that the uplift, the deepening, the enrichment and the seasoning of my own soul which I have felt in sharing the fellowship, the counsel and the prayer-life of the elect spirits with whom these four months have been spent may appear in the very tone and temper and atmosphere of The Christian Century. No man can work at such tasks as have occupied our deputation for these months, and in such fellowship, and remain the same man. One carries such an experience ever forward with one. It is not a diminishing reminiscence; it is perennially alive and growing in the soul. As I return to my round of labor I find it quite impossible to make headway until I have acknowledged gratefully the service rendered by my colleagues who have made the "Century" so attractive in my absence, the generous goodness of those men and women in all parts of the land who shared the support of my journey, and the gracious love of God by which each several day of my absence was made to seem as if it were providentially designed for my good.

CHARLES CLAYTON MORRISON.

PORTO RICO PUTS UNITY TO THE FORE

PROBABLY the most advanced stand for Christian unity anywhere in the occidental mission field is that taken by the churches of Porto Rico. On all the mission fields the ideal of Christian unity is being discussed with favor, and in oriental lands much substantial progress has been made toward its practice. But the mission cause in many of the lands of Latin America is still laboring under the handicap of visionless denominationalism. Porto Rico seems to be a very pronounced exception.

At any rate the sentiment among the Christian leaders of that island has reached the point where only stiff-necked sectarianism on the part of the mission boards in the United States can hinder the merging into one body of all the Christian groups now existing in Porto Rico.

And it is hardly likely that the boards will offer the slightest opposition.

The vision of a united evangelical Church in Porto Rico got itself formulated at the Regional Conference held at San Juan last March. Besides the missionaries and Porto Rican leaders there was present a deputation from the Panama Congress, consisting of men like Mr. S. G. Inman of the Committee on Co-operation in Latin America, Rev. J. E. McAfee, Secretary of the Presbyterian Board of Home Missions, Rev. L. C. Barnes, Secretary of the Baptist Foreign Missionary Society and others.

The Conference decided to recommend the organization of an "Evangelical Union of Porto Rico," of which each congregation of the various evangelical denominations represented on the Island should be a constituent member, and to which all denominational organizations should be related as sectional conferences.

The plan provides for the free interchange of members from one congregation to another by letter, and in cases where denominational polity does not permit receiving persons into full membership by letter it is urged that some form of affiliated membership be adopted.

The resolutions setting forth the new plan pay tribute to the Federation principle which has been in operation in Porto Rico for some years but declares that the tasks of the Kingdom call for a Church that is organically one.

WE BELIEVE all truly catholic-minded Christians will rejoice in this positive and clearly conceived step toward unity. If The Christian Century had had the doing of it we would have called it the "Church of Christ in Porto Rico" instead of the "Evangelical Union of Porto Rico," for that is precisely what it is.

And we would have left the denominational sectional conference idea out altogether.

Also we would have made no provision at all for sectarianism to save its face under the mask of an affiliated membership.

But of course we know that a boon so good and so big as Christian unity must not be expected to be given to us all at once.

It has to grow.

And when it grows so fast as it evidently has grown among Porto Rican Christians we thank God and make no mention of our quibbles.

Not the least part of our satisfaction is to learn of the good part taken by the two Disciple missionaries, Rev. V. C. Carpenter and Rev. M. B. Wood in bringing this movement toward its goal.

Now that the vision has been brought so clearly to the eyes of the mission boards interested, let them look well that they be not disobedient to it!

SECTARIANISM A POISON IN THE SOUL

THE Church must be Christianized before it can Christianize the world, and the fundamental step in the Christianizing of the Church is the scourging out of its portals of the suspicion that Christians entertain against one another. It narrows prayer; it lowers the standard of Christian living; it makes incompetent the Church to fulfill the task for which Jesus established it and commissioned it. There can be no definite progress until suspicion on the part of one Christian of another is put away as one boldly struggles to put away those sins that are robbing him of communion with God. The real poison in the way of Christian unity is suspicion of each other. This is one of the most deceptive and destructive sins with which the human heart struggles. Some Christians are so blind to it that they think suspicion of one who differs with them is a mark of Christian integrity, when, as a matter of fact, a man may be as orthodox as Paul in the letter of the law and yet, being suspicious of other Christians, practically deny his faith in Jesus as the Christ, who taught that Christianity consists in love both of God and one's fellows.

That is Dr. Peter Ainslie's way of dealing with the sectarian spirit. He drives the issue home to the individual soul. And that is where it belongs. Sectarianism is not merely an ecclesiastical thing, an organizational thing, it is a personal thing. Its root is in the suspicious and intolerant attitude of the soul.

Dr. Ainslie is writing in the Christian Union Quarterly. He goes on to observe and to deplore the fact that when a man adopts a too free and open attitude of fellowship with other Christians his standing in his own communion often suffers.

George Calixtus, professor in the University of Halmstead, and a pioneer in the cause of Christian union, worked untiringly for a conference between Roman Catholics, Lutherans and the members of the Reformed Church. It was in those early days when the Protestant Reformation was becoming established. The conference could never have been held if Calixtus had not labored so unceasingly for it. But when the time came to select representatives his own communion refused to select him because he was too friendly with the Christians of other bodies, especially his fellow Christians of the Protestant communion. It was that spirit which excluded Thomas Campbell and Barton W. Stone from the communions in which they were reared, and it is that spirit that has made it awkward for many large spirited Christians in these days. Timid men draw back and suffer. Bold men go ahead and take their places in the ranks of pioneers of a holy cause, which must find its realization some day as sure as God is God.

We have seen no nobler words from Dr. Ainslie's pen in many a day.

THE AMERICAN AMBASSADOR AND THE MISSIONARIES

IN THE recent difficult times that have passed over the Turkish Empire no man has rendered more valuable service in behalf of humanity than Mr. Henry Morganthau, the American Ambassador.

Although not a Christian, this large-hearted man has proved himself the friend of every Christian, as well as Jewish, agency for the relief of the suffering people, whether natives or foreign.

In a recent letter to a friend in this country, Mr. Morganthau has expressed his sentiments regarding the missionaries in terms so explicit and commendatory that they ought to bring conviction to all who question, and satisfaction to all who believe in missionary work. He says:

"A residence of over two years in Turkey has given me the best possible opportunity to see the work of the American missionaries and to know the workers intimately.

"Without hesitation I declare my high opinion of their keen insight into the real needs of the people of Turkey. The missionaries have the right idea. They go straight to the foundations and provide those intellectual, physical, moral and religious benefits upon which alone any true civilization can be built. The missionaries are the devoted friends of the people of Turkey and they are my friends. They are brave, intelligent and unselfish men and women. I have come to respect all and love many of them.

"As an American citizen I have been proud of them. As an American Ambassador to Turkey I have been delighted to help them."

THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST AND THE CONGRESS

AN EDITORIAL in the Christian-Evangelist regarding the recent Congress of the Disciples held in this city, reveals an interesting misapprehension of the facts. He says that the programs of the Congress have in recent years shown a tendency to feature the progressive men among the Disciples, and to neglect the conservatives.

In another editorial note in the same issue he insists that a man ought to be very certain of his facts before venturing to speak, lest he work great injustice to truth. The two utterances have a striking bearing upon each other.

If Mr. Kershner had been at pains to know the reason why the number of so-called progressives is greater than that of the more conservative brethren on the programs of the Congress, he could have learned from any one of the secretaries who with their associates on the advisory committees have prepared the programs during the past few years, that out of a very long list of well-known men of the latter type who have been requested to prepare papers, only the smallest number have promised compliance, and a considerable proportion of these have failed to appear. The facts are entirely within reach of any one who wishes the details.

It is quite a mistake to suppose that the makers of the programs desire to have only one sort of papers presented. Every element of interest is enhanced by clear-cut differences and earnest discussion. Mr. Kershner is himself an illustration of the principle. He was invited to write on an important theme, and although he could not be present, he sent his paper, which was received with appreciation and contributed admirably to the discussion.

We hold no brief for any recent secretary of a Congress, but we are sure that if Mr. Kershner will look into the facts he will find them as we have said. As he is on the advisory committee of the Congress for next year, we are sure he will be at pains to interpret the Congress platform as absolutely open and unbiased. It is both the privilege and the duty of the conservative brethren to contribute all they wish to both the programs and the discussions.

THE BIBLE AND THE NATION

THE most impressive and inspiring book in the world is the collection of Hebrew and Christian literature we call the Bible. Its history as a book is the most romantic of stories. Deep in the foundations of all modern life it has its place. It is woven into the writings of every people whose civilization is a factor in the western world. The greatest literature in our possession today is shot through with the words and ideas of the Scriptures.

It has had the experience of menace from persecution, suppression, ridicule and criticism, and is today more vital and impressive than ever before. It contains the most fascinating of human masterpieces, the loftiest poetry, the most moving oratory, and the most influential biographies in existence. The men whose stories are told in this volume stand head and shoulders above all others in the annals of the race.

Such a book deserves the most careful study of every informed member of the community. If the knowledge of history, literature, science, art and social endeavor are essential to competent education, not less is a knowledge of the Bible. Any education which omits the literature of the Bible cannot call itself finished in any adequate degree.

If, then, the doctrine that church and state should be totally severed prevails in America, with its consequence that the Bible must not be taught in the public schools or state universities, all the more there lies upon the home, the church and the Christian school the obligation to provide the instruction which shall save the youth of our age from the neglect of the highest culture in literature, morals and religion which life affords.

The nation is builded upon the foundations provided by the Bible. Its political and social ideals are those enshrined in the Scriptures. Its literature is embroidered with the form and spirit of biblical utterance. The nation owes it to itself to prevent these priceless elements of its life from passing into obscurity by the neglect of the Bible. That which the public school and the state university are inhibited from providing must be supplied by the family, the religious circle, the woman's club and the public platform. It may be that through such influences the value of the Bible in public instruction may be the better understood, and its ancient rights restored.

The Sunday School

THE CALL OF THE WEST.

Lesson for June 4.

Golden Text: Come over into Macedonia, and help us. Acts 16:9.

Lesson Acts 15:36: verses 16:6-15 printed.

Memorize verses 9, 10.

(6) And they went through the region of Phrygia and Galatia, having been forbidden of the Holy Spirit to speak the word in Asia; (7) and when they were come over against Mysia, they assayed to go into Bithynia; and the Spirit of Jesus suffered them not; (8) and passing by Mysia, they came down to Troas. (9) And a vision appeared to Paul in the night: There was a man of Macedonia standing, beseeching him, and saying, Come over into Macedonia, and help us. (10) And when he had seen the vision, straightway we sought to go forth into Macedonia, concluding that God had called us to preach the gospel unto them.

(11) Setting sail therefore from Troas, we made a straight course to Samothrace, and the day following to Neapolis; (12) and from thence to Philippi, which is a city of Macedonia, the first of the district, a Roman colony: and we were in this city tarrying certain days. (13) And on the Sabbath day we went forth without the gate by a river side, where we supposed there was a place of prayer; and we sat down, and spake unto the women that were together. (14) And a certain woman named Lydia, a seller of purple, of the city of Thyatira, one that worshiped God, heard us: whose heart the Lord opened to give heed unto the things which were spoken by Paul. (15) And when she was baptized, and her household, she besought us, saying, If ye have judged me to be faithful to the Lord, come into my house, and abide there. And she constrained us.

VERSE BY VERSE.

6. And they. Paul, Silas and Timothy.—The region of Phrygia and Galatia. Visiting the church Paul had founded on his first missionary journey.—Forbidden of the Holy Spirit. We are not told whether it was by events or by inward impression that the Holy Spirit closed the door.—In Asia. Not the Asiatic continent. Neither Asia Minor, for this name did not come into use until the fourth century. It included Lydia, Mysia, Caria, and at times parts of Phrygia.

7. Over against Mysia. The borders of Mysia.—Assayed.—Tried to go.—Bithynia. The first Epistle of Peter is directed to these people.—The Spirit of Jesus. The Holy Spirit.

8. Passing by Mysia. Passed it in the sense that they did not stop to preach.—Came down to Troas. From the highlands to the coast.

10. We sought. This is the first use of the personal pronoun, which indicates that Luke the writer of the Acts was now with Paul.—Concluding that God had called. It was their judgment that God desired them to evangelize Europe.

11. Setting sail therefore. They went by boat to their new field of labor.—We made a straight course. We ran a straight course, which is the nautical term for sailing before the wind. There were four in the party.

12. The first of the district. In every province or district there was always a strong competition for the title of first place.—We were in the city tarrying certain days. Lodging and employment must be secured; it may have been that a place to preach had to be secured.

13. By a riverside. This informal place of worship was sought by the Jews when they had no synagogue.—A place of prayer. Their investigations probably revealed the place to them.—Spake unto the women. Indicates that there were not many Jews, or that it was not the usual place of worship.

14. Lydia. It is an adjective, "The Lydian." "Lydia" was a common name among the Greeks and Romans and hence does not indicate that she was a native of that country.—One that worshiped God. In using this expression the author shows that Lydia was a Jewish proselyte.—To give heed. She was now giving attention to the gospel message.

15. She was baptized. The fact that this is mentioned shows its importance in the Christian system.—Her household. These words have been called upon to carry a very heavy burden. The argument to have force in favor of infant baptism must assume that every household has infants in it. Just a little observation discloses this fallacy.—Come into my house. Her home becomes the first Christian church in Europe.

TEST QUESTIONS.

1. What advance step does the lesson record?
2. What is the significance of the pronoun "We?"
3. Who were in this company of missionaries?
4. Why was Barnabas not with them?
5. What is the relation of dreams to thought?
6. What is the meaning of "vision" in the lesson?
7. Explain the leading of the Holy Spirit.
8. What did Paul do when he landed in Philippi?
9. How did they find the "place of prayer?"
10. Why was the place of worship by the river?
11. Who were the first converts in Europe?
12. What do we know about Timothy?
13. Who was Lydia?
14. What is the meaning of "A seller of purple?"
15. Describe the conversion of Lydia.

The Call of the World

BY ASA McDANIEL.

ONE of the great events of history was taking place when Paul and his company were crossing from Troas in Asia to Neapolis in Europe. No one could have guessed that this little advance guard of several men represented a greater power than any army that had ever invaded Europe. Great kings and mighty warriors have come and gone; but the king whom Paul came to Europe to herald forth rises to greater and greater power.

To Paul that lone man standing there meant that the door to a great continent was open. He entered with a small force which has increased to a mighty army. Our call is not made by a lone figure calling for a single class of people; but from every point of the compass pleading voices are heard calling us to a world-wide task.

The call comes from the boys and girls of every community who are being neglected. Even the best homes pay very little attention to the environment of their children. Very few fathers and mothers help select the playmates for the future citizens of this nation. We are interested in our stocks and bonds, our houses and lands, our horses and cattle, and give much time and thought to their development. The care of our children is turned over to the school and the church. It frequently happens that we are not interested enough in them to see that these guardians are properly trained in mind and heart to be of real value to the growing life. We are coming upon better days in this field of work, but the call of the child is still insistent, and parents cannot shirk their responsibility in this task.

Some one has said that we did not go to the foreigner rapidly enough so God is sending them to us. The fact is that we are not much more faithful in the new task than we have been in the old one. Large areas of our city life are about as largely foreign as the land from which the people have come. We have been spending more time in trying to protect ourselves from them than we have in trying to help them. Seneca, the great Roman philosopher, made a practice of dining with his slaves, and when challenged as to the innovation, so offensive to the Roman mind, said, "I dine with some because they are worthy of my esteem, and with others that they might become worthy." Jesus came on the stage of action about the same time, and in a different part of the world. He ate with sinners and sought the lost. If our standards of living toward the foreigners among us were measured by such standards, how far short would we come? We have just begun the study of the problem, and have not gotten far enough along with it to become interested in the man without a country. We claim to be a Christian nation, and yet the treatment these people receive at our hands does not give them a very high idea of our boasted ideals. These are at our doors and are influencing our very life and the life of our children; how much less would the man on the other side of the world attract our attention and call out our interest! When we think of George B. Baird as the heart of a million Chinese, and Charles P. Hedges in the "dark continent," as well as many others, our efforts to make their lot better seems pitiably small.

We as teachers and leaders here at home should make clear the call of the world to our boys and girls. It might not be that God will call them in the same way that he called Moses or Paul; but the call will come just as surely. He speaks to their souls, and to those who answer, he offers a mighty task, and one that may seem as difficult as the one Paul faced; but if they attempt it in the spirit of the great apostle and accept its increasing responsibilities it will grow in their hands to be a thing of power. The call is to you and yours.

Among men who have any sound and sterling qualities, there is nothing so contagious as pure openness of heart.—Dickens.

There are moments when the beauty of the universe looks in at us with a meaning quite divine; or the crises of history shake us as the visible drama of Providence; or the eye of appealing misery burns into the place of pity in our souls, and we know it to be his sympathy as well as ours; or a new insight of duty opens a path which he alone could show.—James Martineau.

Disciples Table Talk

Honor for First Church, Frankfort, Ky.

The State Journal, of Frankfort, Ky., recently contained a two column write-up of First Christian church of that city, to which Roger T. Nooe ministers. Following the extended pastorate of George Darsie at First church, C. R. Hudson, of Franklin, Ind., was called to the church and served for seven and one-half years when his resignation was reluctantly accepted for him to go to Pomona, Cal. Since his absence the pastorate has been filled by Mr. Nooe, who was called from Crescent Hill church, Louisville. Mr. Nooe entered upon his fifth year the first of last December. During this time over 400 have been added to the membership of the church. The membership of the church at present is about 1,100. About a year ago the church organized a Mission Bible-school, at which the pastor's assistant, J. L. Aldersen, now preaches. The First church school is a large one, having an attendance of from 600 to 800. The school supports an orphan boy in a Louisville institution. The congregation is a large giver to all national causes. Over $10,000 will be spent soon for a Bible-school annex.

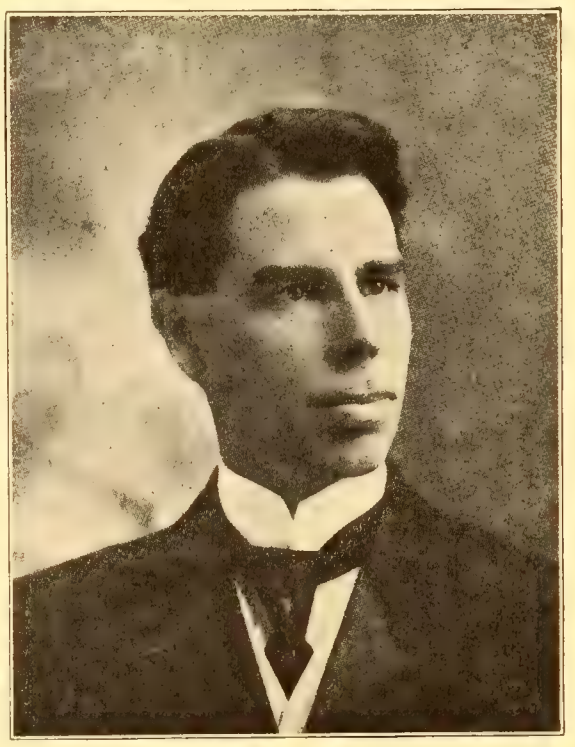
Disciples of the East in Convention.

The annual convention of the Christian Missionary Society of Maryland, Delaware and the District of Columbia was held at Thirty-fourth St. church, Mount Rainier, Md., May 16-18. H. C. Armstrong, of Baltimore, is president of this organization. Among the speakers on the program were: E. B. Bagby, on "Some Irreligious Tendencies"; Earle Wilfley, preaching the convention sermon; George A. Miller on "Evangelism"; Finis Idleman on "The Tent Dwellers of Faith"; H. C. Armstrong on "The Value of the Testimony of the Disciples of Christ"; Finis Idleman on "Christian Union"; Mrs. Effie L. Cunningham on Missions"; R. A. Doan on "Missions": W. J. Clarke on "Home Missions." The reports of officers showed a fruitful year's work. A number of the national secretaries were present at the sessions and delivered inspiring messages.

Men's Class in Social Service Enterprises.

The Men's Bible-class, of Riverside church, Fort Worth, Tex., has undertaken to be of some real service by the adoption of three lines of work as follows: First. Giving free legal advice to those who are worthy of such advice and representation, the question of worthiness being decided by a committee for that purpose and the advice being rendered by a law firm appointed by the class. Second. The rendering of free medical aid to those in need in Riverside. Third. The maintenance of a free employment bureau to find positions for those without work who are worthy of work.

Ohio Congregational Pastor Becomes a Disciple.



A. B. Houze, pastor at Central church, Lima, O., reports that he has recently received as a member of this congregation W. D. Fletcher, pastor of the Congregational church at Vaughnsville, O. Mr. Fletcher is a Welshman, and is in the prime of life. He holds some honorary degrees, being highly educated and a most effective pulpit man. For several years he was a pastor in the Baptist fellowship, but a few years ago united with the Congregationalists. The reading of Disciple literature was the means of his finding the Disciple fellowship. Mr. Houze vouches for the character and ability of Mr. Fletcher, and writes that he should be put to work at once in a good pulpit. He will be glad to answer any inquiries concerning him.

Covington, Ky., Loses Pioneer Disciple.

J. W. Hagin, one of the pastors at Covington, Ky., sends word of the death of Mrs. S. G. Boyd, one of the few living charter members of the old Fourth Street church. Her life has been a great power for good in Covington, where she has given her time and means unreservedly to Christ's service, during a half century. A host of friends loved her for her beautiful character and sweet, sympathetic disposition. Though impaired health reduced her active service in recent years, she will be greatly missed by this congregation of which she was a loyal member. The sympathy and prayers of all go out to those who knew and loved Mrs. Boyd best, and who will miss her most.

Disciple Gains and Losses in Southern California.

Secretary F. M. Rogers, of Southern California, made an interesting address at Los Angeles recently upon the work of the Disciples in Southern California from which we glean the following items: There were only five congregations in Southern California in 1881, located in Los Angeles, Santa Ana, Lompoc, Downey and Artesia. In 25 years, 1881 to 1906, these had increased to 20 self-supporting churches and 27 missions; Grant K. Lewis was called to give his full time to the work of state secretary. In 1905 there were about 7,500 Disciples and 45 organizations. Last year's report gave 17,362 members and 81 organizations. In the ten years from 1906 to 1916, there have been 31,000 additions to the Disciple churches of Southern California, about one-third of them by baptism. In these same ten years, however, there were 21,000 members lost from the churches: A small per cent by death, a few by letter, but the large majority just disappeared. During the last three years the Christian churches of this fair South land baptized 3,000 converts and received 6,000 otherwise, but the net gain has been very small.

Forward Steps in West Virginia Church.

W. Vernon Lytle, pastor at West Union, W. Va., reports that on Home mission day at this church the apportionment was doubled by the liberal offering made. Because of the successful use of the every member canvass and the duplex envelope system it has been found possible to remember all the benevolent agencies of the church. Increased financial obligations in connection with the local work have also been met without difficulty. Mr. and Mrs. Lytle attended the State Bible-school convention at Morgantown, May 10, 11, 12, where they both gave addresses. Mr. Lytle will also deliver the baccalaureate sermon for the graduating class at the local high-school, May 21. He expects to enter Yale in the autumn with the purpose of working toward a Ph.D. degree. Mr. Lytle's brother, O. T. Lytle, who received a B.D. degree at Berkeley, will attend Columbia university.

T. J. Golightly Heads Religious Education Department at Drake.

W. S. Athearn has recently been called to religious educational work in the West, and it is reported that T. J. Golightly, superintendent of schools at Norborne, Mo., has been secured to head the Department of Religious Education at Drake University. Mr. Golightly is a graduate from the College of the Bible, Lexington, Ky., and also has his A. B. degree from Transylvania University, Lexington; has his B. D. degree from Yale and is a graduate student in Education from the University of Missouri. Mr. Golightly has been preaching in Missouri towns in connection with his public school work.

Iowa Church Doubles Membership in Three Years.

W. B. Zimmerman came to Pleasantville, Ia., about three and a half years ago, and during this period the membership has been more than doubled. This has been done largely through making the church a community center for social and religious activities. During the past year a mission has been established at Beech, Ia., with nearly a hundred members. Mr. Zimmerman is now leaving the Pleasantville work to complete another year at Drake. He will also preach at Mitchellville.

Kentucky Bible Schools Will Hold School of Methods Next Month.

The school of methods idea has become very popular among Disciples Bible-school workers in Kentucky, scores of whom plan to spend nine days each June in Lexington attending the Annual Kentucky School of Principles and Methods which is held there. The plans for this year include an able faculty of lecturers on all phases of Bible-school work, ample provision for social and recreational activities, devotional periods, and special lectures. The interest in this school has grown from year to year. This year several schools have agreed to pay the expenses of all their workers who will come; a number of counties are endeavoring to secure one or more representatives from each of their schools; the alumni association is at work to bring back all those of previous years and recruit many new ones, and many individuals are planning to spend their vacation period here. Advance reservations should be sent to the Dean, Walter E. Frazee, 410 Keeler Bldg., Louisville. The faculty this year will include the following: Walter E. Frazee, Dean, Administration Course for General Officers. Roy K.

Missouri Pastor Gives Addresses at Iron Works.

Casper C. Garrigues, who resigned as General Secretary of the National Benevolent Association to accept the pastorate of First church, Joplin, Mo., has just concluded a series of noonday sermons given at the United Iron Works in response to an invitation from the men employed there. Mr. Garrigues reports that during the six months he has been with this church there have been 127 additions. The resident membership is now about 550. Mr. Garrigues writes that his predecessor, S. J. White, did an excellent work in Joplin and left a united and harmonious congregation. The new pastor has been made president of the Ministerial Alliance of Joplin, also vice-president of the county and of the district missionary organizations. He says he has not found a more responsive field anywhere and that he was never happier in his ministry than now. His Bible-school made an Easter offering of $100 to the National Benevolent Association.

Rev. C. C. Garrigues, who is making a record at Joplin, Mo.

EUREKA COLLEGE NEWS NOTES.

Oliver W. Stewart, of Chicago, will deliver the regular commencement address, Friday, June 9. F. W. Burnham, of Cincinnati, will deliver the Preparatory School address, Wednesday, June 7. W. F. Richardson, of Kansas City, will be the principal speaker at the annual meeting of the Alumni Association, Thursday, June 8.

Pres. H. O. Pritchard is spending the greater part of May with the Men and Millions Team in Virginia. He will return to Eureka May 24.

The senior class gave its annual reception recently to the students and faculty.

Beginning the first of May and lasting until the close of school, Vesper services are being held at the Christian church instead of the regular evening services. These meetings are having marked success.

The annual Prohibition Oratorical Contest will be held the first of June. The tryouts to select a representative to the annual Intercollegiate Oratorical contest next year at Knox College will be held May 28.

NOTES FROM THE FOREIGN SOCIETY.

The church at Bilaspur, India, sends $8.50 to the Foreign Society as their offering for Foreign Missions. The church gave money and grain and fruit and eggs and chickens, etc. They gave also to the Indian Christian Missionary Society which is doing work at Kota, and the rest of their offering was divided between the Foreign Society and the Woman's Board.

The Sunday-school at Ionia, Mich., has definitely decided to become a Living-Link in the Foreign Society and will in the future support their own missionary. Others are planning in the same direction. There ought to be no less than twenty new Living links forged on Children's Day. If the great Men's Bible Classes will get under this, they will have a task worthy of their faith and their efforts and their liberality.

The receipts from the churches as churches during April amounted to $23,330, or a gain over the corresponding month, 1915, of $1,915. This brings the total receipts from the churches as churches for the first seven months of the year up to $73,984, a gain of $20,587. The Endeavor Societies have gained $2,282, and individual gifts, $2,838. Annuity gifts show a loss of $6,591. There has been a gain in regular receipts of $26,035.

The orders for Children's Day supplies are being received in a very encouraging way. They are numerous and hearty. All the signs point to larger interest in the great annual festivity. We believe the receipts will go beyond $100,000. Send orders at once to the undersigned and they will be given prompt attention.

A number of friends are carefully considering the great advantages of the Annuity Fund of the Foreign Society which has received more than $600,000 on this plan. For full information address Box 884, Cincinnati, O., and it will be promptly and cheerfully given.

The Foreign Society is to receive $500 in a few days from the estate of the late Mary S. Bunting, Rock Valley, Iowa. Thousands of our people should remember the Society in their last will and testament. Fully one-third of the receipts of some missionary societies come by bequests. This subject should be discussed in the pulpits and in the conventions.

A new congregation has been organized at Columbia Heights, Washington, D. C. One of the very important acts was to take an offering of $17.50 for Foreign Missions. The church has grown to sixty-three members and the Sunday-school is prosperous.

Disciples Publication Society

The Disciples Publication Society is an organization through which churches of the Disciples of Christ seek to promote undenominational and constructive Christianity.

The relationship it sustains to the Disciples is intimate and organic, though not official. The Society is not a private institution. It has no capital stock. No individuals profit by its earnings.

The charter under which the Society exists determines that whatever profits are earned shall be applied to agencies which foster the cause of religious education, although it is clearly conceived that its main task is not to make profits but to produce literature for building up character and for advancing the cause of religion.

The Disciples Publication Society regards itself as a thoroughly undenominational institution. It is organized and constituted by individuals and churches who interpret the Disciples' religious reformation as ideally an unsectarian and unecclesiastical fraternity, whose common tie and original impulse are fundamentally the desire to practice Christian unity with all Christians.

The Society therefore claims fellowship with all who belong to the living Church of Christ, and desires to co-operate with the Christian people of all communions as well as with the congregations of Disciples, and to serve all.

The Christian Century, the chief publication of the Society, desires nothing so much as to be the worthy organ of the Disciples' movement. It has no ambition at all to be regarded as an organ of the Disciples' denomination. It is a free interpreter of the wider fellowship in religious faith and service which it believes every church of Disciples should embody. It strives to interpret all communions, as well as the Disciples, in such terms and with such sympathetic insight as may reveal to all their essential unity in spite of denominational isolation. The Christian Century, though published by the Disciples, is not published for the Disciples alone. It is published for the Christian world. It desires definitely to occupy a catholic point of view and it seeks readers in all communions.

CHARLES CLAYTON MORRISON, EDITOR HERBERT L. WILLETT, CONTRIBUTING EDITOR

Volume XXXIII MAY 25, 1916 Number 21

The Conference at Lima

OUR regional congress in Lima lasted four days. Missionaries and native delegates from the mission churches met with our deputation for a joint study and discussion of their problems. There are but few points in Peru outside of Callao and Lima where evangelical work has been established. The explicit constitutional repression of all other forms of worship save only the Roman Catholic has presented acute difficulty to the evangelical movement in Peru ever since it entered the country some forty years ago. But the recent lifting of the state's embargo has filled the little evangelical community with a great new hope.

There are two missionary societies operating in Peru—the Methodist Board of the United States and the Evangelical Union of South America, the latter an undenominational society originating in England and limiting its field of operations to South America. The chief activities of this society are in Argentina and Peru. Rev. G. Campbell Morgan, of London, is an official of the Evangelical Union. I was interested to find much in common between the Disciples of Christ and the workers representing this society. The latter seem to hold a pretty conscious idea of Christian unity. They appeal for funds to members of all denominations and urge, in apparent good faith, as a reason why their work should be supported the argument that it is an undenominational work preparatory to the day when Christian unity may arrive on the mission field.

In general point of view and practice they are much like us Disciples. They call their churches "Evangelical" to distinguish them from the Roman Catholic, but as with our use of the term "Disciples" they rejoice in the tendency on the mission field to sink the denominational name and to give prominence to the generic appellation. Their attitude toward human creeds is much like our own. I think, however, they go in more for subordinating the local church to the larger body of Christ than Disciples have been accustomed to do. If they do, I think I agree with them on this point more than with the individualistic congregational conception which Disciples have in many sections illustrated as a "reductio ad absurdum." On the baptism question they practice immersion only, holding the mode, however, not as a dogma concerning which our Lord legislated, but as the more satisfactory and appropriate way of administering the initiatory ceremony. In this they seem to me to be in harmony with the recent tendencies among the Disciples.

If the work of the Disciples boards should be enlarged in South America I would like to see the possibilities of organic co-operation with this Evangelical Union tested out. We Disciples are not carrying on denominational mission work. We have no denominational interest in any foreign field. Our sole interest is in planting and growing a unified indigenous Church of Christ in every foreign land where our missionaries labor. It should be a very simple matter for our Woman's Board now working in Argentina to co-operate with the vigorous Evangelical Union work represented in and around Buenos Aires. The only consideration that I can imagine as making against some such organic relationship—provided, of course, the Evangelical Union is willing—is the fact that nearly all denominational societies at work in these mission fields are now tending toward organic union with all the Christian forces, and to single out the Evangelical Union might seem invidious.

Rev. John Ritchie, a Scotchman, has precedence among Peruvian missionaries by virtue of his long service, his clear-headedness, and his tireless energy. He was present at the Panama Congress and came down with our deputation to Lima. He had put a great deal of painstaking labor into the preparation for the Lima Congress, but went to Panama in some hesitancy of mind, as many other missionaries from parts of Latin America did, on account of the reports that the leaders of the Panama Congress had compromised with Rome! Of course all such reports were proved baseless by the Congress itself and Mr. Ritchie, like all the rest, came back to his field completely reassured and carrying the blessing which all received at Panama. Rev. Hays P. Archard is the youthful district superintendent of the Methodist work in Peru. He is a man of gracious and modest bearing and won the affections of all the deputation.

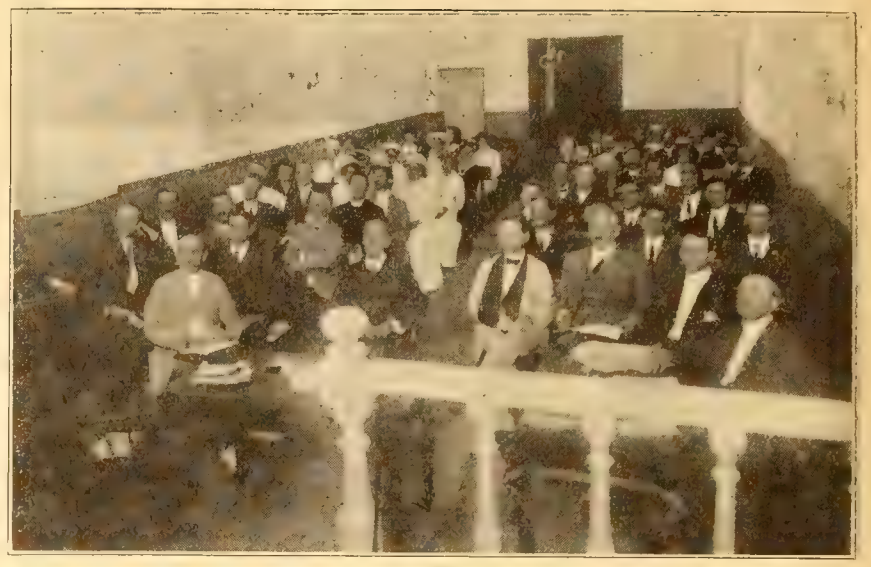
It is not easy for me to tell the story of our conference in Lima without recording the names of all the missionaries there, whose kindnesses made our stay so delightful. Their lot seems to me to be far more lonely than that of the missionaries in any one of the A. B. C. republics which we afterward visited. In the larger republics to the South there is a much larger Anglo-Saxon population upon which a missionary may draw for friendships, and the missionary force is itself much larger there than in Peru. But in these Peruvian cities missionaries are few and feebly supported. Toward work in this country the Boards have apparently had a hesitating policy and it was brought out frankly in the regional congress that the evangelical work is not as strong today as it was fifteen years ago.



We of the deputation had our sympathies touched more deeply for the faithful workers in Peru than in the other countries we visited. It is only fair to say that in looking back over the whole journey our stay in Peru seems to grow more fascinating as the date of our visit recedes. Lima was very quaint, very much like I would imagine a city in Spain itself to be. Everything reminded us of the romantic past. It was old, and slow, and uncomfortable! Just the kind of a place you enjoy visiting. You have a sort of "smothery" feeling all the time you are there. But only the love of Christ could constrain the missionaries to LIVE there. So one's heart naturally feels like calling the short roll of the missionaries who met with us from day to day in conference, and paying some tribute of appreciation to each one. But of course this would not be edifying even if our space permitted.

The regional congress was held in the hall where Mr. Ritchie preaches. Our deputation together with the missionaries from other countries who were accompanying us on their way home made up the major portion of the congress. The morning after the theatre meeting, which I described in my last letter, we met at 8:30 for prayer in the little mission hall and Bishop William O. Shepard of Kansas City led our devotions. We began the business of the congress by hearing the report of a commission on "Survey and Occupation," presented by Mr. Ritchie. He graphically described the geographical and social situation which obtains in Peru. I can only touch on two or three of his primary points. The geographical extent of the country is equal to the combined areas of France, Belgium, Spain, Switzerland and Italy. The population of the republic is 4,000,000. About one-half the population is Indian—descendants of the race ruled by the Incas whom Spain conquered. Fifteen per cent are Spanish whites, the remainder being mestizos, or creoles, of all degrees, some negroes and Chinese.

Mr. Ritchie pointed out that the great day of opportunity for Peru came nearly a century ago, when the yoke of Spain was first thrown off. Then all things were made new. Men's minds were open, and even the priests could be reached with the gospel. That opportunity has gone. There is growing up now a national spirit which tends to become more and more coherent. It has little or no Roman Catholic loyalty but one of its characteristics is opposition to Protestantism as un-national. The longer Protestantism delays, the more pronounced and impervious this spirit will be. The spirit of the nation is increasingly non-religious. Emancipated from its traditional faith by the violent experiences of doubt and disillusionment the next generation will be almost beyond the possibility of faith.

We heard this again and again in Peru, and in all other South American countries. The problem faced by our missionaries is not the Roman Catholic church; it is irreligion and atheism. I could not help drawing a parallel between Japan and Latin America. It seems to me that the religious state of the two societies is much the same.

The remainder of the session following the presentation of this report was given to discussion from the floor. On subsequent days other reports were considered —on the Church in the Field, Education, the Message and Method, Co-operation and Unity, etc., etc.,—voluminous documents, as well prepared, in some instances, for the special territory as were the commission reports at Panama for the whole of Latin America.

I will not take space to discuss the congress in any detail, though I am tempted to tarry awhile with the session on Co-operation and Unity. But the situations here in Lima were repeated in subsequent congresses and it will be quite as well to speak of certain things in connection with the other gatherings.

The congress adjourned on the Saturday before the opening of the Carnival, a great annual event in all Roman Catholic countries, and especially in South America. Some of us had never heard of it before, but our ignorance had a rather rude enlightening. It opens on the Sunday preceding Ash Wednesday and continues until Tuesday night. For three days and nights everybody takes a last fling at a "good time" before passing into the shadow of Lent. Farther up in the mountains where the Indians live, around the shore of Lake Titicaca, the carnival is celebrated by orgiastic dances of utter primitiveness. In some cities the main sport is throwing confetti, together with all the innocent hilarity of which that is the symbol. But in other cities, and notably in Lima, the hilarity takes so gross a form that people are pretty nearly compelled to stay off the streets. Every youth in the place is privileged to do whatever he pleases, and the chief thing he pleases to do is to throw red water and flour all over you if he—or it may be she—catches you on the streets. As a result every business house in Lima was closed on the three days before Ash Wednesday. Most of our deputation had the temerity to go to church on Sunday morning and some came back spattered all over with wet flour. I saw a well-dressed man with silk hat and Prince Albert coat completely drenched by a bucket—or it may have been a tub—of perfumed water—nasty perfume—spilled on him from a balcony over the side walk. He had nothing to say. On Tuesday afternoon I was talking with General Reyes, ex-president of the Republic of Columbia, who was staying at our hotel, and as he stood his back and hat were all matted over with wet flour. He had gone out and some one had caught him.

What wonder is it then that in anticipation of this sort of carrying on we went out into the mountains on Monday—up the Oroya railway to the little town of Chosika. Here Mr. Ritchie and other missionaries arranged to show us some ruins of ancient Inca times and before. We had disappointedly been compelled to accept as impossible the making of a trip to Cuzco and La Paz, whither our hearts were drawn by all the romantic history connected with the remarkable people whose civilization, centering around Lake Titicaca, was completely dismantled by Pizarro and his successors. It would take more than two weeks to make the trip and return to the coast and we could not fit such a journey into the schedules for our congresses. But we got a faint suggestion of what we might see at Cuzco by going to Chosika. We walked several miles out to see hillsides covered with ruined tombs and valleys covered with ruined villages and other hillsides terraced with infinite care into once productive gardens. It was a memorable day, with an informal address by Mr. Ritchie, while we ate luncheon at noon, preparing to make an equally interesting trip afoot in the opposite direction from the town in the afternoon.

Hurrying back to Lima—an hour's ride by rail—in the evening, we cautiously crept back to our hotel from the railway station, lest we should be suddenly surprised by some carnival celebrants. Escaping annoyance, most of us spent Tuesday and Wednesday looking about the city. We had been so closely engaged before Sunday in the duties of the congress that we had so far seen very little of the interesting points of Lima. I had been in to interview the late Mr. Pizarro whose bones are stretched out in a glass casket in the Cathedral across the street from our hotel. This Cathedral was for many years the most beautiful piece of ecclesiastical architecture in the western hemisphere. It has been rebuilt twice, I believe, and its restorations have not equalled the original. But it is still imposing both inside and out. I found a lot of satisfaction in looking at Pizarro himself in the light of the verger's candle, and came away with feelings so realistic that I could imagine I had shaken hands with him!

A half day in the infinitely interesting museums—I do not enjoy museums as well as a literary feller ought, but I surely did enjoy this one at Lima and could hardly be torn away by the inexorable necessity of leaving Peru altogether for a visit to her hated and fearsome enemy the Republic of Chile.

There were many things we saw in Lima; interesting calls we made on men of political and social prominence in the Republic; information gathered concerning the moral and religious conditions that prevail among the people; and friendships made with some of the choicest of God's children—of these all I would like to speak but to mention them at all would tempt my pencil into elaborations which neither my space nor my readers' patience would at this time suffer. C. C. M.

When men do anything for God, the very least thing, they never know where it will end, nor what amount of work it will do for him. Love's secret, therefore, is to be always doing things for God, and not to mind because they are very little ones.—F. W. Faber.

Christ a Prophet of Preparation

A Sermon Preached at First Christian Church, Louisville.

BY E. L. POWELL.

THE teaching of Jesus is the apotheosis of common sense. His utterances find our conscience, our affections, our deepest needs and as well make their appeal to us in the midst of life's practical concerns. We are startled more than once as we contemplate the modernity of our Lord's teachings. In this parable of the two kings, the great master is illustrating the wisdom of counting the cost of discipleship. In doing so he shows how practical and wise is the king who has only ten thousand men in so taking reckoning of his resources as that he may be able to meet and overcome the king who has twenty thousand men. It is a plain matter of practical everyday judgment, true in the realm of spiritual affairs, true in the realm of material affairs.

"What king going to make war against another king sitteth not down first and consulteth whether he be able with ten thousand to meet him that cometh against him with twenty thousand? Or else while the other is yet a great way off he sendeth an embassage and desireth conditions of peace!"

APPEAL IN THE NAME OF CHRIST.

I wish in the name of Jesus and his religion to make a plea for patriotic preparedness in the presence of actual conditions with which this nation is confronted. Jesus comes before us as the poet when he bids us consider the lilies of the field. He comes before us as almost the sentimentalist and naturalist when he reminds us that no sparrow falls to the ground outside the all-pervasive life of our Father. He comes to men facing battle, facing possible dangers, when he says to us that it is the part of wisdom to get ready, it is the part of wisdom to be prepared.

I think one of the most solemn addresses ever delivered by any chief executive of this great nation was that pronounced by the President of the United States in the recent Jefferson day banquet-day speech. He said to those gathered about the festal board: "Are we ready for the test? Is it possible for America, in case there shall be no escape from war, to fight for the rights of humanity, and then when the work has been done to refuse to fight for any selfish gain which might come to America herself?"

This I take to be the meaning of almost the opening sentence of the very splendid, solemn and stately appeal made by this man who is the antithesis in judgment and character of the impulsive. Are we ready for the test? He does not tell us just what he means. He means intensely. Are we ready in the consciences of a whole-hearted loyalty to the flag and to the ideals of the flag within all our boundaries? Are business and industry patriotic enough to refuse association with war bribes and war fortunes? Are we ready in physical and spiritual equipment in case there shall be for us no escape from participation in a mighty conflict?

NO QUESTION SO SEARCHING.

There has never been propounded a question so searching to pleasure-loving, money-making America. It was not uttered from a pulpit, but it was as solemn an appeal as that which the Master made to his two ambitious disciples, who were seeking for honor and preferment when he said to them: "Are you ready for the test? Can you drink of the cup that I drink of and be baptized with the baptism wherewithal I am to be baptized? Are you ready for the cross in order that you may win the crown?" They said, as did the banqueters on this memorable Jefferson day, "We are able." We are told that in the company addressed by the President the response was immediately, "Yes, we are ready for the test."

I want to talk in no impassioned way whatever; I want to bring before you a Christian message. Christian because patriotic, Christian because, as I believe, strictly in harmony with the evolution and development of national life steadily moving onward to the attainment of an ideal "when the war-drum shall throb no longer and the battle flag be furled in the parliament of man, the federation of the world."

We are told by those who are spoken of as "peace at any price men" that there is no danger, and therefore it is supreme folly to be placing all this emphasis upon the building of a fit armament for this country and that the President, in the speeches which he has recently made and in very many of his utterances is laboring under an excited imagination. Why should we put any roof on our houses when the skies are cloudless? What possible danger is menacing us on the part of any foreign nation? Are we not happy? Are we not prosperous? Does not England keep the seas open for our commerce?

THE RAINS COME!

Are we restrained or cabined or confined in trade communications? Our national wealth, and your imagination may be sufficient to grasp the figures, is declared to be one hundred and eighty-seven billion dollars, with liabilities of only one billion and a little bit more. Are we not fortunate in that not seeking war with anybody we are the beneficiaries of war?

Why should we deceive ourselves? It is not a question of preparation for some future danger; it is a question of preparation for a danger that has already found concrete expression. The bomb has already burst, the mine has already exploded, the fuse has already been lighted. Is it not a fact or is it a dream, that only a little while ago the President of the United States asked of Congress authority to declare war in order to defend the honor of the flag against the insult which had been flung upon it by our little sister Mexico? Is it an illusion that to-day there are some fifteen or twenty thousand American soldiers within Mexico engaged in a punitive expedition? Mexico is therefore not wholly innocuous. Mexico has given us trouble and may possibly give us more.

Isn't it well worth while to be sufficiently equipped and to be sufficiently prepared to deal with even a little situation involving perhaps no great expenditure of either money or men?

But I read from the message which the President has recently delivered to Congress immediately following the note which he sent to Germany and upon the answer to which depends the future action of this country—I read an indictment as academic, and yet as intense, as has ever been brought against any people. Speaking of international law the President says that it is "based upon manifest and imperative principles of humanity, and has long been established by the approval and express assent of all civilized nations."

PROOF OF THE DANGER.

You say there is no danger, there is no reason for any excitement of ourselves in the way of military preparation against a possible menace?

Here is what has already taken place: "Despite the protest, and despite assurances by Germany that it would respect neutrals and safeguard the lives of non-combatants. the German submarines have attacked merchant ships with greater and greater activity, not only upon the high seas surrounding Great Britain and Ireland, but wherever they could encounter them, in a way that has grown more and more ruthless, more and more indiscriminate, as the months go by, less and less observant of restraint of any kind and have delivered their attacks without compunction against vessels of every nationality, and bound upon every sort of errand. Vessels of neutral ownership, even when bound from neutral port to neutral port, have been destroyed along with vessels of belligerent ownership in constantly increasing numbers. Sometimes the merchantman attacked has been warned and summoned to surrender before being fired upon or torpedoed; sometimes passengers or crew have been vouchsafed the poor security of being allowed to take to the ship's boats before she was sent to the bottom; but again and again no warning has been given, no escape even to the ship's boats allowed to those on board."

GERMANY INDICTED.

Was the Lusitania a shadow ship, and did she just quietly, while we were gazing, sink down into the depths of the sea carrying with her only the ghosts of neutral men and women, many of whom were Americans, some of whom were babies and children? It is a fact, friends, that international law has been violated; it is a fact that American lives have been destroyed; it is a fact that the rights of neutral America have been dishonored and discredited and violated; it is a fact that this country has been insulted in her honor, in her self-respect, in her traditions, in her ideals, in all that makes her life. I have quoted you the man who knows even if you have not been reading the newspapers. Shall we have that sort of weak, maudlin sentiment that tells us that Jesus of Nazareth would not tolerate preparation, physical preparation, against further infamy and outrages?

But the weakest argument that has been propounded on the part of those who claim to love honor more than life and peace more than the preservation of the ideals of this nation and the integrity of her life, is the argument based especially and particularly upon the Christian ground that we are as a nation too proud to fight, we are too pious to fight, we are too Christian to fight, we are too refined to fight, "we are the heirs of all the nations in the foremost files of time," and we must set an example of peace by either complete disarmament or by such armament as is altogether innocuous.

THE WEAKEST ARGUMENT.

Did it ever occur to you that such a hypocritical attitude would be more provocative of war than all the armaments that we might have? For the men who are pleading for peace at any price say that the existence of any sort of armament that is worth while is an equivalent of war. We are saying that we are more Christian than Germany, who has her armaments and her big guns and who knows how to fight; we are more Christian than England, whose Christianity has certainly had a longer time than ours to permeate and influence and control and dominate her pursuits and activities and civilization.

Now we know that we are not honest when we say any such thing; we are not more Christian than the belligerent nations, certainly the two I have just named. Their ideals are just as high as ours; their patriotism is just as fine as ours; their Gospel is just as glorious as ours; their churches are just as representative of the level of their Christian civilization as ours.

ALL ARE SINNERS.

Why not tell the truth and say that all of us are sinners in having armaments, all of us show by the very existence of armaments that we are yet at a very low level as compared with the high ideal of the final outcome of Christianity's working and influence and success, but since Germany and England are not too Christian to have armaments let us be honest and say we are not too Christian to have armaments.

As long as one nation, a Christian nation, has any armed preparation, any armaments and factories for the manufacture of arms, there is on the part of that nation express distrust and suspicion of the other nations; because of this suspicion and distrust the other nations immediately put up their armaments, and that indicates suspicion and distrust on their part towards their neighbors.

If there be this universal distrust and suspicion each on the part of the others, in the name of God are we so gullible as to suppose that there is no suspicion or distrust of us because we have armament worthy of mention?

I believe that if Germany, rugged, red-blooded, equipped, should ever have occasion to show her mailed hand against the United States of America she would be more apt to do so because of our claim of superior righteousness which we have not than she would if we had our big guns and our armaments and our physical equipment. Nations and individuals that are strong cannot put up with hypocritical self-conceit. More anger would be aroused by the supercilious attitude implied by this plea for nonpreparation on the ground of superior righteousness than would be provoked by any armaments.

FORCE TO MEET FORCE.

But we say, I mean those of us who are making the argument as to the folly of further preparation or any preparation other than we have, that we must not allow our Christianity to fail, that it is a failure of Christianity if we say that force ought to be had in righteousness to meet force. Ah well, is the rose to be regarded as a failure while as yet it is only a bud? Is the day to be regarded as a failure while as yet it is only dawn? Is manhood to be regarded as a failure while as yet it is only the baby in the cradle? Let us be honest. Christianity is only a baby yet, but the fact that it is exerting any influence at all, and certainly the fact that it is exerting such a mighty influence as it is, is proof of the fact that it will come by and by to be dominant, to control all the civilizations of the world, and when that day shall come there will be universal disarmament, and there will be universal peace.

In the meantime we can only use Christianity as adapted to the existing stage of development. We can do nothing else. Because other nations say we are raising our boys to be soldiers, as a simple matter of necessity we must raise our boys to be soldiers; because other nations say—Christian nations—we are not too good to get ready for possible emergencies, and we do not believe that everybody loves us, and that we love everybody, it becomes necessary for us to do the same thing. By virtue of the interrelations of nations in trade, in letters, in religion, bound together in every way, one cannot stand aloof and apart in an isolated grandeur of self-righteousness. I would to God that it were possible. Then we are told that if this nation does not occupy this attitude of aloofness in the presence of the belligerent nations we shall lose the opportunity of a lifetime in finally bringing about peace between the warring nations.

THE PEACE MOVEMENT.

That has always seemed to me to be tremendously weak. Two strong men that are fighting each other I do not think would call upon any invalid to help bring peace between them. Imagine an anemic and invalid America saying to these fighting nations, "We are here in the name of the religion that we have, in the name of the Christianity which is vital to us, we are here to say, peace, be still."

Ah, if we shall ever command peace it will have to be done by the nation that can speak in a tone a little louder than a whisper. Something more suggestive of roominess and power than a sick chamber. We cannot from a university rostrum command peace. We cannot from a drawing-room environment command peace; but if we stand equipped, if we are armed cap-a-pie, if we are in possession of some ammunition—call them devil's ammunitions—that our neighbors and friends have, I believe that even a plea and a prayed-for peace will have more effectiveness and will be more likely to be successful.

SMALL ARMAMENTS OR LARGE?

There is another thing that has come to me. It stikes me as a very good argument. These men that are pleading the folly of further preparation say we are already sufficiently prepared, we have spent so many billions—I don't know how many—on our present navy and military equipment—and therefore it is simply monstrous to be taxing the people for further preparation in these material concerns. Can you tell me the difference on ethical grounds between having a small navy and a big navy? Can you see any moral difference between a big army and one that is small in numbers and in equipment? There is no sort of compromise between complete disarmament or any armament.

If any armament is right, then a big one is. If a small equipment is right, in the name of God, in the name of Christ and in the name of religion, if our consciences are easy enough to have any navy and any army, then why should we be so tremendously sensitive in regard to a navy that can do something in case of danger or an army that can do something in case of danger? Can you show the difference? If a lie is ever right, then what is the difference between a big lie and a little lie? If we ever felt justified as a Christian nation in building any sort of armament, in view of any sort of possible emergency, why should we get so tremendously pious here now when actual danger confronts us and say it is simply monstrous and unChristian to do anything more?

SPIRITUAL PREPAREDNESS.

But it is spiritual preparedness, after all, that is supreme. Are we ready for the test? Do we love honor more than life? Are we willing as a nation to lose our life if thereby we may preserve that which constitutes our spiritual life, our democracy, our liberty, all of the rights and privileges associated with freedom? I do not think that we want to build up any military caste. But I do think there should be sufficient spiritual ambition and aspiration that would lead every business to make sacrifices for the sake of the country if the call shall be made.

I believe that there should be somehow awakened on the part of our young men a willingness to go into military camps and to be trained for military service if the time should ever come when they would be needed. I believe that that sort of spiritual preparation is here. In the speeches made by the President in his recent tour through a number of the states, when the question was brought before the great audiences that heard him, from more than one audience came the quick, eager response, "We are ready!"

THE WORLD'S BENEFACTORS RATHER THAN BANKERS.

Let me tell you, we are not ready unless we shall prefer to be the benefactors of the world rather than its banker; we are not ready unless we are prepared to surrender our luxury and learn something of the thrill and glow of red blood flowing through veins of men; we are not ready unless we can get away from our effeminacy and have some of the Viking spirit that welcomes the spray of the sea smiting like hail upon our cheeks; we are not ready if we do not care more for the storm with its developing influences than we do for sunshine and flower gardens; we are not ready if we shall be so foolish as to imagine that in the employment of bon bons, candy and flowers we can resist the ominous hurtling steel in mid-air.

Jesus virtually says to his own people, "This thing of discipleship, which embraces country and all the affairs of life, costs something." What a marvelous demand that is which he makes! You must hate father and mother and sister and brother, that is to say, in comparison with your love for them your love for the superior life shall be so much higher as that by contrast your other loves shall be hatred. He that would save his life in the preservation of conscience and honor and integrity and self-respect must lose it.

I know what it means, so far as the impression upon an audience is concerned, when such declarations as these I have made are given out in any sort of impassioned way. There are these lovers of comfort and ease who would not be disturbed in the routine life of prosperity, either as an individual or as a nation, unless some power other than the appeal of patriotism should be brought to bear upon them.

THE MEANING OF WAR.

Yet I know when I am asking for preparedness for possible war—pray God it may never come—I know that most of us are ignorant of what war means. War is not two great armies meeting in the crash and frenzy of battle. War is a boy carried on a stretcher looking up at God's blue sky with bewildered eyes that are soon to close. War is a woman carrying a baby that has been injured by a shell. War is spirited horses tied in burning buildings and waiting for death. War is the flower of the race battered, hungry, bleeding, up to its knees in filthy water. War is an old woman burning a candle to the "Mater Dolorosa" for the son she has given.

Are we ready for the test? God quicken our patriotism to the finest issue of ready self-sacrifice. God bless the man in the White House who is carrying a burden heavier than has ever been laid upon any President of these United States. God save us from any sort of embarrassment to him in the handling of a most critical situation. God help us to help everybody as we do, asking no territory from them, asking nothing from them which when given does not bring back to them profit and, better than all, blessing and benediction; but we must preserve our sanity; we must exercise plain, common sense; we must support the Administration in this policy of preparedness.

DEATH BETTER THAN DISHONOR.

Above all, we must swear that we would rather be dead than to suffer dishonor to ideals, or to have the glorious outworking of the destiny of America as the servitor and steward of all the nations interrupted.

This is the message which I have tried to bring to you, seeking only to have outstanding objections removed and to have you understand that such a plea made from the pulpit is strictly in accord, as I believe, with the spirit of the Master Who lifted up a cross as the symbol of that redemption which we are to help to consummate by ourselves sharing that cross if need there be.

Union Churches

THE BIRTH AND PROGRESS OF A FEDERATED CHURCH.

[The following communication from Mr. W. V. Church illustrates in a remarkable way the manner in which the ideal of a united church took root and grew at Marion, Kansas. H. L. W.]

ABOUT March 1, 1913, the members of the Presbyterian and Baptist churches of Marion, Kansas, effected a church federation. For a period of two years, there had been speculative visions of possibilities encouraged by convictions that wholesome results would come from such an alliance.

It would not be accurate to say that the motives were exclusively spiritual; church folks, like others, are not strangers to economic expediency. The existing conditions suggested such expediency, for neither church was strong in numbers or dollars. One of them owned an old and inadequate church building with a mortgage attached, while its manse was comfortable and pretty; the other had a comparatively new and commodious house of worship, no debt—and no parsonage.

ADVANTAGES OF FEDERATION.

Through a federation of these bodies only one pastor need be supported, with a two-fold source of support. The necessity of building a church for one of the bodies and a parsonage for the other, both of which had been standing perplexities, would disappear, and the hope of a discharged mortgage less deferred.

In Marion with 2,500 people, there were seven Protestant organizations, exclusive of an African church. On every side of the town there are thickly settled country communities in most of which religious services are regularly held, largely through the grace of overworked and underpaid town pastors. This numerical church "strength" works a net loss to actual Christian progress.

In the Marion case while there was not long delay in perfecting the federation, after federation was determined upon, there was nothing spasmodic in the proceedings. Well defined purpose and plan were set forth in articles of federation. A preliminary step was the issuing of a brief circular signed by representative members of each church, asking for meetings of the respective bodies for the purpose of separate consideration. The plan, now reduced to writing, was favorably reported and shortly afterwards adopted.

At the start, the union embraced only the regular Sunday preaching services and the mid-week prayer-meeting. About eighteen months later, the Ladies' Societies of the two churches united. There is now a membership of about seventy-five devoted women whose harmony is absolute, and whose devotion has resulted in splendid service both to the church and the community.

Further progress was made a little later when the Sunday-schools united. This was a splendid move. The harmony is perfect. The inspiration resulting from a larger school, and the suggestive influence upon the juvenile mind, cannot result otherwise than in an immeasurable good. The Endeavor society, united and devoted, is doing fine work and is regarded as one of the worth-while bodies of the town.

The Church instituted a "Brotherhood" whose prompt popularity has made it a monthly meeting occasion for the business men of Marion, without reference to denominational ties. Each quarter, the Church holds a social gladfest, with music, recitations and light refreshments. This occurs at one of the church buildings which is equipped for such events.

A CRISIS PASSED.

The Federated Church of Marion has met its "crisis." After ministering two-and-a-half years, Mr. Nichols, the first pastor, resigned. A few watchful waitters, with limited faith and similar sympathy, predicted that the end had come. They thought it improbable that another successful leader could be found for such a cause. But the Cause, itself a leader, revealed inherent qualities of survivorship. The church was deliberate and made no mistake. The Rev. John T. Sharman, upon unanimous call, accepted the pastorate and began work November, 1915. Being devoted to the cause of applied Christianity, Mr. Sharman's whole soul is given to the cause of Christian unity.

Marion's Federated Church is succeeding. Its additions have exceeded the combined growth of the two churches during any average like period of their histories. The spectacle of two church denominations supposed to possess marked creedal differences, with their bars down and their Banner up, marching together in loving harmony of spirit and purpose, is having its wholesome effect upon the community.

A RECENT ADVANCE STEP.

On March 2, 1916, at its annual meeting, the church made a forward step, when, with the most cordial spirit, it adopted an amendment to its laws by means of which its doors were opened to any professed Christian, without reference to former denominational association, who may come either upon profession of Christian faith, or bearing acceptable church letter duly issued by any evangelical church. This enables a qualified applicant to acquire membership with the Federated Church in a direct way, and not necessarily through membership in one of the two federated bodies, as formerly.

It will be seen that this church has taken advance steps from time to time during a period of three years. In this there is pleasing significance. It confirms the faith of those who started the movement and who believed it would stand the test of time and trial

"No newspaper can succeed, can be a big influential and powerful paper unless it has a social conscience; unless it does things; unless it not only advises the people to swat the crook, but urges them to swat the fly."

"The newspaper will become more successful and more of a power in a community, the nearer it approaches and approximates the duty of the clergyman, in helping to fight not only for a clean city but a clean home; in participating in all movements for the upbuilding of a community."

"The statement that only the unusual things are printed in the newspapers is poppycock, absolutely poppycock. How would your charities exist without the publicity they get? Where would they get the money to feed the hungry and clothe the naked without the aid of the newspapers? You stop and think for a minute of the good that newspapers do as hand-maidens,—possibly not as originators, but as hand-maidens to every good cause and you are going to have a very strong account on that side of the ledger."—James Keeley, editor of the Chicago Herald, in an address before the recent Advertising Men's Convention, held in Chicago.

EDITORIAL

THE WAR AND THE SOUL

A WONDERFUL message it is that Dr. John R. Mott brings to the great international religious gatherings when he speaks on his first hand observations of the great war and pictures the new spiritual opportunities the war has created. This address was the zenith experience of the Panama Congress in February and of the Y. M. C. A. convention last week in Cleveland.

Dr. Mott does not waste words in arguing whether or not Christianity failed when the nations fell upon one another. He simply declares that Christianity must not fail to enter into the almost staggering opportunity which the war has opened up to religion.

When the battle is over and the censor's veil is lifted and the facts are known, horrors unimaginable will be revealed. But the hideous picture will be marvelously lighted up by the revelations of the spiritual grandeur of the individual soul. Men will be shown to have actually done the impossible. In the light of such a final revelation of the reality that is now hidden there will be found no place for the cynic or the skeptic.

We must not fail to keep the distinction clearly before our minds that the primary cause of the war is not individual hatred of individuals. The antagonism between sovereign states is not necessarily rooted in individual attitudes though it tends, of course, to get itself reflected in individual attitudes. The souls of Germans, Englishmen, Frenchmen and all the rest, caught up helplessly as they are in the toils of a hatefully un-Christian struggle, still retain their Christian qualities and may even deepen and intensify these Christian qualities under the conditions created by the war.

It is therefore not inconsistent, but divinely opportune to regard the war as a tremendous spiritual opportunity. Mr. Lloyd George's recent utterance is perfectly true when he said that the storm now sweeping over Europe would shatter the hard crust of selfishness and greed and that in the hearts of the people is still to be found a golden treasure of courage, steadfastness, devotion and faith that will endure forevermore.

God's ways are past finding out. He makes the wrath of man to praise him. Without lessening in one degree our condemnation of the war, or qualifying in the least our first feelings of its indescribable cost to the moral life of mankind, we have to affirm the paradox that in ways exceeding human calculation the spiritual life of men is destined to be profoundly enriched and solemnized in the face of the facts that the war reveals.

EVANGELISM WITHOUT MR. SUNDAY

THE churches are so generally under the illusion created by modern high pressure revivalism that they have gotten into the habit of expecting conversions and accessions only through meetings conducted by professional evangelists.

But it seems that the Cleveland, O., churches are something of an exception to this discouragingly prevalent rule.

Declining to extend an invitation to "Billy" Sunday to hold a revival of his well-known sort in their city, the ministers of the evangelical churches were pricked in their consciences to say that they could justify their negative stand on Mr. Sunday's kind of meeting only by producing, not better results merely, but just as great results as are reported from other cities where this revivalist labors.

So last winter the pastors set their aim at 10,000 accessions to the churches before Easter. Without the mechanical accessories of the highly organized revivalism, the pastors reported, after Lenten and Easter results were counted, that more than 10,000 souls had been added to their churches.

The entire city has felt, to its permanent good, the influences of this natural and wholesome evangelism. The Euclid Avenue church of Disciples, of which Rev. J. H. Goldner is minister, received one hundred and twenty-five new members. Franklin Circle church and its pastor, W. F. Rothenburger, did as well, and all Disciple congregations of the city shared with their sister congregations of other names the endeavor and the blessing of the quiet campaign.

Probably if the results of the normal, steady-going, labors of the churches in any city in the land were tabulated as carefully as they are in a Sunday revival it would be found that the actual contribution of the revival to the strength of the churches is greatly exaggerated, as compared to the results gained by regular effort.

THIS IDEA OUGHT TO SPREAD

ONE of the qualities of the pastoral genius of Dr. E. S. Ames in his Hyde Park Church, Chicago, is in his ability to utilize for religious purposes the personal and professional talents of his church members. The latest illustration of this gift is seen in the setting apart of the afternoons and evenings of this current week for an exhibit of the social service enterprises with which the members of Hyde Park church happen to be connected. The title over the whole affair is "Social Service Week." All the members of the church professionally related to organized movements or institutions having to do with social welfare and uplift are co-operating to make an exhibit and interpretation of their particular causes.

It is a revelation that from a single congregation so many channels of social inspiration and helpfulness run out. Some twenty-five different social activities are represented in the exhibit, among them the United Charities, the Hyde Park Social Center, the Y. M. C. A., the Big Brother and Big Sister Movement, the Municipal Play Ground, the Welfare work department of several great business establishments such as Montgomery, Ward & Co., the Temperance cause, the Suffrage movement, the Juvenile Protective Association, etc., etc.

In addition to the exhibits through which the visitor is conducted by official "explainers," there are lectures and entertainments announced for each afternoon and evening of the week, opening with a sermon on the first Sunday on the subject, "The Spirit of Charity" and closing on the last Sunday with a sermon in which the pastor gives his impressions of the week.

Such an event we believe to be original in Hyde Park church and altogether unique. It reveals the quality of membership as well as the quality of leadership of this congregation whose social interests are rich and varied enough to bring together the elements of such an exhibit.

Yet it is quite likely that almost any congregation would surprise itself if it would once take stock of its social interests. There might not be so many who are professionally connected with these activities as in Hyde Park church, but in the humblest congregation there would be found a wide enough variety of voluntary interests and preferences to make up an exhibit of an instructive and inspiring character.

The conception of relating actual social endeavor to the church ought to spread, and we believe it will.

OUGHT WE TO BE OFFENDED?

KNOWING the moods of editors as we do we have long since gotten over the habit of trying to find some esoteric meaning in their utterances. If a brother editor does not make clear at first reading what he has to say we rarely pay him the compliment of tarrying with his words to discover some subtle point hidden away in them. When, therefore, an utterance does compel us to come back to it again and again, as if it really mattered what the editor meant, our own sophisticated pride is somewhat humbled. It is in that mood that we have read an editorial in Everybody's Magazine on the growth of the churches in the United States. The editor calls attention to the following table of the seven great churches which have reached a membership of more than 1,000,000:

Roman Catholic.	14,079,000
Methodists (16 bodies put together).	7,742,000
Baptists (15 bodies).	6,307,000
Lutherans (21 bodies)	2,434,000
Presbyterians (12 bodies).	2,104,000
Disciples of Christ (2 bodies).	1,522,000
Episcopalians.	1,051,000

and adds this comment:

> The numerousness of the Disciples of Christ is astonishing. If a European should read American books and American newspapers he would almost certainly conclude that there were ten times as many Episcopalians as Disciples among us. Yet the Disciples outnumber the Episcopalians by almost fifty per cent. The Episcopalians take a great deal more of the lime-light than they numerically deserve.
> There is a similar, but even more astonishing disparity between prominence and numerousness in the cases of certain other religious groups.
> The Quakers are known to every man and woman and child. Yet they number only 120,000.
> The Christian Scientists get enormous attention from the whole world in print and in conversation. Yet their last statement of membership was only 85,000.
> The Unitarians are an intellectual avalanche which Billy Sunday is holding back with his own shoulders from falling upon and shattering the Christian community. Yet, in the whole United States, the total number of Unitarians seems to be 70,542.

Now, The Christian Century has to confess that the editor of Everybody's has us guessing. What are the implications of this very adroitly worded observation?

Is it meant as a criticism of the public for its disproportionate interest in the Episcopalians and the Christian Scientists as compared to the public's interest in the Disciples of Christ, a much larger religious group?

Or is it a quiet satire on the Disciples of Christ for counting so many and yet not counting for much?

We confess we do not know, and yet we keep on guessing as to what was in that clever editor's mind. Of course, if he is satirical we are stirred to indignant resentment. But, on the other hand, if he is criticizing the public we do not feel comfortable under the patronizing attitude that obviously goes with his observation. For the public is interested in what it is interested in, and that is all there is to it. You cannot command public interest by calling attention to the public's inconsistency. The Disciples, like the Christian Scientists or the "Schwenkfelders," will claim public attention only as they deal in ideals or offer a program that the public is vitally interested in.

Hence we do not feel happy in taking either the critical or the satirical interpretation.

We would like to have comments from our readers on this ambiguous utterance of the editor of Everybody's.

A FICTITIOUS ANTITHESIS

IT IS a fictitious distinction that certain writers on Christian unity like to draw between unity and compromise. A quotation from George Dana Boardman is now going the rounds of the religious papers in which it is solemnly declared that unity cannot be secured by compromise.

As if anybody ever imagined that it could!

Here is the quotation:

> Unity cannot be secured by compromise. This is the mistake of those unfortunates who are afflicted with cardiac hypertrophy or diseased enlargement of the heart. Compromise is often right in matters of polity or method. Compromise is always wrong in matters of principle or duty. Truth abhors compromise as light abhors darkness. Truth advances her kingdom by affirmation, not by evasion; by victory, not by surrender. The man who is willing to surrender his own convictions for the sake of "unity" is a man whose convictions for the sake of unity or anything else, are to be distrusted. For he who begins by being false to himself will end with being false to everybody else. Moreover, the unity which is brought about by compromise is not unity at all; it is only a weak, sentimental, flabby uniformity.

All this seems to us to be a waste of words. The compromise notion of unity is a pure fiction, a thing of straw. We have never heard of a man who is willing "to surrender his own convictions for the sake of unity." And it is to be doubted if those who quote approvingly the above sentiment ever heard of such a man.

Human nature can be trusted to assert its convictions to the last ditch. No Christian who has convictions is going to sacrifice them "for the sake of unity."

The cause of unity does not call for the sentimental surrender of convictions; it demands that the sectarian soul be fitted out with a new and more vital set of convictions.

Our sectarianism is rooted in convictions on things that drive men apart. Christ's true gospel is intended to create in the soul convictions on those things that draw men together.

The road to unity does not lead to the abandonment of convictions, but to the attainment of convictions on the things that Christ had convictions upon.

THE MOVIES AND THE SALOON

THE moving picture industry is as yet in its infancy, and no one can tell just what is to be its place in the field of education and amusement. There are those who believe it is an insidious and dangerous element in our modern life, absorbing the attention of people to an extent far beyond its values to life.

But there is one aspect of the business which is heartening. It is dealing the saloon a deadly blow.

For the picture people have found that one of the most interesting fields for the exploitation of human experience is that of the results of drinking. With no particular desire to preach a moral lesson, they have discovered that the stories in which the evils of intoxication are shown make a very strong appeal to the average person. And every such scene is in greater or less degree a nail in the coffin of the saloon.

But another cause of disquietude on the part of the liquor people is the fact that the movie theatres have in large measure displaced the saloons as the poor man's club. Once he went to the saloon for the evening because he could not afford the price of the regular theatre, and for the most part it was over his head. To-day he goes to the movies because they are cheap and he likes them, and moreover, he takes his wife and the children.

SOWING AND REAPING—TEMPERANCE LESSON.

Lesson for June 11.

Golden Text: God is not mocked: for whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap. Galatians 6:7.

Lesson Galatians 6: verses 1-10 printed.

(1) Brethren, even if a man be overtaken in any trespass, ye who are spiritual, restore such a one in a spirit of gentleness; looking to thyself, lest thou also be tempted. (2) Bear ye one another's burdens, and so fulfil the law of Christ. (3) For if a man thinketh himself to be something when he is nothing, he deceiveth himself. (4) But let each man prove his own work, and then shall he have his glorying in regard of himself alone, and not of his neighbor. (5) For each man shall bear his own burden.

(6) But let him that is taught in the word communicate unto him that teacheth in all good things. (7) Be not deceived; God is not mocked: for whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap. (8) For he that soweth unto his own flesh shall of the flesh reap corruption; but he that soweth unto the Spirit shall of the Spirit reap eternal life. (9) And let us not be weary in well-doing: for in due season we shall reap, if we faint not. (10) So then, as we have opportunity, let us work that which is good toward all men, and especially toward them that are of the household of the faith.

VERSE BY VERSE.

1. Overtaken. The Greek word means "taken unaware." He is not an habitual offender.—Ye who are spiritual. Those who have received the spirit and are led by him.—Restore. The word is used in speaking of reconciling factions. Bring back in the right way.—A spirit of gentleness. Men should be treated without severity and with the idea of restoration.—Looking to thyself, lest thou be tempted. "The enemy of efficiency is self-sufficiency." All men are subject to some form of temptation.

2. One another's burdens. The emphasis is on "one another's" in contrast to the selfishness which neglects others. The reference is to moral infirmities.—So fulfil. The word denotes the filling up of that which is lacking. The filling of a partial void.—The law of Christ. This law is the law of love.

3. Thinketh. The word is sometimes rendered "seems" but here, as elsewhere used by Paul, it means think.—Be something. Pretender. A false notion of one's importance, thinking himself above burden-bearing for another.—He deceiveth himself. A deception of judgment. A subjective deception. Self-deception.

4. Prove. Measure his own conduct by the example of Jesus. Shall he have his glorying in regard to himself alone. If he stands the test then he has a chance to rejoice in his own merit and not because he is better than his neighbor. Our neighbors should not be our standard of excellence.

5. For each man must bear his own burden. Each man is held responsible for his own conduct without regard to his neighbor. It is a burden one can carry to the end without help.

6. Him that is taught. To teach by word of mouth. Hence to instruct orally in the elements of religion.—In the word. The gospel. Usually found with qualifying words in Paul's writings.—Communicate. Hold fellowship with. The word has a wide range of meanings, both in the material and spiritual worlds.

7. Be not deceived. The primary meaning is to lead astray. Satan will try to make you believe that you can sin and not be punished.—God is not mocked. The verb literally means "turn up the nose at."—Whatsoever a man soweth. There is a spiritual agriculture just as real as that of true farming. The same law operates in both fields.—That shall he also reap. Some one has given the law of life thus: "Sow an act, reap a habit; sow a habit, reap a character; sow a character, reap a destiny." We must remember that the harvest of wheat is just as sure as the harvest of "wild oats."

8. His own flesh. The flesh stands for the evil nature.—Corruption. The primary meaning of the word is destruction, but it also has the meaning of deterioration.—Soweth to the Spirit. The Holy Spirit not the higher nature of man. Of this sowing he is to reap spiritual life, eternal life.

9. Not be weary. Literally, "'faint" or "lose heart."—In due season. The natural harvest time. We are not to expect the harvest before the time.—We faint not. To be loosened or relaxed like the muscles of the weary.

10. As we have opportunity. As the season comes to us, let us sow to the Spirit by doing good.—Household of faith. Followers of Jesus whose faith in Him makes them one family.

TEST QUESTIONS.

1. How do we treat those "overtaken in trespass?"
2. How should spiritual men treat trespassers?
3. What is the force of the verb "overtaken?"
4. What is the difference in meaning between the two words for burden?
5. What is the meaning of verse 4?
6. Why should we deal gently with the sinner?
7. What is the meaning of "the household of faith?"
8. Can one obey both verses 2 and 5?
9. What burden does sin place upon us?
10. What is the law of Christ?

Sowing and Reaping

The Lesson in Today's Life.

BY ASA McDANIEL.

IN FAR too many cases we think of this problem from the negative point of view. The emphasis has been placed on what not to sow rather than what and when to sow.

The Canadian Department of Agriculture in one of its bulletins stated that tests carried on for ten years at the experimental farm had fully demonstrated that increased crops resulted from early sowing. The best crop came from the early sowing, and a delay of from one to three weeks would influence the results from 30 to 56 per cent.

The results would be much the same in spiritual agriculture if we could gather the statistics. The great hope of the church is in the early sowing; it is the only wise sowing.

Sowing and reaping follow one upon the other in endless succession. Paul did not create the law, for it was here long before he applied it to the spiritual life. It is as old as the universe. Our whole life is bounded and governed by laws ordained and established by God, and that a man reaps what he sows is a law that can be easily observed and verified, whether we regard sowing to the flesh or sowing to the spirit. The evil harvest of sin and the good harvest of righteousness are as sure to follow the sowing as the harvest of wheat and corn. Life is not casual, but causal.

When a man sows, he expects to reap. A young man serves a long apprenticeship to some trade, but he expects by and by to reap the fruit of all those years of patient industry. The professional man studies long and hard, that he may reap an abundant harvest later on in life. Some sowings mature earlier than others, but the most and best of them take time to bring the abundant harvest. It is always true with a sure and healthy spiritual growth. The mistake we too often make is that we do not care for the tender plants until they mature. Children come into the fellowship of the church and are left to shift for themselves, to work out their own salvation.

We expect to reap the kind of seed we sow. It is the law of the harvest and the hope and joy of the sower. Sowing good seed and caring for it will insure a good crop. Weeds may modify and even destroy to a great degree the yield, but what we have will be just the kind of grain we sowed. When we sow the seeds of a good life we may expect a much better life than would be obtained if we did not sow the good seed, although it might not reach our ideal. "Whatsoever a man soweth that shall he also reap."

A man reaps more than he sows. If he sows a bushel, he expects to reap ten or more at the harvest time. He can sow in one day what will take him ten to reap. There is a certain kind of bean that reproduces itself a thousand fold. One thistle-down which blew from the deck of a vessel is said to have covered with thistles the entire surface of a South Sea Island.

If a man could do his reaping alone, it would not be so hard; but it is terrible when he has to make that godly father, and that mother who loves him, or that wife and family, reap along with him in tears or in joy according to the harvest. Do not the drunkard and the gambler make their wives and families reap a bitter harvest? Does not the noble hearted man on the other hand enable his wife and family to reap with joy and profound satisfaction the abundant harvest of his life? Yes, the man who sows must expect his friends and relatives to reap with him. His example may be copied by his children or his neighbors' children, and his action reproduced indefinitely through them, either for good or evil.

The harvest of life depends on the sowing in our young days. We can look upon fields of noble achievement, ripened years of character radiant with the glory of heavenly strength and beauty if we remember to sow the good seed in the morning of life.

We shape ourselves to joy or fear,
  Of which the coming life is made,
And fill our future's atmosphere
  With sunshine or with shade.
The tissues of the life to be
  We weave with colors all our own,
And in the field of destiny
  We reap as we have sown.

The Larger Christian World

A DEPARTMENT OF INTERDENOMINATIONAL ACQUAINTANCE :: By Orvis F. Jordan

Methodists Not Pleasing to Pope.

The pope of Rome has thundered at the Methodists who have dared to invade the holy city and who are proposing to build a school right across from the Vatican. Among the other things the Pope states that "those emissaries of Satan * * * in the center of the Holy City" are erecting "temples in which God is denied his true worship;" "disseminating erroneous teachings;" "with liberal hands scattering lies." "Such diabolical machinations are as many assaults upon the faith of the sons of Rome, and these assaults are the more dangerous because they are made so frequently. And they are all the more sinister because they are only too often accompanied by the allurement of temporal advantages. O ye poor heads of families, who for the price of your alienation from the church receive offers to have your children educated free of charge!"

Leading Evangelist Dies.

Dr. Benjamin Fay Mills, whose spiritual adventures have been interesting to the Christian world for many years, departed this life May 1, after a brief illness. He has been evangelizing in Chicago recently but his last meetings were held in Beloit, Wis. He comes from a long line of ministers, and two sons are in the ministry. He departed from the Presbyterian church and went to the Unitarians for a period of twenty years. At his return to the church of his fathers two years ago, he stated he was looking for a fellowship in which there was a deep religious life. He has brought a half million people into the church through his evangelism, it is stated. He is the author of several books.

Father of Christian Social Movement Dead.

The group of pioneers in the task of making the social movement live within the church had no greater figure than that of Josiah Strong. A Congregational minister and secretary, he studied the great human facts in the light of the then new science of sociology and brought these facts to the attention of the church. Among his friends in this enterprise thirty years ago were Dr. Lyman Abbott, Dr. Richard T. Ely, and Rev. Washington Gladden. Dr. Strong had the gift of making figures romantic and his book, "Our Country," passed through many editions. It became a required book in the Methodist reading course for young preachers. In latter years, Dr. Strong became the leader of the American Institute of Social Service. He died on April 28, after a long illness. His last literary service was a tribute to Rev. Washington Gladden and Dr. Gladden writes his obituary in the Congregationalist.

End of Patent Medicine Controversy.

The death of John A. Patten, a prominent layman of the Methodist Episcopal church, ends a controversy that has waged not only in the civil courts but in church circles as well. Mr. Patten was the manufacturer of "Wine of Cardui," a patent medicine which was said to have a high percentage of whiskey in it. The civil suit brought by Mr. Patten against the American Medical Association is still pending. Mr. Patten was very free in using money for religious purposes and was said to have helped poverty stricken preachers in secret ways on many occasions besides giving large sums to various church societies.

Episcopal Congress Meets.

The Church Congress of Episcopalians met at Norfolk, Va., beginning May 2 Many of the scholars of the church as well as distinguished clergy were present. The subject of miracles was discussed and an influential section of the Congress held that there was no place in the cosmic order for miracles. People find miracles only when they are out seeking for them. This view was combated by Dr. Foley and others. Prayer-book revision and creedal revision were also live topics for discussion. There was an address on "The Spiritual Note in Twentieth Century Poetry," and for the first time a woman addressed the Congress, Miss Scudder speaking on "Has the Church eMt the Social Emergency?" Some practical problems, such as church-going, were discussed. The interest and attendance increased throughout the sessions.

Three Great Conventions

Three of the strongest denominations of America have their national gathering at the same time this year. The Methodists are at Saratoga Springs, New York.

The absorbing topic of the early days of the General Conference of the Methodists was the choice of bishops. Three have been elected to date. They are the Rev. Dr. Herbert Welch, president of Ohio Wesleyan university; Dr. Thomas Nicholson, corresponding secretary of the board of education of the Methodist Episcopal church, and the Rev. Dr. Adna W. Leonard, pastor of First Methodist church at Seattle, Wash. Dr. Welch was elected on the eighth ballot, Dr. Nicholson on the ninth ballot, and Dr. Leonard on the tenth.

Dr. Nicholson is 54 years of age. He graduated from Northwestern university and from Garrett Biblical institute, Evanston, and received the degrees of doctor of divinity from three different institutions and the degree of doctor of laws from Cornell university, Iowa. Dr. Nicholson for several years was a pastor. He was an educator fourteen years, having been elected to the board of education in 1908 while president of Dakota Wesleyan university.

Dr. Leonard is not quite 42 years of age. He was once pastor in Rome, Italy, and for sixteen years has been pastor in Seattle. He was educated at New York university and Drew Theological seminary. It is thought he may be located in Seoul, Korea, because of his record as a missionary and his acquaintance on the Pacific coast with the Japanese.

Dr. Matt S. Hughes and Dr. Charles Bayard Mitchell are said to be the next in line for election.

The Presbyterians have been agitated over the election of a moderator at their General Assembly at Atlantic City, N. J. Once the office was the occasion of much electioneering but of late years the would-be politicians have been rebuked and the office has more frequently sought the man.

The Rev. Dr. John A. Marquis, president of Coe college, Cedar Rapids, was elected moderator in an election marked by considerable intensity.

Dr. Marquis was elected on the second ballot, receiving 616 votes against 237 for the Rev. Dr. William L. McEwan, pastor of the Third Presbyterian church, Pittsburgh. Dr. Marquis is a moderate conservative and Dr. McEwan is a conservative.

Shouts of protest greeted the Rev. Dr. John Y. Ewart of Colorado Springs, when he injected theological controversy into his address, in seconding Dr. McEwan's nomination. Many are of the opinion that his injudicious remarks led to Dr. McEwan's defeat.

There are persistent rumors of a strenuous effort to remove the New York presbytery from the fellowship of the church for alleged heresy and a large delegation of laymen from Cincinnati is present to assist in this process.

The Baptists have had much friction in previous years over an overlapping of function of the missionary work of the American Baptist Publication Society and the American Baptist Home Mission Society. At the Northern Baptist Convention at Minneapolis, they passed a resolution providing for the consolidation of this work.

The Baptists have also passed a resolution which was evidently aimed at the Carnegie Foundation for it pledges the denomination to provide against the lessening of denominational control of the denominational college. The Carnegie Foundation gives teachers' pensions only to "undenominational institutions."

The Y. M. C. A. has also been in convention at Cleveland and has taken advanced ground especially in the matter of mission work and in the deepening of the religious life within the Association.

The conventions still in session face many knotty problems and the church in the United States waits with much interest and with some anxiety the settlement of such problems as the reunion of divided denominations, and the furtherance of plans for more effective co-operation in the great enterprises of the Church of Christ in the twentieth century.

Disciples Table Talk

American Society to Have Representative in Alaska.

Secretary R. M. Hopkins, of the American Society, reports that the man has been found to go to Alaska as missionary for the Society. The choice has fallen upon Harry C. Munro, who graduates from Hiram College this year. He will sail from Seattle about June 25 and begin his work at Seward and Anchorage, Alaska, early in July. Mr. Munro is a native of Northern Michigan and is well prepared for the work in Alaska. His parents now live in Sawtelle, Southern California, and with them he will leave his wife and two-year-old daughter until the spring of 1917, while he goes ahead to prepare a place for them.

T. L. Lowe Called to Portland, Ore., First.

George Darsie has gone from Portland, Ore., First to Lawrence, Kan., to take the work laid down some months ago by E. T. McFarland, and now the Portland church is seeking the right man to take his place. A call has just been extended to T. L. Lowe, pastor of West Fourth Ave. church, Columbus, O. If Mr. Lowe accepts the work it will be without a trial sermon, and with the condition that if he is not satisfied with the work he may be released.

Illinois Pastor Preaches Sermon on Roosevelt's New Book.

B. H. Bruner, pastor at Arcola, Ill., recently preached a sermon in which he considered the new Roosevelt book. "Fear God and Take Your Own Part." Both the merits and weaknesses of the volume were pointed out. One of the Arcola papers printed the address in full, and the entire community was stirred by the preacher's review of the book. Mr. Bruner has been elected president of the union ministerial association of Arcola and Douglas county. He also reports that he has organized a junior congregation which is succeeding splendidly, and he will soon promote an organization for the young people of the church along the lines of that of Frank Waller Allen, of Springfield, Ill., which was recently reported in these columns. Mr. Bruner is sceptical as to the present day usefulness of the Christian Endeavor movement, and suggests that a dozen or so pastors express themselves in this paper on this question.

"Frontier Day" With New York Disciples.

Sunday, May 21, was observed as Frontier day in the Christian churches of the Tonawandas, Buffalo, Niagara Falls and other places on the Niagara frontier. The various pastors, each accompanied by a layman, exchanged pulpits in the morning. George H. Brown, of Tabernacle church, Buffalo, went to Richmond Ave. church, Buffalo, exchanging with Arthur Sebastian. I. E. Reid of Payne Ave. church, went to Niagara Falls and the pastor there, Ira L. Parvin, went to Payne Ave. F. A. Higgins of First church, Tonawanda, and Benjamin Farrell of Forest Ave. church, Buffalo, exchanged pulpits. Frontier day has been arranged for the purpose of creating an interest in the movement to establish Disciple churches in hopeful places along the Niagara frontier. It is expected that a fund will be started to assist in carrying out the plan.

Texans in Annual Meet at Waco.

The annual convention of the Texas Christian Missionary Society was held in Waco last week. The attendance was fairly good. Waco being centrally located, it was thought the town would be overrun with delegates. Hon. Harry Mason, of Vernon, made a splendid presiding officer, it is reported. He was always at his post on time and he stayed with it to the end. Hon. J. F. Holt, of Sherman, is to preside at the next convention. A. D. Millroy, of Brenham, will be the vice-president and S. H. Austin, of Memphis, the secretary. The part of the proceedings that created most discussion was the report of the Committee on Future Work. This report contained over a dozen recommendations, some of which were on matters that were to be carried out by the local churches. Not an inconsiderable number of those present thought some of the recommendations were an invasion of the rights and autonomy of the local church. The report of the committee was adopted, however, with a few changes in wording here and there. One who was present writes of the convention as follows: "The social features of the convention were delightful. I never saw one that moved on more smoothly or with less loss of time. Every one was glad to be the guest of F. N. Calvin and his hospitable church. Looking back over the convention, one may ask two questions. 1. Has the spirit of the prophets departed? 2. Do the Disciples have to preach a certain philosopohy in order to do acceptable work? Each of these questions presents a living issue today."

An Interesting Anniversary at Liberty, Mo.

One of the pioneer Disciples of Missouri is A. B. Jones, of Liberty, Mo. Mr. Jones served the church at Liberty as pastor about a half-century ago. Graham Frank, present pastor, reports that May 9 was the fifty-eighth anniversary of the beginning of Mr. Jones' pastorate there and that the day was observed by the congregation in his honor. There are only three members of the church still living in Liberty who were members at the time of his first sermon. It happens that this day was also the anniversary of the preaching of Mr. Frank's first sermon at the Liberty church, and thus there was ample justification for making May 7 a red letter occasion in the church's history.

A Notable Victory at Indiana Harbor, Ind.

H. A. Carpenter, pastor, and the congregation at Indiana Harbor, Ind., are to be congratulated upon their achievement in the erection of their new $25,000 church home, dedicated on May 7. C. J. Sharp, of Hammond, was in charge. J. Wade Seniff led in the music. C. W. Cauble and C. G. Kindred were also on the program. The Hammond congregation attended the services in a body. From a small, tar paper shack, Mr. Carpenter has brought the Indiana Harbor church up to a modern concrete structure. This new structure is said to be the largest Protestant church in the city. The pastor hired all the labor for the new building. The congregation bought a concrete mixing machine and manufactured the blocks for the building. The Harbor church was started by Mr. Sharp, of Hammond, in 1905. The first services were held in a hall over a blacksmith shop.

Lectureship at College of Missions, Indianapolis.

James L. Barton, Senior Foreign Secretary American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions, was the lecturer for the fifth series of College of Missions lectures, which were given at the college May 8-11. His general theme was, "The Evangelization of the Mohammedan World," and the following were the topics discussed: "The Rise and Spread of Islam;" "Content, Claim and Promise of Islam;" "Sources of Strength and Weakness;" "Demonstration of Islam in Turkey;" "Contact with Christianity and Results, Including Attempts to Christianize;" "The Program of Evangelization."

Oklahoma's Greatest Convention Meets at Claremore.

C. H. Newham, reporter for the recent state convention of Oklahoma Disciples, writes that the record has been set this year for state meets in Oklahoma. With three hundred persons actually enrolled, there were more than five hundred persons at the sessions. Mr. Newham gives much credit for the success of the meeting to the state secretary, A. R. Spicer, of whom he remarks: "All the delegates will take off their hats to A. R. Spicer, the untiring, consecrated, efficient state secretary. One can not begin to estimate the value of the work of this man in Oklahoma. His plans for the convention were perfect and the execution of these plans practically perfect." Features of the sessions were many; a few of them are given here: E. T. Lane, of Oklahoma City, preached a sermon of great power on "What is Christianity?" The message of Grant K. Lewis on home missions was the other address that struck the keynote for the convention. R. M. Hopkins' Bible-school talks presented higher ideals for religious education. F. D. Kershner's Bible studies struck the spiritual note. H. E. Van Horn, of Oklahoma City, gave an address on Christian Education that "struck home vital truths in the hearts of the delegates." The C. W. B. M. sessions, under the leadership of Miss Marie Davies, Oklahoma field worker, were attractive, with Miss Allena Grafton, of Indianapolis, as a star speaker. The work of Mrs. A. R. Spicer in teacher-training promotion is highly praised: Mrs. Spicer reports 1,600 pupils in the classes of the state. Miss Adeline Goddard, state Christian Endeavor field worker, and Frank Lowe, National C. E. Field Secretary, made the Endeavor sessions notable. At the close of Mr. Lowe's address five young men and women gave themselves as "life recruits" for Christian work. Led by the state anti-saloon secretary, Attorney Laufbaum, two prohibition resolutions were passed by the convention, one to the Senate, the other to Congress. The work of the secretaries of the national societies of the Disciples is highly praised. The next convention will meet at Enid, the time being left to the state board. It is reported that Oklahoma City is after the 1917 national convention of the Disciples.

—The Endeavor societies of First church, Hutchinson, Kan., and of the South Hutchinson church, are reported about equal in standing in an inter-society contest being conducted by the Hutchinson local union.

—Miss Anna Louise Fillmore, daughter of our well-known music publisher, J. H. Fillmore, Norwood, Ohio, will go to China in September. May 21 was Anna Louise Fillmore Day in the Norwood Christian Bible-school and church. In this church she was reared, and she has a strong grip upon the confidence and love of the whole church, writes a member at Norwood.

—T. J. Brock, pastor at Peru, Ind., has been honored in being called upon to deliver the Memorial Day address at the services to be conducted under the auspices of the Peru G. A. R.

—The need of God and his presence in human life, will be the theme of a series of midsummer "little sermons" beginning Sunday, June 28, at First church, Springfield, F. W. Allen, pastor. Acknowledgement is made to Lyman Abbott's "The Great Companion," which book is used as a basis for these sermons. The topics to be discussed are: "The Quest After God," "The Power of Vision," "The Door," Devout Forgetting," "Devout Remembering."

At Vigan, Philppine Islands, a cottage for tubercular patients has been built, largely through the generosity of local Americans.

In the past year 17,945 persons have been treated in the Vigan Hospital.

Dr. Jennie V. Fleming reports four baptisms at Mungeli—two of these are from a village five miles out.

Dr. C. C. Drummond reached Harda, India, about the middle of February. The warmth of his welcome on the part of the people of India surprised him.

Four million pages have been printed in English and the vernacular on our mission press in Jubbulpore.

The Sahayak, the weekly paper published by our mission at Jubbulpore, is more widely read than any other paper published in Hindi.

The church at Harda, India, the first mission station of the Foreign Society on heathen soil, supports its own ministers, Mr. W. Isaac Isaacs is the preacher.

Let there be a large number enrolled this year in the Five Dollar League for the Children's Day Offering. Every superintendent and teacher can set a good example by becoming a member.

Miss Edna Dale of Wuhu, China, who is supported by the Christian Temple church, Baltimore, Md., has been asked to give her time to the Bible Teachers' Training School for women in Nanking.

Preparations continue at Tokyo, Japan, for the World's 8th Sunday-school Convention, notwithstanding the fact that the date is deferred until after the close of the European war. The Japanese committee, of which Marcus Okuma, Premier of the Empire, is vice-president, has already raised $32,000 for the reception and entertainment of the delegates, and the Y. M. C. A. building hall is to be enlarged to accommodate 3,000 delegates.

There ought to be no less than 25,000 enrolled in the One Dollar League of the Foreign Society. One Dollar will support a native evangelist for a whole week! One Dollar will pay all the expenses of a chapel for two weeks! One Dollar will provide 2,000 Christian tracts on the foreign field! One Dollar will keep a boy in school a month! Think of it! One Dollar will support an orphan twenty-four days! And so on.

Certain tribes of North American Indians, strange as it may seem, are the richest people in the world in proportion to population. The wealth of the people of the whole United States averages about $2,000 per capita, that of the 2,000 Osage Indians of northeast Oklahoma averages $30,000 per capita. The whole of Osage County, larger than the State of Rhode Island, belongs to this little handful of red men. Since it was allotted to them by the government, oil in great quantities has been discovered and their income last year from this source alone was $560,000 in addition to which they received great returns from their grazing lands.

Stephen J. Corey, Secretary.

—Professor L. A. Moomaw, of Cotner University, is publishing a book on the history of that institution.

—The Mexican Institute at San Antonio, Tex., conducted by the Disciples, closed its first year with 36 members enrolled. All but two of these came into the fellowship by baptism.

—The church at Sharon, Pa., R. A. Bennett, pastor, celebrated its eighty-eighth anniversary on May 7. President Cramblet, head of Bethany College, was the anniversary preacher. Among the preachers who have led in this field are: C. G. Brelos, E. S. Bosworth, Professor Peckham, of Hiram, J. S. Ross, Fred A. Bright, W. C. Prewett, C. C. Waite, A. A. Honeywell, M. L. Jenny, W. W. Winbigler and the present pastor. This church is making rapid progress under the ministrations of Mr. Bennett.

—E. M. Waits, of Magnolia Avenue, Fort Worth, will lead in the Bible study features at the School of Methods at Shreveport, La., which is scheduled for June 15-23.

—W. C. Pearce, adult Bible-class leader with the International Association, addressed the adult department of Hamilton Ave. church, St. Louis, on May 14. This church will soon begin the erection of a new Bible-school building.

—The annual convention of the Sixth District of the Illinois Christian Missionary Society was held at Charleston, May 23 and 24. The program was an excellent one. Leslie Crown, of DeLand; B. H. Bruner of Arcola; H. H. Peters, of Paris; J. C. Mullins, of Mattoon; R. E. Henry, of Decatur; Stephen E. Fisher, of Champaign; J. F. Bickel, of Danville; W. S. Hoke, of Bement; J. P. Givens, of Hoopeston; J. F. Hollingsworth, of Newman; Prof. A. W. Nolin, of the University of Illinois; J. R. Golden, State Secretary, and L. O. Lehman, of Eureka, were on the program. R. H. Callaway is secretary of the district. Pastor Horne and the Charleston church cared for a big attendance.

—Edgar D. Salkeld, pastor of Central church, Frankfort Ind., has enrolled as a member of one of the military training camps to be held at Fort Benjamin Harrison this summer and fall under the direction of the War Department.

—The Christian Endeavor Society of Central church, North Tonawanda, N Y., are taking a deep interest in the Damoh Orphanage work. Early in the year they pledged $5 and through the use of the Endeavor Day exercise became so interested that they assumed support of Timothy, one of the boys in the orphanage.

—The Philathea Class of East church, Toledo, O., gave a musical program May 9 which was of a high order and well received by a large audience.

—The Ohio Christian Missionary Society conducted a very successful school of methods at Bellefontaine the week following the dedication of the new building there. There was a registered attendance of Bible-school workers of 200, representing twelve schools. Twenty persons qualified for the international certificate. Following the school of methods at Bellefontaine the Bible-school at that place on May 7 held the first session in the new building. The program had been so well prepared and the workers so instructed in executing it that the school opened on time and proceeded on schedule to the end without a single announcement from the platform.

—H. Winter reports that the men's class of the church at Perry, O., has, under the leadership of M. C. Hughes, as teacher, made a phenomenal growth in the past six months. The club house used by this class has been improved greatly recently.

—A union Bible-school institute was conducted at West Mansfield, May 13-15. The instructors were Dr. W. C. Barclay, Miss Barnthouse and Wilford H. McLain.

—The next regular Union Ministers' Meeting to be held under the auspices of the Chicago Church Federation Council will be held Monday, May 29, at 10:30 in the First Methodist Church, corner Clark and Washington Sts. The speaker of the day will be President Albert Parker Fitch, D.D., of Andover Theological Seminary, who will speak upon the subject "Religious Leadership in America After the War."

—The Disciples are not strong in New Orleans, La., but W. H. Allen, pastor of the church there, reports that during one month 21 persons came forward in response to the invitation. Fifteen of these came on Easter morning.

—J. R. Blunt, who leads in the work at Winnipeg, Can., reports that six persons have recently been added to the small body of Disciples in this difficult field.

—George Darsie, recently resigned from First church, Portland, Ore., visited a few days in Tacoma, Seattle and Winnipeg, Manitoba, before taking up his new work at Lawrence, Kan., on May 14.

—Geo. W. Brewster preached the baccalaureate sermon at Eugene Bible University, Eugene, Ore., on May 14. L. S. Cupp had charge of the ordination service. E. V. Stivers gave the alumni address and F. T. Porter gave the address before the graduating class.

New York City Mission Notes

The Disciples' Missionary Union of Greater New York and vicinity reports continued activity and interest in the work of the city missions.

The co-operation of all the churches in this common object tends toward unity, and the greatest harmony of interests.

Since the Flatbush church has become self-supporting, the Borough Park Christian church is the leading mission. But recently a People's church, it is now a Church of Christ with a church membership of 105 and a Bible-school enrollment of 236 with an average attendance of 165. Through the assistance of the Church Extension Society, by taking over title to the Borough Park property, the Disciples' Missionary Union has been able to make a loan covering the entire indebtedness of the property, thus saving to the church $1,000 and lowering the debt to $9,000. L. F. Carter is the pastor, and is doing excellent work.

In the opposite part of Brooklyn is the Ridgewood Heights Mission, in the midst of a rapidly growing section. The mission is at present without a regular pastor, but is being supplied by students from Union Thological Seminary. A pastor has been called for the first of June. With the proper leadership this will become a strong and flourishing mission with self-support in the not far future.

The Russian Mission on the lower East side with John Johnson as pastor, continues its thrifty and healthy growth. It has at present a membership of 50 with an average attendance of 65, which are mostly men. Social and institutional features are carried on in connection with this work.

The Disciples' Missionary Union is happy to announce a great forward step in connection with the Russian work in the United States. A Russian paper to be known as the "Russian Christian Herald," edited by John Johnson, will be published monthly beginning with the present month. This paper will be our first Russian Christian paper and will be sent to Russian centers from coast to coast.

The older churches of the city are steadily pushing forward the work of the Kingdom in their various localities, and the whole tone of our work in the city is decidedly good.

M. M. Amunson.
Secretary Disciples' Missionary Union.

A Church Home for You. Write Dr. Finis Idleman, 142 West 81st St., N. Y.

—D. N. Wetzel, of the church at Pittsfield, Ill., will deliver the baccalaureate sermon before the graduating class of the local high school.

—W. S. Athearn was a leading speaker at the annual spring rally of Greater Cincinnati's Bible schools, on Sunday afternoon, May 21. His theme was, "The Religious Education of the American Democracy." The meeting was held at Central church.

—A. L. Clinkenbeard, recently called from Plano, Tex., to North Dallas, was presented with a gold watch at the close of his work at the former city.

—A. R. Liverett, pastor at First church, Jefferson City, Mo., has declined the offer of an appointment as district superintendent of the Missouri Anti-Saloon League. Mr. Liverett was chaplain of the House in the General Assembly of 1913 and chaplain of the Senate in 1915.

—M. W. Yocum, of the Hartford City, Ind., church, recently addressed the local high school on "The Unknown Quantity of Life."

—Coffeyville, Kan., congregation has completed one-half of its new church home, and this will be dedicated by Geo. L. Snively. This "half a church" will seat over 1,200 persons, including all rooms. Arthur Long is pastor at Coffeyville, and he has increased the attendance at all services in a remarkable way since the beginning of his pastorate.

—C. H. Swift, of First church, Carthage, Mo., will preach the baccalaureate sermon before the Centralia High School, June 13. Mr. Swift recently left the Centralia work to assume the duties of pastor at Carthage.

—C. C. Morrison talked on his recent experiences at Panama Congress and in the South American Regional Conferences at Memorial church, Chicago, on May 17.

—W. E. M. Hackleman led the music at the Ohio convention, held at Mt. Vernon, May 23-25. Mr. Hackleman will assist in the dedication services of the remodeled church at Madison, Ind., John W. Moody, pastor.

—H. G. Burgess, Canton, Mo., pastor, has given a lecture at the Canton High School once a week during this year, and will deliver the baccalaureate address next month. Mr. Burgess recently gave an address before the local chapter of Knights Templars.

—Drury college, located at Springfield, Mo., has recently raised $70,000 in Springfield as additional endowment fund.

—E. L. Day rejoices in a Bible school increased in attendance from 150 to 600 during his five-year pastorate with North Side church, Indianapolis.

—G. L. Snively raised nearly $11,000 at Thorntown, Ind., to cover a building indebtedness of $7,500. R. E. Callithan and the congregation at Thorntown deserve credit for the erection of this $25,000 church home in a town the size of Thorntown.

—Butler, Pa., church will build a Bible school and Community House plant at once.

—There is a men's class of nearly three hundred members in the church at Mt. Vernon, O., which entertained the Ohio Disciples in state convention. The new $45,000 home in which the convention was held is reported to be the finest church building in the county. J. A. Long is the Mt. Vernon pastor.

—"A new $15,000 church home by September," is the slogan at Tenth Street church, Paducah, Ky.

—There are more men than women in G. W. Morton's church, at Beardstown, Ill. Nearly a hundred members have been added in the past year.

—D. B. Titus, of Idaho Falls, Ida., led his church in a four weeks' missionary educational campaign preparatory to making the every member canvass.

—The following are Pacific coast convention dates for this year: S. California, July 20-30, Long Beach; N. California, July 10-16, Santa Cruz; Oregon, July 8-16, Turner; W. Washington, July 5-7, Tacoma; Inland Empire, June 26-29, Rosalia, Wash. E. Oregon, June 21-25, Pendleton; S. Idaho, June 19-21, Payette; Montana, June 6-8, Bozeman.

—Chas. H. Hulme, pastor at Bartlesville, Okla., led in a successful financial campaign, by which a building debt of $6,000 was cancelled.

—W. A. Fite, pastor at First church, Ashland, Ky., has published a little booklet on "God's Plan for Financing the Church" which would be of value to any church in the country.

—C. H. Hood, pastor at Coshocton, O., reports that "the aged and infirm were brought in automobiles and carnations were provided for all mothers"—at the special Mothers' Day service held at this church. There were three additions at this service.

—W. S. Athearn will take special work in the University of Chicago this summer.

—H. E. Wilhite, former evangelist, has gone into business in Southern California.

—"The Women's Hour" is a feature in the program of Bethany Assembly. There will be "Ten Lectures by Ten Hoosier Women" for women only, one lecture being given each day, Aug. 8-18, except Lord's Day. Religious subjects will not be discussed primarily. The lectures will deal with those things that are of peculiar interest to women. The speakers are: Mrs. Grace Julian Clarke, Mrs. S. R. Artman, Mrs. Felix T. McWhirter, Mrs. Effie Cunningham, Mrs. J. M. Stearns, Mrs. O. H. Greist, Mrs. Dr. Amelia Keller, Mrs. Demarchus Brown, and Miss Lella Gaddis. All of these women have become well known through their work upon the chautauqua platform and elsewhere.

—A $1,200 mortgage was burned at Elyria, O., church on Easter Sunday.

—The following letter from W. J. Carry, of Crookston, Minn., indicates real growth religiously in a difficult home mission district: "The largest attendance at Bible school in its history at Crookston was reached during April, having 91 in attendance the first Sunday, and 101 the third Sunday. We were not able to push the work in the revival meeting as much as we wanted to, on account of preparations for the union meeting. I helped seven days as carpenter on the tabernacle, as well as attending committee meetings, etc. Made eighty-eight calls during the month. Nine of our Endeavorers passed the examination in the C. E. Expert work."

At Transylvania and Hamilton

The annual commencement season of Transylvania and the College of the Bible, including Hamilton College, the Junior College for Women, will begin on Sunday evening, June 4, and continue through Thursday, June 8.

While all alumni and former students are cordially invited to attend these exercises, the classes of 1911, 1906, 1901, etc., are especially expected to return for the fifth year anniversary.

One of the dormitories of the Ewing Hall group will be available for the use of former students and alumni, where they will be guests of the college.

The commencement sermon will be preached at Central church, Sunday evening, June 4, by F. D. Kershner, of St. Louis. Edgar DeWitt Jones, of Bloomington, Ill., will deliver the commencement address for Hamilton College on Wednesday evening, and Col. Miles M. Dawson, of New York, will give the commencement address for Transylvania and the College of the Bible on the morning of the 8th.

Following is the program for the week:

Sunday, June 4, 8 p. m.—Commencement Sermon, Central church, F. D. Kershner, St. Louis, Mo.

Monday, June 5, 8 p. m.—Play by Marlowe Club, Hamilton College Chapel.

The following loans were paid during April as the buildings were completed; Okeene, Okla., (George F. Rand Fund) $500; Robersonville, N. Car. (Christian Church Sunday-school Fund) $3,500. Chickasha, Okla., Shepard St. Col'd Church (J. C. Mason Fund) $250; Dugger, Ind. (T. W. Phillips Fund) $4,000; Jefferson, Iowa, (Annuity) $6,500; Greentown, Ind., (Lizzie P. Chapman Fund) $2,000; Roanoke, Va., Belmont church (Frankfort, Kentucky Church Fund) $2,500; Mt. Pleasant, Iowa (J. W. Cassell Fund) $2,000; Merryville, La., (Annuity) $400.

During the month a Name Loan Fund was established by E. M. Austin and wife of Litchfield, Ill., as a memorial to their son, Paul Austin. It will be known as "Paul Austin Memorial Fund." The $5,000 was paid in cash.

During the month the churches sent $1,418.11 and individuals $6,838. This is a gain over April, 1915, of $7,066.60.

There are great opportunities before the Board of Church Extension at the present time and many applications should be answered because the congregations want to build churches during the summer months.

John H. Booth is with the Men and Millions Team during the month of May. He will attend the Northwestern and the California conventions in the month of June and July, also visiting many of the churches in that territory during that time.

Disciples Publication Society

The Disciples Publication Society is an organization through which churches of the Disciples of Christ seek to promote undenominational and constructive Christianity.

The relationship it sustains to the Disciples is intimate and organic, though not official. The Society is not a private institution. It has no capital stock. No individuals profit by its earnings.

The charter under which the Society exists determines that whatever profits are earned shall be applied to agencies which foster the cause of religious education, although it is clearly conceived that its main task is not to make profits but to produce literature for building up character and for advancing the cause of religion.

The Disciples Publication Society regards itself as a thoroughly undenominational institution. It is organized and constituted by individuals and churches who interpret the Disciples' religious reformation as ideally an unsectarian and unecclesiastical fraternity, whose common tie and original impulse are fundamentally the desire to practice Christian unity with all Christians.

The Society therefore claims fellowship with all who belong to the living Church of Christ, and desires to co-operate with the Christian people of all communions as well as with the congregations of Disciples, and to serve all.

The Christian Century, the chief publication of the Society, desires nothing so much as to be the worthy organ of the Disciples' movement. It has no ambition at all to be regarded as an organ of the Disciples' denomination. It is a free interpreter of the wider fellowship in religious faith and service which it believes every church of Disciples should embody. It strives to interpret all communions, as well as the Disciples, in such terms and with such sympathetic insight as may reveal to all their essential unity in spite of denominational isolation. The Christian Century, though published by the Disciples, is not published for the Disciples alone. It is published for the Christian world. It desires definitely to occupy a catholic point of view and it seeks readers in all communions.

Ten Big Reasons Why

are being adopted by so many of the best schools among Disciples.

1. There is more to them—at least a third more—than is contained in any other series.
2. They are rich, vital and full of suggestion to teacher and pupil.
3. They are free from the sectarian spirit.
4. They are soundly and fervently evangelical.
5. They are truly artistic in all their illustrations.
6. They are printed on better paper with better binding and in better taste than any other series.
7. Every lesson writer is an expert of interdenominational reputation.
8. They are a monument to the modern spirit of unity—several leading denominations have co-operated to produce them and are now using them.
9. The Disciples possess full editorial rights, through the editor, Charles Clayton Morrison.
10. Every Disciple school that uses them participates in and promotes a great Christian union enterprise.

"The Advance of Protestantism"

MANY inquiries have come to me from readers of the current series of articles on the Regional Congresses in South America, asking how the presence of our deputation in these cities was regarded by the general public and what was its attitude toward our Congresses. In response to such inquiries I have decided to publish this week the following account of our theater meeting in Santiago, the capital of Chile, a city of something over a half-million people. This account appeared in the daily newspaper, "La Union," which is known to be the mouthpiece of the Catholic Church in Chile, subsidized by the Church and carefully guarding its interests in the public mind. I could make quotations from other newspapers in Santiago which would reflect the freer attitude of public opinion toward Protestantism, and I may do so at another time, but this typical newspaper "story" seemed to all the members of our deputation strikingly significant, not alone for the fact that it appeared in the most conservative paper in the Republic, but because of the clever reportorial qualities that are disclosed by it. In the main the story is true to fact, though the writer exaggerates the emotionalism of the audience. An Anglo Saxon audience could not have been more self-controlled than was this vast assembly of Latin Americans in the Chilean capital. Next week I will take up again the thread of our narrative, telling of our voyage to Valparaiso from Lima and of our experiences in Santiago which is situated about eighty miles inland from Valparaiso.

C. C. M.

THE PROTESTANT ADVANCE

SOME of the daily papers gave notice, recently, of the arrival in this country of certain delegates to the Congress on Christian Work which was recently held in Panama. For this reason there was to be held in a theater of this city a great meeting to which all the Evangelicals of Santiago were invited, in order that they might hear the message of these delegates and come to know of the decisions formulated in that great assembly. This invitation provoked our curiosity. We had heard mention of this Protestant sect which our people had christened with the picturesque name of "Canutos."* We had the impression that the Lutheran religion had gained some ground among us, thanks to the persevering labor of the Salvation Army which under pretense of fighting alcoholism is carrying forward a formidable propaganda in favor of Protestantism. In a word, we were convinced, beforehand, that Protestantism, in spite of its exotic character as regards the mentality, the mode of life and the religious traditions of our people, had gained a few adepts among the Chileans.

But we never thought that the thing might assume greater proportions. In going to the Comedy Theater, we imagined that we would find it more or less filled with foreigners, numerous misses and ladies, a few Chileans more or less curious like ourselves, a few women of our land, and a very, very few specimens of the male citizens of the native land of O'Higgins, and Arthur Prat, who, as is known, are ardent devotees of the Virgin of Carmen.

Our surprise, therefore, was great, when we found the theater full from the pit to the highest gallery, all the seats occupied by a gathering that, it is true, was cosmopolitan, but in which the national element predominated. In the main floor numerous foreigners were to be seen, both men and women. There were also present a good number of Chileans, and of Chilean women, in particular. The same may be said of the boxes. But when we came to the galleries there was a complete dearth of foreigners. The creole element filled them completely! Men and women were crowded together in them, like clusters of grapes, without showing the slightest weariness in that ill-smelling thick atmosphere. One might think that we were to witness the debut of some famous production, and that in anticipation of the coming pleasure no one paid the slightest attention to the inconveniences of the moment.

Thus the moment came for the opening of the program. The curtains were drawn and the platform came into view occupied by the desk of the president, and behind this, a group of ladies and gentlemen who, as we afterwards saw, formed the chorus of singers. In the front row there were a number of gentlemen who wore the high collar and the frock coat which are the characteristic dress of the Protestant pastors and professors in the colleges which the sect has among us. At one extreme of the platform sat Colonel Bounett, the head of the Salvation Army in Chile. And scattered over the platform were brigadiers, soldiers and female soldiers of that same army, with their characteristic uniform.

The program was begun. A gentleman who occupied the place of president and who, we understand, was a Bishop, invited us in the Portuguese tongue to sing a hymn. It should be stated that as the people came in all received a small booklet full of religious songs. At first, we supposed it was a sort of keepsake, such as is given out at concerts, but we were to find out that it had a practical application. The booklets contained just the hymns which were to be sung. In this way, the audience could accompany the chorus on the platform and the singing soon assumed the character of a general invocation.

When the hymn was finished, the Bishop President gave us in a few words the object of the meeting. There were present three delegates to the Congress of Panama and they desired to speak to the Chilean Evangelicals. We were to hear three renowned orators, and they would speak to us, respectively, in the language of Shakespeare, of Camoens and of Cervantes, since one of them was a North American, another was a Brazilian, and the third an Argentine.

Immediately he presented the North American, adding the consolatory notice that his discourse would be translated into Spanish by another Reverend. And so it was. The North American orator arose and with great emphasis began his discourse with a vibrant salutation to Panama, in which he dwelt on the great work of the Canal and described it as one of the great triumphs of human energy and skill. He then spoke of the meaning of the Congress at Panama, in connection with the religious ideals pursued by Protestantism. There were in that Congress twenty-one flags, which signified that there were just the same number of peoples who were thirsty for the Gospel. Those flags spoke of liberty, of wealth, of commerce, of power, and yet neither liberty, nor wealth, nor commerce, nor power was sufficient to make these peoples happy, unless, together with having these things, they lead a religious and spiritual life. It pained him to confess that not all those peoples were living according to the teaching of Christianity, among them his own land which he so dearly loved. But in order to live like a Christian it was necessary to snatch men from the darkness of ignorance. Therefore, one of the duties of the Congress should be that of aiding in the diffusion of knowledge in such a way that at the side of each temple there should be a school where mankind might learn to read in the great book, in the Book of Books, the Bible, where are to be found the destinies of humanity.

Such was the discourse of the reverend North American, which, thanks to the interpreter, was perfectly understood by all his hearers, although in the translation a good part of the emphasis and fervid eloquence was lost. The orator and the interpreter did not compliment each other, for in temperament they seemed to be diametrically opposed the one to the other. But in spite of this the matter was perfectly understood, and this was what interested us.

After we had sung another hymn as before, the Reverend President announced that we were now to hear the language of Camoens, or, in other words, the Brazilian orator. He was a gentleman of venerable aspect, of splendid figure, and with long, white beard. By the terms in which he was introduced we learned that he was an eminent Presbyterian pastor in Rio de Janeiro. His language was essentially mystic. His discourse was really a sermon on the need of the spiritual life; that is the religious life, not only for individual felicity but also for the felicity and grandeur of the nation. He insisted, in particular, on the transforming power of religion. The sciences, art, riches, cannot in themselves regenerate the individual. Only religion has power to illuminate the conscience of the penitent thief and to place in his lips the redeeming word of pardon. Religion, the divine principle that fills it, was that which produced a reaction in Saul of Tarsus and converted him from an implacable prosecutor of the Christians into a formidable champion of the Church of Christ, into the great Apostle Saint Paul.

The orator becomes more and more enthusiastic, more and more fervid. His tropical imagination suggests brilliant similes. Taking a walk on Santa Lucia he found a strange inscription: "To those who are expatriated from Heaven and Earth." The place which is today one of the most enchanting parks in this city, was, at one time, a cemetery. In the same way ought religion to work in the soul, transforming it, purifying it, beautifying it. The human heart, too, is customarily a cemetery, in which lie faith and hope. That heart must be awakened to life, infusing into it the spirit of Christ. It must be converted into a garden, from which man can address the Creator with those immortal words, "Our Father, who art in Heaven!"

The assembly, carried away with its emotions, applauds wildly. A breath of mysticism passes through that theater which is called the "Comedy."

A still more fervent hymn is sung with the greatest unction, as a harmonizing echo of the discourse. Then the president introduces the Methodist pastor of Rosario, Argentine, who is to speak to us in the language of Cervantes.

This orator shows from the very first moment that he knows the weak side of the Chileans. Consequently as soon as he advances to the front of the platform he takes out two flags, one the Chilean, the other the Argentine, and unfolds them interlaced. A thunder of applause greets this simple maneuver and when he salutes the flags, evoking the glorious days of Maipo and Chacabuco, we have no power to describe how the thunder is converted into a veritable tempest of applause.

The discourse of this orator is an apology for Protestantism. He makes it clear that this is the revealed, the only religion, founded by Jesus Christ himself. His striking gestures, his sonorous voice, his vigorous phraseology, his sober mimicry all give to the orator the air of one who is carried away by his passion, of one who is vehement, a fanatic. His conceptions are like his physical characteristics, instead of convincing he seems to crush down opposition. They, the Evangelicals, admit one only God, one only law, one only Lord. One only God, that is to say a loving Father, who does not punish his sinning son, but sacrifices himself to save him. Only one law, that is to say the Bible, which is the only code according to which the Evangelical ought to adjust his life, there being no human power which can oblige him to accept other rites or precepts. One only Lord, one only mediator, one only priest, one only way to reach God, that mediator is Jesus Christ, and with him there is no need of more.

This fervid discourse has produced a suggestion of mysticism. When the orator speaks of God there fall from the galleries such phrases as these uttered with trembling voices: "Hallelujah!" "Glory to God!" But little was lacking to produce symptoms of hysterics—cries, sighs, self-accusation. The atmosphere was saturated with these spiritual aspirations.

The orator feels that he dominates the situation. His voice, far from becoming hoarse, in spite of the high pitch in which he speaks, seems to grow stronger and stronger. Protestantism not only interests itself in the soul, he says, it busies itself, too, in material things. It is a valuable ally to education and social progress. In it there is no human inequality. Inequality is an invention of man. God has all his children absolutely equal; and if there are beings who die of hunger and have no bread with which to fill their mouths, this is not because the common Father is a miser. The earth produces three times more than what humanity needs for its support. The trouble lies in the fact that man has forgotten that he is a brother of man, and that it is not lawful for him to build his happiness on a heap of corpses. But the benefits of Protestantism are not yet exhausted. It is under Protestantism that the arts and sciences flourish. The nations that march in the very vanguard of civilization are those which profess the Evangelical religion, and if it is true that some of those nations are now at war, it is perhaps that in them is being produced again the episode of Job, the Patriarch. Satan, who was zealous of his fidelity to God, overwhelmed him with suffering and disappointments. But inasmuch as his faith held true, the Lord recompensed him, returning to him more than he had. So in the present case! Satan, envious of the splendor which those nations, under the protection of the Gospel, had reached, has unchained on them the horrible plague of war. But surely they will rise above this trial and God will return unto them, with interest, that which they have lost in order that they may continue their glorious way!

Thus spoke the orator, and with a final hymn this meeting of the Evangelicals of Santiago came to an end. The congregation went out with a grave demeanor, receiving at the door a copy of "El Heraldo Christiano," which we understand is like an official organ of the sect.

For us, all this had been a revelation. Protestantism has advanced considerably among us. Its apostles, those who propagate it, its elements of action, are formidable. We propose to study, with all calmness, and with a spirit free from passion, that which the advance means for the country. We believe it involves grave peril for our social tranquility, for the harmony of the Chilean family. Far be it from us to suppose that its agents and propagandists deliberately pretend to create these disturbances. But their work is bound to have such an unfortunate result, because they aspire to the making of Protestantism the national religion; and this pretension, as history shows, has made seas of blood to run and has sunk in misery those peoples who have fallen into those abysses of misfortune known as religious wars.

LLOYD-GEORGE ON TEMPERENCE

Mr. Lloyd-George has again shown that his heart is on the right side in the cause of Temperance reform. To "a deputation from the Temperance Council of the Christian Churches," at Hotel Metropole, London, he took strong ground and reiterated convictions long held and frequently expressed. Speaking of his hopes of eradicating the evil by elimination of the traffic and of even carrying the leaders of "the Trade" with him at least for the period of the War, Mr. Lloyd-George said:

"There are many changes which I hope we shall accomplish through this War, but this will be the greatest and most beneficial change of all if we succeed in carrying it through. If it is possible to convince the nation that the success of the great task which has been undertaken depends very largely upon removing this drag upon its efficiency, then I feel confident that we shall regard this, however successful we may be in a military sense, as the greatest triumph of all."

Opinions divide; purpose unites. Whenever Christians become fully aware of this truth, a long step will have been taken toward real Christian unity. So long as we strive for union on the basis of unanimity of opinion we will be doomed to disappointment. That which will bring in an era of Christian union is the dominance of a common purpose. Before we can hope for real purpose, at least a majority of Christians must reach the point where they put religion above theology, Christ above creed; but we will not reach that point until the divine purpose which actuated Jesus Christ—to make men in his likeness—takes precedence over the effort to induce men to conform to our opinions.—Presbyterian Advance.

Let us learn that if we are bent on doing our duty we must be prepared to suffer for it. Never to suffer for doing our duty may be to fail in doing it at all.—Bishop Thorold.

The Gospel of the Guns

A Sermon Preached at the Memorial Church of Christ, Chicago.

BY HERBERT L. WILLETT.

OUR country is confronted at the present time by the most outstanding peril it has faced in our history. This is not the danger of invasion from without nor uprisings within. In spite of all alarmist reports, the nation knows in its heart that no enemies are likely to be encountered if left to their own initiative. Our danger is rather the arousal of a new and strange sentiment of militarism for which there is no analogy or precedent in our experience. A wave of excitement is moving over the United States. Instruments of public information are filled with disquieting rumors of the dangers which menace the nation. Newspapers of a certain type are filled from cartoons to editorials with the war spirit. Upon the screen the lessons of preparedness are portrayed in the most lurid colors. Banquet tables are the scenes of fervid oratory in behalf of military and naval efficiency, and even the public schools are invaded with the same spirit.

OUR RELIANCE NOT IN REGIMENTS.

In the past our army has been small, scarcely more than enough for emergency service in times of uprising against the law. This has been our deep pride. Our reliance has been placed not in regiments and cannon, but in the intelligence and the moral character of our citizens. Our navy has received far more attention, and though we knew that it did not in any manner compare with the navies of some of our transatlantic neighbors, we have been satisfied to allow it to take its place in the line of navies at a point where our dependence upon moral rather than physical forces would be illustrated. Our people have been respected in all corners of the world, not because of any military equipment but because of the nobler qualities of integrity, efficiency and good will.

Suddenly we are confronted by the cry for preparedness. This seems a good word, and most of the American people believe in it without argument. Yet, of course, one likes to know the meaning of such a term, and it is one of the perplexing features of our present discussion of the theme that there seems to be no agreement among its advocates.

There are those who demand that we shall have an additional fifty-thousand soldiers and ten battleships. Such people are denounced as cowards and laggards by those who think we ought to have a hundred-thousand more troops and twenty more battleships. And these in turn are only triflers and mollycoddles in the estimation of those who think that nothing less than two hundred thousand soldiers and forty additional battleships will suffice. It is a sliding scale of estimates. No one seems to understand where the limit is to be placed.

THE BURDEN OF MILITARISM.

It is quite proper that the United States should be prepared for national emergency. But does this mean, as many are saying and as the President himself, perhaps under pressure, has intimated, that our navy ought to equal those of the two strongest nations of Europe?

Nothing is more conspicuous in the recent history of both England and Germany than that after enormous and exacting outlays for military and naval preparation during the past ten years, both are now declared to have been essentially unprepared for the war when it began.

We wish to be ready for eventualities, but we ought not to go in for a program which has seemingly no limit, and which commits us to the insupportable burdens under which the nations of Europe have groaned during the past decade. Yet these burdens are now declared to have been insufficient to prepare for the event that was precipitated. Does America wish to take that curve?

If the menacing words of men who call themselves experts are to be taken seriously, then no amount of preparation short of the militarization of our entire life would suffice for adequate protection. Is that the avenue we desire or are willing to choose?

The menace of invasion is held before the alarmed vision of the American people. Pictures of war and its devastation, of the destruction of cities, and the outrages to be expected from foreign troops, are made vivid and threatening. From whom may these invasions be expected?

There are those who say Germany. But there is little logic in such an assertion regarding a nation already strongly represented in our population, and now ringed round by foes with whom it will take every atom of her strength and every ounce of her treasure to reckon. Japan, say others; forgetting the fact that the brilliant and progressive nation across the Pacific has everything to lose and nothing to gain by a war which would deprive her of the American trade, the one item of all which she most covets in the western hemisphere.

AMERICA'S NATURAL FOE.

If the United States has an enemy to fear it is Great Britain, with whom we have already had two wars and who is our nearest neighbor territorially. It is never with distant nations troubles of this kind arise, but with those close at hand, as the story of France and Germany, of the Balkans, of Greece and Turkey and of the present war abundantly prove. And yet the folly of apprehending any danger of war between the United States and Great Britain is admirably illustrated by the fact that since 1817 we have had no forts along the Canadian frontiers and no ships of war in any of the border waters. War with Great Britain is unthinkable. And yet she is our nearest neighbor and historic rival.

Should the American people under the spur of excitement and alarm depart from their time-honored attitude of constructive diplomacy rather than irritating aggression? If they should forsake the role of friendship and good will for all nations west and east, it would be the cause for the greatest disappointment to the enlightened sentiment of the world.

WHAT EUROPE THINKS OF OUR PANIC.

Already the European press of both contending parties and of the neutral nations expresses surprise at America's sudden military obsession. Eminent statesmen in the lands which on other grounds would be glad to see America intervening in the present conflict, utter sentiments of astonishment and chagrin that the one people who might set the example of self-possession and dependence upon the great moral forces of life should undertake to imitate the fanatical war spirit of Europe in the effort to prepare for eventualities. Already certain anti-American newspapers in Japan are using the pretext of America's war preparation to arouse their own people to the peril of an American invasion.

"Preparedness," in spite of all specious arguments, is the most irritating cause of war. The leaders in Europe's present tragedy are the best proofs of that statement. Preparedness, instead of offering a national insurance against war, is the assembling of inflammable and explosive material which needs only the match of excitement to wreck all hopes of peace.

WHO IS TO PROFIT?

And who is behind this gospel of the guns? First the military experts, who, as is natural, look at matters from the military point of view, see in the outbreak of war the opportunities for their own promotion, and magnify their branch of the service. It must, however, be acknowledged with satisfaction that some of the ablest of our military and naval experts have expressed themselves as completely satisfied that our present equipment of troops and battleships needs but modest augmentation; that our harbors are impregnable and that the futility of attempting to land forces on our shores at any point is completely demonstrable.

The second of the forces behind the guns is the maker and seller of munitions of war. It needs no argument to show that where enormous profits are made conscience has little voice. It must not be supposed that such men and companies, which are entirely international in their sentiments and therefore unconcerned as to what nations may fight, are necessarily desirous of war. Peace upon a militaristic basis is just as profitable as war and more enduring. Equipments soon become out of date. Ships have to be dismantled, and artillery grows archaic.

But the maker of war material is never out of employment as long as the spirit of preparedness prevails. It is not strange that great manufacturing plants like the Bethlehem Steel Company are glad to spend large sums of money in public protest to the American people against government manufacture of war material. The proofs that these companies have charged our government prices far in excess of those charged some of the European nations sufficiently account for their desire to keep such munition-making in private hands.

WHERE HAS THE MONEY GONE?

And while considering this question of war materials and their cost, one feels like asking why it is that after an expenditure during the past ten years of a sum for military and naval equipment considerably in excess of that which even Germany has contributed to the same items, the American people are confronted with the astonishing statement that we are pitiably unprepared for war? Making all due allowance for the higher cost of living and for our larger population, there is still an astonishing discrepancy between our outlay during the last decade and the results as they are now described by the alarmists. Where has this money gone, and what assurances can be offered that the enormous sums which eager advocates of preparedness are now demanding would be spent with greater economy or to a more efficient end?

The most useful ally of the advocate of a vastly increased military and naval establishment is the terrified citizen, who reads alarming statements in his favorite newspaper, or looks upon appalling pictures of his country devastated by foreign invaders, or who listens to eloquent pleas in behalf of an armed nation, and believes that these are sober representations of fact.

It is apparent that a very considerable company of the American people have been greatly alarmed by the wave of information, or misinformation, which has flooded the United States. But sober second thought will remedy much of this. When the remoteness of actual danger is considered, when it is understood that nothing less than heavy taxation and some form of conscription can furnish the means and the men for the kind of preparedness demanded, there will be a slow but steady return of the tide and better judgment will prevail.

The American people wish to be ready for real emergencies, but they have no desire to rush into huge and extravagant expenditures for the profit of the promoters of war, munition makers and money lenders, and at the menace of phantom dangers.

UNDERMINING THE FOUNDATIONS.

The most serious of all the charges against the present militaristic propaganda is that it is a deep and sinister attack upon the very foundations upon which the Republic rests. Those foundations were the belief in the prevalence and efficiency of national justice, sobriety and virtue as the greatest safeguards of national life. Militarism is an affront to the entire Christian sentiment of our age. It is the trust in guns and forts rather than in character. Preparation of a reasonable sort is wise and timely. One believes in a police force and a fire department, but no one believes in arming a city in fear of a fancied attack, nor of putting pistols in the pockets of the population because of the dangers which the street offers.

The present clamor for war preparation is an insult to twenty centuries of Christian teaching. Its advocates are practically saying to Jesus, who believed in the supremacy of good will and the preparedness of brotherhood: "Master, you are wrong. We like your words when they are read in church, but your ethics and your social teaching will not work when applied to modern life." It is this bald scepticism, this crude denial of the practicability of Christian teachings, this cynical unbelief in the progress of the world toward justice and humanity, that constitutes the most serious indictment of the present preparedness hysteria. It is a shameful plunge into the infamy of force.

WHAT IS AMERICA'S TASK?

It does not take much courage in these days to demand a great army and navy. It is the way of popularity. Much braver are the men who are protesting with all their power against an obsession which is attempting to lead our nation backward into the twilight of the brute forces from which we had begun to boast of being emancipated.

Away from this madness of militarism the faces of the lovers of righteousness must be set. The task of America is higher. She should be a teacher of morals to the world. She has the power to be the healer of the afflicted, as she has proved herself a thousand times. She ought to be the beautiful pioneer in the vanguard of the world's progress toward democracy and peace.

It is for every citizen of the Republic to choose on which side of this issue he chooses to stand.

Ministers and Militarism

By Simeon Strunsky.*

EIGHT-AND-EIGHTY clergymen of New York addressed a memorial on preparedness the other day to the editor of the "Times." Being preachers, they were careful to set out from a text. But being men with a firm grasp on realities, they did not take their text from what Jesus said on a mount in Galilee, or from what the son of Amos said on a mount in Zion, but from what the president of the New York Life Insurance Company said at a dinner of the New York Chamber of Commerce.

The Church has grown restless under the charge that in the matter of efficiency it cannot compare with any one of our model steam laundries, and it has recognized that if it is to make any show at all against the movies it must enter into the common life. That is why the leaders of the I. W. W. quote from the Sermon on the Mount, and members of the Central Federated Union quote from Isaiah, and speakers at the Wholesale Furniture Dealers' Convention quote from Epictetus and the ethics of Confucius; whereas ministers of the gospel are given to quoting from the Statistical Abstract for the year 1914, unless it happens that the pulpit is occupied by a representative of the Navy League.

It goes without saying that the memorial of the eighty-eight was a plea for adequate preparedness. Not that the signers were in favor of war as against peace; only in common with the president of the du Pont Powder Works, the directors of Bethlehem Steel, the publicity manager of the National Security League, and Senator Fall, of New Mexico, they believe in arming for peace, for righteousness, and for the brotherhood of man.

Looking forward to the time when the swords shall be beaten into ploughshares and the spears into pruning hooks, they advocate as large an available supply of swords and spears as possible in order that the final operation may be all the more dramatic. I am not misquoting: "If we arm and say to Europe that we are ready at any time to disarm!"—so spoke the president of the New York Life Insurance Company, and thereby gave fitter expression to the conscience of the Church than the eighty-eight signers of the memorial could find in any other authority on life insurance either in earth or in heaven.

"The opportunity of a thousand years," the Prime Minister of Japan is said to have called the present war. He was thinking of the advantages lying open to Japanese ambitions in China. Today holds the opportunity of a thousand years for a thousand different businesses and professions and interests and movements; except apparently for the only going concern which is more than a thousand years old—the Church.

There is opportunity for Japan to establish itself in China, and for the National City Bank to establish itself in South America, and for dyestuffs to establish themselves in America, and for woman to establish herself in economic equality; opportunity for an American merchant marine and for an independent India and for government ownership of railways and mines; opportunity for the chemists who are now experimenting to their heart's content regardless of cost; opportunity for the orthopedists all over Europe who have revolutionized the science and art of artificial legs and arms; opportunity for the surgeons and for the serum specialists; opportunity for the gasoline and motor specialists. Hardly a trade, a profession, an industry, a branch of commerce which does not find in the great woe of today the material and the impetus to expansion and triumph.

Except the Church. Distrustful of its mission, timid in its methods, eager to placate rather than to convert, to be accepted by the crowd rather than to draw the crowd to itself, it faces the opportunity of a thousand years, blind or afraid or both. The chemist has no lack of faith in his formulas; and he synthetizes cheerily in his laboratory in response to the outcry from the General Staffs for rubber, cotton, copper, saltpetre. But the Church has not sufficient faith in its formulas of peace to attempt a synthesis of world-brotherhood. The surgeons, out of the mangled fragments of the human body, are building up new bodies, new organs, new functions. But the Church will not take up the sorrows and pities and crimes and repentances and longings for escape from the nightmare of today, and try to mould them into a new world conscience.

When the war is over science and commerce and labor and social organizations will have their new programs and methods. But the Church apparently will be content with its present formula, so well summed up in the memorial of the eighty-eight: "believing that the decision as to what form our preparedness shall take may best be left to the responsible officers of our government and that the rest of us will best fulfil our duty as ministers by earnest prayer and spiritual counsel."

That is to say, when it is a question of shaping the destinies of the world towards the murderous competition of arms or towards peace, it is proper that the responsible officers of our government shall be influenced in their policies by the Tammany Hall organizations of the Twenty-first Assembly District, but the churches of Christ have no opinion to offer.

To be sure, the Church believes in peace, but as a practical organization it cannot venture into rash experiments. These it must relegate to speculative and pioneering organizations like the American Federation of Labor, the Socialist Party, the Chautauquas, the Granges, and the Suffrage Societies. The history of the struggle for world-brotherhood in the year 1916, when it comes to be written, will show the names of Liebknecht, William J. Bryan, Samuel Gompers, Bernard Shaw, and Christabel Pankhurst. Only one name which people will look for is likely to be missing.

A great opportunity, and a great refusal such as Dante would have punished severely. An error from the spiritual point of view and a very bad mistake from the point of view of business. For if the signers of the memorial were to consult the president of the New York Life Insurance Company, that experienced man of affairs would be the first to tell them what an extraordinary chance for investment they are overlooking, at a comparatively small risk and with enormous profits in sight. He could tell them that if it is safe for labor unions and farmers' associations and Socialist parties to stand up for world peace, the risk is not too great for the Church. He might even tell that a great many people who are too timid to speak up for peace would find it only natural for the Church to stand up to a task for which they as simple men are too weak. He might tell them that the Church would be in more numerous company by summoning to its side than by running after the crowd.

At any rate, he might warn them to think twice in the future before asking plaintively, "What is wrong with the Church?"

Union Churches

Federation of Scio, Oregon.

A successful federation of Baptists, Disciples and Presbyterians exists at Scio, Ore. The initiative in the movement was taken by a Presbyterian evangelist, who found the three congregations practically inactive in the midst of a community spiritually dead. A revival meeting of two or three weeks so quickened the religious life of the community that a mass meeting was called, the outcome of which was federation. A Disciple minister, Rev. H. B. Iler, was called as pastor. The present situation is satisfactory to all parties. Mr. Iler writes that religiously the people consider themselves as now "living on the hills where there is honey in the rocks," and that there is progress in all departments. The Sunday-school has an attendance of from 65 to 75, and there are frequent conversions.

This church has not cut itself off from the fellowship of other churches in good works. It has a Missionary Committee of six members, two from each denomination, who are responsible for the missionary offerings of the church, and who divide the offerings equally among the boards of the bodies represented in the federation.

Church Unity and Community Efficiency.

That there is an intimate relation between the denominational divisions of the church in rural communities and the social inefficiency of these communities is the testimony of Prof. Walter Burr, Director of the Rural Service Department of the Kansas State Agricultural College. In a recent letter to this department Mr. Burr says:

"Our department is not avowedly interested in the matter of bringing about union or the federation of churches. However, when we touch the rural situation in its relation to the church, we almost invariably discover that the divided condition of the Church is at the basis of much community inefficiency. Also I find that many of the people in the rural communities have definitely recognized this situation, and profess to be ready for some kind of church union. The consummation of such union proves not always such an easy matter when it comes to the decision as to what each faction will surrender. After considerable experience and observation in this field, I have come to the conclusion that church union or federation will not be brought about by eliminating differences, but rather by the people getting some grand new vision of a truth which will be to them so BIG that all differences will for the time being dwindle into insignificance. I believe that this vision will prove to be one of personal righteousness for the sake of community happiness as a means of approaching the Kingdom of God on earth."

The Minister's Wage Again

Attention is again drawn to the poor pay of ministers of this country by the recent desertion of one of their number in favor of the vaudeville stage. "I left the Congregational Church," says the Rev. Frank Walter Gorman, of Portland, Oregon, "because I felt that it was more honorable to work for an honest dollar singing in vaudeville to pay my debts than to sing psalms and dodge them."

The New York Times thus comments: "That this is sound ethics, and even sound religion, no one will dispute. Yet hundreds of poor ministers, in the same situation as the Rev. Mr. Gorman, are standing bravely by their posts in spite of the handicaps of which he complains. Their burden is great, but they feel, too, that their mission is high, and they would regard it a prostitution of their talents to turn from the earnest work of the Church to the spectacular role of the footlights. Mr. Gorman, perhaps realizing this, pleads that 'one reason for my taking this step is to focus the lime-light on the condition that makes it necessary.'

"The ministry is the most poorly paid profession in the United States. In the Congregational church, which may be taken as typical of the condition in other denominations, the average salary of preachers is under $800. 'Less than 2 per cent of the churches,' according to a recent statement of the Church Pension Congress, 'pay $3,000 and upward, more than half pay not over $1,000, and one-quarter pay not over $500.' For men who have prepared for their exacting duties by 'going through' college and a divinity school these are not alluring salaries. The average minister must wage a constant battle with poverty, nor can he look forward to a pension to take the place of his meager income when old age and infirmity come upon him. Until something is done to take the minister out of a position of humiliating dependence on charity, desertions from the Church to more lucrative professions may be expected to continue."

From a Possible Future President

FOR the banner over us is love; the motive that we cherish and illustrate is the motive of service; the gospel that we preach is the gospel for the whole world, which will never grow so old but it needs welcome the gospel of good will and brotherly kindness. Within the range of our activities is every soul that is hungry for a bit of gladness and sympathy, is every one that yearns for the touch of a true friend, is every community that yearns for honesty, that yearns for decency, is every one that can in his heart feel a true reliance that in the intense brotherly love and real capacity for mutual burden bearing is found the true significance of all that we prize in the government and the institutions of the United States.—Justice Charles E. Hughes.

CHILDREN'S DAY AND THE CHILD

CHILDREN'S Day for the sake of the heathen, we know about; but children's day for the sake of the child needs also to be understood. Everything the child does in the church and Sunday school fellowship is building up habits and ideals that will be powerful throughout later life. It may be convincing to talk about the thousands of dollars that the children gave last year, but it is far more significant to remember what this co-operation means to the church in the days to come.

The child is born into a narrow world and education is the task of bringing him into touch with every kind of reality. He grows out of his four walls and explores a front yard and perhaps runs away because of his intense desire to know what lies beyond. In religion, the garden gate has often been shut so the child never knew religion beyond the confines of a parish or a denomination. This child became the narrow-minded obstructionist of later years.

Children's Day is a special day in which the child is taught to look out on the big world from a religious viewpoint. The day which we use to emphasize the value of childhood in religion is also the day when we give the child a view of the great world field of humanity to whose service religion is consecrated.

It is not enough to instruct children. With every impression there must be corresponding expression. The Children's Day offering is to be justified from the viewpoint of religious education. Apart from what the money accomplishes in the big world—and that is important—there is the need that the child give expression to the interest that is begotten on Children's Day.

WHAT THE CONVENTIONS TEACH

MAY is the convention month of many of the great evangelical denominations of America. This year is one of special importance since the Methodist Episcopal church has its quadrennial conference at which questions of epoch-making importance are being considered.

The problems that are to the fore in these great gatherings are far different from those which engaged the attention of a previous generation. Only one deliberative body is engaged in any issue over doctrine, the Presbyterian. Here certain reactionary forces brought a heresy accusation against a whole presbytery; but this is after all a surface incident for that great denomination. The deeper currents are those which relate to a missionary policy that is outstanding for its wisdom, and to a social program which aims to reconcile the church with the alienated portion of our population.

The note of union is strong. There is demand for union within the denomination itself, as when the Baptists eliminated friction between two organizations engaged in home mission work. The broad spirit of the Methodist conference in meeting the plans for union with the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, is noteworthy and perhaps the most important religious event of the year.

Nor is there any plaintive note in these great organizations. The prophet who is always busy predicting the downfall of the church would find small comfort in these gatherings. The great evangelical bodies have grown. They are being entrusted with vaster sums of money than has ever been given them before. They are giving good account of their stewardship. They command the advice and sympathy of some of the greatest men of the country, who have visited these national gatherings to make addresses. The story of these meetings is one to give heart to the whole church of God.

PREPAREDNESS FOR CHRISTIAN WORK

WITH the wavering of battle lines each day, the new post-bellum period draws nearer. It is clear that when this time comes conditions will be changed in many important regards. Even now trade routes are being altered. Industries are being transferred from one country to another. The thought center of the world may soon be located in some new country.

Unless the church is alert, she will suffer much loss in this time of reconstruction. Constitutionally conservative as religion always is, it sometimes makes changes too late to secure advantage from them. There will be a need of change of method and even perhaps a change of message when the world struggle is ended.

The American church faces especially the problems of a greatly increased immigration. The causes of immigration are poverty, military conscription, and lack of religious liberty. Most of these causes will be more than ever operative when the war is ended. Unless immigration is restricted, there will be a tide of aliens flowing into this country at the close of the war which will eclipse every past record. The reason they are not coming now is that they cannot get here. This alien horde will challenge the best the church has.

There will also be need of a change of message. It is in time of peace that most can be done to make permanent the world's peace. The church will have a unique opportunity to point out the folly of war and the blessings of peace. The world has in the past placed its trust for peace in many things which have proven disappointing. Commercial self-interest, armaments, treaties, alliances have all proved impotent.

The final peace of the world will rest upon a sense of brotherhood. This the church alone is able to create and maintain.

THE CHURCH AND PLAY

IN THE minutes of the Methodist Conference of 1796 there is a long list of rules for students in Methodist institutions and at the close is the general direction: "The students shall be indulged with nothing which the world calls play. Let this rule be observed with strictest nicety; for those who play when they are young will play when they are old."

Something like this was the attitude of many Christian communions in that period. Now the Christian college has gymnasiums, football, baseball and many other popular forms of recreation.

A change has come in the church's attitude toward play. In this twentieth century, the church building itself, like the Disciples' church at Danville, Ind., may use much of its roof to cover a gymnasium. The old-time attitude that play in itself is wrong has yielded to the healthier view that to deprive a child of play is sinful, and that even the adult ought to find time for play.

The church in handling the social problems of its young people has opportunity to show discrimination in amusement. The young people of the cities often spend evenings in theaters of low grade, in dance halls of questionable repute and in other places hurtful to their young life. Play is educative when it is good play, and the church that is concerned with human life will take into account the standards and ideals of amusement.

CHRISTIAN LAYMAN PRODS THE MAYOR

WHEN Mr. E. J. Davis asked Chicago's mayor to accompany him on a Sunday visit to saloons that were open in defiance of the law, he showed up that portly gentleman as a sham reformer. His honor, William Hale Thompson, has received much credit for closing the city's saloons on Sunday, after they had been open in defiance of law for half a century. Some skeptical minds charged at the time that the mayor was more interested in a threatened indictment directed against him than in any notions of cleaning up the city.

Mr. Davis and his helpers in the Anti-Saloon League have recently been finding a good many saloons open on Sunday. On May 21, he called on the mayor to inform him of these saloons in operation. His excellency was not to be found. Then he called on the chief of police and found him lukewarm. Mr. Davis is now being interpreted by the mayor to the city as a secret friend of distillers and brewers. This Christian man, with a long record of service in the Englewood Christian church as elder and leader, can afford to have this ridiculous charge made against him.

In a general way, the conditions in Chicago have gone backward under the present administration. Vice grows more confident. The administration attitude in most of the labor struggles has been so noticeably in favor of the employers as to be a source of irritation and trouble. What Chicago needs is neither a "political" administration, nor a "business" administration, but a government that shall be at once moral, efficient and democratic.

MAYOR ANTAGONIZES HIS OWN CHURCH

MAYOR Mitchell of New York is now engaged in acrimonious controversy with some of the high dignitaries of the Roman Catholic church of his city. A city commission appointed by the mayor to investigate the institutions for public welfare brought in an unfavorable report on certain Roman Catholic institutions. Instead of profiting by his criticism, the Catholic leaders tried to have the report whitewashed. In this they have signally failed.

Roman Catholics have done far more in the way of philanthropy than have Protestants. While a new social movement in Protestantism is moving evangelical churches to many new enterprises, the Catholics have for centuries conducted hospitals, cared for orphans and the aged. This service is an honorable one, but the methods used are in sorry need of revision from the viewpoint of the new science of sociology.

The criticism of Roman Catholic institutions has proceeded in large measure from within the church. The Poles of America have been vigorously protesting the work of the parochial schools. In many cities the homes for erring girls conducted by the Catholic church have come in especially for investigation and criticism. No right-minded man could wish the Roman Catholics to do less in the way of human service, but certainly the community will never allow any church to conduct institutions that are not open to public inspection and that are not being operated upon a modern basis. Mayor Mitchell has everything to lose and little to gain in his contest with ecclesiastics. His stand entitles him to the respect of good citizens everywhere.

CHURCH RECOGNIZES NEW CONDITIONS

THE church at Hannibal, Mo., recently raised the salary of its pastor, Rev. George A. Campbell, seven hundred dollars. An event of this sort is usually the occasion for congratulations to both pastor and people.

By some, however, this will seem the lavish giving of a big church that does not know what to do with its money; it is in fact the recognition by a congregation of its obligations in the face of new conditions.

In the last ten years many of the staple articles of living have doubled in price. This change of economic conditions has occasioned advances in many kinds of labor. Carpenters in many cities are receiving twice the wage they did ten years ago. It is a sad truth that in many communities they are now better paid than the Protestant clergy, though the clergy have much greater expense in meeting the public demands made upon them. Some day it will be recognized that it is just as iniquitous to hire a minister for less than he needs for a living as it is to hire an ironmoulder or someone else on an unfair basis.

In every great city there are a few ministers with large salaries—though not often with a salary that does more than meet the man's increased social responsibilities. In the same cities are many ministers on low salary. It will be seen, by a glance at the year-books, that the men who stay on their jobs are the men who are free to do their work without economic worry. Churches which pay living salaries find like all employers of labor that it actually pays to be just.

RECONSTRUCTION IN THE SUMMER

THE churches are quite conscious of the people who move out of the parish in the summer, but they are too little conscious of those who move in. There are the people who come to town to visit old friends, sometimes for several weeks. There are the many thousands of students returning from the universities and colleges.

These and many other facts should teach the church during the summer to look to these newcomers as a force to be organized and utilized in Christian service.

Lord, forgive us! Still we fling
All aside Thy offering;
Still we thwart Thy righteous plan,
And assail our fellow man;
Still we raise our bloody hands
And oppose Thy just commands;
Still Thy counsels we deny,
And Thy Christ we crucify.
Lord, forgive us! Lord, forgive!
Let earth's recreant nations live!
Still withhold Thy avenging sword;
Still we crave Thy mercy, Lord!
Still we ask for clearer ken,
And that soon may reign again
"On earth peace, good will toward men."

The Larger Christian World

A DEPARTMENT OF INTERDENOMINATIONAL ACQUAINTANCE :: By Orvis F. Jordan

Honor Sermon Editor.

The Brooklyn Eagle, of New York, is well known for its Monday edition containing the sermons of the leading clergy of the city. The editor of this feature for the past twenty-five years has been Colonel F. P. Sellers. To mark the quarter of a century service, a dinner was given in his honor by newspaper men and the clergy.

Dr. Grenfell Visits Boston.

Dr. Wilfred T. Grenfell visited Boston recently and when not visiting hospitals, he was in demand as a speaker before various organizations. He spoke for two hours before a large audience in Huntington Hall and told of the sanitary conditions in the army life of Europe . Dr. Grenfell thinks that a great many men in the army have been physically benefitted, in spite of the dead bodies of men and horses to pollute the air. Those that were stoop-shouldered have been taught to stand up and the open air life has taken away the anaemic condition of others. Dr. Grenfell told of many cases of German frightfulness that he had personally come in contact with.

Death of Well-Known Clergyman.

The death of Dr. Nancy McGee Waters, pastor of the Tompkins Avenue Congregational church, of Brooklyn, removed the pastor of the largest Congregational church in this country. He suffered a broken hip this spring and following this accident, pleurisy and heart failure ended his career. He was widely known through his Chautauqua service and in other ways.

Dr. Carroll Gives Price of Converts.

According to the statistics furnished by Dr. H. K. Carroll the home expenses of the Baptist denomination are $221.97 for each net increase of one in their membership; the Presbyterians spend $514.95; the Methodists, $328.08; the Episcopalians, $818.09 and the Congregationalists, $1,587.78. There are some other things accomplished with this money besides making converts, however, and there is some difference in the quality of the new members, say those who reply to deductions drawn from these figures.

Open Forum Council Meets.

The third annual gathering of the Open Forum Council met in Calvary Presbyterian church, Buffalo, May 7-9. Mr. George W. Coleman is father of the modern forum movement. It is an effort to bring together the church and the humanitarian idealists. Churches operating the forum on a Sunday evening throw the meeting open after a lecture for popular discussion of the thesis. The fourth annual convention of the movement will be held in Chicago next year. The Buffalo meeting brought together about seventy-five representative people from all parts of the country, among whom were Jews, Catholics and Protestants as well as some who are still outside the pale of organized Christianity. When the sessions came to a close they all united in the Mizpah benediction.

Christian Union in Giving.

The secular press has been much impressed by the act of Mrs. D. Willis James in leaving large sums of money for the aged ministers of three denominations. Herself a loyal Presbyterian, she gave by will $750,000 to each of three boards, Presbyterian, Methodist and Congregational respectively. These royal gifts will help the denominations named far on the road to the goal they have set for endowing the support of their aged ministers.

Methodist Union Nearer.

So far as this present General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal church could act, Methodist reunion has been brought forward to realization. A commission is appointed to confer on details with the Methodist church, South. This commission has power to convene the General Conference two years hence.

Imperial University will Study Christianity.

It is reported that the Imperial University of Japan will shortly put into its curriculum a course of study on Christianity. Baron Morimura, a Christian prominent in the empire is said to be behind the movement and is arranging to finance it. Wanda University has a Baptist missionary giving instruction in the Hebrew literature. These are but a few of the evidences of an increasing friendliness toward Christianity.

Centenary of Wittenberg Theses.

On October 31, 1517, Dr. Martin Luther nailed up the theses on the door of the church at Wittenberg which became the starting point of the Protestant reformation. This historic event will be remembered next year and five Lutheran bodies have already formed plans for a proper celebration of the centennial. The Lutherans express the hope that no animosities born of the present war may prevent America from doing the great reformer justice.

Virgin Birth an Issue With Presbyterians.

The Cincinnati Presbytery of the northern branch of Presbyterianism has made an overture to the General Assembly to have the whole New York Presbytery thrown out of the church for alleged heresy. Three young men were ordained this spring who are said to be weak in their attitude toward the doctrine of the Virgin Birth. These young men drew up and signed a statement of their beliefs. The statement is:

The essential religious conviction which I understand the Christian Church to have asserted in the doctrine of the Virgin Birth is a conviction which I hold with all my mind and heart, and which I desire joyously to preach to others, viz., that throughout his entire existence Jesus Christ was in the most intimate, vital relation with God the Father. His whole career was one of stainless purity and of utmost sacredness. I revere Jesus Christ because he has been to me the most complete manifestation in human history of the perfect character of God. I can account for him only on the basis of his having been continually in the power of God.

More specifically with regard to the doctrine of the Virgin Birth: the evidence in the New Testament is, at best, relatively slight. I recognize that there are many Christians who hold as precious the view that Jesus had no earthly father. That sentiment is unassailable, inasmuch as no person now can prove that Jesus did have a human father. On the other hand, I recognize that there are many Christians, not lacking in piety or intelligence, to whom the view is not acceptable. I see that the earliest and simplest Gospel, viz., the Gospel according to Mark, makes not the slightest reference to the matter. I see that the latest, the most profound, the most speculative of the four New Testament biographies of Jesus, viz., the Gospel according to John, similiarly makes not the slightest reference to the manner of the birth of Jesus. Peter, who perhaps first discerned the Messiahship of Jesus, and who is regarded by many Christians as the official head in the foundation of the Christian Church, makes not the slightest reference to the birth of Jesus. Paul, the most active missionary leader of the early Christian Church, and the most extensive expositor of Christian doctrine within the New Testament says not a word in favor of the Virgin Birth.

Consequently what two of the four Gospels omit, I cannot hold as essential. What Peter and Paul and the beloved disciple John never referred to, I cannot hold as essential. What our Lord himself never referred to, I certainly cannot hold as essential. In all my thinking and in all my Christian ministry I must keep this subject in the same proportion as does the New Testament itself.

Frankly, I do not know what happened at the beginning of the formation of the body of Jesus, and I do not feel disposed to speculate. But this I do know, viz., that far more important than physiological processes are the life and character and influence of Jesus. These facts are for me a constant, even an increasing, wonder and inspiration. Jesus is the highest that I know in human life. The theory that he had no earthly father does not make him for me any more adorable, and the denial of that theory does not lessen for me his absolute supremacy above all the sons of men. However he began to be, Jesus is for me the unique Son of God, my Lord and Master.

Lesson for June 18.
THE PHILIPPIAN JAILOR.

Golden Text: Believe on the Lord Jesus, and thou shalt be saved, thou and thy house. Acts 16:31.

Lesson Acts 16:16-40: verses 19-34 printed.

Memorize verses 33, 34.

(19) But when her masters saw that the hope of their gain was gone, they laid hold on Paul and Silas, and dragged them into the marketplace before the rulers, (20) and when they had brought them unto the magistrates, they said, These men, being Jews, do exceedingly trouble our city, (21) and set forth customs which it is not lawful for us to receive, or to observe, being Romans. (22) And the multitude rose up together against them: and the magistrates rent their garments off them, and commanded to beat them with rods. (23) And when they had laid many stripes upon them, they cast them into prison, charging the jailor to keep them safely: (24) who, having received such a charge, cast them into the inner prison, and made their feet fast in the stocks. (25) But about midnight Paul and Silas were praying and singing hymns unto God, and the prisoners were listening to them; (26) and suddenly there was a great earthquake, so that the foundations of the prison-house were shaken: and immediately all the doors were opened; and every one's bands were loosed. (27) And the jailor, being roused out of sleep and seeing the prison doors open, drew his sword and was about to kill himself, supposing that the prisoners had escaped. (28) But Paul cried with a loud voice, saying, Do thyself no harm: for we are all here. (29) And he called for lights and sprang in, and, trembling for fear, fell down before Paul and Silas, (30) and brought them out and said, Sirs, what must I do to be saved? (31) And they said, Believe on the Lord Jesus, and thou shalt be saved, thou and thy house. (32) And they spake the word of the Lord unto him, with all that were in his house. (33) And he took them the same hour of the night, and washed their stripes; and was baptized, he and all his, immediately. (34) And he brought them up into his house, and set food before them, and rejoiced greatly, with all his house, having believed in God.

VERSE BY VERSE.

19. Her masters. There seems to have been joint proprietorship in these unhappy ministries to public superstition. Read also vs. 16-18.—The hope of their gain was gone. The opposition came from the low motive of profit. Just as soon as business was damaged the teaching was wrong.—Into the market place before the rulers. The agora or forum, where business was done, social life centered, and the magistrates administered justice.

20. Unto the magistrates. There were two chief magistrates in every Roman colony.—Being Jews. The Romans held the Jews in great contempt.—Do exceedingly trouble our city. The trouble was not in the city, but the pocketbook.

21. Which it is not lawful for us to receive. The Jewish religion was permitted. These men were preaching other things.—Being Romans. This in proud contrast to the "being Jews" in v. 20.

22. The multitude rose up. An appeal to race prejudice is most likely to create a mob.—The magistrates rent their garments off them. The Greek word indicates that Paul and Silas were stripped, not just their backs bared for the rod. No chance given to plead Roman citizenship.

23. They had laid many stripes upon them. The professional scourgers were called Lictors, and their rods consisted of a number of small rods bound together.—Cast them into prison. Possibly for further trial.—Keep them safely. This charge the jailor interpreted to mean more punishment.

24. The inner prison. The dark cavern-like cell below the ground floor of the prison.—Their feet fast in the stocks. Consisted of two planks with depressions for the ankles; the upper was lifted and the prisoner's ankles put across, then it was fastened down.

25. About midnight. It seems from Acts 20:7 that this hour was not unusual and this may have been the usual devotions.—Praying and singing hymns. This may have been one act such as the singing of Psalms as a prayer.—The prisoners were listening to them. No wonder the prisoners listened, for they had not been accustomed to praise in the house of pain. Oaths but not prayers were familiar.

26. A great earthquake. The place and the time were noted for violent earthquakes (Prof. Lindsay.)—Doors were opened. The quake caused the fastenings to become loose.—Bands. These crude fastenings could easily be loosed by the earthquake.

27. The jailor. He was probably a centurion.—Was about to kill himself. Knowing that he must suffer death for the escape of his prisoners. The same death as of the prisoners who escaped.

28. Paul cried with a loud voice. Paul may have heard the cries of the jailor.—Do thyself no harm. These words of kindly interest must have sounded strange to the jailor. They show what the spirit of Jesus can do for one in trial.

29. He called for lights. He called for more than one light so as to be able to see everywhere. See the damage and the prisoners.—Fell down before Paul and Silas He saw in the earthquake the power of God and in the men the messengers of God.

30. What must I do to be saved? The jailor remembered that these men had been preaching salvation in the name of God. He wanted to make their God his God.

31. Believe on the Lord Jesus. Paul's reply called the jailor's attention to the source of salvation.—Thy house. Thy house through his influence.

32. Spake the word of the Lord. These were words answering the questions about salvation that were in the jailor's mind.

33. Washed their stripes. He washed the blood from their bodies. Sought to make them more comfortable.—And was baptized. At a place suited for the rite. It was common for houses to have such places.

34. Into his house. It may have been above the court of the prison.—Rejoiced greatly. He does just as every one will do when he obeys the best within him.

Motives to Religion

BY ASA McDANIEL.

An earthquake is shaky foundation for a religious resolution. It worked well in the case of the jailor. He came into the kingdom moved by fear. It may be a question as to just how much of this feeling should be used in forming religious conviction, but most of us are willing to give it a place. As the individual grows older he becomes wiser and fear is less and less needed for the formation of religious conviction. He places his religious life on a higher plane. When the great hopes and promises of the gospel fill and move our hearts we have no need of fear. If the love of God, like the summer's atmosphere full of sweet odors, should enfold our spirits in its warm embrace, the feeling of fear would be like the blasts of winter on the sensitive soul. Does gratitude stir our hearts so that to lay our powers and possibilities at his feet is only a grateful and easy task? Then away with fear! But if none of these higher motives control, then as we love our highest life we ought not to allay our fears in any other way than by seeking the grace of God to save us from the danger which occasions fear.

All life is emotional. The emotion of fear is not the only emotion taking possession of the jailor. Confused and tumultuous feelings rushed and crowded in upon him. They were emotions which he did not stop to analyze or question, and which he could not control. If this seems to any one the commitment of life to the emotions, let him remember that irreligious experience has its controlling emotion also. The publican who smote upon his breast was an emotional man, no doubt, but he was not any more under the power of emotion in his penitence and humility than the Pharisee was emotional in the self-complacency which prompted his useless prayer. There was at least this difference: The Pharisee's emotion was narrower and meaner, an emotion occasioned by the thought of self, while the publican's emotion grew out of the thought of God. The religion which God honors and uses is one which not only convinces the intellect but which mightily sways the heart. The religious heart that never sings or weeps has not climbed the mountain of Christian experience where the atmosphere is clear and fragrant with the presence of the Holy God.

In these last days when our habits of thought are evolutionary, we are in danger of losing these finer emotions. We look upon character as a slow and steady growth, the result of education and training, and forget that these are full of emotion of the nobler sort. The character of today grows out of the experience of yesterday, and tomorrow grows out of today. Let us cultivate these holy emotions by increasing our knowledge of God the Father through Jesus our divine Lord and Brother.

Disciples Table Talk

Summer School of Religious Education at Canton, Mo.

The second session of the Summer School of Religious Education at Canton, Mo., will be held this year as last at Canton-on-the Mississippi, June 20 to July 4. This is not a state nor district assembly, but is offered to all on equal terms, and possesses equal significance to all in subject matter presented, writes Chas. A. Lockhart, the secretary. Lectures will be given on Old and New Testament teachings, religious pedagogy and psychology, organization and equipment of the church school, and Christian sociology and ethics. These subjects will be treated by college teachers and specialists. The faculty for the two weeks' session will consist of such men as J. P. Rowlison, Dr. H. B. Robison, Prof. H. M. Garn, Prof. A. W. Taylor, and Chas. A. Lockhart. The tuition for the entire period will be five dollars, and the splendid dormitories of Christian University will be thrown open for the entertainment of students while there. Much less than the average rates for board and room will be charged. The entire cost of transportation and entertainment should be less than twenty dollars for the two weeks of the school. The sessions will be held in the college building, which is in the center of a campus of twenty acres, a hundred feet above the city and river. The Summer Normal School will be in session, and the North-East Missouri Ministerial Retreat will be held the last week of the school. Many ministers will avail themselves of the advantages of the entire period, and young people can profit by the lectures between sessions of the teacher's course. A hearty welcome is awaiting everyone who wishes to combine pleasure and profit in a short vacation and inspirational religious study.

A Remarkable Bible Class in Litchfield, Ill.

It is a remarkable class taught by E. M. Austin, at Union Ave. church, Litchfield, Ill. The Loyal Sons' Class, with an attendance of from 75 to 150 young men, has won almost a nation-wide reputation. Over a hundred persons from a half dozen states visited the class last year to study its methods. A great service and a large attendance were reported on Mothers' day. A remarkable fact about this class is that it draws its attendance from five different towns, and the daily papers of Litchfield, Hillsboro, and Montgomery gave half-page reports of the great Mothers' day service. E. M. Austin, father of the late Paul Austin, of the "Paul Austin Church Extension Memorial," deserves great credit for his remarkable work in the difficult field of youth.

Men and Millions Leaders Win Success in Hoosierdom.

One who was close to the work of the Men and Millions leaders, in their campaign in Indianapolis and environs, reports their work as follows: "From the first day of the preliminary meetings it was evident that Indianapolis and Central Indiana were stirred profoundly by the spirit of prayer that pervaded the whole movement. The emphasis was upon the life appeal. One of the greatest meetings of this kind was held at the Downey Avenue church. This was followed by a great meeting at the Butler College chapel. The entire team participated. For two hours the men and women of the team held the students in close attention to the appeals of the several fields. Then the life work cards were signed. One hundred and forty of the Butler young people promised on these cards to study seriously the life work and decide it in the interest of the Kingdom of God. The young people represented many denominations, and will strengthen by their consideration the work of many religious bodies. The movement brought together pledges for a large sum of money, but in the language of one of the pastors, it left us richer than it found us. The benediction will rest upon us for many years."

Myron C. Settle Reports Work of Gary Religious Day School.

Myron C. Settle completes his second year's work as director of the Religious Day school, in Gary this month Two years have given time to work out some experiments. The work as a whole is very encouraging. It is thought now that there is very little reason why this same work cannot be carried on in most any community where the churches and public schools can get together. A brief statement prepared by Mr. Settle follows: "Enrollments—Central church, 93; Glen Park, 80; Tolleston (not in session this year). The attendance has been most satisfactory. I see no diminution in the interest on the part of the children. It is just as good as it was at the beginning, and this in spite of the fact that the boys and girls are coming on their play ground time this year. The parents who all along have supported the school continue to give hearty co-operation, especially in enforcing some few indifferent ones to attend regularly. We have found, to my satisfaction at least: 1. That children can be interested in weekday religious instruction. 2. That parents can be so interested. 3. That a week-day school of religion is feasible.'

Myron C. Settle, who has proved that "a week-day school of religion is feasible."

Money Needed for New Alaska Missionary.

The money which makes possible the sending of Harry C. Munro to Alaska next month is supplied by R. A. Long, reports R. M. Hopkins. He will pay his salary this year and necessary expense of travel. Mr. Munro will need immediately upon his arrival a lot on which to build the first building. The money for this is expected to be supplied by the Bible schools. An Alaska Equipment Fund of not less than One Thousand Dollars is needed to purchase lots in Seward and perhaps Anchorage. One hundred organized classes are asked to give ten dollars each to this Fund. Tulsa, Okla., had the first chance at this, writes Mr. Hopkins, and seven classes responded in less than seven minutes. "Who will be the next?" he asks. This is a special fund called for this year only and it should all be in hand by July 1. Send pledges or cash marked "Alaska Equipment Fund," to Robt. M. Hopkins, Bible School Secretary, American Christian Missionary Society, Carew Building, Cincinnati, Ohio.

Special Campaign Closes at Lima, O., Central.

A campaign of ten specialized Sundays has just closed at Central church, Lima, O., with a big home-coming day. At least 16,000 people were at the various services. There were good sized delegations from the churches of the county and many former members came from abroad. The following ministers were present and made addresses: W. A. Brundige, Bluffton; Charles J. Richards, Lancaster, W. D. Fletcher, Vaughnsville, all of Ohio; George W. Watson, La Fayette, Indiana, and Prof. Errett Gates, Chicago Ill. A fellowship dinner was served at the noon hour. A. B. Houze, pastor at Central, was master of ceremonies. He writes that he believes that this special campaign has resulted in more lasting good to the church than could come from the average high pressure evangelistic meeting.

J. C. Todd Reports Progress of the Indiana University Bible Chair.

On the first of April the Bible Chair at Bloomington, Ind., began its sixth year. W. S. Rounds opened the work April 1, 1911. It had had a corporate existence since October 1, 1910. Two forms of work have been attempted, personal and class work. In addition to this much field work has been done, writes J. C. Todd, who is in charge of the Bible Chair. "For two years of the five," Mr. Todd further reports, "no class work was attempted, so we have had three years of class work, five years of personal work, five of extension work and five of financial work. In this time over one hundred students have been given systematic class room Bible study work, many hundreds have been touched in personal interviews, and the effectiveness of this type of work clearly proven. Two hundred and fifty churches have been visited and spoken in by the Bible Chair representative, and over six hundred addresses delivered on Christian Education, Christian Stewardship, Missionary Vision, and Life Consecration. More than two thousand personal interviews have been held with members of the church over Indiana relative to their support of the work and concerning the Christian's attitude toward wealth. More than $50,000 has been secured in cash, notes, property and pledges for the Maintenance Fund and Permanent Fund. The Bible Chair now has assets valued from $35,000 to $40,000, the variation depending on the valuation placed upon two properties in Bloomington, and a farm in Hancock County. There is an indebtedness on the Permament Fund of $4,000 and against the Maintenance Fund of $1,000. Part of the indebtedness on the Maintenance Fund is due to transferring funds from the Maintenance Fund to the Permanent Fund for the purpose of purchasing the present Bible Chair Hall across the street from where the old hall burned. The work of the five years represents large results considering the limited force at work, the money condition of the country during our period of existence, and the perplexing problems due to the pioneer nature of our work. We rejoice in seven young men committed to the ministry, three this year, several to the mission field, and many young lives consecrated definitely to real service for the Kingdom of Jesus Christ wherever their lot may fall."

Third District, Missouri, Meets at Eldorado Springs.

A P. Cameron, recording secretary, reports a most successful convention of Third District, Missouri. For the C. W. B. M. period C. C. Garrigues and Mrs. O. W. Lawrence were the chief speakers. The discussion of the work of the district took up most of the time. F. L. Moffett, Newton Bundy, W. J. Lhamon. Chas. H. Swift, James Miller, D. W. Moore, J. Will Walters, and others had part on the program. The work of the young people was represented by Frank Lowe, Jr., of Kansas City, National Field Secretary, and he brought a great message, Mr. Cameron reports. The work of Religious Education occupied the last afternoon of the program. The speakers were C. C. Garrigues, James Miller, Newton Bundy, A. P. Cameron and W. J. Lhamon. The convention closed with a Christian Endeavor banquet. The speakers were R. W. Hoffman, of Springfield; A. T. Mahanay, Richland, and R. W. Funderburk, of Nevada. Next year the convention will be held in Joplin and will meet with South church. The newly-elected officers of the district are as follows: F. L. Moffett, Springfield, president; C. C. Garrigues, Joplin, vice-president; T. J. Moore, Springfield, secretary and treasurer; D. W. Moore, Carthage, and A. P. Cameron, Bolivar, members of board at large. The convention unanimously endorsed J. H. Jones again for District Superintendent of Missions of the district. It is due to his efforts, writes Mr. Cameron that the convention was a success. He has been sick for several months, but in spite of that fact has cared for his work.

—J. Kelly Pool, president of the Missouri Press Association, and a candidate for Missouri's secretary of state, is teacher of a large Bible-class in Jefferson City. This organization is said to be one of the largest and strongest in the state.

—T. L. Lowe, of Columbus, O., preached the convention sermon at the recent Ohio state meeting, held at Mt. Vernon.

—E. T. Cornelius and his congregation at Princeton, Mo., have just completed a new $25,000 church home. Mr. Cornelius reports an increased membership—from 180 to 386—since he began work at Princeton. He was formerly pastor at Freeport, Ill.

—The church building at Streator, Ill., is soon to be rededicated, Charles D. Hougham, of Normal, Ill., being in charge of the exercises.

—The new church home of Central, Peoria, Ill., H. E. Sala, pastor, represents an expenditure of $61,000. It has been announced by the pastor that there will be no call for money on dedication day. Evangelistic services are now being conducted at Central, Mr. Sala preaching and William Leigh singing.

NEW YORK

A Church Home for You. Write Dr. Finis Idleman, 142 West 81st St., N. Y.

—One of the most interested attendants at the recent Danville, Ind., convention was Mrs. Ira J. Chase, the widow of the former Disciple pastor and Governor of Indiana. Mrs. Chase is over eighty years old, and lives with her daughter, Mrs. Horace Murphy, at Muncie, Ind. Mrs. Chase, although confined to a wheel chair, was the first to register at the convention and did not miss a session.

—George W. Brown, a Disciple Bible-school leader, as well as public school executive, whose worth is well known at Paris, Ill., where for several years he was one of the most useful of citizens and church workers, will go next year to the State Normal of Nebraska, located at Peru. Mr. Brown will take charge of the Department of Country Life and Rural Education. During the past year he has served as superintendent of schools at Pana, Ill.

—Northwest district, Indiana, has been divided, and S. R. Hawkins has been placed over the second section as evangelist. Mr. Hawkins has been pastor for some time at Oxford, Ind.

—The Oklahoma Disciples at the recent convention appointed a committee of ten members to bring the 1917 national convention of the brotherhood to Oklahoma City. The state's governor, the mayor of Oklahoma City and other leaders have promised to help win the meeting for Oklahoma.

—J. R. Perkins, pastor at First church, Sioux City, Ia., delivered five special addresses during the last two weeks of May. Four of these were addresses before high schools, and the fifth a memorial day speech. One of the commencement addresses was given at Council Bluffs, Ia.

—That Claude E. Hill, new pastor at First church, Chattanooga, Tenn., has made a good impression in the city, is evidenced by the following statement of a Chattanooga daily, made in reporting Mr. Hill's first service in the field: "The First Christian Church congregation which filled the church Sunday was more than pleased with both the personality and address of the new pastor."

—The stockholders of Bethany Assembly met at Indianapolis, on June 1, to consider a lease that has been prepared by the Board of Directors under legal supervision, the same to be issued to a stock company, for the purpose of erecting a $50,000 hotel and sanitarium on the crest of the hill overlooking the lake. The friends of Bethany Assembly will rejoice in this forward step that will make Bethany one of the most attractive places in the country. Other improvements are already under way that will add to the beauty of the Park and the comfort of the guests.

—The Endeavor Society at Elsberry, Mo., deserves special mention because of its abiding interest in the Orphanage at Damoh, India. These young people have supported one of the boys since the very beginning of the orphanage. Hiralal is the name of the boy cared for at the present time.

—At the close of a recent Sunday morning session at First church, Hutchinson, Kan., six young people of the congregation—three young men and three young women—came forward and volunteered as life recruits for the ministry and mission fields.

New Mexico-West Texas Convention

The annual convention of the New Mexico-West Texas Christian Missionary Society, marking the end of the ninth year of our co-operative work in this territory, was held at Albuquerque, May 15 to 18, inclusive. The attendance was not large owing to the fact that while Albuquerque is centrally located in New Mexico it is not centrally located for our churches and the distances are very great. The people who attended, however, were those most vitally interested in our work, and in program and spirit, if not in numbers, the convention was a big one.

The past year has been marked by steady progress in practically all of our missions. Two splendid church buildings, one at Albuquerque and one at Clovis, have been erected, placing these two missions in a position to become self-sustaining in a very short while. At Raton, where our cause has been seriously hindered and handicapped by division and debt for a number of years, we are happy to say the differences have all been adjusted and the various bodies, organized as churches at one time or another, have come together and are worshiping harmoniously and happily in the building that was erected a number of years ago. The church at East Las Vegas has practically cleared itself from debt on its property and looks forward to a new and better building in a not distant future. During the year 356 people have been added to our mission churches, and the independent self-sustaining churches have all had encouraging growth. The church at Pecos has joined our New Mexico-West Texas group and is lending itself in a very helpful way to our co-operative work. This church supports a missionary in its own and adjoining counties and assists also in supporting a missionary in Eddy County, New Mexico.

We are pleased to report that during the past year our missionary force remained intact to an unusual degree. All of the missionaries, with the exception of two, who were present at the 1915 convention remained on the field throughout the year, and one of the two who left remained for eleven months of the year. This fact is one of the most significant we have to record. During the year the Rocky Mountain District was created and C. W. Dean, of Denver, was appointed as Missionary Superintendent. This district includes our territory, and Mr. Dean has lent valuable assistance to our work since his appointment.

The convention program was well conceived and carried out with a high degree of effectiveness. Grant K. Lewis, representing the A. C. M. S., Otis Hawkins, representing the National Benevolent Association and Miss Bertha Lacock, representing the C. W. B. M., graced the platform and presented messages with telling effect. The Albuquerque church, with Randolph Cook as pastor, performed the part of host in a most admirable manner. The convention took action toward some work among the Spanish-speaking people who reside within our territory in large numbers. Anticipating the ability of several of our missions to become self-supporting we made some plans also looking toward the better support of some of our missions that have in the past been quite sadly neglected. We are hoping that one or two churches will undertake the support of county evangelists, especially in counties where we now have a number of small missions.

The officers in charge of the work were re-elected, and the various missionaries went back to their several fields in high spirit. Clovis was selected as the place for the next annual convention.

Perry J. Rice,
President of the Board.

—In consideration of the value of paper today, over a hundred families of Osawatomie, Kan., church are saving all the paper that comes their way; this will be sold for the benefit of the church fund.

—P. J. Rice, of First church, El Paso, Tex, presided at the first session of the New Mexico state convention which met at Albuquerque.

—The Phillips University Bulletin, published at Phillips University, Enid, Okla., came out recently in the form of a "Zollars Memorial Number," in memory of the late E. V. Zollars, at one time president of the institution.

—A brotherhood has been organized at Owosso, Mich., church, with about fifty men enrolled. J. Frank Green is acting pastor at Owosso.

—H. Clay Trusty, of Seventh church, Indianapolis, presided at the Ministers' banquet at the Indiana convention; 300 persons were present.

—At First church, Bloomington, Ill., about seventy workers undertook the every member canvass and made about a thousand calls; the annual pledges were largely increased by their work. Edgar D. Jones, pastor at First, reports great enthusiasm over this "epoch-making event" in the history of the church.

—The church at Decatur, Ind., reports itself out of debt, with sufficient money on hand to care for some needed improvements. A new pastor has come to this church, Rev. Mr. Mavity, of Marion, Ind.

—The new management of Juliette Fowler Home for Orphans and the Sarah Harwood Home for the Aged, located in Texas, is planning to erect a large addition to the orphanage in order to take care of double the number of children now in the home.

—"The Christian News" is the name of a little paper that has been started by F. Lewis Starbuck, pastor of Howett street church, Peoria, in the interest of that church and of the Proctor Recreation Center and other institutions in that section of the city.

—The congregation at Downey Avenue church, Indianapolis, gave a reception to its pastor and his wife, Mr. and Mrs. C. H. Winders, who have been celebrating their silver wedding anniversary. An inscribed silver serving tray was presented by the congregation to their much-appreciated leaders.

—There were 350 present at the Bethany Assembly Banquet at the state convention at Danville on May 17, and 14 addresses were made covering the great features of the program and the mission of the Assembly together with its plans for the future.

—First church, Norfolk, Va., has organized a War-Sufferers' Relief Club. The women of the church and community are meeting regularly to provide clothes for victims of the war. The last few weeks brought 34 new members into First church, reports the pastor, Charles M. Watson.

—A school for the training of pastoral helpers has been organized at the Bellefontaine, O., church to which Traverce Harrison ministers.

—H. H. Peters, of Paris, Ill., First, gave the address at a recent banquet of the young men and boys of Central church, Terre Haute, Ind. Several hundred persons were present.

—First church, Lima, O., recently held a home-coming, at which G. W. Watson, former pastor at Lima, but now at LaFayette, Ind., was a specially honored guest.

—C. C. Garrigues, of First church, Joplin, Mo., gave the commencement address at Eldorado Springs, Mo.

—Canton, O., school had an attendance on May 21 of 3,207.

—The Home Society sends the following report of offerings received for home missions: Chardon, O., $19.41; Edinburg, Va., $28; Glenwood avenue, Buffalo, N. Y., $25; Lewistown, Mont., (a home mission point) $12.50; El Reno, Okla., $12.50; St. Clairsville, O., $5.50; Auburn, N. Y., Division St, $50; Fayette, Mo., $50; Uniontown, Pa., Central, $360.

—W. B. Morris, pastor at Worthington, Ind., has been selected by the Worthington high school graduating class to deliver its baccalaureate sermon.

—The school at Owosso, Mich., has a Boys' Brigade; Victor L. Hollis is "Colonel of the Brigade." A banquet was given a few days ago, at which fifty boys were present.

—T. J. Golightly, who has been selected to succeed Professor Athearn at Drake university, wil spend the summer at the Disciples Divinity School of the University of Chicago. It is reported that several Drake men are coming for the summer quarter.

—F. M. Cummings, pastor at Harrison, Ark., writes enthusiastically of the evangelistic meeting conducted at Harrison by C. M. Sharpe, of the Divinity House of the University of Chicago. A fine impression nas been made upon the community, writes Mr. Cummings. This fact has brought especial pleasure to the Harrison pastor, as in this part of the "country" the influence of the Christian churches for good has been greatly injured by unwise and intensely sectarian preaching. Mr. Sharpe is highly commended "to any community desiring spiritual and constructive evangelism." Forty-nine persons were added to the church membership by the late campaign.

—In his address at the Indiana convention at Danville, O. F. Jordan created somewhat of a stir by his statement that "every minister should have six months' training in pedagogy and six months' work in a newspaper office to learn the value of printers' ink." The statement has gone out to the papers of the state, and a Logansport daily came out with a leading editorial backing up Mr. Jordan's declaration.

—M. Lee Sorey, pastor at First church, Hutchinson, Kan., delivered the commencement address at Spearville, Kan.

—I. E. Reid, of North Tonawanda, N. Y., was a chief speaker at the annual banquet of the local high school debating society. Mr. Reid recently exchanged pulpits with Ira L. Parvin, of Niagara Falls.

—Frankfort, Ky., church, R. T. Nooe pastor reports a two weeks' home force meeting with 69 additions.

—The Christian Endeavor Society at Englewood, Chicago, has contributed liberally to foreign missions for a number of years. It is now assuming the support of Eale, an evangelist at Monieka, Africa, under the Foreign Society.

—President Joseph A. Serena, of William Woods College, recently made a trip through Oklahoma, visiting the High schools in several cities. There are good indications for a record enrollment next fall, President Serena reports.

—Richard W. Gentry, pastor at Winfield, Kan., has been invited to deliver six commencement addresses: at Latham, Udall, Hazelton, Burden, Atlanta and Dexter, Kan. He delivered the memorial address for the Odd Fellows of Winfield on Sunday, May 21, and has for the third time been elected platform manager for the Winfield Chautauqua. Mr. Gentry's church is planning to hold a meeting this fall and is trying to secure the best evangelist possible.

—Kimberlin Heights, Tennessee, sent in the first Children's Day offering this year —one of $18. This is the first time this school has observed Children's Day, reports Stephen J. Corey.

—Frank W. Allen, of Springfield, Ill., delivered the commencement address at Illiopolis.

—Andrew Scott, pastor at Fisher, Ill., preached the baccalaureate sermon at the local high school.

—The Brotherhood class at the Galesburg, Ill., school gave special celebration to Mother's day. About seventy-five men were present at the session. This class makes it a rule to give $50 to the nearest relative of any class member who dies; it also cares for its sick and looks after the man without a job.

—Among the speakers at the Southern Christian Congress, to be held June 15-23 at Shreveport, Miss., are the following: Chalmers McPherson, president Brite Bible College, Fort Worth; H. E. Van Horn, pastor First church, Oklahoma City; James T. McKissick, of Harriman, Tenn.; O. P. Spigel, of Montgomery, Ala.; J. T. Boone, of Jacksonville, Fla.; J. B. Holmes, of Galveston, Texas, and W. S. Lockhart, of Houston, Texas.

—The men's classes of the Uhrichsville, O., and Bellefontaine, O., schools are in a contest for membership increase.

—Butler college reports thirty-two graduates this year. There are 362 undergraduates; 622 being enrolled in all departments, a gain of 49 over last year. Thirty-nine of the students are from other states than Indiana and ten are from foreign countries.

—W. R. Walker has been appointed to the deanship of the Bible College of Valparaiso University, at Valparaiso, Ind. J. O. Rose, of Angola, Ind., has been elected to the faculty.

—May 14 was observed as "Anniversary Day" at First church, Lincoln, Neb., this being the anniversary of the coming to this pulpit of H. H Harmon. On this day of celebration there were 656 persons present in the Bible-school, there being 101 men in the men's class. A tent has been provided for this organization, which is taught by L. C. Oberlies.

—Geo. L. Peters has added over 200 to the membership at North Side, Omaha, Neb., in the two years of his service there as pastor.

—W. C. Pearce will be a star speaker at the Lexington, Ky., School of Principles and Methods, to be held at Central church, Lexington, June 8-16.

—It is reported that Texas Christian University is still trying to induce First church, Fort Worth, Tex., to release its pastor, L. D. Anderson, that he may assume the presidency of this Texas school.

—A new society has been formed at Drake university the membership of which is limited to sons and daughters of former "Drakes."

—The "Iowa City group of churches" will be in convention this year at Kalona, on June 8.

—C. C. Chapman, of Southern California, has been chosen by his political party as a delegate to its national convention.

—A. W. Kokendoffer has completed eight years at First church, Sedalia, Mo.

—I. N. McCash, president of Spokane University, Spokane, Washington, who has accepted the presidency of Phillips University, will assume the duties of his position August 1.

—Bethany Assembly will devote several days to Rural Life Work. Professors Christie, Hall, Grier and Mesdames Geddies and Sewell, all of Purdue University will be on the program, as will others, who are specialists on rural problems. O. E. Kelley, Terre Haute, Ind., has prepared this part of the program with great care. Governor Ralston will speak one evening on "The Fundamental Importance of Rural Life." Great interest is being manifested by the ministers of the state in this Rural Life Conference. Remember the dates, July 26 to August 2.

—Henry W. Hunter, pastor at Wellington, Kan., has had published a most attractive and helpful booklet of brief sermons on the general theme, "With Jesus the Nature Lover." In these little essays Mr. Hunter reveals a poetic touch and literary style that lend distinction to his work. Mr Hunter's "Character Talks" are proving a popular feature of "The Conquest," our weekly for young people.

Indiana's State Convention

Hoosier Disciples had 849 registered attendants at their 77th annual convention to which the Danville congregation was host May 15-18 It was a truly great convention for Indiana Discipledom, having the crescendo relation to other conventions of recent years. The convention had three distinctive features, viz:

The statistical: The state organization is at present in the most efficient status of its history. Under the lead of State Secretary C. W. Cauble and his loyal corps of district evangelists and state board members a survey of the state forces had been completed for convention presentment. It reveals the fact that every county in Indiana has one or more Christian churches, to a total of 848. Of that number 672 are co-operating; 131 non-co-operating; 34 have closed doors and 11 are missions. Last year's budget totaled $16,943.04 and the state treasury had a balance on hand of $96.69. Ninety counties of the state are organized for co-operative work, leaving but two that are not in vital touch with state or district headquarters. Co-operating churches show a membership of 132,441 in the state and the Bible schools show an enrollment of 109,265. The test of the past three years' effort culminating in this state of "preparedness" will now come in an increasing activity, benevolent and evangelistic.

The program: It was par excellence. It had no over-topping epochal features; it was simply high class right straight through. The Hoosier state can put up a program of national worth in weight any passing year, but she does like the fellowship and vision of stars from other firmaments than her own: and so the special features aside from Hoosier talent were afforded by H. H. Peters in the morning devotional studies. O. F. Jordan, W. F. Richardson and F. D. Kershner. These men have a well established habit of "getting across" with their messages on whatever occasion and they did it in a proper way at Danville. Of the addresses of the women, Misses Lemen and Maus and Mesdames Harrison and Stewart the same is true. No session of the convention was sparsely attended: whether State Society, C. W. B M., Ministers' Association, Bible School, Christian Endeavor, or departmental meetings, the seekers after light on methods and inspiration for work were there.

The fellowship: Always a convention's best reward. The Danville spirit is famously hospitable; it over-reached Christian church homes and centered in Methodist, Presbyterian and Quaker homes as well; and the meal services in the church were far above the average in quality and service. In fact, it was a common remark that the Danville organization cared for its responsibility with more completeness and dispatch than the average convention is accorded. To Chas. O. Lee, the pastor, Otis Gulley, efficient elder, and Mrs. Lee Barnett, all of the local congregation with their fine corps of workers is due credit for the opportunity afforded the fellowship feature. It ran riot in gladness in the ministers,' the Butler, and the Christian Endeavor banquet hours, while Bethany Assembly's hour at the table under President W. E. M. Hackleman revealed the coming of the Assembly's best year in July and August.

The church plant of course is exceptional: not merely institutional in theory but in fact: it is a "servant of the community," and is destined to be more so under the present capable pastoral direction.

There is too much "doing" on the program of the average convention. The people are surfeited with inspiration; more chance for business and fellowship should be had. Kokomo gets the plum in 1917.

DOES YOUR CHURCH NEED A NEW HYMNAL?

You can afford to postpone getting one until you have had opportunity to examine

The Disciples Hymnal

Edited by Charles Clayton Morrison and Herbert L. Willett

NOW NEARLY READY FOR PRESS, AFTER FIVE YEARS OF PREPARATION

It can truly be said that this book will mark the highest reach of hymn book construction among the Disciples of Christ, and the editors have endeavored to make it the best hymnal in the entire American Church. Neither labor nor expense is being spared to make a book that will satisfy and inspire every church that uses it. Three features are being especially emphasized:

Hymns of Christian Unity
Hymns of Social Service
Hymns of the Inner Life

The mechanical work on a hymnal of this high grade moves slowly, but it is confidently expected that the books will be ready for delivery in September. The manuscript is now in the typographer's hands. The publishers regard THE DISCIPLES HYMNAL as the most important single piece of service the Disciples Publication Society has ever rendered the Disciples and the general church.

We will be glad to receive from pastors or other responsible officers of churches requests for a returnable sample of the hymnal. Your name will be placed on file and a copy forwarded as soon as the first edition comes from the press. In writing please state the approximate number of books your congregation will need.

Disciples Publication Society

The Disciples Publication Society is an organization through which churches of the Disciples of Christ seek to promote undenominational and constructive Christianity.

The relationship it sustains to the Disciples is intimate and organic, though not official. The Society is not a private institution. It has no capital stock. No individuals profit by its earnings.

The charter under which the Society exists determines that whatever profits are earned shall be applied to agencies which foster the cause of religious education, although it is clearly conceived that its main task is not to make profits but to produce literature for building up character and for advancing the cause of religion.

The Disciples Publication Society regards itself as a thoroughly undenominational institution. It is organized and constituted by individuals and churches who interpret the Disciples' religious reformation as ideally an unsectarian and unecclesiastical fraternity, whose common tie and original impulse are fundamentally the desire to practice Christian unity with all Christians.

The Society therefore claims fellowship with all who belong to the living Church of Christ, and desires to co-operate with the Christian people of all communions as well as with the congregations of Disciples, and to serve all.

The Christian Century, the chief publication of the Society, desires nothing so much as to be the worthy organ of the Disciples' movement. It has no ambition at all to be regarded as an organ of the Disciples' denomination. It is a free interpreter of the wider fellowship in religious faith and service which it believes every church of Disciples should embody. It strives to interpret all communions, as well as the Disciples, in such terms and with such sympathetic insight as may reveal to all their essential unity in spite of denominational isolation. The Christian Century, though published by the Disciples, is not published for the Disciples alone. It is published for the Christian world. It desires definitely to occupy a catholic point of view and it seeks readers in all communions.

Two Great Bible Courses

For Summer Study

When the summer season comes adult classes often become restless under the courses of study that have been followed during the year. Why not consider for your class one of the splendid courses on the Bible which have been especially prepared for class study? One of these deals in Old Testament life, the other with the New Testament.

"The Moral Leaders of Israel"

BY DR. HERBERT L. WILLETT.

is a course treating in a most attractive way the mountain peak personalities of the Old Testament. Moses, Samuel, David, Elijah, Isaiah and the other great spokesmen for God are here made to live again in twentieth century life. A thoughtful class will have its interest renewed by this fine course.

"The Life of Jesus"

BY DR. LOA E. SCOTT.

is a question and answer study of the life of Jesus and is especially adapted to High School and adult age. Hundreds of classes have been built up on the basis of this attractive course, and there is no reason why your class should wait until autumn or winter to begin the work.

DON'T WASTE THE SUMMER! MAKE IT COUNT FOR GENUINE STUDY!
Send $1.00 for a copy of Dr. Willett's book, 50c for Dr. Scott's, or $1.35 for the two. Then decide which you will choose for your summer study.

THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY

Do You Care What Happens to Our World?

"WE WILL BE A LONG TIME DEAD!"

These are the reckless words of a sensualist who is proposing for himself some new indulgence in defiance of moral law or of good sense. He represents the point of view of many who are indifferent to the rights of others now living and above all indifferent to the rights of those who are about to be born.

"What do you care what happens after you are dead?" asks the cynic of the man who labors to lay the foundations for a good future. You and I will not be here to enjoy it. Is he not a wise man who lives his life and snatches what he can from a world which seems to offer all too little of human pleasure?

This question of what kind of a world will be here after we are dead has divided both pagan and Christian minds. We speak not of pagans in far off countries, but of the pagan-minded people of New York or Chicago, or of our village. On every hand we see people who despise the rights of posterity in the most shocking way.

Recently American public opinion was much stirred up over conservation. Attention was called to the ruthless men who were denuding forests without regard to how people should build houses in days to come. All of our natural resources are being used up in the same senseless and wicked fashion.

Yet it is not only in the realm of the material that men have shown themselves heartless individualists without any vision of consequences.

Men lay their profane hands upon religion. An Ingersoll laughs while he tears the faith of thousands to tatters. Humanity has lived on this faith for many centuries. Perhaps a bigger and better faith is needed. But the iconoclast who destroys, and places not a single stone in the new wall that must be built, is a visionless man with no sense of responsibility to the age to come.

It is not only the pagan-minded man who has despised the future, however, but sometimes the Christian man as well. Monasticism professed to despise this world both present and future. Reforms seemed but idle enterprises, for should not a man live as though he were a citizen of another city, a heavenly? It was the mistake of the monk to believe that by despising the future of this world he was loyal to the heavenly world which he sought.

Nor is this attitude of mind confined to the monk. There is the devout and uninstructed Christian of today who looks upon the world as so much kindling wood. He loves to tell us of the time when the earth shall melt from fervent heat and the heavens shall be rolled up as a scroll. He undertakes, therefore, to despise a world so transient and awaiting so evil an end.

But What If It Should Please God To Continue Human History On This Earth A Hundred Millenniums More?

Suppose we are not at the end of human history, but only at its beginning? May not other generations read our history and curse our selfishness and lack of foresight?

There are, of course, the people who prize the future of our earth. Some pagans do. A farmer amassed a fortune in good Illinois land and hated to die and leave it. He deliberately tied up his estate with legal complications so that for as long a time as possible, it should bear his name and the operations on that farm should continue to be carried on as nearly as possible as they were in his lifetime. Reaching his bony fingers out of the grave this man still tries to operate this farm for which he gave his life and for which he endangered his soul's salvation. It is not this we mean when we talk of living for the sake of the future of this world.

The Christian that knows God best understands that creation is still going on. If we need a text for that it is found in the words of Jesus, "My father worketh even until now, and I work." It is the high privilege of the Christian to know something of the Divine creative purpose, for we are no longer called servants, but friends. If we are to be anything more than hired men in the vineyard, we must know the results which the Father is undertaking to produce. The New Jerusalem that is promised in Revelation is a city that is "coming down out of heaven." It is ultimately to be realized upon earth.

Socially, our world is yet in the dawn of the creative period. In the family, monogamy is still in the minority instead of the majority in many sections of the world. In the evolution of government we are still uncertain whether we wish the state simply to restrain evil-doers, or whether we wish it to undertake industrial enterprises, and be a father to every soul within it. It is this political uncertainty that makes our legislatures enact ridiculous legislation. Our social evolution clearly leads us not only to the place where a man can no longer starve to death within civilization, but to the place where his welfare in every way is a matter of social concern.

The social mind allows to no man the right to damn himself.

It is to the future of religion in a deeper sense that we turn with greatest interest.

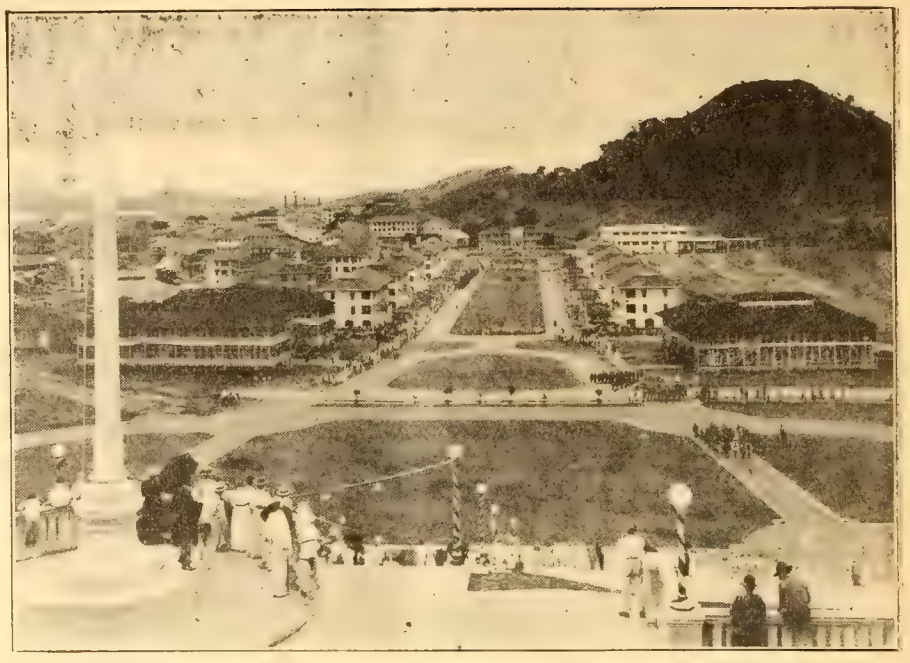
Will Our World Continue To Find Help In Jesus Christ?

It is the faith of his followers that it will do so and increasingly.

Criticism of the gospels has only made Jesus take a more central place in modern thought. Not all men call him Lord, but they find new ways of honoring him. As in ancient days, men who begin by hailing him as teacher and prophet tend to advance to the place where they call him Christ, revealing the Father and leading men to Him. We prepare for the future by exalting Jesus Christ.



Confidently we may say that in preparing the world for its better future after we have passed out of it, we have the deepest of all obligations to pass on the Christian experience undimmed to the generation that follows. In the apostolic succession of Christian experience we must not fail, but help forward the progressive realization by humanity of the religious life of Jesus Christ.

May Our Great-Grand-children Possess All We See In Vision!

CHAPEL ASSIGNED TO THE CRISTOBAL BRANCH, UNION CHURCH OF THE CANAL ZONE.

This is the only building assigned exclusively to any branch. It is so small that several Sunday-school classes meet in the court-house across the street. The building is in poor condition. There is no other church building for Americans in Cristobal.

THE PRADO, BALBOA, CANAL ZONE, FROM THE STEPS OF THE ADMINISTRATION BUILDING.

The wooden buildings in the foreground will soon be replaced by concrete buildings. The concrete houses are employee's quarters.

The Union Church of the Canal Zone

Note: As a contribution to The Christian Century's current series of articles on Union Churches the following description of Christian work in the Canal Zone is both interesting and valuable. Mr. Morrison has referred several times in his current travel articles to this chain of union congregations stretching across the Isthmus. Lest our pages this week seem to be unduly given over to Latin America we are taking the liberty of holding the Editor's promised article on his trip from Lima to Santiago until next week.—Office Editor.

ALMOST everyone knows about the engineering and sanitary features of the Panama Canal; how hundreds of millions of yards of earth and rock were excavated; how millions of yards of concrete were laid to form the locks and spillways; how the great Gatun dam converted the valley of the "Roaring Chagres" and its tributaries into a peaceful lake 170 square miles in area, where the destructive flood waters of that famous stream are now absorbed with hardly a ripple; how American communities were housed, governed and fed; how enormous sums of money were expended without scandal; and how the sanitary brigade made all this possible by banishing the plague-bearing mosquito and the typhoid germ.

But knowledge of the way the people are living on the Panama Canal Zone, since the canal is finished, is less general.

A BENEVOLENT DESPOTISM.

During the construction days communities were planted where the larger undertakings were to be carried out, and the people were housed, fed and doctored under that benevolent despotism which has become almost as famous as the canal itself. When particular parts were completed, these communities were rooted up and moved to some other locality almost on a day's notice, taking with them their houses, stores, clubhouses, social and fraternal organizations. No individual might be certain that tomorrow or next week would not find him planted in a new community, assuming new duties, and taking up new social relationships. Hence no homes were permanent, and no social groups stable.

The institutions sacred to our civilization were organized and nourished, though often in forms varying greatly from those "at home." The comparatively few who in the hurly-burly of work and in the absence of home ties and associations cultivated the spiritual graces, founded Sunday-schools and churches, practically all union in character. These churches were truly spiritual and have survived, constituting with few exceptions the present Union Church of the Canal Zone.

With the completion of the canal, new elements entered into the life of the people. Several of the most populous towns were abandoned or turned over to the troops. Balboa was constructed as the permanent capital city of the Zone. Permanent houses were erected for employes and family quarters were provided to a much greater extent than was possible under construction conditions. Transfers from one part of the work to another were much less frequent. The American community began to appear more like it is "in the States."

A SHIFTING POPULATION.

The average residence of Americans on the Zone is short and much broken up by temporary absences. For recuperation from climatic conditions, a visit to a cooler zone is necessary at least once in two years. Many fail to return from vacation and are admittedly here only for a short time. In spite of this, the present operating condition finds communities at various points on the Canal Zone which are truly representative of United States civilization and home life and which exemplify our institutions to all the peoples meeting at this cross-roads of the nations. Many who will never see the United States will judge our nation by what they see on the Zone. What they see must therefore represent the best we have as a nation.

To facilitate defense of the Canal against possible assault by enemies all the land will belong to the government, and to guard against extortionate charges practically all the business of buying and selling will be handled by the government. Thus all "Zonites" are tenants at will of the government and no man or group of men may own land.

Churches, religious societies, benevolent and fraternal organizations and the few forms of business not monopolized by the government, are permitted to hold limited areas under leases revocable at the will of the government and must provide their own buildings.

NO PERMANENT CHURCH BUILDINGS.

An exception is made in favor of churches and fraternal societies in so far as they are willing to use the few small chapels remaining from construction days or the inadequate and ill-adapted community buildings provided by the government. These are generally used in common by various organizations, and are inadequate in size. Aside from being badly arranged, they are lacking in dignity, are of wooden construction, having limited life, and there is question whether they will be replaced when their limited life is over.

With the single exception of the permanent, but as yet uncompleted, building of one missionary society, there is no permanent or dignified church building on the Canal Zone. The Episcopalians have one organization of Americans using a small, wooden government chapel within the Ancon Hospital grounds; the Christian Scientists are erecting one small wooden building, and one small wooden building is occupied exclusively by the Union Church.

All other Protestant church services for Americans are held in buildings partly used for other purposes. The Catholic church has several small wooden churches and is moving rapidly to provide worthy permanent buildings.

DENOMINATIONALISM UNDEVELOPED.

Except as noted above, denominationalism is undeveloped on the Zone and the people realize the futility of working along denominational lines for lack of population. In five of the six towns there are no religious organizations except the Union Church and the Catholic Church.

The Union Church of the Canal Zone has now two pastors and will soon add a third. It numbers among its members adherents to practically all of the Protestant denominations. There are now about 400 members, but even that number overtaxes present accommodations. The Balboa Sunday School has over 500 members, and even though two classes meet on a porch the total capacity of the building, including the use of the second floor lodge hall, is utterly inadequate. The Sunday School of the congregation using the one building exclusively assigned, holds some classes in the court house across the street.

The recent Panama Congress on Christian Work was not a legislative body, and passed no resolutions except such as were necessary to fix its procedure and to express its appreciation of the efforts of local committees to facilitate its work. Hence, as a body it could not formally endorse the Union Church of the Canal Zone. But a large number of its most representative delegates met in conference and under the chairmanship of Robert E. Speer, D. D., unanimously adopted the following resolution, proposed by Rev. Ira Landrith, D. D., of Boston, and seconded by Rev. Geo. W. Muckley of Kansas City:

"Resolved, That it is the sense of this informal conference of delegates to Congress on Christian Work in Latin America, that the Union Church of the Canal Zone deserves and is hereby accorded our endorsement and commendation as offering the best solution of the problem of evangelical Christian work under prevailing conditions."

WELL KNOWN LEADERS PRESENT.

Among those present were Rev. L. G. Abrahamson, Rev. S. H. Chester, Prof. Wm. Adams Brown, Rev. Ed. F. Cook, Rev. William Flammer, Rev. A. W. Halsey, Mr. Harry Wade Hicks, Rev. Ira Landrith, Rev. Archibald McLean, Rev. M. T. Morrill, Dr. John R. Mott, Rev. G. W. Muckley, Mr. Eben E. Olcott, Rev. C. J. Ryder, Bishop William O. Shepard, Rev. Charles E. Tebbetts, Rev. L. B. Wolf, Rev. George Alexander, Prof. Harlan P. Beach, Rev. Harry Compton, Rev. Silas Daugherty, Rev. Fred P. Haggard, Rev. S. G. Inman, Bishop A. T. Howard, President Henry Churchill King, Bishop Walter R. Lambuth, Mr. Joseph Ernest McAfee, Rev. Charles Clayton Morrison, Mr. Harry S. Myers, President Charles T. Paul, Rev. Frank K. Sanders, Dr. Robert E. Speer, Rev. Charles L. Thompson.

INFLUENCE OF CANAL TRAFFIC.

As the traffic through the Canal grows, more and more will the nations of the world be brought into contact with the American communities located on the Canal Zone, which have to do with the operation of the Canal and of those auxiliary activities such as feeding and housing the people, looking after sanitation and conducting the business operations necessary to victual and repair the shops making the transit of the Canal.

This population will be migratory as to individuals, but as a whole will be American, and as such will be typical of American family and religious life to thousands who will never see America. Its impress will be upon representatives of every nation whose ships pass through the canal, and upon every land to which those ships go. How important, then, that the American community on the Zone should represent the very best in American life and American civilization, and how necessary, therefore, that every means be provided for conserving and developing the highest spirituality. Upon the worthiness of this representation will depend, we believe, large questions of diplomacy and business and of moral and religious life.

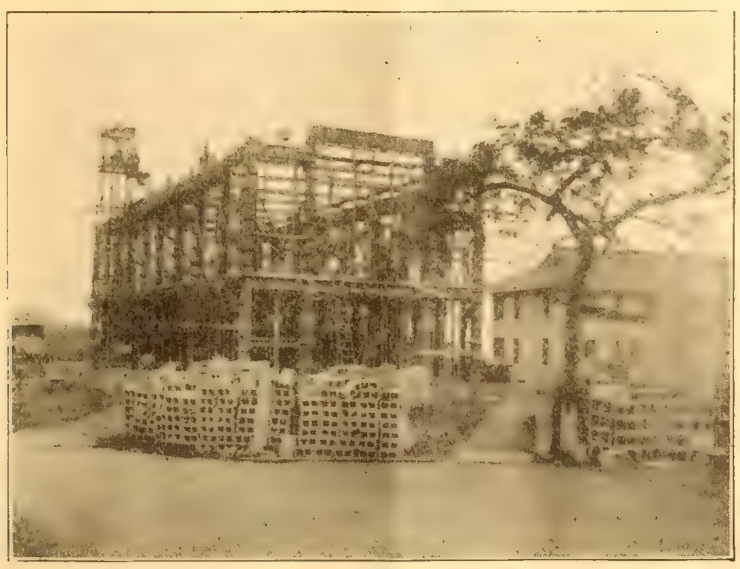
How vast would be the effect upon non-Christians of an American community here, undivided by sectarian questions, working in harmony to spread the gospel, and outfitted with buildings and other equipment in a manner truly worthy of the best ideals of our American civilization and Protestantism!

Can the Protestant people of the United States afford to do otherwise than outfit their representative church in any other way than the situation demands? The opportunity is one in a century. No opportunity has ever presented itself to any nation for achieving such world-wide results with so small an expenditure.

DIFFICULTY OF SECURING MONEY.

The opportunity, in so far as it affects the residents of the Canal Zone, is not missionary in the ordinary sense. The people are able to provide for the current expenses of the organizations and to do much in actual missionary work, but having no title to land there is no security to offer for a loan, and therefore no chance for a church debt.

The Union Church being interdenominational, has by virtue of that fact not even a chance to borrow from the denominational church extension funds. Hence the money for buildings must be in hand before any work may be done, and six American civilian communities, with a total population of about 6,000, are without a single church building worthy the name. The component members of that population are of such temporary residence, and suitable buildings will be so costly because of building requirements that they cannot themselves furnish anything like the sum necessary to provide them. This says nothing of the military garrisons and of the colored people, who are mostly West Indians.



Surrounded as we are by Catholic countries in which the churches are the most notable buildings in the towns, we cannot for the sake of its effect on Protestant missions in Latin America afford to have any but thoroughly worthy buildings. They will cost at least $175,000. Until we obtain the funds, our civilization and our Protestantism are not being demonstrated as they should be and we are losing their effect on missions. During the construction period of the canal, every building was temporary and churches fared as did families and other organizations. But now that permanent homes and office buildings are being built, lack of permanent and suitable church buildings will excite comment and hinder the development of the spirituality of the residents on the Zone and the spread of the gospel to other nations.

BUILDINGS MUST BE HAD.

The need of these buildings is urgent. The local membership of the Union Church has already raised a considerable sum and will undoubtedly be able to provide at least $10,000. But this is insufficient to permit even a start to be made under conditions as they exist. The help of all who are interested in the spread of the gospel is needed. Questions as to the extent, character and aim of our organization will be gladly answered.

Checks should be made payable to the Building Fund of the Union Church of the Canal Zone and mailed to Mr. H. A. A. Smith, who is auditor of the Panama Canal and president of the Church Council, or to Mr. D. C. Nutting, who is the superintendent of the Mechanical Division of the Panama Canal and treasurer of the Building Fund. Either will be glad to answer questions or to supply further references.

Those who live on the mountain have a longer day than those who live in the valley. Sometimes all we need to brighten our day is to rise a little higher.

ST MARY'S HALL, (CATHOLIC), BALBOA, C. Z.
The parish house of reinforced concrete is under construction. A church of similar construction is expected to be started soon.

COMMUNITY CLUB HOUSE, PEDRO MIGUEL, C. Z.
Union Church meets in the gymnasium. There is no other religious organization in town.

Daniel Webster's Confession of Faith

Editor's Note: The following testimony to the Christian religion is reported by Daniel A. Poling, Associate President of Christian Endeavor to have been unearthed by Mr. Chas. T. Page, of Concord, N. H. ..Mr. Webster, at the age of 25 years, united with the Congregational Church in Salisbury, N. H., his native place, under the ministry of the Rev. Thomas Worcester, September 13, 1807. The following letter was addressed to his pastor. From this Confession of Faith it is believed Mr. Webster never deviated at any subsequent period of his life.

The Letter.

Boscawen, August 8, 1807.

Dear Sir—The other day we were conversing respecting confession of faith. Sometime ago, I wrote down, for my own use, a few propositions in the shape of articles, intending to exhibit a very short summary of the doctrines of the Christian Religion, as they impress my mind. I have taken the liberty to enclose a copy for your perusal.

I am, sir, with respect,

Yours, etc.,

D. Webster.

Confession of Faith.

I BELIEVE in the existence of Almighty God, who created and governs the whole world. I am taught this by the works of nature and the word of Revelation.

I BELIEVE that God exists in three persons; this I learn from Revelation alone. Nor is it any objection to this belief, that I can not comprehend how one can be three, or three one. I hold it my duty to believe, not what I can comprehend, or account for, but what my maker teaches me.

I BELIEVE the Scriptures of the Old and new Testaments to be the will and word of God.

I BELIEVE Jesus Christ to be the Son of God. The miracles which he wrought establish, in my mind, his personal authority, and render it proper for me to believe whatever he asserts. I believe, therefore, all his declarations, as well when he declares himself to be the Son of God, as when he declares any other proposition. And I believe there is no other way of salvation, than through the merits of his atonement.

I BELIEVE that things past, present and to come, are all equally present in the mind of Deity; that with him there is no succession of time, nor of ideas; that, therefore, the relative terms past, present and future, as used among men, can not, with strict propriety be applied to Deity. I believe in the doctrines of foreknowledge and predestination as thus expounded. I do not believe in those doctrines, as imposing any fatality or necessity on men's actions, or any way infringing free agency.

I BELIEVE in the utter inability of any human being to work out his own salvation, without the constant aids of the Spirit of all grace.

I BELIEVE in those great peculiarities of the Christian Religion, a Resurrection from the dead, and a day of Judgment.

I BELIEVE in the universal Providence of God; and leave to Epicurus and his more unreasonable followers in modern times, the inconsistency of believing that God made a world, which he does not take the trouble of governing.

(Dr. Sherlock.)

ALTHOUGH I have great respect for some other forms of worship, I believe the Congregational mode, on the whole, preferable to any other.

I BELIEVE Religion to be a matter, not a demonstration, but of faith. God requires us to give credit to the truths which he reveals, not because we can prove them, but because he declares them. When the mind is reasonably convinced that the Bible is the word of God, the only remaining duty is to receive its doctrines, with full confidence of their truth, and practice them, with a pure heart.

I BELIEVE that the Bible is to be understood and received, in the plain and obvious meaning of its passages; since I can not persuade myself that a Book intended for the instruction and conversion of the whole world would cover its true meaning in any such mystery and doubt, that none but critics and philosophers can discover it.

I BELIEVE that the refinements and subtleties of human wisdom are more likely to obscure, than to enlighten the revealed will of God; and that he is the most accomplished Christian Scholar, who hath been educated at the feet of Jesus and in the College of the Fishermen.

I BELIEVE that all true Religion consists in the heart, and the affections; and that therefore all creeds and confessions are fallible and uncertain evidences of evangelical piety.

FINALLY, I believe that Christ has imposed on all his disciples, a life of active benevolence; that he, who refrains only from what he thinks to be sinful, has performed but a part, and a small part of his duty; that he is bound to do good and communicate; to love his neighbor; to give food and as far as in him lies, to promote peace, truth, piety and happiness, in a wicked and forlorn world; believing, that in the great day which is to come, there will be no other standard of merit, no other criterion of character, than that which is already established. By their fruits ye shall know them.

Our Readers' Opinions

"OUGHT WE TO BE OFFENDED?"

EDITOR THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY:

In your editorial, under above caption, of May 25, you seem to be in doubt as to whether the editor of Everybody's, in a recent editorial, is critical of the public for its ignorance of the Disciples or satirical of the Disciples for "counting so many and yet not counting for much." Perhaps he meant to be neither critical nor satirical since he dealt with statistics and not with ideals or advertising. He no doubt meant only to state his perplexity over the anomalous situation. He came, near to dispelling his perplexity, however, in the statement that "the Episcopalians take a great deal more of the limelight than they numerically deserve." Yes, they take it—they advertise. The Disciples do not take their share of the limelight—they do not advertise. A statement of this last fact by the editor of Everybody's, would have been a just criticism of the Disciples and would have, also, made it unnecessary for the editor of the "Century" to "guess." You say the public is interested in what it is interested in. Yes, but most of the public's interest in things is created by advertising. This is as true of religious bodies as it is of baking powders or automobiles. As to religious bodies, however, mere knowledge and talk about them do not indicate real interest. This is shown by the fact that the Unitarians and Christian Scientists are quite well known and much talked about all over the country and yet are few in numbers and are not growing. But they are great advertisers. They have their press bureaus and money for that special purpose. The growth and "numerousness of the Disciples of Christ," so astonishing to the editor of Everybody's, and that without advertising, certainly shows that the public is interested in the ideals and program of the Disciples when it comes to know of them. And yet you state that "the Disciples will claim public attention only as they deal in ideals or offer a program that the public is vitally interested in." Do the Disciples not deal in ideals? Is Christian unity not their program? Is the public not as much interested in Christian unity as it is in any other one thing you can mention. Tell us, Bro. Morrison. Is the failure of the Disciples to claim more of public attention due to lack of advertising or to lack of ideals and a program the public is vitally interested in? Don't leave us guessing.

At a critical time, when my own theology was going to pieces, there was one strong support to cling to,—"The stars keep their places, though men's heads run round." I trusted that, if I could ever find truth, it would not be smaller and poorer, but larger and richer, than my traditional belief. I said: "It is not likely that I have had too good an opinion of the Creator. I need not be afraid if the mystery of his nature should forever be impenetrable. My safety does not depend on knowing, but on faithfulness to the little light he gives."—Charles G. Ames.

By LOUIS WALLIS

THE great social awakening, which now sweeps like a tidal movement over the churches of the nation, means that the world is at last beginning to catch up with the Bible. Not a work of man, but a work of God, breathing a new life into the churches at the very time when men were becoming discouraged about the prospects of organized religion. Thus, while the movement goes on around us, men feel its grip and acknowledge its power, and yet ask in bewilderment, "What is the social awakening?"

Jesus and the Hebrew prophets lead to the new day when they tell us about "the weightier matters of the law," whereof the foremost is justice. By the supreme test of Jesus and his forerunners are all religious leaders, teachers and authorities now being judged. "He shall set justice in the earth, and the isles shall wait for his law." Such was to be the historic work of the Christ, as foreseen in the most exalted vision of Hebrew prophecy. "Let justice roll down like waters!" was the cry of Amos. If religious leaders fail to put justice at the center of their message and at the focus of their perspective, the Bible sits in judgment upon them.

JUSTICE IN THE BIBLE.

Moreover, the Bible is definite regarding the foundations of justice. When, during the age of the Judges, the tribes of Israel came to give Samuel assistance in organizing a kingly government, Samuel told the people that under the monarchy there would be concentration of landed property in a few hands. (II Sam. 8:14.) The prophets vigorously condemned the adding of field to field (Isa. 5:8; Mic. 2:1.). They looked forward to a time when every man's right to the soil should be acknowledged, and all should sit under their own vine and fig tree (Mic. 4:4; Zech. 3:10). The Hebrew people went down to ruin through the concentration of property, and the injustice which always goes along with excessive wealth. Yet in this they were like all the other nations of history. Rome was destroyed by great estates, declares Gibbon. In America we have already reached a stage of development in which 2 per cent of the people own 60 per cent of the property, as pointed out by the United States Commission on Industrial Relations.

But the Bible does not offer a political or economic program for dealing with these questions of poverty and wealth. Scripture cannot be cited as authority for Socialism, or Singletax, or any other school of sociological thought. Nor should we seek to commit the church to any political party or scheme of social reform. Nevertheless, the Bible, of a surety, voices the demand for justice in human relationships. It puts the problem of "rich and poor" definitely before us. The Bible was ahead of the world when it was written. It holds up an ideal of brotherhood that still waits to be realized. The social awakening carries the churches out of theological dogmatism into the great matters of social justice emphasized by the Bible. And while the church may not espouse political parties or schemes of social reform, we are learning that the house of God is a community center where all problems and programs bearing on the moral and spiritual life may be canvassed in an atmosphere of kindly fraternalism.

Poems by Thomas Curtis Clark.

A SONG OF QUIETNESS.

BE still, my heart, and let the world rush onward;
Be still awhile, that we may be with God.
Why should we follow, follow still in madness?
Why should we bow to Mammon's tyrant rod?
Be still, be still! Now let us wander backward,
Through flowery fields that we have hurried by.
Let us, as children, pluck again the daisies
That fleck the fields as stars the midnight sky.

Be still, my heart! What profiteth this fretting,
This ceaseless strife, by proud ambition stirred?
What gain shall come from all this greed for getting?
Be still, my heart, while God declares his word.
More truly speaks the lily of the valley
Than busy marts, with spirit-killing roar.
Be still, be still, let Silence be your teacher.
Be still, my heart, and heed the world no more.

KING OF AN ACRE.

A KING of bluest blood am I,
Though gold and purple pass me by;
By right divine I wield the rod
Above this realm of sod and clod.

My palace home is passing plain—
A little cottage by the lane;
Beneath its roof what hours are spent
Of kingly thought and proud content!

My queen, what royal garb has she!
The robes of worth and purity.
A rod of love her fair hands hold,
A scepter mightier than of gold.

No hunting grounds my kingdom knows;
I find fair sport in fat bean rows,
And in the maze of bush and vine,
And tangled wealth of eglantine.

What need have I of golden crown,
Or jeweled throne, or fair renown?
I look at none with jealous eye,
For who has more of sun and sky?

Oh, who would not a monarch be
Of cot and hearth, of bush and tree!
He shall not ask a beggar's dole
Who has an acre—and his soul!

IN THE DAISY FIELD.

LET the busy world rush by,
While I in the daisies lie,
With no roof but arching sky.

Those who will may grieve and fret,
Saying foes and woes beset;
Fears but greater fears beget.

Joy is mine in this today;
Let tomorrow have its way,
Bringing March or blooming May.

Shall I spend myself for gold,
Which by grudging hand is doled?
Beauty is not bought and sold!

Lo, the glory of this field,
With its daisy-golden yield.
How hath God His love revealed!

So let all the world rush by;
I shall in the daisies lie,
With no roof but arching sky.

GOD IS NOT FAR.

GOD is not far from any one of us:
The wild flower by the wayside speaks His love;
Each blithesome bird bears tidings from above;
Sunshine and shower His tender mercies prove,
And men know not His voice!

God is not far from any one of us:
He speaks to us in every glad sunrise;
His glory floods us from the noonday skies;
The stars declare His love when daylight dies,
And men know not His voice!

God is not far from any one of us:
He watches o'er His children day and night;
On every darkened soul He sheds His light;
Each burdened heart He cheers, and lends His might
To all who know His voice.

And he shall come to earth again
And bring his peace and joy to men;
For in the heart of childhood lies
The promise of earth's paradise.

EDITORIAL

A WORD TO OUR NEW MINISTERS

EVERY Disciples college which trains ministers will be giving to the church this month a group of young men who will settle at once in pastorates. They will be trying their wings in the free air of the big world. They are destined soon to learn that the world does not value their academic degrees as did the kind friends on commencement day. This does not mean their training was valueless. It was only preparatory.

Never before has it become so hard to be a successful minister in the Church of Christ.

But never was it so worth while.

The demands on the minister have raised his profession from the range of scornful opinion once directed against it. He must be skilled in so many different things that the community now prizes the successful minister in a new way.

The ministry offers the opportunity of a good fight. There is the challenge of the paganism that presses upon us with our newly acquired wealth. There is the fight against social injustice manifest on every hand and against which the great prophets spoke in the name of God. There are the great reforms which are now soon to be fought through to a successful issue. "The fighting parson" has plenty of chance in our modern world.

There is the great constructive service of the ministry for peace and reconciliation. The reunion of the Church awaits the preaching of sweet-souled men who have the spirit of peace within. The peace of the world will come as it is prepared for by the religious idealism of the churches.

More than all, and deeper than all, there is the perennial task of interpreting life's meanings to the individual soul so as to build spiritual character. Many are the signs that we are on the eve of a great creative period in the things of the inner life.

These young ministers face great days. They will carry on the every-day work of the churches, teaching the children, consoling the saints, visiting the sick and burying the dead, but above the more usual duties will be a vision of the new world of justice and brotherhood and peace which awaits creation by the hand of the skilled artist in the things of the spirit.

WAS ALEXANDER CAMPBELL A ROMAN CATHOLIC?

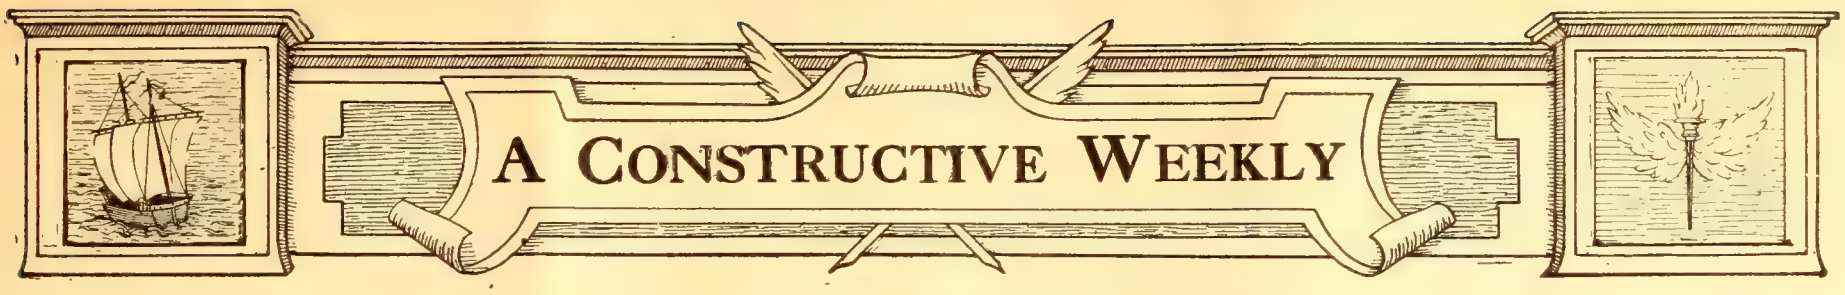
INTEREST in the fathers of our religious movement is being manifested on every side, and everything which contributes to our knowledge of them is to be welcomed. It is of importance, however, that there shall not be imputed to them doctrines or practices with which they would not agree. The following excerpt from a recent editorial on Alexander Campbell in the "Christian Evangelist" awakens surprise:

> He saw no indications of uncertainty or haziness in regard to the structure of the church in the earliest apostolic records. Men became members of the Christian brotherhood and appropriated the Divine Christ through the sacrament of baptism. They were held together in this great brotherhood by the regular observance of the sacrament of the Lord's Supper. Beyond this simple framework, initiating men into the one mystical Body of Christ and keeping them in living touch with the divine Father and with each other, he did not care to go.

Alexander Campbell came from Scotch Presbyterian stock and whatever change he underwent in his religious thinking, it was not backward toward Rome, but forward toward a more thorough-going Protestantism.

It is Roman Catholic to hold that "men appropriate the divine Christ through the sacrament of baptism." Alexander Campbell believed that men appropriated Christ in their lives through faith in Christ, repentance from sin, and baptism, faith being the cause that leads to repentance and baptism. Evangelicals do not clash with Catholics on any more important matter than on the way men are united to Christ. The sacramentarian holds that union with Christ is accomplished through baptism. The evangelical holds that union with Christ comes through the experience of faith in Him. Martin Luther regarded his fundamental discovery to be that "we are justified through faith." Alexander Campbell never went over to the Roman Catholic position on baptism.

THE critics of the Disciples of Christ have sometimes represented them as believing in baptismal regeneration. This the Disciples have always strenuously denied and have challenged anyone to show a page in their literature that would bear such interpretation. In the above quotation is to be found footing for such a charge. It would be hard for the author of these words to show their difference from the doctrine of baptismal regeneration.



The sacramentarian conception of religion is further imputed to Mr. Campbell when it is said that he taught that the "brotherhood of Christ" was "held together by the regular observance of the Lord's Supper." Mr. Campbell did hold the Lord's Supper in greater esteem than many of his contemporaries, but he always held the Zwinglian view of the Supper as a Memorial Feast. He never ascribed to it any of the mystical efficacy of the Roman Mass. Interested in Christian union, he would have said that the Lord's Supper did help to hold the church together, but he would never have let this stand as a complete statement of his attitude, for many things else also contribute to holding the church together which are of even greater importance than the Lord's Supper. The Disciple of Christ, true to the attitude of the fathers, comes to the Lord's Table, not to find a sacramental miracle, but to cultivate memory and loyalty and communion. His attitude is at the farthest remove from the sacramental. And so also was Mr. Campbell's.

GIVING THE CHURCH A REPUTATION

MOST up-to-date churches have adopted certain measures of publicity to keep their work to the fore in the community thought. After such publicity programs have been tried for awhile there is often a firm declaration by both pastor and people that "advertising doesn't pay."

It is interesting to note the kinds of reputation that churches have desired to create for themselves. One church uses up printer's ink to advertise a whistling chorus. Another announces a moving picture show. Another announces that it will give away an apple to every comer while the pastor talks of "The Apples of Eden."

In none of these devices is there the slightest suggestion that the purpose of the church is the fostering of the religious life. It may indeed be that the church is far more religious than its publicity matter would ever suggest. The publicity has been a libel on the church, giving an impression of secularity that was not really there.

The first principle of successful publicity of any kind is honesty.

If a church is advertising to win people to religion, let it say so. A Baptist pastor in a suburb of Chicago preached for a church that had not had an evening service for years. It was regarded as impossible to hold such a service. Owing to the persistence of the pastor, a committee of business men bought a quarter of a page in the Saturday issue of the suburban daily. For ten weeks, the pastor used this space to preach a sermon in three sentences. The reader was promised the rest of the sermon at the church on the following evening. The audiences have grown and conversions have been frequent.

The publicity did not misrepresent what the church had to give, but courageously set it forth.

GIVING THE MINISTER A VACATION

HUMANITY has been learning in recent years that long hours in labor do not mean the largest output. Above all is this true of the brain-worker where quality and not quantity is the chief demand. Perhaps every church would concede that the minister needs a vacation, though some might insist that "peculiar" circumstances demand that their minister should stay on his job during the summer. To stay on his job this summer may be the last act in an experience of failure. If the church is not going well, the minister needs to review the whole situation from a distance.

Some churches give the vacation, but the salary is not enough to provide the minister a chance to get out of town. Such a fact should encourage the church to send the minister away where he may get ready for his best effort next year.

And if the church is generous enough to send the minister away to rest, it would seem that he cannot ethically use this time to work at something else to make money. He owes it to his church to rest.

WHY HOME MISSION WORK GOES SLOWLY

HOME Missions has now finished its campaign for another May offering. We could hope that the big debt with which the society has been encumbered for a long time has been wiped out and funds provided for a big program, but so far no such report has reached us.

In the literature of the society this year a prominent feature has been made of the immigrant. Two tracts by Rev. O. F. Jordan have been circulated. Mr. Jordan was for six years in personal touch with the problem in Chicago and is competent to speak upon the subject. Another tract on the New York Russian work was also used in the propaganda. Yet the tracts only revealed how little the Disciples do for the immigrant.

It is just here that we find one of the clues to the lack of success of the Home Mission board.

They have done most of their talking about a modern type of Home Missions and have spent most of their money for the old time methods of establishing churches by evangelistic methods.

Though work for the immigrants has been much exploited this spring, it gets annually in the whole country much less than five thousand dollars a year of the receipts for American missions!

And this sum is raised mostly in the cities of Chicago, Cleveland and New York!

Though there is a big paragraph in the reports about work for the Rural church, there is a scant two hundred dollars used in this department of the work!

On a certain Commission on Foreign Relations, the society has spent a considerable sum of money, only to drop the work at the beginning of the war. If there had been no war, would it have been wise for our American society to put money into Russia?

Various kinds of advice have been given to the weary leaders of the American society in its ten years' struggle to save its life. It has been warned to keep free from entangling alliances with delegate conventions. The theological opinions of the long list of secretaries have been continually scrutinized. The society has been urged to federate with state societies, and then it has been told to avoid such relationships.

There seems to be only one thing more to say to the society by way of advice, and that is that it shall use its money on a modern program to reach our crowded city populations, hunt up the utterly neglected of our country and spend little or nothing on competitive situations where the work is already well done by other forces.

For such an unselfish program of Christian service there could be aroused all the idealism, all the feeling of romance, all the enthusiasm, that usually goes with foreign missions.

Other religious bodies have tried it and found it true. The Disciples lag close to the rear in the Home mission procession in this country. They might press forward near the front. It is a matter of a program and a point of view.

We can wish for few things more ardently than to see our American board enjoying an income of a half million dollars a year. To help bring in that good day these words are offered.

THE CONVENTION AND THE LID

THE time of a national convention in Chicago is usually looked upon as a time when all city ordinances may be violated and when the vicious elements of the city may bring to public gaze their hideous sin. There is, of course, a small section of these conventions which are patrons of the worst in the life of the city. It is an affront, however, for a city government to presume that an open town is what the majority of the convention delegates want.

Mayor Thompson of Chicago will earn the approval of right-thinking people if he carries out his promise that the lid will not be lifted during the days of the national Republican convention. The scenes four years ago are yet a shame to the city.

The Christian people and all decency-loving citizens of Chicago are still willing to be shown that the present administration stands for the higher things.

A QUARTER OF A CENTURY OF SERVICE

FEW universities of the country have had such remarkable history as the University of Chicago. Created by the genius of William Rainey Harper, it has been projected on such broad lines that every year has meant new growth and development. At the convocation this month the university celebrates twenty-five years of history and the divinity school fifty years. The divinity school is more prominent in the university scheme of things than in some universities and helps to furnish religious idealism to the whole enterprise.

The Larger Christian World

Vacation Bible School Movement Spreads.

The daily Vacation Bible School originated in a single denomination but has already spread until the schools of Chicago are now federated and have a superintendent, Mr. Emerson O. Bradshaw. The literature of the movement states the problem by saying there are twenty million children released from public school supervision every summer; there are 100,000 church buildings idle; there are 400,000 students from colleges and universities home and for the most part idle. These are regarded as assets which when organized in service may accomplish for the community a most significant result. Last year in the United States there were 339 such schools conducted with an enrollment of nearly 75,000 children. The average cost per child was 79 cents. The movement began in the slums but has rapidly spread to the better neighborhoods in the city.

Will Pray for the Republicans.

The ministers offering prayer in the great political conventions are given a weighty responsibility. This year Rev. John Timothy Stone of the Fourth Presbyterian church of Chicago will lead in the opening prayer at the Republican convention. During the convention both Catholic priests and Jewish rabbis will also offer prayer.

Methodists Have "Who's Who" Book.

"Who's Who" books are a commonplace around newspaper offices, but the Methodists are the first religious denomination to get out one for the men of their own fellowship. Mr. Carl F. Price has compiled such a book and it has been published by E. B. Treat and Co. It has 3,000 biographies of living Methodists put up in the briefest form, with all personal puff and commendation eliminated. Educational record, life history and present employment are the chief kinds of information given. The book covers the United States and Canada.

Ground Broken for Cathedral Nave.

The third stage in the building of the Cathedral of St. John the Divine in New York (Episcopal) was begun on May 8. At that time there were impressive ceremonies at the moving of the first earth. Governor Whitman and Mayor Mitchel were present to grace the occasion. Besides the clergy of the cathedral, Bishop Lawrence of Massachusetts, Bishop Courtney, Bishop Suffragan Burch and Bishop Greer were present.

Cuban Missionaries Adopt New Methods.

The evangelical missionaries of Cuba are finding that the new spirit in missions requires new methods. Instead of regarding everything in the existing religion of the people as bad, they undertake to utilize many customs of the Cubans in the evangelical churches. This year daily services were held during Holy Week and the Seven Words of the Cross were utilized in the sermons. The regional conference recently held there arranged that all services in English should be discontinued and that the evangelical churches in Havana should unite in the Y. M. C. A. headquarters for a union service occasionally for the purpose of showing the Cubans the essential unity of Protestantism. An Episcopal paper states that the Episcopalians will not unite in this union service.

New York Presbytery Case Settled.

The Presbyterian General Assembly has settled the charges against the New York Presbytery by re-affirming the assertion laid down in 1910 with regard to doctrine. Its five sections begin with the words: "It is an essential doctrine of the Word of God"—first, that the Word of God is free from error; then, that "Our Lord was born of the Virgin Mary;" thirdly, that Christ "offered himself a sacrifice to satisfy divine justice and to reconcile us to God;" fourthly, that "he rose from the dead with the same body, with which he suffered;" and lastly, "that our Lord showed his love and power by working mighty miracles. This working is not contrary to nature, but superior to it."

The Brooklyn Presbytery licensed more Union students this year than did the New York Presbytery but it had no Rev. John Fox of the American Bible society to watch for heresy, so no protest was made against the Brooklyn ordinations.

Social Workers Hear Sermon.

The increasing sympathy between the church and social workers is manifest on every hand. The National Conference of Charities and Correction met at Indianapolis in May and a sermon was preached to the gathering on May 14, by Rev. Worth M. Tippy, pastor of the Madison Avenue Methodist Episcopal church. Mr. Tippy said:

"The reality of religion is ceasing to be first of all doctrinal and institutional. It is now entering into the very arteries, veins, capillaries, and cells of humanity. It is a powerful ethical spirit which is pushing out into industry, into the control of cities, into international relations, forcing up into these spheres the morality which has been so long established, at least ideally, in the home and in the more private and personal relations of the people."

Sunday Golf is Taboo.

Some consideration was given by the Presbyterians at their General Assembly to the question of amending the rather strict rules of the denomination with regard to Sunday amusements. The question of allowing Sunday golf was raised on the floor but the adventurous man who suggested it was seated amidst a chorus of No.'s.

Jews Protest Christian Hymns.

The land of the Pilgrims has fallen into new hands these latter days, as is manifest by the protest of the Jews in Massachusetts against the use of Christian hymns in the public schools. The Board of Education in Boston has replied adversely to the request of the Jews that the use of such hymns be discontinued. They take the attitude that the singing of a hymn is not doctrinal instruction. The Jews are afforded frequent opportunity to take their children out of the schools on Jewish holidays when they may be instructed in Jewish institutions.

Would Abolish Sunday Funerals.

The chauffeurs' union of Chicago is asking the Federation of Labor to take action against the custom of holding Sunday funerals in the city. It is said that there are five times as many funerals on Sundays as on Saturdays and that Sunday is the hardest day in all the week for the chauffeurs. The Episcopal clergy of Chicago have taken a stand upholding the position of the chauffeurs.

A Million Armenians Die.

If any particular newspaper report of Armenian atrocities may have been exaggerated, it is still true that one of the greatest outrages of all history has been committed in that unhappy land. Dr. Charles Ussher publishes in the Mohammedan World what appears to be a sober estimate of the facts and he states that a million Armenians have died at the hands of the Turks. Dr. Ussher declares that the German allies of the Turk are not to be acquitted of some measure of responsibility for the outrages. He has reports which he believes are authentic of German officers herding Armenian women and children on the roads along which they were hounded into exile.

Methodists do not Change Amusement Rule.

The consideration of the rule against certain specified amusements in the Methodist discipline is always the occasion of an animated parliamentary battle in the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal church. This question was raised again this year, and after debate a vote was taken. The house was almost evenly divided but those in favor of a change were not able to muster a majority. Those desiring a change wish a more general statement which will not specify any given amusement but declare that all amusements should be subject to the witness of the Christian conscience.

"Billy" Sunday Tabernacle in Boston Held Up.

The committee in Boston which is preparing for the "Billy" Sunday meetings is having much difficulty in arranging to build the tabernacle which is usually provided for these meetings. A special bill passed the legislature of Massachusetts to permit the tabernacle to be built, but Governor McCall vetoed it. Dr. Cortland Myers declares that the governor has "outraged the Christian sentiment of this Commonwealth and signed his political death warrant." Other Christians in the city admit that perhaps the governor acted on principle in refusing to sign a piece of special legislation in behalf of a church group.

The Church and Missions

BY ASA McDANIEL.

THIS quarter's lessons give us a word picture of missions in the early church. These men were putting into practice the teaching of Jesus on the subject of evangelization. In other words, they were doing for the world what they thought he would do for it. They were true to the command and plan of our Lord: "Ye shall be my witnesses both in Jerusalem, and in all Judaea and Samaria, and unto the uttermost part of the earth." These were among the last words of the Lord to his disciples. They made a practical impression upon their lives. Similar words made their impression upon the minds of the evangelists, for all have recorded them. No one can read the Gospels attentively without being impressed by the constant activity of Jesus in behalf of his fellows. He "went about doing good." He was not content to have people come to him to be saved, but went into their native haunts that "he might seek and save the lost." When Jesus saw the needy multitude he had compassion on them. He saw the deepest needs of their lives, and sought to give them the highest gift. His compassion assumed some practical form. Most of us have some sort of interest in those who are in the dark, but our anxiety is not so keen or our desire to help so consuming as that of our divine Lord.

We are not as yet familiar with a great missionary program sustained through the year. Special days are good but every-day interest is better. There is abundant material for instruction in all the grades, and it should be given in a systematic way. If we are really Christians, we will have a deep compassion upon those who are distressed and scattered, as sheep not having a shepherd and will give them the light. The church is to continue steadfastly in the apostles' teaching and fellowship, in the breaking of bread and prayers. If she does she will instruct the entire membership in the work of missions and concerning the deep needs of the people so that a well founded and thoroughly sustained compassion may take possession of it. When we stop working for the church and work through the church to help our fellow men in all lands, the world will come to know the great Founder of the church and will allow him to use them to give his life to others.

The church has neglected too long the task of fitting young men and women for the great work of missions. We are not urging our young men and women to do mission work. On the other hand, we are urging the men of special promise to enter some profession or some business where greater financial returns might be expected. We are not only not praying for more laborers to be sent into the fields from our families, but the prayers that are offered point in the opposite direction. It is said that Dr. Chamberlain's mother was instrumental in sending eleven of her sons and daughters and nephews and nieces into the foreign field. If the fathers and mothers of our churches would do the same thing there would be workers enough for every field, home and foreign.

The lack of interest on the part of the church and parents helps to account for the lack of young men for the ministry. This wail is coming from all parts of the country. One eastern theological school that formerly had a hundred students now has but four. We are told that our own churches are in urgent need of a thousand men to carry on the work that has been inaugurated. Other men are needed to undertake new work in neglected fields. We are lamenting the lack of men, but are not acting in the only way that promises an adequate supply. We must lead them into the ministry just as we urge men to enter any other calling or walk of life. This will require spiritual vision and consecration upon the part of the parents of the church. We cannot expect to lead where we are not willing to go. To pay a hundred dollars per month to an expert for taking care of a fine horse and only pay five or ten dollars per year to send the gospel to the wide world is not a very good inducement for the boy of that home to enter the world-wide mission field for a a life work.

A church that has not concern for anything beyond its own neighborhood will very soon begin to lose interest in its neighbors. The light that shines brightest at home will also be seen farthest from home. The church that goes has a right to claim the promise, "Lo, I am with you always, even to the end of the world." It is just as true of the individuals in the church.

The kingdom of God belongs not to the most enlightened, but to the best, and the best man is the most unselfish man. Humble, constant, voluntary self-sacrifice —this is what constitutes the true dignity of man. And through it is written, "The last shall be first."—Amiel.

Disciples Table Talk

Anniversary Week at First Church, Lincoln, Neb.

The week beginning June 11 will be observed as Anniversary Week at Lincoln, Neb., First church, to which H. H. Harmon has ministered for nearly a decade. A house to house canvass is being made to secure $2,500 by the anniversary time to be expended in improvements on the church building. The canvass is under the direction of the pastor's assistant, J. L. Kohler. The Bible-school at First has grown in the last few weeks to be the largest in the state. L. C. Oberlies' Bible class with over a hundred members is meeting in a tent during the summer.

College of Missions, Indianapolis, in Closing Exercises.

The closing exercises of the year at College of Missions, Indianapolis, Ind., were held on June 2. An address on behalf of the mission boards was given by Mrs. Anna R. Atwater, President of the C. W. B. M. Dr. Harry C. Hurd delivered the address and presented the missionaries. The response was given by Roderick A. MacLeod. President F. W. Burnham, of the Home Society, delivered the commencement address. The dedication of missionaries was conducted by the following men: Charles T. Paul, F. E. Lumley and J. G. McGavran, of the College of Missions; W. C. Morro, Jabez Hall and C. E. Underwood, of Butler College; and C. H. Winders, pastor at Downey Avenue. The following members of the class of 1916, were appointed to definite fields: To China—Miss Annie Louise Fillmore, Ben Edgar Holroyd, Miss Laura Lynne Major. To Tibet—Roderick Alexander MacLeod. Miss Esther Evelyn Martin, Miss Idella Eleanor Wilson. To India—Thomas Newton Hill. Miss Adda Neva Nicholson. To Africa—Miss Tobitha Lieu Alderson. To Cuba—Elmer Leon Griffith. To Argentina—Clement Manly Morton. To Social Service—Mrs. Ida Jeans Dameron. To Mountain Schools—Mrs. Florence Grace Thompson.

"Home-Coming Day" at Lima, Central.

May 21 was a great day at Central church, Lima, O., where A. B. Houze ministers. On that day was celebrated the fifth anniversary of the dedication of the new church, and men and women from all over the country came to Lima to attend the celebration. Among the speakers during the day were: W. A. Brundige, pastor at Bluffton, O.; G. W. Watson, pastor at LaFayette, Ind.; C. J. Richards, pastor at Lancaster, O.; W. D. Fletcher, pastor at Vaughnsville, O., and Prof. Errett Gates, of the University of Chicago. It is estimated that fully 1,600 people attended the day's services.

A New Educational Movement in Texas.

At the recent convention of Texas Disciples a great educational movement was inaugurated for the state. The purposes of the campaign are two: better Bible-schools and greater efficiency in the state's colleges. The movement is not entirely a new one, but the Disciples of the state were wakened to an appreciation of its possibilities by the report made at the convention of the Educational Committee appointed some time ago. From now on the movement will be in charge of a committee appointed at the late convention. The twenty-five members of the committee are as follows: H. W. Stark, V. Z. Jarvis, S. J. McFarland, Walter P. Jennings, A. D. Rogers, E. C. Mobley, J. W. Kerns, H. R. Ford, M. H. Reed, L. D. Anderson, H. W. Head, C. W. Gibson, Dr. Bacon Saunders, E. M. Waits, T. E. Tomlinson, A. A. Everts, S. B. Cowell, W. L. Hay, W. H. Lucas, J. F. Holt, Burl Holloway, E. F. Elkin, L. C. Brite, F. F. Walters, F. G. Jones. A Ways and Means Committee has been appointed consisting of the following: W. P. Jennings, John G. Slayter, E. M. Waits, S. J. McFarland, L. D. Anderson, V. Z. Jarvis and Dan D. Rogers. Endowment Secretary C. S. Weaver of T. C. U. is ex-officio member of all committees in this movement and attends the various meetings. Most of the churches have already agreed to lend their ministers a month and pay their salaries while they engage in this movement, the Educational Movement paying their expenses.

Frank Waller Allen Author of Two New Books Soon to Be Published.

Frank Waller Allen, pastor at First church, Springfield, Ill., will have two books brought out by Doubleday Page & Company of Garden City, N. Y., within a short time. The books are divergent in tone and subject.

Rev. Frank Waller Allen, author of two new books soon to come from the press.

One is a novel which is centered in the far east. "Brothers of Bagdad" is the title. The publishers bought the manuscript to run complete in their monthly magazine, "Short Stories," for July, and asked permission to bring it out in book form. H. E. Maule, editor of "Short Stories," refers to the novel as one of the most delightfully whimsical stories of mystery which has come into his hands for a long time. "Brothers of Bagdad" is advertised in the issue of "Short Stories" now on the book stands. It was the first intention to publish the story under a nom de plume and the advertisement accredits the novel to Allen Waller. Mr. Allen has now agreed to let the book come out under his own name. The other book to be published by Doubleday Page & Company is Mr. Allen's series of sermons on "The Religion of a Modern Man," delivered at Springfield last winter and published in The Christian Century a little later. This book will have a foreword by Vachel Lindsay.

Report of Ohio State Convention, at Mt. Vernon.

Ohio Disciples held their annual state convention in the beautiful little city of Mt. Vernon, May 22-25. President McLean, of the Foreign Society said to T. L. Lowe, Columbus, who sends this report, "This is Ohio's greatest convention," and this, writes Mr. Lowe, seemed to be the universal verdict. Over 500 delegates paid the registration fee. The report of the efficient state secretary, I. J. Cahill, showed a notable work done and more money raised than ever before—something like $23,000. The C. W. B. M. sessions were "as crammed with rich things as ever." A. McLean read a paper on "Latin America" that was a marvel for information on the South American countries. As usual, the men had separate sessions while the women were carrying on their program. Dr. J. A. Leonard, superintendent of the Mansfield reformatory was chief speaker and a big crowd of the masculine persuasion heard him. Two speakers from outside the state who were new to Ohio conventions were Editor F. D. Kershner of St. Louis and Professor W. S. Athearn of Drake University. Both of them, according to our reporter, made great "hits." The four addresses of the editor of the "Christian-Evangelist" are said to have been scholarly, searching, spiritual presentations of great themes." Prof. Athearn was refreshingly new and thought-provoking in his treatment of his subjects. The convention will meet in Bellefontaine next year.

Professor Athearn's Plans for a Year.

The report has gone about through the papers and otherwise that Professor W. S. Athearn would accept a chair in Berkeley University. This report proves to be unfounded. Professor Athearn will spend the next year or two in the University of Chicago doing graduate work. His schedule for the summer is as follows: high school commencement addresses during the week of May 29-June 4, at Marshall, Owatonna, Waseca, Rochester and Fairmont, Minn.; six addresses at the Arkansas State Sunday-school convention, Hope, Ark., June 6-8; five addresses before the New York State Sunday-school convention, Albany, N. Y., June 14-15; one lecture at Bluffton college, Bluffton, O., June 19; six addresses before the Ohio State Sunday-school convention, Findlay, O., June 20-23; four lectures in the University of Chicago, June 27-30; sixty-two lectures in Columbia University and Union Theological Seminary, July 11-August 18; four addresses at county Sunday-school association, Uniontown, Pa., August 24-25; ten addresses before the city teachers' institute, Des Moines, Ia.; August 30-September 2; three addresses at Sunday-school rally, New Hampton, Mo., September 3; six addresses before Sunday-school convention, Pittsburg, Pa., September 18-19; six addresses at Youngstown, O., September 20-23; three addresses at Cuyahoga Falls, O., September 24; and ten addresses before city Sunday-school association, Cleveland, O., September 25-30. Professor Athearn's permanent address is Chicago.

Christian Endeavor Society Has Novel Feature.

The Christian Endeavor topic for May 21 was "The Blessings of Peace and How to Secure Them." The society at Thirtieth Street Church of Christ at Newport, Va., asked prominent people throughout the country to send telegrams or letters with messages on the subject of peace to be read at the meeting. Responses were received from many persons, including several former pastors of this church. Among those responding were: Josephus Daniels, Secretary of the Navy; Peter Ainslie, H. O. Pritchard, Milo Atkinson, W. B. Taylor, J. T. Hundley, J. H. Mohorter, H. J. Derthick and M. B. Madden.

Ordination Services at College of the Bible, Lexington, Ky.

There was held in the chapel of the College of the Bible on Wednesday evening, May 24, the annual ordination service of the college at which time eleven young men were set apart by prayer and the laying on of hands to the ministry of the Word. Each of these eleven men had been recommended as a fit subject for ordination by the church of which he is a member or to which he is preaching at this time. All of the men have had experience extending over more than a year as regular ministers. Seven of the number will graduate from the College of the Bible at this year's commencement. Perhaps no better class of young preachers has gone out from the college in any one year, reports Dean Hall L. Calhoun. The services were held under the auspices of all the different congregations of Disciples worshiping in Lexington and these were assisted by the faculty of the College of the Bible. Those present at the service say that it was perhaps the most impressive and interesting ordination service ever held in Lexington. Among the participants on the program of the services were: Alfred Fairhurst, G. W. Hemry, E. T. Edmonds, E. E. Snoddy, Dean H. L. Calhoun, Mark Collis, W. C. Bower, A. W. Fortune and Wm. Ross Lloyd. A fine male quartet was an attractive feature.

Rural Church Problems Discussed in Montana School.

There will be a country church institute in connection with the State Agricultural College of Montana this summer. One of the chief speakers is Professor A. W. Taylor, of Columbia, Mo. There will be courses of instruction in Christian Sociology, Church Administration, Sunday School Work, Social Service, Co-operation of Religious Forces and Evangelism, as well as on the country church problem. The conference will last about eight days. A strenuous effort will be made among the Christian churches of the state to be well represented there.

Massachusetts Disciples Ask Aid.

The First Christian Church of Lynn, Mass., observes its third anniverary on June 18, 1916. This church has a membership of sixty poor working people and has a good building costing $12,000. The church is doing a fine work, all departments being well organized, a good Bible-school, with an average attendance of eighty, and the church membership has doubled within a year. There is still an indebtedness of $3,500 on the church, which is a heavy burden to the congregation. An effort is being made at this anniversary to pay off this mortgage. A. B. Crocker, secretary of the church, writes: "Our church is exceedingly weak in New England. It ought to be better established than it is. Will you not try and help us in our great need? Send your offering to Harry L. Deicoff, 31 New Park St., Lynn, Mass. We will acknowledge your offering through the church papers."

—Ivan W. Agee, of Union Avenue church, Litchfield, Ill., delivered the baccalaureate address for the graduating class of the Litchfield, high school. His theme was "Service."

—Dr. J. W. Young, of Hutchinson, Kan., who will sail in a few days for medical mission work in the Philippines, was given a farewell reception by the First church, Hutchinson. Bert Wilson, of the Foreign Society, was a special speaker.

—H. J. Crockett, of Third church, Topeka, Kan., preached a sermon on the question, "Is Universal Peace a Pipe Dream?"

—R. H. Miller, of the Men and Millions Movement, delivered the baccalaureate address at Texas Christian University, at Dallas, on June 4, in place of Harry D. Smith, of Central church, Dallas, who was ill.

—Judge B. R. Davidson, of Fayetteville, Ark., was chairman of the Arkansas state convention, which was held at Hot Springs May 29-June 1.

—Z. T. Sweeney, of Columbus, Ind., will deliver the address at the dedication service of Central church, Fairmont, W. Va., on June 25. Clarence D. Mitchell is pastor at Fairmont.

—The Men's Popular Bible Class, of First church, Hagerstown Md., recently gave a banquet in the parlors of the fine new building there, at which W. J. Clarke, adult leader of the A. C. M. S. Bible school department, was the chief speaker. Over a hundred men were present. G. W. Townsend is pastor of this church.

—The men's class of the church at Shelbyville, Ky., recently arranged a union meeting for the community, at which E. L. Powell, of Louisville, was the leading attraction. Mr. Powell spoke on the topic, "The Jobless Man in the Church."

—Garry L. Cook, Indiana's state Bible-school superintendent, recently filled the pulpit, morning and evening, at the Jefferson, Ind., church.

—R. M. Hopkins spoke at First church, Grand Rapids, Mich., late in May. While in Grand Rapids Mr. Hopkins, with W. V. Nelson, pastor at First church, completed arrangements for the state convention of Michigan Bible-schools, which will be held at Lansing in July.

—Judge U. Z. Wiley, of Indianapolis, teacher of one of the Hoosier city's largest Bible classes, addressed a joint meeting of the adult classes of the Brazil, Ind., Bible-school recently.

—The men's Bible-class of the church at Moline, Ill., gave a reception to the newly installed pastor of the church, I. H. Beckholt; a week later the entire congregation gave a reception for the new pastor and his family.

—Geo. W. Brown, formerly of Paris, Ill., but during the past year superintendent of the Pana, Ill., schools, gave an address at the Paris church on the theme, "What Next?" Mr. Brown discussed the new country life movement from the viewpoint of an expert in rural sociology.

—During the recent meeting at Indiana Harbor, Ind., conducted by C. J. Sharp, of Hammond, forty people from the Chicago Heights church were in attendance on one evening. J. Wade Seniff assisted in the singing at the revival. H. A. Carpenter, the pastor, is rejoicing in the recent unusual achievements at Indiana Harbor.

—O. W. Stewart, prohibition promoter of Chicago, addressed a union meeting of the Leroy, Ill., churches, discussing the liquor question from the economic viewpoint.

—H. E. Stafford, of the Massillon, O., church, addressed a great audience, of railway men and others, and in the address advocated an eight-hour day for working men.

—First church, Frankfort, Ind., will erect a new chapel at a cost of $35,000. E. D. Salkeld is pastor of this aggressive church.

—Springfield, Ill., First church, will have a Director of Religious Education. I. M. Allen, principal of the Springfield high school, has accepted this task, and has already assumed his new duties. Professor Allen will have entire charge of the curriculum, teachers, and methods of the church school. The work of Miss Eva Lemert in this field for the past few weeks is performing wonders for the school. The work is being entirely reconstructed, new methods are being applied, and a membership campaign is being conducted.

—J. W. Underwood, of Central church, Anderson, Ind., had a busy day May 28. In the morning he had charge of the annual memorial service for the local G. A. R. and W. R. C., and in the evening preached the baccalaureate sermon to the high school graduates of the city. There were six additions to the church membership on May 21.

—Chas. H. Bloom, pastor at Beaver Falls, Pa., preached the baccalaureate sermon for the local high school on May 21.

—A. L. Ward, of the church at Lebanon, Ind., sends word that this church contributed $4,500 to the Men and Millions work, instead of $2,500, as reported in a recent issue of this paper. Twenty young people signed "Life cards." Mr. Ward writes that there were 140 young people present at the banquet at which the appeal was made by the missionary leaders. The Lebanon pastor preached the annual sermon to the local high school, his theme being "The More Abundant Life." The high school authorities gave high praise to the sermon.

—A. F. Ritchey, of York, Neb., church, preached a sermon on "The Battle Cry of Peace," in which he scored the preparedness dogma.

—The men's class of the Carlisle, Ky., school had 593 men present on May 21. This class is in a contest with the men's organization of the Cynthiana school.

—President H. O. Pritchard preached the baccalaureate sermon at Eureka on June 4. F. W. Burnham gave the address to the preparatory department, and O. W. Stewart delivered the commencement address. A feature of commencement time was the giving of the play "The Passing of the Third Floor Back" by the Senior class players.

—The new officers of the Ohio state missionary society, elected at the recent convention at Mt. Vernon, are as follows: President, C. B. Reynolds, Alliance; first vice-president, C. R. Sine, Hamilton; second vice-president, A. B. Houze, Lima; corresponding secretary, I. J. Cahill, Cleveland; recording secretary, M. L. Jenny, Mansfield; assistant recording secretary, R. C. —Over five hundred new Christian Endeavor societies have been organized in "Dixie" within the past nine months.

—For some time the Endeavor Society at Lancaster, Ky., has furnished support for Hisa Komai San, in care of Miss Bertha Clawson, Tokyo, Japan. She is now ready to enter the Bible College and prepare for definite Christian service as a Bible woman. These young people could not carry forward a more Christlike service.

—J. Boyd Jones, who came to Terre Haute, Ind., Central, from Anderson, Central, a year ago reviewed his year's work on May 21, and said he had not found Terre Haute as bad as it had been pictured to him. During the year over a hundred persons have been added to the church membership, fully a fourth of these having come within the past month. The Bible-school has increased in average attendance about 150.

—A. A. Everts, a leading jeweler of Dallas, Tex., occupied the pulpit at McKinney, on a Sunday when the pastor, W. P. Jennings, was out of the city, and made a strong impression with a talk on "Financing the Kingdom." One of the Texas leaders think Mr. Everts could be secured to address other Texas churches on this important topic. He is said to have some most helpful plans for financing the church.

—J. E. Chase, pastor at Lubbock, Tex., is undertaking the erection of a new church home for his congregation. The building will cost about $50,000.

—Bethany Assembly program includes a two-day C. W. B. M. Rally, Aug. 3-4. The Indiana C. W. B. M. will be in charge, Mrs. O. H. Greist, president, preaching. Speakers from out the state will be heard, as well as our own Hoosier talent. C. W. B. M. days at Bethany are among the best always, and often among the largest. The aim this year is 1,000 women in attendance.

—H. W. Elliott, state secretary of Kentucky Discipledom, is about to complete his twenty-fifth year of service in this important work. The Kentucky churches will hold their convention this year at Winchester, the third week in September.

—Otis Hawkins, for the past six years Southwestern representative of the National Benevolent Association, has accepted a position in the St. Louis offices of the Association. The Christian Courier states that Mr. Hawkins has been a very popular man among Texas schools and churches.

—Retiring President J. C. Caldwell, of Atlantic Christian College, preached the baccalaureate sermon at this school on the theme, "The Age of Doubt."

—The Texas Christian Missionary Board, in a meeting at Dallas, re-elected A. D. Rogers for another year of service as state superintendent of missions.

—W. P. Jennings, of McKinney, Tex., church, is proving a popular man in his community. He has been called upon this year to deliver several educational and memorial addresses in surrounding towns and cities.

—The Bethany Chautauqua, Bethany, Neb., will put on a six day chautauqua beginning June 29. The sessions will be held at the Bethany Assembly grounds.

—Memorial Day exercises were held at Central church, New York, Finis Idleman, pastor, speaking on the topic, "The Noble Dead." A male quartet sang and the orchestra, with harp, gave several selections. A number of troops of Boy Scouts and Girl Scouts attended and saluted "Old Glory," which this church always has hanging above the pulpit. J. M. Philputt spoke at the morning service.

—Two weeks ago Cotner University suffered a loss of about $10,000 by fire, and came very near losing much more. Repairs on the damaged buildings are being made, so that classes are not interfered with.

—The Bible study classes of the school at Altoona, Ia., held their graduating exercises on June 8. The address was given by W. A. Shullenberger, new pastor of Central church, Des Moines. The baccalaureate sermon was given on June 4 by the church's pastor, J. A. Dillinger, his theme being "God's Book."

—F. W. Emerson, former secretary of Southern California Disciples, is now working in Oregon as a Prohibition promoter.

—The South American regional conference deputation, appointed by the Panama Congress, will hold a three days' session at the College of Missions, Indianapolis, June 14-16. The members of the deputation represent the leading denominations of the country. They chose Indianapolis as a meeting place because of their interest in becoming better acquainted with the College of Missions. Their purpose in this meeting is to formulate their findings and recommendations with reference to mission work in South America. President Charles T. Paul, Dr. Irene T. Myers, of Transylvania College, and C. C. Morrison, are Disciple members of the deputation.

Chicago Disciples Will Banquet.

The Christian Business Men's Association and the Disciples' Union of Chicago will hold a combination banquet at the Great Northern Hotel on Monday evening, June 12, at 7 p. m. A big feature of the meeting will be speeches from Disciples in attendance at the political conventions, among whom will be C. C. Chapman, of California. C. C. Morrison, editor of The Christian Century, will give a talk on the Panama Congress. The banquet will be in charge of E. B. Witwer and O. F. Jordan.

—The Quarterly Assembly of Chicago Disciples was held in the First Methodist Church in the downtown district on Sunday afternoon, May 28. Addresses were made by Charles Clayton Morrison who interpreted the spiritual implications of the Disciples' plea, by Mr. Wallace C. Payne, of Indianapolis, who spoke on the work of women in the Church, and by Austin Hunter, of Jackson Boulevard church, who made a comparative exhibit of membership and missionary offerings of the Disciples' churches in several cities, including Chicago. The showing was surprisingly favorable to Chicago as compared to Indianapolis, St. Louis, Cincinnati, and other cities.

—C. C. Morrison spoke on South America, "The Continent That Had a Bad Start," at Monroe Street church, Chicago, on Sunday morning, May 28, and at Evanston church in the evening. Mr. Morrison will speak at Jackson Boulevard church, Chicago, on Sunday evening, June 11.

She was prominent in the work of the Dorcas Society, the C. W. B. M., the W. C. T. U., the Crittenton Home, the Woman's Council and the Y. W. C. A. Her death occurred on May 21. She leaves a husband six children and nineteen grandchildren.

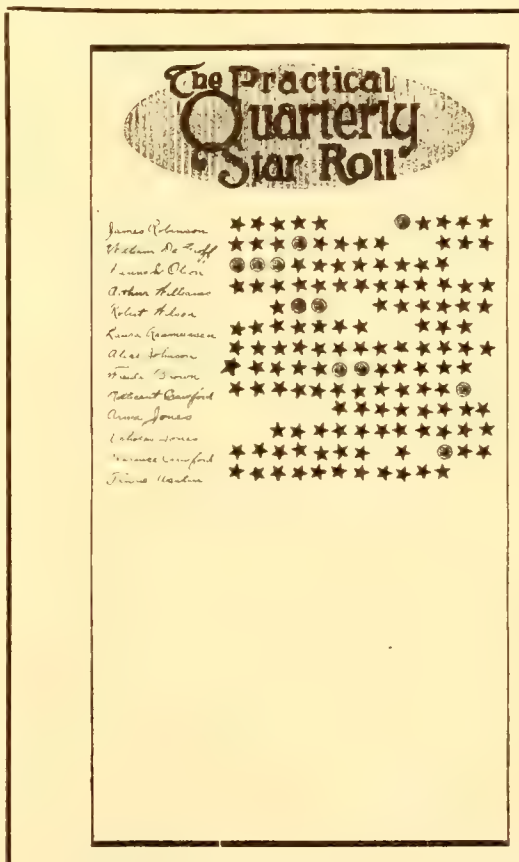
During February four were added at Vigan.



The fact that at the Filipino Convention at Aparri 140 baptisms were reported, from February 1, 1915 to February 1, 1916, in a district that receives only a yearly visit from a missionary and is distressingly short of evangelists, is ample testimony of the ripeness of the field.

The total number of baptisms in Philippine Islands during the year 1915 was 710. There are 66 organized and unorganized Sunday-schools, with a reported attendance of 5,039. Thirty-five students are enrolled in the Bible Colleges at Manila and Vigan. Besides this, 110 are taking correspondence courses in the Bible. Four newspapers are published; two monthlies in Tagalog in Manila, and one Ilocano Weekly, and one monthly in English in Vigan. The larger of the Tagalog monthlies has a circulation of 14,800. The three hospitals in the Philippine Island have a total of 55,239 persons treated. Surely these few facts not only justify missions in the Philippines, but call for more adequate support of this great work.

Mrs. Royal J. Dye of Pomona, Calif., sends a telegram, part of which is as follows: "Pomona's school has hopes of supporting its own Living-link this Children's Day." This is good for Pomona. The church is already supporting two Living-links, and this would be the third through the Foreign Society. Hearty congratulations! A number of other schools ought to take the same step.

Sunday, May 21, was Anna Louise Fillmore Day in the Sunday-school at Norwood, Ohio. Miss Fillmore was reared in this school. She graduated from the University of Cincinnati and has also completed her course in the College of Missions. Already $400 is in sight to apply on her support. It was a great day. The program was managed by C. R. Stauffer and C. W. Flopper. The attendance was large and enthusiasm abounded.

Stephen J. Corey, Secretary.

A Notable Success

The welcome that has been given by the leaders in the churches and Sunday schools to the little book just issued by the Disciples Publication Society:

"The Training of Church Members"

is evidence that this text has come to meet a very definite need in the churches.

The following are typical letters received from leaders concerning the book:

FROM REV. H. CLAY TRUSTY, Seventh Street Church, Indianapolis: "I have examined thoroughly the manual, "The Training of Church Members," and think it a very fine thing. We need to spend some time with young Christians on the fundamentals of our Christian religion and church life. This affords a splendid guide."

FROM REV. L. C. MOORE, Waterloo, Ia.: "This book is filling a long known need in our mid-week service. I am more than pleased with it. The attendance was doubled in four weeks by the use of the text."

FROM REV. IRVING BROWN, Sac City, Ia.: "I am much impressed with it. Shall introduce it either at the C. E. or mid-week prayer-meetings. We all need the training it supplies."

FROM REV. L. J. MARSHALL, Wabash Ave. Church, Kansas City, Mo.:

"This is a timely piece of work. Its clear and simple presentations of the lessons to be taught should make it popular among Christian workers."

How You May Use "The Training of Church Members in Your Work

(1) As a book of study in your mid-week or Endeavor prayer-meeting.

(2) As a text-book in your young people's Sunday school classes.

(3) As a text for study in a special "Pastor's class" organized for training of young Christians and meeting either through the week or on Sunday.

(4) As a teacher-training course.

Disciples Publication Society

The Disciples Publication Society is an organization through which churches of the Disciples of Christ seek to promote undenominational and constructive Christianity.

The relationship it sustains to the Disciples is intimate and organic, though not official. The Society is not a private institution. It has no capital stock. No individuals profit by its earnings.

The charter under which the Society exists determines that whatever profits are earned shall be applied to agencies which foster the cause of religious education, although it is clearly conceived that its main task is not to make profits but to produce literature for building up character and for advancing the cause of religion.

The Disciples Publication Society regards itself as a thoroughly undenominational institution. It is organized and constituted by individuals and churches who interpret the Disciples' religious reformation as ideally an unsectarian and unecclesiastical fraternity, whose common tie and original impulse are fundamentally the desire to practice Christian unity with all Christians.

The Society therefore claims fellowship with all who belong to the living Church of Christ, and desires to co-operate with the Christian people of all communions as well as with the congregations of Disciples, and to serve all.

The Christian Century, the chief publication of the Society, desires nothing so much as to be the worthy organ of the Disciples' movement. It has no ambition at all to be regarded as an organ of the Disciples' denomination. It is a free interpreter of the wider fellowship in religious faith and service which it believes every church of Disciples should embody. It strives to interpret all communions, as well as the Disciples, in such terms and with such sympathetic insight as may reveal to all their essential unity in spite of denominational isolation. The Christian Century, though published by the Disciples, is not published for the Disciples alone. It is published for the Christian world. It desires definitely to occupy a catholic point of view and it seeks readers in all communions.

Two Great Bible Courses

For Summer Study

When the summer season comes adult classes often become restless under the courses of study that have been followed during the year. Why not consider for your class one of the splendid courses on the Bible which have been especially prepared for class study? One of these deals in Old Testament life, the other with the New Testament.

BY DR. HERBERT L. WILLETT.

is a course treating in a most attractive way the mountain peak personalities of the Old Testament. Moses, Samuel, David, Elijah, Isaiah and the other great spokesmen for God are here made to live again in twentieth century life. A thoughtful class will have its interest renewed by this fine course.

"The Life of Jesus"

BY DR. LOA E. SCOTT.

is a question and answer study of the life of Jesus and is especially adapted to High School and adult age. Hundreds of classes have been built up on the basis of this attractive course, and there is no reason why your class should wait until autumn or winter to begin the work.

DON'T WASTE THE SUMMER! MAKE IT COUNT FOR GENUINE STUDY!

Send $1.00 for a copy of Dr. Willett's book, 50c for Dr. Scott's, or $1.35 for the two. Then decide which you will choose for your summer study.

Shall Christians Go Into Politics?

HOW ARE YOU GOING TO VOTE?

This question will be asked a good many times during the next few months. In these days of political confusion, when every morning's paper brings a new sensation in party politics, it is a burning question with delegates and leaders. It will be a question that will soon confront every male citizen, and also the women in many states.

Shall religion go into politics? We can imagine that the first reaction of everybody to such a question will be an indignant "No!" We do not want our religion befouled by what seems to us the slime of trading partyism.

We have the tradition of the divorce of church and state in America, a tradition which few of us would consider abandoning. Since the days of Constantine, the church has had much experience in mixing up with the government. The emperor gave the bishops the power of conducting courts. Later the church with the forged document of the Donation of Constantine claimed supreme power in the world. Christianity was more nearly defeated in the world by this assumption of power than by anything else in its history. We do not want to secularize our religion.

Yet the church in America has never dared be entirely silent on political matters. In slavery days, the pulpit of Henry Ward Beecher thundered against our "peculiar institution" with power, as did many lesser pulpits. These voices were answered by those who declared that slavery was taught in the Bible. It was humanity against the letter of the law. The church found from the events of history that "the letter killeth, but the spirit giveth life."

Nor is the church of today entirely silent in political matters. Through the Anti-Saloon League, most of the great communions are federated against the saloon. Candidates are endorsed or black-listed according to their attitude toward the great reform. Woman suffrage has been carried into the pulpit in some instances. Ministers' meetings often pass resolutions on political questions. It is clear that the church has never been able to divorce itself entirely from politics.

If religion is as big as life, religion has to do with politics as with everything else.

The relation of religion and politics is as old as the relation of the Hebrew prophet with the king.

Amos was a religious politician interested in social justice. He carried his message to the king's capital.

Isaiah was a religious politician with a message about the international problems of his day. He believed in neutrality.

Secular politicians will always hate religious men who bring idealism into political life. Kings despised and persecuted the true prophets, while they rewarded the false prophets who gave religious sanction to policies that were secular and evil.

What America needs in the present election period is a political prophet!

This prophet would use the spirit and point of view of Jesus in considering world problems and local problems.

America is not yet conscious of her divinely appointed place in human history. Neither was Israel until the prophetic voice and the divine providence forced her unwilling feet into the path she was to walk.

What does God want America to do this year?

We cannot believe that a religious man can claim for America insularity and provincialism. There is a kind of selfish aloofness from world problems that was once made possible by distance and difficulty of travel and communication; this is now broken up by our inventions. America is in the stream of the world's life. Interested as the Christian is in a world-wide brotherhood, let him rejoice that America has forever lost her isolation. Whatever it may cost, we want to play our part in the world's life. We must vote for men who are willing to do this in a Christian way.

The internal problems of America will be treated from the human and religious point of view by the Christian. Baal was the god of good crops in Israel. Jehovah stood for the greater spiritual principle of life. Any man of any party who asks us to vote for prosperity and a full dinner pail against social justice and a bigger life of the spirit would make idolaters of us all!

In these days when we are trying to fan our feeble patriotism with parades, we need some one who shall tell us how we may be sure that God is with America.

If religion should go into politics, there would be no more double standards of ethics, one for private life and another for the public. Some of the worst gangsters in the history of Chicago have been irreproachable in the family life. This dualism is more dangerous to the nation than out-and-out knavery.

The religiously honest man in politics will be a fearless man who will not regard immediate success as of more importance than his place in the imperishable history of the race. Lincoln went down to defeat once, for in his defeat he knew were the seeds of victory. This was Christian statesmanship, of which the world stands much in need.

God went before the Hebrews. Is he concerned about America? Are we God's chosen people for any period in universal history?

The Roman gave the world law; the Greek gave it beauty and philosophy; the Jew, religion. What has America to give?

Perhaps America is the nation that is to make the world acknowledge the sacredness of human life. We purged away slavery that we might fulfil this lofty destiny. We shall purge away our other social iniquities, to become the prophet nation of God, proclaiming that people are worth more than all else.

The World's Challenge

A Baccalaureate Message Delivered Before the Graduating Class at the University of Kentucky.

By A. W. FORTUNE

"BEHOLD, I have set before thee a door opened, which none can shut." That was a part of the seer's message to the church in Philadelphia, and it is his message to the members of this graduating class, and to all other young men and women who are preparing themselves to take their place in life.

The church in Philadelphia had a great opportunity before it, because of the situation in which it was placed. God had set before it an open door and no man could shut that door. Because of your preparation you have great opportunities before you. These opportunities are God's open doors, and he expects you to enter them. These opportunities are also challenges which the world is hurling at you.

THE CHALLENGE TO THE TRAINED.

The world has a challenge to all ambitious young men and women. There are some young men and women who do not have any serious purpose in life and the world does not have any challenge to these. For the one who is looking for the easiest path the mountain presents no challenge. For the one who is looking for the light end the heavy burden makes no appeal. The one who is looking for ease does not see the difficult task; he follows the path of least resistance.

Ambitious young men and women, whether they have had university training or not look upon life as a challenge and they gladly accept it. But while it is true that the world has a challenge for all young people the real challenge comes to those who are trained. If the university does not create in the young a desire to get out in the world to help solve its problems, it has not properly trained them.

If a young man is afraid to meet the world and wants to stay in the university after he has finished his course, there is either something wrong with him or with the university. The athlete who has been trained is anxious for the contest in order that he may test his powers. The soldier who has been trained in military tactics is anxious for a fight in order that he may test his skill. The young man who has been trained in teaching, or in law, or in engineering is anxious to get out in the world and see what he can do. The world has a challenge for him and he is ready to answer it. The world's challenge to university men and women is different from what it used to be.

THE CHALLENGE OFTEN A SILENT APPEAL.

Formerly the university trained for a few things, and those who were thus trained had an open field. It trained for the ministry, for teaching, for law and medicine. Today the university is training men for every vocation in life and their relation to the world is entirely different from what it once was. It is still training the teacher and the doctor and the lawyer. It is also training in domestic science and agriculture. It is training in engineering and mining. It is training for every calling in life, and those who are thus trained are to go out in the world and carry out the ideals of the university.

This season through which you are passing is called commencement, and it is well designated for it is the beginning of the life for which you have been trained. As you leave your institution you will hear the challenge of the world and we are all anxious about the response which you will make to it.

WHAT THE CHALLENGE OF THE WORLD IS.

A challenge is sometimes given so explicitly that one can not misunderstand it. The world's challenge is not so explicit and it is capable of different interpretation. It is a silent appeal, but it is emphatic because it is the appeal of opportunity and need. Open doors are placed before you. These are doors of opportunity because the world's need is just beyond them. No one can close these doors, because they will stand there until the world's need has been met. If these doors seem to close against you it will be because you fail in your privilege to enter them.

The world does not challenge you to be a mere adornment. Many people have been more anxious about decoration than about clothing which is serviceable. Alexander von Humboldt observed that the South American Indians would endure the greatest hardships in the matter of insufficient clothing rather than go without the luxury of brilliant paint to decorate their naked bodies. The barbarous races of Africa decorate themselves very freely and they have reached the height of their ambition when they have reached their ideal in decorations.

EDUCATION NOT FOR ADORNMENT.

People in civilized communities are equally anxious about adornment. The poor are content with the cheaper meals or with imitation jewelry, while the rich want gold and pearls and diamonds. The poor are satisfied with ribbons and flowers, while the rich want the most expensive feathers. Many are wearing diamonds which were purchased on the installment plan, and are wearing tailor-made suits when they find it difficult to pay the bills. There are many in our day, as there have always been, who seem to think adornment is the main thing.

POSE VERSUS POISE.

Too much of the education of the past has been for the sake of adornment. Too many times the things emphasized in the schools have had little bearing on practical life, and those who went out from these schools were little more than decorations to the communities into which they went. The purpose of education among the ancient Greeks was culture. The work was done by slaves and the freedmen were educated for art's sake. Their education was for adornment and served the same purpose as the fine clothes and jewelry which they wore.

We need to be careful lest higher education in our day be for the sake of decoration. As a speaker in Transylvania chapel put it not long ago, we need to be careful lest the aim of education be pose when it should be poise. Pose is evidently what many want, for "young ladies' finishing schools" and "young gentlemen's polishing academies" have been popular. Those who go out from these schools are supposed to speak a peculiar language. As Henry van Dyke puts it: "Their mark is eccentricity. Their aim is visible separation of the cultured persons from the common herd." They must be able to talk about literature which common people can not appreciate or understand. They must rave over the latest fads in art or the latest freaks in music.

THE CLASSES AND THE MASSES.

The world has no challenge to the men and women who have been educated along those artificial lines. The great democratic world in which we live has pity and even contempt for those who come forth from the schools with these ideals. They belong to a past age and the men and women who want to live in the modern world must have a different preparation. The world does not challenge you to despise it or look down upon it.

There have always been those who felt they belonged to an elect class and hence they have looked down upon the masses. This type of thinking found striking embodiment in Nietzsche. His philosophy is summed up in the statement: "The weak and helpless must go to the wall: first principle of our love for humanity. And we shall help them to go. What is more harmful than any vice? Pity for the weak and helpless." Nietzche gloried in the subordination of the weak. He said: "With these preachers of equality I will not be mixed up and confounded. For thus speaketh justice unto me: 'Men are not equal. And neither shall they become so.'" Few have gone so far as Nietzsche, but he has many followers. There are many who believe some were born to rule and others to be ruled, and they naturally believe they belong to the ruling class.

A BASE DOCTRINE OF LIFE.

Those who have this attitude naturally look with a feeling of contempt upon the masses.

The trend of our day is away from that conception of society. The spirit of democracy is dominating the thinking of our day. A new relation between employers and employes is developing. A little stir was created when the large Ford concern was placed on the basis of sharing profits with the employes. Not long ago the International Harvester Company announced a plan to assist its employes to become stockholders. Other smaller concerns are following the example set by these two great establishments.

DEMOCRACY DOMINATING THINKING.

A new spirit is developing in politics. The reign of kings is passing and the power of political bosses is doomed. The era of the common man is being ushered in and only those who are in sympathy with the common humanity will be selected as leaders.

Education is a failure if it leads young men and women to despise the world. If you look with contempt upon the world into which you go you are untrue to the ideals of your university, for its mission is to serve the State.

The world does not challenge you to exploit it. There are some who look at everything from the point of view of their own interests. They wonder how much it can be made to yield for them. The early settlers sacrificed the forests for the sake of what they could get out of them. The farmers of the hill country of Kentucky destroyed their farms for the sake of the little corn and tobacco which they were able to make these hills yield by farming them year after year.

Men have been sacrificed in the same way. They have been worked long hours and in poorly ventilated rooms and in contact with dangerous machinery and when they were no longer profitable they were thrown to one side.

THE SACRIFICE OF MEN.

Many have had that attitude towards education. They have felt that the purpose of an education is to develop the mind so that one can make the most with the least effort. The motive which prompts many parents to send their children to college is a financial one. They believe the amount which they will be able to make because of their education will exceed what the cost of it has been. Inasmuch as they expect their girls to marry rather than enter the business world they do not send them to college.

A prominent citizen of Chicago, not many years ago, denounced higher education, and he made his attack along financial lines. He said it did not pay, and declared that boys had better go into business after they had finished the high school rather than waste those years. He said it is folly for a man who is getting $2,000 a year to think he can teach a boy how to make $10,000.

MONEY-MAKING IDEA WRONG.

Many young men and women when they leave college look at the world to see how much they can make it yield. Not what can I do for the world, but what can I get out of the world, is the motive which dominates them. This is one of the greatest dangers which confronts education today. It pays to have an education, and because it pays there is danger that it be placed on a financial basis. University men are being paid large salaries and they are leading in politics and in the control of large corporations and the danger is that they use their ability to exploit the world rather than to help the world.

Charles E. Hughes, speaking at Yale University a few years ago, said the majority of the men who had caused him most trouble by their crooked politics and their corrupt practices in corporations were university men. The more ability a man has the more dangerous he will become if his ability is turned in the wrong channel.

Young people, the challenge of the world is not that you shall be merely a decoration for it; it is not that you shall despise it; neither is it that you shall exploit it. The world needs your help and it makes a serious challenge.

A CHALLENGE FOR SERVICE.

The challenge of the world is that you shall serve it. The world is calling for men who are willing to help and there never was a time when there was a more glorious response to that call. Business men and professional men and day laborers are anxious to help their fellows. The rich and the poor, the educated and the unlearned, are anxious to make their lives count for the betterment of humanity.

The purpose of an education is to train men and women so that they will consecrate their powers to the service of humanity. Sir Philip Sidney asked: "To what purpose should our thoughts be directed to various kinds of knowledge, unless room be afforded for putting it into practice, so that public advantage may be the result?"

The leaders of education are emphasizing that purpose. They are proclaiming the fact that success is not measured by the amount of money which one has made or the power which he wields.

President Harry Pratt Judson, of Chicago University, in a little book on "The Higher Education," says: 'It is well to remember that after all business is not the whole of life. An excellent man of business may be a bad citizen, a bad father, an unhappy man. One may succeed in business and yet, even in his own judgment, make a failure of life; and it is possible to fail in business, but to make life a glorious success. Suppose one succeeds in getting a large fortune and nothing else," says Dr. Judson, "what does he amount to? He has money with no sort of idea as to its best use. He has power and doesn't know what to do with it."

THE CALL OF THE GREAT TEACHER.

The Great Teacher said: "A man's life consisteth not in the abundance of the things which he possesseth," and he might have added that it does consist in what he does with what he possesseth. He said, "he that would be greatest among you let him become servant of all." We are not here to grind something out of others for self, but to consecrate self for the uplift of others. Young people, as you go forth from your university, the world challenges you to help, and no greater challenge could possibly be given to a group of trained men and women who are facing the future.

This challenge of service means that you are to help bring the kingdom of God into the life of the world. There is nothing that will mean so much to the world as the conviction on the part of business and professional men that their vocation is a calling of God for the accomplishment of his work.

This means that you shall use your ability and opportunity to help make life more attractive and more worth while. The majority of people are not getting what they should out of life because it is so difficult for them to live. It might be easier, but they don't know how to live.

ALL WORTHY CALLINGS DIVINE.

Some of you men are going out as expert farmers and there is certainly a wide door open before you. Thousands in this State are struggling against poverty because they don't know how to farm their own land.

Some of you young women are graduating in domestic science and you will touch the home-life in a vital way. In helping to make better housekeepers and better cooks you will help to solve some of the moral and social problems of our day.

Some of you are going out as teachers, and no one can measure the influence of a school teacher on the life of a people. You will help to create ideals which will determine character. Yours is a divine calling and God wants you to co-operate with him through your school teaching in helping to make the world what he would have it to be.

Some of you are going out as lawyers and mechanics and your opportunity is just as great.

No young man or woman should be willing to dedicate life to a calling which will not mean service, and when life has been dedicated to that calling it should be pursued in the interests of humanity.

ANY TIME IS GOD'S TIME.

This challenge to service means that you shall help to make men and women better so that they shall have full possession of their powers. There are many evils which must be removed and you can do more good than ministers, for their efforts are regarded as professional.

A young man once called upon Wendell Phillips, who entertained him until late in the night telling of the old abolitionist days and showing him the relics of their struggle. As the young man rose to go, he said: "Mr. Phillips, I think if I had lived in your time I would have been heroic, too." Mr. Phillips, who had gone to the door with his caller, pointed to the public houses down the street, and his voice was keen with indignation. "Young man," he said, "you are living in my time and God's time. Be assured that no man could have been heroic then who is not heroic now."

You will be the leaders in the communities where you go, and your opportunities will be great, and that means that your responsibilities will be great. May you rise to the occasion and so live that when you come to the end you can pray as did the Master: "Father, I have glorified thee on the earth. I have finished the work which thou gavest me to do."

If the creed by which the great mass lived and is living; if matter, if brutal force, money and arms, the cunning wit of guileful hearts, are the gods in whom we trust, if might is right, who shall then judge but the mighty, and how dare you question Caesar's right and protest against his will? If you are but the reasoning animal, and if might is right, then Caesar is your god and you, the weaker, must give him what he demands and has the power to take. But if there is a spiritual order of things, if the Lord is God and you His creature and child, well, then, friend, change your master and give unto God the things that are God's; serve your Father and you will be free from the degrading serfdom of material things and power-greedy men.—Christian Work.

The Visitor

From Peru to Chile

FROM Lima, the capital of Peru, to Valparaiso, the chief port of Chile, is a seven-day voyage. Our destination was Santiago, Chile's capital city, which is situated about eighty miles inland from Valparaiso. My recollection of this part of our voyage down the western coast is not quite so happy as that from Panama to Lima. The Pacific was pacific enough—we encountered no winds or storms. But I shall never forget the long, languorous swells of the sea that came in shoreward from some far away storm. They were the kind of thing that cut down attendance at the dining salon to about one-half the number that ought to be there. And of those who kept up the formalities for the five meals a day—the custom on these Chilean boats—there were few stout enough or uncandid enough not to be affected in some uncomfortable degree. From my upper berth, to which I had resigned myself within two hours after leaving the port of Callao, I apologetically declined an invitation from our chairman to attend a meeting of the deputation in the social salon on the second day out. In doing so I expressed a certain languid envy of those who kept on deck apparently unaffected by the rhythmic movement of the boat. "The man who says he is not affected by these swells is a liar!" was Dr. Halsey's reply. This mild speech comforted me immensely.

For practically the entire journey our course did not carry us out of sight of land. A more barren coast one could hardly imagine. Most of the way the mountains came down to the sea, but here and there would stretch narrow strips of sterile flat ground on which we could see abandoned oil wells. After two days we called at Mollendo, next to Callao the chief Peruvian port. Here begins the principal railway of the country, called the Southern of Peru, by which many in our deputation had hoped to climb the Andes, visit the ancient and classic city of Arequipa, the ruins of Cuzco and the region about Lake Titicaca. The exigencies of our conference schedule compelled us to abandon this most alluring excursion, but most of us insist that it is only postponed to a later date, when we hope to pay another visit to South America with this particular journey into the dead heart of the old Inca civilization as our main objective.

The aspect of Mollendo had a very depressing effect upon us as we studied it from the deck of our vessel lying at anchor in the open roadstead. It was so dull and cheerless and God-forsaken. The houses were of the same dull brown color as the hills themselves. Not a blade of grass or a tree grows in the place except in little handbreadth artificial gardens. The water is brought into the city by pipe line from a far distant river. All the cities where we called on the way down impressed us the same way until we came to Coquimbo, our last stop before we reached Valparaiso. Here there were some color and charm and some signs of newness and both natural and human interest. But here we were reminded that the rainless desert which extends from Payta in Ecuador, 15,000 miles north, was now at an end and that for the rest of the western coast—about two thousand miles—the traveler would be skirting a land as rich and fertile and productive as can be found anywhere in the world.

But it must not be thought that between Mollendo and Coquimbo there is nothing of interest, for that would be to overlook the two most profitable industries of this western coast—the guano and nitrate deposits. Professor Ross calls it one of nature's jests that this utterly barren portion of the western coast of South America should have been providing the world for the past eight years two fertilizers which have made old European soils quicken with harvests. The guano masses, formed by the droppings of swarms of sea birds that frequent the rocky coast, have afforded Peru one of her most profitable industries. But this industry is now nearly exhausted. Not so, however, in the case of the nitrate industry, whose resources in southern Peru and northern Chile are said to be good for two centuries at least. In the cities along the coast where our boat stopped—Arika, Iquique, and Antofagasta—we found signs of the flourishing condition of the nitrate industry. The desert lying back of the hills that overlook these towns is alive with activity. Men are at work with pickaxe and dynamite breaking up the ground and loading the chunks upon trucks which carry them to a temporary mill nearby where the rocks are ground to powder, washed and boiled, the liquid mass run off and drained and dried into a whitish powder which is packed into sacks and sent to these coast cities for shipment. Or the crude chunks are conveyed to the cities direct, where permanent mills are being built for the reduction process. Antofagasta is probably the leading center of this remarkable industry. The whole enterprise is in the hands of foreign capital and the Chilean government derives two-thirds of its revenue, or about $45,000,000 a year, from its royalties on this single export. As a consequence the Chilean people hardly know what taxation is, a population of three and a half million having to provide less than $20,000,000 a year. As a further consequence, too, the Chilean people pay little attention to the economies of administering their public funds, since the funds are collected so easily. And without this public interest in administration to check extravagance the most flagrant kinds of graft and corruption obtain in the public service.

We found ourselves in an interesting atmosphere when we disembarked at the little city of Arika, the northernmost port on the coast of Chile. This city is in the Alsace-Lorraine of South America. Between the various republics of the continent there is a fairly good feeling save only in the mutual attitude of Chile and Peru. No love is lost between these two nations. The ante-bellum feeling between France and Germany was not more bitter than that which exists between Chile and Peru at the present time. It all dates back to the War of the Pacific which ended in a complete Chilean humiliation of Peru more than fifteen years ago. In addition to a huge indemnity imposed upon the northern nation Chile also took this fine, rich province away from her neighbor with the agreement that after fifteen years had elapsed the people would themselves be allowed to determine by a plebiscite whether they would continue to be a part of Chile or return to their Peruvian allegiance. Chilean influences have been assiduously cultivating the popular heart of this province all these years against the day of the plebiscite. But now that the fifteen years have more than passed the government fears to allow the vote to be taken and continues to hold the province by force. On the face of it it seems like a clear case of perfidy. When you ask for an explanation from the Chileans the only defense they seem able to make is to say that Peru has failed to pay the full amount of the indemnity accepted at the close of the war. But Peru's finances are in a deplorable condition, and it is a question whether without the aid of this stolen promise she can ever pay the heavy obligation. For here are some of the richest fields of the nitrate deposits whose exploitation yields millions of dollars each year for the treasury of Chile. It is no wonder that Peru cannot forgive her southern neighbor and no less strange that Chile in the teeth of Peru's hate keeps her own army and navy up to a very high point of efficiency.

At Arika we found many signs of the virtual martialization of the government. Even for the church in that section ecclesiastical control had been displaced by military control, a military chaplain having charge. Certain picturesque features of the place were of especial interest to us—the market, and more particularly a prodigious hill of rock from whose summit the Peruvian hero, Ugarte, in the last battle of the War of the Pacific, flung himself and his horse into the sea, rather than yield his country's flag into the hands of the Chilean force by which he was overpowered. We had seen a striking painting of this incident in the Museum at Lima, and as we viewed the huge wave-beaten cliff rising sheer out of the sea we knew that the artist's interpretation could not have exaggerated the thrillingness of the heroic leap. Our observations at Arika explained for us a state of mind which we had formed in Peru and were afterward to find in Chile which makes impossible any organized co-operation at the present time between the evangelical forces of the two countries. For example, at the Lima conference the establishment of an international theological seminary at Santiago was instantly met by the statement that Peruvian young men, even of the evangelical faith, would not go to Chile to study. Their position seemed inexplicable to us visitors, but after seeing Arika and feeling the tension that prevails in this border province we can easily understand their position.

Our arrival at Valparaiso brought to an end the only uncomfortable segment of our South America. I feel that justice demands that I confess to being a very poor sailor—almost as poor as you find them—and that therefore my recollections of this portion of our journey may be more somber than the recollections of my companions. Nevertheless I fall back on the ejaculation of so good a sailor as Dr. Halsey, quoted above, to justify whatever inferences may properly be drawn from my representations.

But now we are at Valparaiso, the most important commercial port on the West Coast. A city of 200,000 people, it spreads itself over the face of a hill whose shape is like that of the inside of half a bowl. Its sickle shaped harbor teeming with vessels is a delight to behold from the higher levels, and there is something magical in the view of the city one gets at night from the harbor. It lies all spread out before one like an amphitheatre revealing its brilliant lights in lines of geometrical symmetry following the lines of its streets. We were taken in charge by committees of missionaries and other friends who provided opportunities for us to see much of the city in the few hours that we were to stay there, and we were made comfortable by rest and refreshment at the Y. M. C. A. We noticed at once on landing that we were among a different sort of people than we had met in Peru. There was more snap and energy in their movements. Englishmen and Germans were in evidence on the streets and in the shops and the Chileans themselves were clearly taller and huskier men than the Peruvians. It seemed more like home!

In the early evening we took train for Santiago, eight miles away. At the station we were met by committees and whisked away to our hotels accompanying a procession with a band which had come to the station to welcome Ex-President Reyes of Columbia, who had been traveling with us ever since we left Panama.

AN OPEN FORUM.

THE tide of religious life in America is moving rapidly in the direction of church unity. The drift of this movement is being registered, not only in the interest shown in the subject in convention and conference and the earnestness of discussion in pulpit and press, but also in the increasing number of churches in which the denominational standards of the past are yielding to the practice of a more catholic Christian fellowship. Union churches of one kind or another are springing up all over the country within whose fellowship consecrated men and women of all creeds and confessions of faith are addressing themselves to the practical religious problems of the day.

A SPONTANEOUS DEVELOPMENT.

This movement is all the more significant because of its spontaneity. If these practical experiments in Christian unity were the result of a campaign of artificial stimulation we might well mistrust them as having any large significance. If organizers were going up and down the land forcing the issue and intruding into the local religious life of distinct communities with abstract plans of union we should expect the movement to come to nought, and rightly so. But church unity in America is coming about upon a basis of practical co-operation in the solution of local religious problems, and the leaders in the movement are those who have entered it only in order that they may minister more effectively to the needs of the communities whose spiritual welfare they have at heart.

The natural and unforced way in which the union movement has grown up has nevertheless resulted in inevitable losses. It has often given rise to a feeling of isolation which easily gives way to despair in face of the obstacles and discouragements attendant upon the inauguration of any new movement. It has also failed to give that consciousness of solidarity with world-wide, triumphant Christianity which is essential to the abiding life of any congregation. The result in many cases which have come to our notice has been that churches which began as union churches have later sought the fellowship of some denomination within which their union character has again been lost.

A MEDIUM OF COMMUNICATION NEEDED.

It is a firm conviction, gained from our own experience and that of others working in this field, that there should be some medium of communication for union churches, some clearing house for ideas through which the plans of organization and work of union churches might be presented and discussed, and in which the progress of the movement as a whole might be chronicled.

The Christian Century proposes to furnish such a medium. For the past three months we have been publishing letters and communications from religious workers connected with union churches, describing their organizations and the nature of their work. Our correspondents, however, have sometimes been at a loss to know just what sort of information would be of interest to our readers. Consequently we have prepared a questionnaire which is intended to suggest the sort of information which we most desire to secure. The more important questions have relation to (a) the denominations represented in the union; (b) the reasons for forming it; (c) the difficulties encountered; (d) the advantages and disadvantages resulting; (e) the effect upon attendance at services and upon the proportion of young people and of men in attendance; (f) the effect upon the general moral life of the community; (g) the church's relation to missionary and benevolent enterprises; (h) its plans for worship, religious education and social service; (i) its method of receiving new members, and (j) its plans and prospects for the future.

A WIDESPREAD PASSION FOR UNITY.

A large number of these questionnaire blanks have already been mailed and the answers received. They form a series of interesting and human documents which are at once encouraging and convincing in their testimony to the widespread passion for unity.

We invite correspondence and solicit information of all kinds regarding community, federated and union churches, as well as those churches which, while retaining a denominational name and allegiance, are seeking to practice Christian unity. We wish to furnish an open forum for the discussion of all such problems. We hold, in this department, no brief for any plan of union, but we desire to give the widest possible publicity to what is actually being accomplished in this field. We believe that in this way we shall be furthering one of the most auspicious movements in the religious life of America.

It is needless to add that material appearing in this department is to be regarded as a simple narration of facts, and not as an editorial commitment of The Christian Century.

Will readers of the "Century" mail us any information which they may possess regarding union churches, however meager it may be?

AN APPEAL FOR AN OPEN MIND.

By President Nicholas Murray Butler, of Columbia University.

There is a great difference between being intellectual and being intelligent. Not a few intellectual persons are quite unintelligent, and very many intelligent persons would hardly be classed as intellectual. One of the chief manifestations of intelligence is open-mindedness. The intelligent man is open-minded enough to see the point of view of those who do not agree with him and to enter in some measure into their feelings and convictions. He is able, also, to view the conflicting arguments and phenomena in proportion to each other and to rank the less significant of these below the more significant. It is quite possible to be intellectual and to manifest the closed mind; but it is not possible to do so and to be intelligent.

This truth comes to us more and more the longer we live, that on what field or in what uniform, or with what aims we do our duty matters very little; or even what our duty is, great or small, splendid or obscure; only to find our duty certainly and somewhere or somehow to do it faithfully, makes us good, strong, happy, and useful men and tunes our lives into some feeble echo of the life of God.—Phillips Brooks.

AN IRREPARABLE LOSS

THE death of some men seems like the casting of a pebble into a pool. The ripples are soon over and all is calm. It is otherwise with the loss of the great pioneers of new ideas. Dr. Josiah Strong died nearly two months ago. For many a day the church will feel that no other voice can replace his. He was the forerunner of the social movement in the Church.

Dr. Josiah Strong with the sheer force of his ideas changed the whole course of Home Mission work in this country from the narrowly competitive evangelism to a broad and constructive program that in most communions allies the Church with every good force in the nation's life. His book "Our Country" will be counted among the classics of American Church literature. Long after its statistics are out of date, its fundamental viewpoint will remain to guide those that come after.

Dr. Strong did more than any living man to bridge a dangerous chasm. The social movement was growing up outside the Church and was inclined to be critical of the Church while the Church was indifferent or openly scornful of the new human movement. Dr. Strong was an apostle of reconciliation. He showed the Church and the social idealists that they were both set to the same big human ends when each understood its task. Now we have sermons and prayers at the great social uplift gatherings, and in the Church there is an organized expression in almost every denomination of the social service interest.

Dr. Strong knew how to be religious and socially minded. During his long illness he kept saying, "The kingdom is coming. It is coming. I see signs of it everywhere." Among his last words were "I have seen that in all the universe there is nothing but God." His social writings connected modern aspirations with the aspirations of the great biblical writers. He has taught his fellow-Christians to love their fellow men, and he has led social students to the throne of God.

WATCHING THE WORLD BURN UP

GREAT days are these for the millennialists! They take a grewsome joy in the war and commotion of the world, for are not their little theories bolstered up by these things?

There is Russell, who predicted a personal manifestation of Jesus in the world and a resurrection of the dead in 1914. He was quiet for awhile when the dead failed to appear on our streets, but he is now triumphantly proclaiming the world war as a fulfillment of some of his prophecies. He is not the only self-appointed prophet that has fattened upon the world war.

What is wrong with millennialism? Most of the brands we know are materialistic. The future pictured by Adventism, Russellism and many other of the millennial "isms" is a future lived here on the earth, which is miraculously changed to provide ideal conditions. Russell graciously eliminates such things as thistles, torrid heat and arctic cold.

Millennialism is pessimistic. It despairs of our present world and turns it over to destruction. Missionary work, social progress and other alleviative measures are but patches on an old garment which would better be put in the discard. The Christian does not have the task of converting the world. He has only to wait in patience, and with much reading of prophecies, until Jesus Christ comes and does all of these things in the twinkling of an eye.

Furthermore, it is evident that modern science and philosophy stand at the farthest pole removed from millennialism. The modern man believes in creation and progress by development. The millennialist looks for catastrophe and miracle instead of the orderly processes by which most of us find God to be a dependable deity.

The view of the Bible upon which millennialism rests is that of an obscure puzzle book which some divinely guided man must unravel. For all these reasons, millennialism will never be the creed of many in this modern world.

A DENOMINATION THAT HAS LEARNED WHAT TO DO WITH HERESY-HUNTERS

A QUARTER of a century ago there was no denomination in America more panicky about the future of the evangelical faith than was the Presbyterian. The heresy trials of Briggs, McGiffert and others used up an enormous amount of energy and made the views of the critical gentlemen of Union Theological Seminary known to every young Presbyterian minister in the land.

The last General Assembly of the church had to face overtures from various belated sections of the country, asking that new heresy trials be inaugurated, even to the point of putting on trial a whole presbytery, the most famous in the country. Unwittingly, reactionary Presbyterians have shown themselves the most skeptical of any. They have not been willing to meet error with truth.

The action of the General Assembly was very significant. It satisfied itself with asserting that the big things that have always been true are still true. There was none of the panic, none of the uneasiness that goes with men who whistle in the dark to keep up courage. They had no need of the persecuting zeal of a Saul to remain true to the faith of the fathers. A quarter of a century of fellowship with modern interpretations of religion had left them with a conviction that modern scholarship has not undermined the big verities.

The Presbyterians have always been an intellectual denomination with a highly educated ministry. It might be expected that they and the Congregationalists would first of the great evangelical bodies learn to live with the great changes of interpretation that have come lately into the Christian religion. It may safely be prophesied that at last every great evangelical body will lose its skittishness, and ask no defense for the faith in Jesus Christ save that of sound reason and true experience.

RELIGION IN THE TRENCHES

THOSE of us who have never had a shell burst in our neighborhood, nor had a bullet sing its direful tune by our heads, have made many vain efforts to imagine how it feels to be in one of the European trenches in these days. Life in the deep-cut sewers in which millions of soldiers hold the battle lines of Europe will yield one day a tremendous enrichment of our literature in both novel and poetry. We know something of the horror and the butchery of that dread environment. We need to be consoled with the stories of men who are made better by their terrible experiences.

The World's Sunday School Association has been securing nickel contributions for the purchase of New Testaments for the soldiers in the trenches in Europe. There are many wonderful stories of how these help. One soldier writes, "I received the book in the trenches. I sacrificed my last candle. When the morning dawned, I was alone with the Book. I had read nine hours."

Chaplains of every denomination are doing valiant service in the armies. It is evident from the reports that a great revival of religion has come into the lives of the soldiers.

ENCOURAGING BIBLE READING

THE church in Baltimore, of which H. C. Armstrong is pastor, has an arrangement by which throughout the year there is a recommended course of Bible reading for the whole church. It has worked well for this congregation.

Many people do not read the Bible because its bulky literature is an unknown country to them. Without suitable introduction, they do not know where to go to get spiritual help. This published assignment directs the uninformed what parts of the Bible have special value for them.

It is a sad commentary upon the religious knowledge of our time, however, that such devices are needed. The Disciple of a generation ago carried in his pocket a new testament which was dreaded by his theological adversary. He knew its contents. With the abundance of reading matter in our day, not only the Bible but every other kind of standard literature has taken second place to the story magazine with the girl picture on the cover.

CHURCH PUBLICITY FOR SUMMER

SUMMER is a time when many kinds of church activity are discontinued. It is not a time to discontinue the publicity schedule of the church.

In the summer time there is the visitor in the city who will often bring a blessing to the congregation by his presence and words of encouragement. There is the search for a church on the part of many who for the first time in many years have thought about religion. If church attendance is smaller in the summer, the prospects for future work are often very numerous. Let the people know where your church is and when it meets, and keep your bulletin board busy this summer.

DISCIPLE MINISTERS AND LITERATURE

THE announcement that two books from the pen of Frank Waller Allen, of Springfield, will appear in the near future, is significant of the developing culture of the younger ministry of the Disciples of Christ. Religion is to be commended by the pen as well as the tongue, and the writing minister often speaks the more powerfully.

John Watson is known best to many of us by his pen name, Ian MacLaren. His "Beside the Bonnie Briar Bush" made a Presbyterian minister of Liverpool suddenly known the world around. This story has gripped the souls of thousands and will be read for many a day for its fine religious spirit and its sound attitude toward human problems. It is never disloyal to religion.

We do not need more men to write books like "The Calling of Dan Matthews," or "The Inside of the Cup.' Wholesome as these doses were for a particular epoch in modern life, they have no permanent value as literature. Better in spirit is the recent book of a Disciple minister now among the six best sellers in many cities, "Held to Answer," by Peter Clark Macfarlane.

It is the fallacy of much of current fiction that it deals with religion as a body of doctrine instead of a form of life. Mrs. Humphry Ward has her character agonizing over the Virgin Birth in a most unreal way. There are still a few morbid souls in the world like Robert Elsmere, but their sentiments do not adequately represent the big religious experience of the average evangelical.

We could wish to see many Disciple ministers learning to write, because perhaps the minister best of all will be able to interpret religion in the big human way, and transcend the intellectualistic bias of recent writers. We hope these writers can look deep into the heart of evangelical piety and tell the story of its faith, its hope, its self-sacrifice and its devotion to a cause.

LIVING CLOSE TO THE OFFICIAL BOARD

WHAT is the place of the official board? In a certain church the other day an elder opened the service and introduced the preacher when the time for the sermon came. Something a bit like this prevails in the Disciple churches of Australia.

There are a few churches where the pastor is obviously the whole thing. A certain pastor called on an offending elder and asked him to resign, because he annoyed the preacher. The elder resigned.

There are of course various ways in which a pastor and an official board can live together in peace, depending a good deal, of course, upon the temperament and point of view of the men. More and more, however, the relation of the pastor to the church tends to an increase of responsibility, with a corresponding increase of leadership.

It is a clear injustice for an official board to keep the direction of the fundamental matters of the church entirely in their own hands, and yet hold the pastor entirely for results. The big factory gives the manager full directing authority, asking only for proper dividends at the end of the year. The board of directors is a court of appeal with little to do while things go well. This works in a factory, but never will in a church, for obvious reasons; for a church is founded on a voluntary basis while a factory depends upon authority.

The relation of pastor with elders and deacons should be that of brothers in a big common task. There is no question of superior dignity attaching to any man. It is a wise official board which will recommend to the congregation a man who can be trusted to lead. With such a pastor in the church, leadership will be a natural thing.

The pastor is the religious expert called to a delicate task. An expert is of no use if he does not advise and lead.

RELIGION AND PATRIOTISM

IN THE early days of Christianity, Christians were charged with being enemies of the empire because they would not worship the emperor. Patriotism had been reduced to this strange and outlandish cult.

Patriotism in our modern world has sometimes been reduced to an attitude of hate. When it is so interpreted, Christians can no more be patriotic today than they could in ancient Rome.

The patriotism that is possible to the Christian mind is one which seeks the best development of the national life and is yet big enough to rejoice in the growth and development of sister nations.

Russian Church Comes out for Prohibition.

The Russian Church bears official testimony to the beneficial results of prohibition in Russia in a statement presented to the Czar, and signed by the several Metropolitan bishops, from which the following is quoted: "By the decree of your majesty the Russian people from whose weakened will the chains of alcoholism have fallen are now reaching up toward the temple within the soul—that soul which your majesty has indeed brought out of a prison of misery by the prohibition edict. Fear of God has been awakened. Respect for the laws and ordinances of the Church have been strengthened. Faith and old Russian godliness have been reawakened. The people's capacity for useful work has been noticeably increased. Criminality has lessened. Happy holidays are no longer darkened by debauchery. Quarrels have ceased. All the people of many-tongued Russia, united in one large and peaceful family, are ready to fight the impudent invader to the last drop of their blood. Moral standards have developed in the people's intercourse. Peace and quiet have been established in the homes. Fathers and mothers have found their lost children; wives their husbands; and children their parents. In one word, the whole face of the Russian Empire is changed. The sense of morality among the peoples has arisen and a serious and pure religious sentiment has been awakened in them to face the trials sent of God. It is difficult to enumerate all the blessings coming from this great historic act of the sobering of mighty Russia."

Southern Baptists Hold Convention.

The southern Baptists held their convention at Asheville, N. C., the past month, and one of their most important actions was a vote to refuse co-operation with a union school for missionaries' children. Thus they declared against any kind of Christian union on the mission field. They have reduced the office force of their Foreign society and during the convention raised a debt of $100,000 on the society. The various missionary publications of the denomination will be consolidated into one and published by the Bible-school publishing house in Nashville, Tenn. They announced the completion of a Judson Centennial Fund of $1,250,000 for missions. For the first time in the history of the organization, a woman was allowed to speak in the meeting. These facts indicate something as to the stage of development in the strongest ecclesiastical organization of the south.

Sunday Rest Approved by Science.

The United Steel corporation recently stopped Sunday labor in its plants and has no disposition to go back to the old system. More recently a series of experiments has been tried at Harvard by Dr. E. G. Martin which shows that one day's rest in seven is a physical necessity for most men. Men were tried as to their nervous reaction by means of electric shocks. It was found that the physical vigor decreased throughout the week but returned to normal by means of the extra day's rest. Dr. Martin's conclusions were made public in a gathering which was also addressed by Judge Alton B. Parker, Edward J. Gaynor, president of the National Letter Carriers' Association; R. C. Boling, General counsel for the United Steel corporation and others.

Churches Build Faster Than Breweries.

There was a time when the breweries built faster than the churches, but that time is past, declares E. J. Davis, of the Anti-Saloon League of Chicago. He says that in 1905 there was $2.80 put into breweries and distilleries for every dollar put into churches, but that in 1915 for every dollar put into breweries and distilleries, there was $38.20 put into churches. These figures are furnished by a paper called The American Contractor.

Methodists Lose Money on Their Papers.

The Methodist Book Concern has made public its report for the quadrennium that has just closed and it is shown that the denominational papers lost for the concern $378,000 in that period. The subscription price was cut to a dollar four years ago, hence the big deficit. It seems probable that in the end they will have to raise the subscription price and reduce the number of sectional papers which are published. The profit on Bible-school supplies and books helped the Concern to declare good dividends payable to the fund for pensioning aged ministers.

Says Stonemen Join Other Churches.

It is now being stated that the Stonemen, the remarkable men's movement of Pennsylvania, is furnishing recruits for other than the Episcopal church. Eleven thousand Stonemen have joined Methodist, Baptist and Presbyterian churches alone in the last three months, and since only eight per cent of all the men have joined Episcopal churches, these facts are said to refute the charge that the organization was projected as Episcopal proselytism. The organization declares strongly in behalf of Christian unity.

New York Church Has a Day for Sailors.

A unique feature of the Trinity church of New York (Episcopal) is the holding of a special day of worship for sailors. The day set this year was May 7. The great church was filled with sailors of every nationality. Prayer was offered for sailors, for peace, that sailors might witness for Christ, and for the souls of all departed sailors.

Local Churches Federate.

Impatient with the leaders of their denominations, local churches of the Presbyterians are taking union into their own hands. Recently at Ft. Worth, Texas, two congregations of "Northern" and "Southern" Presbyterians arranged to federate, pending the complete union of the two bodies. In another instance a clergyman undertook to interfere with the union of two such congregations by suggesting that they wait to get the consent of the "Mother denomination." A layman shouted out in the meeting "Let's elope," and they did.

Conference on Italian Work.

Italians are regarded as a very favorable field for Protestant work in this country. The Presbyterians have called a conference on Italian evangelization to be held at Princeton, June 27-30. The conference will be open to all Presbyterian ministers, lay workers and women workers who use the Italian language. A feature of the conference will be the exhibit of work done by 100 Presbyterian Italian churches in this country.

General Theological Library.

Recently a number of distinguished religious leaders met in Boston to urge the increase of endowment for the support of the General Theological Library. This institution with over fifty years of honorable history sends books to ministers anywhere in New England with carriage charges prepaid, so the minister without any expense whatever may read the best books in his field. Over one-third of the ministers in the territory drew books from the library last year. The reading room of the library has a hundred visitors a day. A $20,000 endowment has kept this good work going on.

Archbishop in Favor of English Language.

Few seem to realize how revolutionary is the order of the new Roman Catholic leader in Chicago, Archbishop Mundelein. He has ordered that in the parochial schools instruction shall be only in the English language. As these schools have had much of their vogue from the use of other tongues, it will tend to decrease their patronage, though not their religious value to the church. The new archbishop seems to be thoroughly American in his sentiments. His order will be particularly unpopular among the Poles.

Money for Statue of Phillips Brooks.

The supreme court of Massachusetts has rendered a decision which provides $35,000 for the purchase of the Bela Pratt statue of Phillips Brooks. Trinity church of Boston has some funds which will assist in procuring a site.

Episcopalians Legislate on Marriage.

A committee of Episcopalians has been preparing a report for the next session of the General Convention of the church. The recommendation on divorce is to amend the canon in such wise as to prohibit any re-marriage after divorce except where the bishop shall hold that the divorce was "in fact a decree of annulment." This means an increased stringency in the attitude of the church toward re-marriage after divorce. The committee refused to restore the publishing of banns as a compulsory practice. They also refused to recommend legislation on eugenics.

PAUL AT THESSALONICA AND BEROEA.

Lesson for July 2.

Golden Text: Him did God exalt with his right hand to be a Prince and Saviour. Acts 5:31.

Lesson Acts 17:1-15; (compare I Thessalonians 2:1-12.)

Memorize verses 11, 12.

(1) Now when they had passed through Amphipolis and Apollonia, they came to Thessalonica, where was a synogague of the Jews; (2) and Paul, as his custom was, went in unto them, and for three Sabbath days reasoned with them from the scriptures, (3) opening and alleging that it behooved the Christ to suffer, and to rise again from the dead; and that this Jesus, whom, said he, I proclaim unto you, is the Christ. (4) And some of them were persuaded, and consorted with Paul and Silas; and of the devout Greeks a great multitude, and of the chief women not a few. (5) But the Jews, being moved with jealousy, took unto them certain vile fellows of the rabble, and gathering a crowd, set the city on an uproar; and assaulting the house of Jason, they sought to bring them forth to the people. (6) And when they found them not, they dragged Jason and certain brethren before the rulers of the city, crying, These that have turned the world upside down are come hither also; (7) whom Jason hath received: and these all act contrary to the decrees of Caesar, saying that there is another king, one Jesus. (8) And they troubled the multitude and the rulers of the city, when they heard these things. (9) And when they had taken security from Jason and the rest, they let them go.

(10) And the brethren immediately sent away Paul and Silas by night unto Beroea: who when they were come thither went into the synagogue of the Jews. (11) Now these were more noble than those in Thessalonica, in that they received the word with all readiness of mind, examining the scriptures daily, whether these things were so. (12) Many of them therefore believed; also of the Greek women of honorable estate, and of men, not a few. (13) But when the Jews of Thessalonica had knowledge that the word of God was proclaimed of Paul at Beroea also, they came thither likewise, stirring up and troubling the multitudes. (14) And then immediately the brethren sent forth Paul to go as far as to the sea: and Silas and Timothy abode there still. (15) But they that conducted Paul brought him as far as Athens: and receiving a commandment unto Silas and Timothy that they should come to him with all speed, they departed.

VERSE BY VERSE.

1. When they. Paul, Silas and Timothy. Acts 15:40; 16:1, 3.—Amphipolis. About thirty-three miles southwest of Philippi.—Apollonia. About thirty miles in about the same direction from Apollonia.—Thessalonica. About one hundred miles from Philippi. It was the largest city of Macedonia and a noted commercial center.

2. For three Sabbath days. This may have ended his mission to the Jews; but he was in the city a longer time, as we learn from the First Thessalonian letter.—Reasoned with them from the scriptures. He endeavored to prove to them the claims of Jesus from their scriptures.

3. Opening and alleging. He showed them the agreement between the passages quoted and the life of Jesus.—Behooved. Befitted. It was his nature.—Christ. The Messiah. This idea had been growing for centuries among the Jews.

4. Some of them. Some of the Jews.—Consorted. The Jews that believed associated with Paul and Silas in their new found faith.—The chief women not a few. The women in Macedonia were held in higher regard than in other parts of Paul's journeys. They came from the best families.

5. Certain vile fellows of the rabble. They were market loafers, as the word indicates.—Set the city in an uproar. Created disturbance in the city and directed it toward Paul and Silas.—They sought to bring them out. They made an attempt to capture Paul and Silas, but failed. The Jason is probably the same Jason mentioned in Rom. 16:21.

6. Before the rulers. The word is rare and because of it Luke was for a long time considered inaccurate. But across the main street, in Philippi, Octavius had erected an arch on the foundations of which he had carved the names of the magistrates with the title "Politarch."—Have turned the world upside down. The exaggeration is the language of excitement, but it bears testimony to the power of the gospel as preached by them.

7. There is another king. It was treason to proclaim another king and death was the penalty. This shows the democratic character of the city.

10. By night. May suggest the character of the opposition.—Beroea. A small city southwest of Thessalonica. Paul remained here for some time, probably three months.—The synagogue of the Jews. The church here consisted of the same class as the former city.

12. Many of them. The Jews. Honorable estate. See notes on verse 4. In relation to station they were honorable. Noted.

13. Came thither likewise. Came to Beroea.—Stirring up and troubling the multitude. The Jews came to Iconium when Paul was there for the same purpose. See Acts 4:19.

14. Sent away Paul. They have been apprehensive of results similar to those in Thessalonica.—As far as to the sea. This may have been a feint to conceal their actual destination, or if not Paul could have sailed for Athens from the port at Dium.

15. That they should come to him with all speed. It seems, however, that Timothy did not go to Athens, but to Thessalonica to reassure the disciples there.

The World Upside Down

BY ASA McDANIEL.

WHEN Paul and Silas entered a city their lives counted for God. This is not true of thousands of our church members who come to the city. A statement by a pastor recently is to the point. He said that there were more members of his communion, with letters or out of his church, in the city than he had connected with the local congregation. Paul was not made of that kind of stuff. It was a great tribute to the virility of Paul and Silas when the Jews haled Jason before the rulers of the city with the accusation that they had "turned the world upside down." It was also an unconscious acknowledgment of the power of the gospel as proclaimed by the servants of the "most high God."

It is the office of Christianity to turn the world upside down in the sense of changing it and transforming it so as to make it point and run Godward. Someone has well said that the effect of Christianity is "not a Matthew ceasing to be a mercenary publican, but a Matthew transformed into an inspired disciple and an efficient helper of the world's good; not a Paul no longer persecuting the church, but a Paul becoming a mighty and unceasing upbuilder of Christianity." Most or much of our church work turns the world part way over and leaves it there. In this condition it is as liable to fall one way as another. It often happens that it goes back in its old position rather than on to God. It is not enough to start a person in the way of life; we must supply nourishment to keep him growing in the way. Jesus did not only call his disciples from their tasks, but he took them with him into new and richer fields of labor. As leaders we must lead all the way, from the cradle to the grave.

When Alexander Mackey went to Uganda he found the natives in the habit of offering human victims to propitiate the evil spirits, and when Suma, their king, died two thousand men were killed that he might not go into the other world unattended. But when Mtesa, the king's son and successor, died not a life was sacrificed. In this time Christianity had turned these superstitions and cruel practices upside down. Wherever the gospel is faithfully preached and fully practiced this is the result, old customs give place to new ones, and the life is wholly changed. The changed life is the supreme test of our religion. The world is asking us to prove our faith by doing for the world what we believe Jesus would do under our circumstances, rather than by argument, however well wrought. Service, not doctrine, is the great need of the hour. This is not to minimize our faith but only to make it practical. Jesus was Godlike in conduct and to be Christian is to be Godlike through Jesus our divine Lord and Master.

The world will not be righted until we are able to socialize the teaching of Jesus. We must see to it that industry is so organized that every honest and willing worker can find work, and find work so remunerative as to give him and his family an opportunity for self-development as well as for mere life. We shall have to learn that it is poor economy to grind up good men and women to make cheap goods. As our eyes rest upon the whitening fields we see that there is much to be done before the evolution of Christianity is complete.

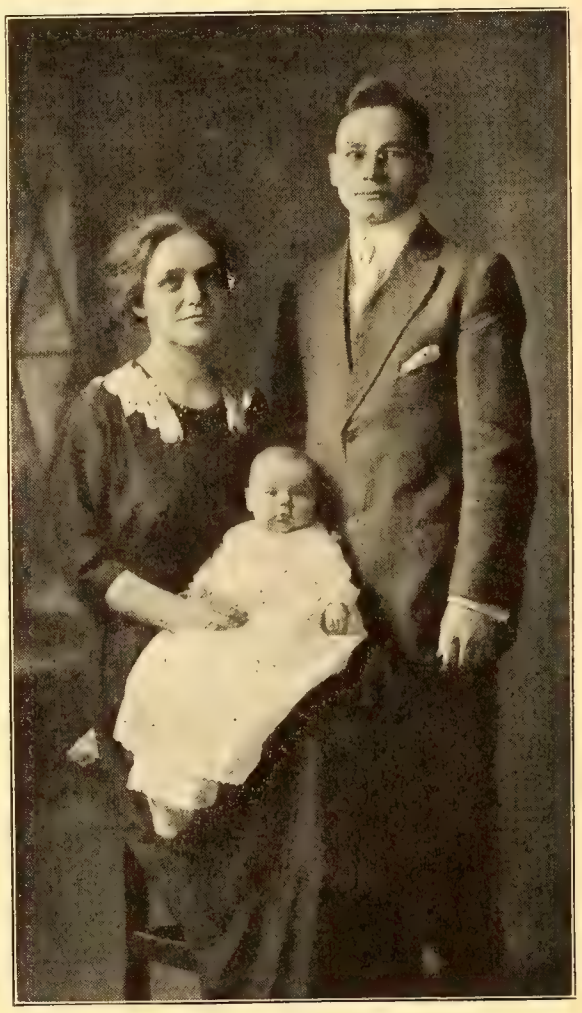
There is much homely wisdom in the outline of a sermon by one of the preachers of the long ago. He said: "First, the world is wrong way up; second, it has got to be turned upside down; third, we are the chaps to do it."

Disciples Table Talk

Disciples and Baptists of Missouri Consider Unity and Comity.

Graham Frank, pastor at Liberty, Mo., reports an interesting meeting of the Commissions on Unity and Comity of the Baptists and Disciples of Missouri at First Christian church, Kansas City, Mo., on May 23. The members of the Disciple Commission were W. F. Richardson, L. J. Marshall and B. A. Jenkins, of Kansas City; H. B. Smith, of Marshall, and Graham Frank, of Liberty. The Baptist Commission included Baptist leaders from Kansas City, Sedalia, Marshall and Independence. After a frank consideration of the problems and desirability of a closer unity and a better comity, a subcommittee, of which W. F. Richardson and Graham Frank are members, was appointed to formulate a statement embodying the consensus of opinion of the meeting to be submitted to the respective State Boards and by these Boards to the general assemblies of the two bodies in Missouri. Mr. Frank speaks in high praise of the spirit and achievements of this conference, and will keep Christian Century readers apprised of further developments of the movement.

Commencement at the College of Missions, Indianapolis.



Commencement day at the College of Missions came a few days ahead of the season this year. This was due to the omission of certain holidays in order that the outgoing missionaries might have a few more days of preparation for their long journeys to the mission fields. The day began with a short play, "The Heart of the House," written for the occasion, and setting forth in semi-pageant form the stages by which the missionary spirit, as exemplified in the college, influences the character and purpose of the student. The graduating class produced the play. Mrs. Atwater, of the Christian Woman's Board of Missions, addressed the outgoing class of thirteen, speaking on behalf of the sending boards and the supporting churches. Dr. Hurd presented the class and announced their appointment to the various fields. With two exceptions the entire class are graduates of colleges and state universities. These two exceptions have had equivalent training. F. W. Burnham came all the way across the continent in order to deliver the commencement address. He impressed upon the graduates the solemnity of their call, the magnitude of their work and the trustworthiness of their support. President Charles T. Paul had charge of the dedicatory service, and C. H. Winders made the dedicatory prayer. It is reported that the record commencement crowd was entertained this year.

Oklahoma City Asks for the 1917 National Convention.

At the recent Oklahoma state convention it was unanimously voted to invite the national convention to hold its 1917 session at Oklahoma City. Oklahoma was in the field at Los Angeles, but courteously withdrew in favor of Des Moines. A. R. Spicer, state secretary of Oklahoma Discipledom, is sure that if all facts are considered a unanimous verdict will be given for Oklahoma City, 1917. Here are some of the attractions of the Southwest city, as presented by Mr. Spicer: "As a city we have extraordinary attractions and facilities of unusual interest and merit. Our great city railway system is said to be one of the most perfect, if not the best of all United States cities of its size. A city with its ten and twelve story buildings; its great school buildings; its manufacturing plants of all kinds, from the packing plants to the Iten Biscuit Co.; and last but not least the $500,000 Ford Assembling Plant. Our greatest feature, however, is our great churches. Robinson street is said to have more splendid modern church structures than any other city of this size in the United States. The governor of our state, the mayor of our city, the Chamber of Commerce, the ministerial association of all the churches and the host of 375 churches, 432 Bible-schools, 180 Christian Endeavor societies and 75 C. W. B. M. auxiliaries, extend you a cordial invitation."

New Alaska Missionary Soon to Start for New Field.

R. M. Hopkins writes that Harry C. Munro and wife, new Alaska missionaries, will soon purchase their tickets for Seward, Alaska, where they will work for several months before going further. Seward is situated on Resurrection Bay, and promises to become the metropolis of all southwestern Alaska New responses to the Alaska Equipment Fund since last report have come to Mr. Hopkins from Arkansas, Illinois, Kentucky, Missouri, New Mexico, New York, Ohio, Oklahoma and Pennsylvania—forty gifts in all. Every adult class and Bible-school class should consider it a privilege to have part in this new and most important work.

Mr. and Mrs. Harry Munro, New Missionaries to Alaska.

Help Fight the "Summer Slump."

It is generally considered with religious newspapers that the summer season can produce but little news of churches, Bible schools, Christian Endeavor Societies, etc., and for that reason their news departments are usually cut down during these months. But The Christian Century is planning to make a special feature of its news pages this summer, and thus aid in fighting the "summer slump" tradition. Send us stories or items of "what's doing" in your church, school or other organizations. How are you trying to make the summer count? Do not fail to send us your weekly bulletin regularly.—News Editor.

T. P. Ullom Will Hold Union Meetings.

For several years Thomas Penn Ullom has been associated with the Scoville evangelistic company. He will now conduct his own union meetings "in the interest of community, individual, church, city and home." A letter from the pastors of the churches in Keokuk, Ia., where Mr. Ullom recently worked in conjunction with the Scovilles. commends Mr. Ullom as a man of personality, spirituality, culture and scholarship. Freedom from sensationalism, grasp of the truth, ability to grip men and sweet reasonableness are listed among his good qualities. Mr. Ullom is also strongly commended by L. N. D. Wells, of High Street, Akron, O., Levi Marshall, of Nevada, Mo., and A. R. Liverett, Jefferson City, Mo.

Dedication of Central Church, Peoria, Ill.

One of the most cheering news items that has come to The Christian Century for many a day is this: that a $75,000 church has been dedicated among the Disciples without a word being said as to money on dedication day. It is to be hoped that this good example will be followed by a hundred or two other churches this year, and that in time this practice will become the rule, rather than an exception deserving two inches of space in the news columns. Dedication day at Central church, Peoria, Ill., was truly dedication day. What is in all probability the best equipped church and Bible-school building in Illinois was dedicated to the service of God on June 4. For this achievement H. E. Sala, pastor at Central, received high credit, according to F. Lewis Starbuck, pastor at Howett Street. Mr. Sala's "genius of ideas and management are in evidence from the start to the finish of the building," according to Mr. Starbuck. The main auditorium of the building has a seating capacity of more than 1,400 people, yet this large room may be closed down to seat half that number. The spacious pulpit platform is situated concentric to the whole area. To the right and left of the pulpit are capacious areas in which are arranged commodious Bible-school rooms, with semi-disappearing partitions. In the balcony also are many class rooms. Perfect acoustics, correct lighting and marvelous harmony in decoration are characteristics of the auditorium. The ventilating system is modern; the air all over the building can be changed every fifteen minutes. The basement rooms consist of a large community room, fully equipped kitchen and dining room, rooms for the elementary Bible-school grades, as well as shower baths and recreational features. This fine building will house the 1916 Illinois convention in September.

—Bryon Hester, pastor of the church at Pryor, Okla., is now in Transylvania College doing special work.

—Commencement season at Christian University, Canton, Mo., extended from June 2 to June 8. Dr. Charles A. Vannoy delivered the baccalaureate sermon and Dr. Shailer Mathews the commencement address. Other features of the week were "Zetolophian Night," the Exhibit of Art Students, the Recital of the School of Music, Commencement of the School of Religion, the Oratorical Contest, the Alumni Banquet, the Academic Parade, a Basket Dinner on the campus and the Senior Class play.

—George L. Snively assisted Arthur Long in the dedication of a new Bible-school building at Coffeyville, Kan., on May 28. Over $11,000 was secured to cover an indebtedness of $7,000 on the building. A large auditorium is planned for next year. There were seventeen additions by confession and baptism during the day.

—J. Boyd Jones, pastor at Central church, Terre Haute, Ind., gave the address at the service of the laying of the corner stone of the new building at Palestine, Ill., on June 3.

—The Brotherhood and Sisterhood of the Bozeman, Mont., church recently held a "native state meeting," at which each group told of some of the good points of its native state.

—A. W. Kokendoffer completed last month a quarter of a century of service in the Christian ministry, including ten years in Kansas City, seven in Mexico and eight in Sedalia, his present pastorate. Mr. Kokendoffer reports 736 persons added to the church at Sedalia during the years of his pastorate there.

—First church, Butler, Pa., will spend $10,000 for additions to its present building.

—Howard E. Jensen, who is conducting The Christian Century's Open Forum of Union Churches, is a student in the divinity school of the University of Chicago. He conducted a union church at Round Prairie, Leavenworth, Kan., for four years, with results of large increase in all departments, resigning this work to enter the university. Mr. Jensen is a candidate for the B. D. and Ph.D. degrees.

—H. Marshall Wingfield, who has recently resigned as pastor at Ross Avenue church, Dallas, Tex., has gone to his former home, at Figsboro, Va., where he will take a complete rest in the hope of regaining his health sufficiently to be able to resume the work of the ministry.

—First church, Tacoma, Wash., Bible-school has by far the largest attendance of all the city's schools. W. A. Moore, pastor at First, has set "1,000 membership" as the goal to be striven for.

—M. Lee Sorey, pastor at Hutchinson, Kan., First, addressed 350 young men at the State Reformatory on Mother's day.

—The men's class at Downey Avenue, Indianapolis, has purchased a large tent holding three hundred. This will be used as the class meeting place during the summer.

—Five members of the Men and Millions team were present at a recent session of the Hagerstown, Md., Bible-school. There was a record attendance of 500 on that day. W. J. Clarke, of the Bible-school department of the American Society, gave an address in the evening on "Modern Bible-school Work."

—Vaughn Dabney, of First church, Oakland, Cal., writes that Charles L. Pyatt has successfully passed his final examinations and will be granted his Doctor's degree from Harvard University this month. Mr. Pyatt is a Disciple from Jacksonville, Ill. He had the honor of receiving the Williams Fellowship two consecutive years. His thesis subject is "The Teaching of the Rabbis at the Time of Jesus." Mr. Dabney states that some strong church should secure Mr. Pyatt for its pulpit.

—A First District, Kan., Christian Endeavor Society has made a survey of the surrounding rural community, locating every home on a map and ascertaining the facts as to church affiliation. A good idea for other societies.

—A fine custom at University Place church, Des Moines, is the giving of a dinner each year to the old people of the neighborhood, irrespective of church affiliation. All over seventy are invited. The dinner is served by the deaconesses of the church. Almost a hundred old persons were present at the 1916 gathering, held late last month. A poem was read which was written by J. Mad. Williams on "He Never Grows Old"

—It is reported that J. T. Nichols, of Des Moines, has severed his connection with the "International Christian Missionary Bible College," Minneapolis, Minn., and has entered upon his summer Chautauqua work.

—Charles S. Medbury delivered another broadside at the preparedness doctrine in anticipation of the preparedness parade scheduled for June 3 at Des Moines. His theme was "Americanism and Its Present Obligation." Mr. Medbury preached a sermon on the evening of this same day to Drake students on the topic, "Crowning the School Year With a Definite Recognition of Christ."

Notes from the Foreign Society

Mr. Otsuka, who accompanied the Japan Red Cross Corps to England as interpreter, has returned to Japan and is again teaching in the Bible College. His associates are very glad to have him back again in the work.

R. D. McCoy reports seven baptisms at a recent morning service in Tokyo.

Mr. and Mrs. T. A. Young, Fukushima, Japan, reports 15 baptisms.

Miss Ogawa, a graduate of the Girls' College, Tokyo, Japan, has begun work with Mrs. P A. Davey as a Bible woman.

P. A. Davey, of Tokyo, Japan, reports a big meeting of 1,800 people, celebrating the 100th anniversary of the American Bible Society.

The Middle School at Tokyo, enjoys a good increase in attendance over last year. The enrollment reached 160. Out of the 60 new students who entered this year, 17 are Christians.

W. H.. Scott, speaking of the work of the Harda, India, church, the first planted by the Foreign Society on heathen soil, says: "Among the things provided for in our budget (local church) are the March offering for the Foreign Christian Missionary Society, the Indian Sunday-school Union, Y. P. S. C. E. of India, Christian Literature and Tract Society, the British and Foreign Bible Society, and the National Missionary Society of India. You will see that we are missionary. We do not give so very much to some of these, but still it is something. Speaking comparatively, I am sure it would not look bad alongside of what many of our churches are doing at home."

The missionaries in India met in convention at Jubbulpore, March 3 to 8. Their general attitude was that of prayerful hopefulness as the plans were made for the work of the year. There were 143 baptisms in India last year. The seed-sowing time has been long, but now the harvest is ripening. A turning to Christ en masse seems immiment in many places. The missionaries say, "Send strong men and women now into this harvest field."

The Every-Member canvass in the Indian churches is to be urged. Last year the gifts of the Indian Christians averaged one rupee each.

Frank V. Stipp, Laoag, P. I., reports a convention of the churches in the Ilocano field, March 4 to 6. He says it was a fine convention, showing the strengthening of the work in many lines. He says it was Mr. Hanna's last week on the field before his furlough, and the native evangelists were sad, indeed, to let him go. The most interesting discussions of the convention were concerning the Philippine Missionary Society.

Mr. and Mrs. David Rioch and children, of Damoh, India, have reached America and are now visiting relatives and friends in Canada.

The receipts of the Foreign Society for the month of May amounted to $18,248, an increase over the corresponding month of last year of $2,240. There has been a total gain for the missionary year up to June 1, of $21,574. The gain in regular receipts amounts to $25,044.

—The second Annual Older Boys' and Girls' Conference of Kentucky was held at Central church, Lexington, June 10. The conference theme was "In Training." The two conferences held separate sessions until 3:30 p. m., then they united in a mass meeting, followed in the evening by a joint banquet.

—The Christian Endeavor Society of Central church, Wichita, Kan., has a membership of 208 and an average attendance of 95 members and 64 guests. This society holds services at the county jail one Sunday each month.

—The East Oregon convention will be held at Pendleton, June 21-25. The Inland Empire convention, at Rosalia, Wash., is scheduled for June 26-29.

—"Fathers' Day" was observed at First church, Bowling Green, Ky., May 28. The pastor, B. F. Cato, preached on the topic, "Father's Opportunity."

—J. W. Darby, pastor at Tulsa, Okla., delivered ten lectures at the Northwestern State Normal School, at Tahlequah, last week. His lectures treated Old Testament history and literature.

—"Missionary Night" is observed at First church, Seattle, Wash., each year on the last Sunday in May. The evening this year was dedicated to F. E. Meigs, of Nanking, China, and the unveiling of his picture was the crowning event. In previous years pictures of David Livingstone, G. L. Wharton and C. E. Garst were unveiled.

—Will H. Evans, of Bonham, Tex., well known throughout the Lone Star state, took his first vacation in fifteen years last month, and celebrated this event by giving an address on "Little Things" at Mineral Wells, Tex.

—F. W. O'Malley, of Bonham, Tex., delivered the address to the graduates of the Carr-Carlton College this year. This school is located at Bonham.

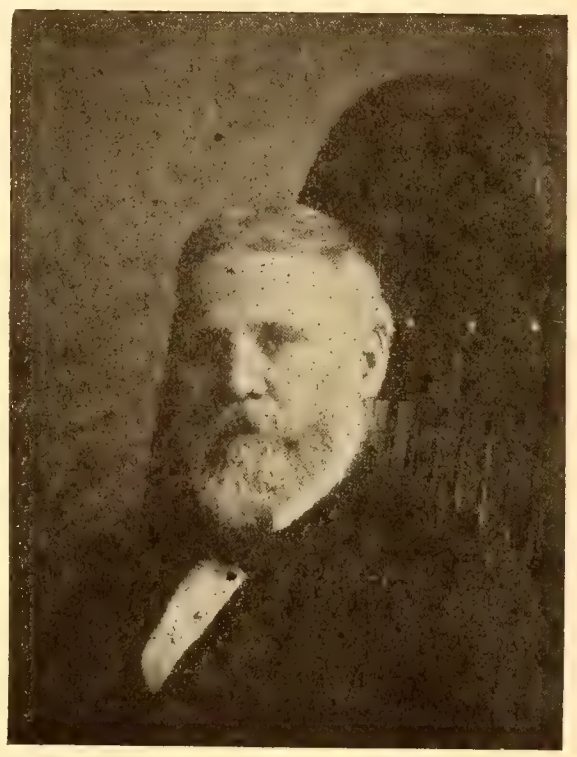
—The Arkansas state convention which met this year at Hot Springs, elected Dr. Sigler, of Mammoth Spring, as president for next year. M. M. Blair, of Russellville, is the new secretary.

—E. M. Waits, of Fort Worth, Tex., Magnolia Avenue church, has resigned from the State Missionary Board, because of the pressure of other tasks.

—S. J. Corey, secretary of the Foreign Society, writes that the outlook for children's day results is the most encouraging in many years. Some great offerings that have already come in are: First, Akron, O., $450, with $250 yet to come; First, Mansfield, O., $362.07, and more to come; Washington, Pa., $472; Cameron, W. Va., $500; Lawrence, Kan., $202.84; Transylvania College, $529.33; Paris, Ky., $200; Indianapolis, Ind., Seventh, $122.50; Cynthiana, Ky., $202; Little Flat Rock, Ind., $100; Pleasant Grove, O., $173, and many others smaller in amount but fully as creditable as those here mentioned.

—Professors' salaries at Hiram College have been increased 25 per cent, and long time professors' 50 per cent.

—Prof. A. W. Fortune, of Transylvania College, delivered the baccalaureate address before the graduating class of the Morton High School, Lexington, Ky., his theme being "Drafted, or Enlisted?"



—R. E. Henry, of Decatur, Ill., has been elected secretary of the Sixth District, Illinois. H. H. Jenner, of Long Point, was re-elected secretary in Fourth District.

—O. G. White, who resigned the state secretaryship of West Virginia Disciple churches, has been persuaded still to serve the state as "state evangelist."

—Raymond A. Smith, newly-elected president of Atlantic Christian College, arrived at Wilson, the seat of the school, on June 10.

—At a meeting of the Men's Brotherhood at Butler, Pa, Frank M. Field, pastor, a plan was proposed for the erection of a two-story Bible-school building.

—Report comes of the serious illness of J. H. Garrison, Editor Emeritus of The Christian-Evangelist, at Claremont, Cal. Dr. Garrison has not been strong for several months, but his friends had trusted to the salubrious climate of California to restore him to his accustomed vigor. Every Disciple, and all persons everywhere who are acquainted with Dr. Garrison, either personally or through his writings of many years, will earnestly hope for his full recovery.

—Children's Day was a great day at the Evanston church, Chicago, this year. There was the largest crowd in the evening that has assembled in the building in its history. The program given by the children was most attractive. There was a fifty per cent gain over last year's figures at Bible school and both church services for the day. The increased membership in both church and Bible school account for the big gain, as but few strangers outside the parish were present during the day. A photograph of the school was made and a carnation was given to every person in attendance at Bible school, in lieu of the flowers which failed to arrive on Mother's Day.

—O. F. Jordan of the Evanston church, Chicago, has been engaged to speak at the graduating exercises of the grade schools in Evanston this year. The various Odd Fellow organizations on the North Shore will assemble at the church the evening of June 18, to hear a memorial sermon by the Disciple pastor.

—F. M. Rains, for several years in poor health, has fully recovered.

—George H. Combs, of Independence Blvd. church, Kansas City, Mo., delivered the commencement address before the Clinton, Mo., high school graduating class, his theme being "The Uses of the Past."

—University church, Des Moines, lost two of its elders within a week, A. L. Smyres and T. C. Denny.

—Frank Waller Allen, who is of Southern ancestry, preached a sermon on patriotism and in eulogy of Lincoln to the surviving Northern soldiers of Springfield, Mo., on Memorial day.

—The Board of Ministerial Relief, of Indianapolis, Ind., reports eight new names added to the brotherhood's Pension Roll, bringing it up to 140. The increase in receipts from October 1 to June 1, as compared with last year, was 50 per cent. The larger part of this was in annuity money on which the income goes to the donors during their lives, but in regular receipts available for immediate payment of pensions there was a gain of 20 per cent.

—At the forty-seventh anniversary of Hamilton College, Lexington, Ky., F. D. Kershner preached the baccalaureate sermon, and Edgar D. Jones, of Bloomington, Ill., gave the annual literary address on the subject, "The Gift of the Morning Star." There are twenty-three graduates at Hamilton this year.

Eureka College Notes

The second annual May Musical Festival was held in Eureka with great success. A chorus of 200 voices sang Haydn's Oratorio, "Creation." In the afternoon the University of Illinois orchestra gave a symphony concert. This orchestra also played the musical scores for the Oratorio, which was conducted by J. Lawrence Erb of the State University. The solo parts were sung by Prof. Elias A. Bredin, tenor, of Eureka; Miss Sidenius Zendt, soprano, of Chicago; and Marion Green, bass, of Chicago. The chorus was composed of singers from Eureka, Washington and El Paso. Large numbers from the surrounding towns attended the festival, and were greatly pleased with its success. A feature of the afternoon concert was the singing of "The Star Spangled Banner," as the old soldiers filed upon the platform. On account of the success of this year's festival, more elaborate plans are being made for next year. A two day festival will be held instead of one day, and the orchestra from the U. of I. will be with us both days. The chorus will be increased to 300.

This year has been the most successful year in the history of the college. There was an increase in the total attendance of 40 per cent over previous years. Among the events which marked the success of the year was the opening of the new gymnasium, and the exceptionally high standard of work done in all departments. The prospects are still brighter for another big increase next year.

Field Secretary L. O. Lehman, will conduct a ten weeks' campaign in Illinois this summer. He will be assisted by a quintet of students' musicians, and speakers, who will give a program each evening of that period in many of the cities and towns of the state.

The Commencement Week program began with the baccalaureate sermon by President H. O. Pritchard on Sunday, June 4. The exercises of the Department of Sacred Literature were held Monday evening. The Graduation Exercises of the Preparatory Department were held Wednesday. The address was delivered by F. W. Burnham, of Cincinnati, on the subject, "The Unearned Increment." The Commencement Exercises of the college were held Friday night. Oliver W. Stewart, of Chicago, spoke on the subject, "William Shakespeare." A class of 15 graduates received their Bachelor's degree. One of the principal events of the Commencement Week was the Almuni Reunion and Dinner, Friday. The address was delivered by W. F. Richardson, of Kansas City.

The Eureka College baseball team closed the spring season by defeating Bradley 2—1.

President H. O. Pritchard returned recently from a campaign with the Men and Millions team in the East.

—E. K. Van Winkle, pastor of the church at Mishawaka, Ind., has a well defined policy for mission study in his Endeavor Society. He writes: "Our Christian Endeavor Society has elected me to teach the whole Society in Foreign Missions the last twenty minutes of each Sunday evening prayer-meeting. My plan is to have the missionary committee to select those who will prepare a special paper on each chapter and others who will begin at once to draw maps of our mission fields and have them ready for use by the time we need them. My aim will be to give some definite talk for each active member of the society. Each week the whole society will be expected to study carefully the lecture I give on the chapter the preceding week, so that they will be ready to answer questions promptly at the beginning of each lecture on an advance chapter. At the close of the study we wish to have an exhibition of maps and papers in a meeting open for the whole church."

—First church, Ardmore, Okla., has increased its membership 50 per cent during the past eight months; during the same period the Bible-school has increased 35 per cent. The congregation has raised cash to pay all expenses, and has raised an additional fund of $2,500 to purchase an organ. J. W. Burns leads in this work.

It is reported that H. H. Peters, of Paris, Ill., church, may receive appointment as secretary of the Illinois Christian Missionary Society.

NEW YORK

A Church Home for You. Write Dr. Finis Idleman, 142 West 81st St., N. Y.

—June 3 was a banner day at University church, Des Moines. Three times the auditorium was packed to its utmost to accommodate the audiences at unusual services. West High School Seniors held their baccalaureate service there in the morning, and the Drake graduates in the afternoon; in the evening eight young men from Drake were ordained to the ministry. Chas. S. Medbury delivered addresses at all services. His morning topic was "The Mind of the Master," afternoon "The Gift of Every Life," and evening, "The Romance of Preaching." The following Drake students were ordained at the evening service: Lloyd Ellis, W. J. Gratton, John C. Hirscheler, Sam. C. Kincheloe, Harry P. Leach, W. H. Parsons, John I. Roberts and James Teeters.

—R. F. Thrapp, now of First church, Los Angeles, Cal., recently visited his old charge at Jacksonville, Ill., First, and while there was given a reception by the church's Endeavor Society.

—E. V. Stivers, of First church, Stockton, Cal., delivered the memorial address for the local G. A. R. and Woman's Relief Corps.

—The Christian Endeavor Society of First church, Hutchinson, Kan., on May 28 transferred its society meeting bodily to the State Reformatory and held an impressive service for the inmates of that institution. Paul Kirkpatrick and M. Lee Sorey, pastor, had charge of the service.

—W. E. Ellis, pastor at Paris, Ky., will spend August in a trip through Yellowstone Park and at other western resorts.

—John P. Sala, of Richmond Avenue church, Buffalo, N. Y., specializes in young people. He has recently organized a class in public speaking from the high school boys of the church. This is promoted in connection with the Christian Endeavor Society.

—K. F. Nance, who resigned a few months ago from the pastorate at First church, Hutchinson, Kan., because of ill health, is now resting at Baltimore and visiting with his brother, who is president of the Maryland-Pennsylvania railroad. Mr. Nance is improving and expects to be able to return to active work in the autumn. He has no definite plans yet.

—At a recent meeting of the Commerce Club, St. Joseph, Mo., eighty-five boys of the high school graduating classes were guests, and C. M. Chilton, of First church, St. Joseph, made a stirring address on "The Responsibilities of the Educated Man." Mr. Chilton, declaring himself on preparedness, said that he was almost a "peace-at-any-price" man, but that he feared that others might not give this peace; therefore adequate defenses are necessary.

—E. O. Excell, Chicago music publisher, led the music at the Canton, O., church, on May 28.

—J. Boyd Jones, of Central church, Terre Haute, was chosen to deliver the address for the city's Memorial day service.

—The Men's Bible-class at Frankfort, Ky., church furnished the dinner for the Children's Home of Louisville, on May 30. This is a social service church. Some of its goals for June are: to co-operate with the Associated Charities, Health and Welfare League and other civic enterprises; to help in the organization of a contemplated Men's Federation; to co-operate in the plan to give summer outings to the city's poor, and to join in the City Beautiful enterprise. Roger T. Noce is the aggressive leader at Frankfort.

—Professor Asa C. Gray, of Eureka, gave the Decoration day address on "Preparedness" at the Eureka church.

—Frank Battson, a Junior in Liberal Arts at Drake, and student-pastor of the church at Stuart, Ia., was drowned in the Des Moines river in an attempt to save four companions from drowining. Young Battson was a member of the 1915 graduating class at Bethany college, and won two scholarships from the University of Chicago, in philosophy and psychology. The deceased is spoken of as a prince of a man and a fine scholar.

—The community playground maintained and controlled at North Tonawanda, N. Y., by the Central church there opened for the second season on May 30. Modern playground apparatus, tennis courts, croquet grounds, etc., make this a very popular institution in the New York town. Geo. H. Brown, pastor of this church, will preach the baccalaureate sermon for the local high school on June 25.

WHAT THEY SAY OF
BY DR. H. L. WILLETT.

The Advance, Chicago.

"This is the first of two volumes which are to constitute a survey of the entire prophetic ministry of Israel. Doctor Willett combines in notable degree ripe scholarship and power of popular interpretation, as well as a style that perfectly presents his thought in felicitous phrase."

Christian Endeavor World, Boston.

"Herbert L. Willett, of the University of Chicago, has chosen a vital as well as interesting theme in his latest book, the first volume of which is at hand, "The Moral Leaders of Israel." His narrative is lucid, and will go far to give even the novice a clear understanding of some of the reasons for the modern view."

Christian Work, New York.

"The points of emphasis are the times in which the prophets lived, their relation to the people and the government, the chief events of their lives, the essential features of their messages, and the results of their work. Each chapter presents a definite portion of scripture for class or individual study, and a treatment of the particular theme and the text in relation to the general subject of the course."

We Have Purchased Revell's Entire Stock

of Dr. W. T. Moore's Great

"History of the Disciples of Christ"

Which is a comprehensive story of the Disciples movement from the early days up to the present, with especial reference to the great characters who have led in the plea for a reunited church. Dr. Moore has gathered from many sources the material for this history, and his ripe experience and wide knowledge have enabled him to weave the facts into a most attractive and valuable book.

Dr. W. T. Moore as Author

There is certainly no other man in the brotherhood who has done or can do what Dr. Moore has done in this work, for no other man of like ability has been so close as he to the "history in the making" which he here sets forth. T. W. GRAFTON says: "Such a work was needed before the generation whose lives touched those of the pioneers had passed away, and none possess the literary gift of doing the work better than W. T. Moore."
And D. R. DUNGAN declares that "W. T. Moore is better prepared than any other man among us for this great task."
The GLOBE-DEMOCRAT, of St. Louis, thus speaks of his fitness for writing the volume: "He speaks as one having authority, as one intimately identified with the movement's history for more than forty years. Dr. Moore has written a historical work that will be monumental for decades to come, and a century hence will be an invaluable source-book."

THE GLOBE-DEMOCRAT continues: "The story Dr. Moore tells tingles the blood and fires the imagination, for it is a story of religious pioneers and adventurers of the highest character, who dared singlehanded to attack the denominational lines that were being drawn tighter and tighter in the nineteenth century. It is strictly an American story. No other country could have been the scene of the phenomena Dr. Moore narrates with the trained hand of a journalist. The conditions he describes of American religious life a century ago are almost incredible.

Three Reasons

WHY YOU SHOULD SECURE THIS GREAT BOOK:

1. Because this is probably the only history of the Disciples that will ever be written by a man who saw this remarkable movement develop in its earlier phases.
2. Because of the intensely interesting personal descriptions of the Disciples pioneer leaders given by Dr. Moore from first-hand observation.
3. Because of the splendid array of pictures presented in the volume, of the men who have made the movement, and scenes that have become famous for their connection with the early phases of its development. The pictures alone are worth all that the book costs.

One Great Reason

Why You Should Order Your Copy NOW:

Because there is a very limited number of copies still on hand. These will be sold in a VERY SHORT TIME.

This is a sumptuous volume of 700 pages, beautifully printed and bound, and sold by the publishers at $4.00, $5.00, and $6.00 for cloth, half morocco, and full morocco respectively. We now offer this great work for—

$2.50, $3.50 and $4.00

Send your order today. You cannot afford to delay. ADDRESS:—

DISCIPLES PUBLICATION SOCIETY, PROPRIETORS, : 700 EAST 40th STREET, CHICAGO

Disciples Publication Society

The Disciples Publication Society is an organization through which churches of the Disciples of Christ seek to promote undenominational and constructive Christianity.

The relationship it sustains to the Disciples is intimate and organic, though not official. The Society is not a private institution. It has no capital stock. No individuals profit by its earnings.

The charter under which the Society exists determines that whatever profits are earned shall be applied to agencies which foster the cause of religious education, although it is clearly conceived that its main task is not to make profits but to produce literature for building up character and for advancing the cause of religion.

The Disciples Publication Society regards itself as a thoroughly undenominational institution. It is organized and constituted by individuals and churches who interpret the Disciples' religious reformation as ideally an unsectarian and unecclesiastical fraternity, whose common tie and original impulse are fundamentally the desire to practice Christian unity with all Christians.

The Society therefore claims fellowship with all who belong to the living Church of Christ, and desires to co-operate with the Christian people of all communions as well as with the congregations of Disciples, and to serve all.

The Christian Century, the chief publication of the Society, desires nothing so much as to be the worthy organ of the Disciples' movement. It has no ambition at all to be regarded as an organ of the Disciples' denomination. It is a free interpreter of the wider fellowship in religious faith and service which it believes every church of Disciples should embody. It strives to interpret all communions, as well as the Disciples, in such terms and with such sympathetic insight as may reveal to all their essential unity in spite of denominational isolation. The Christian Century, though published by the Disciples, is not published for the Disciples alone. It is published for the Christian world. It desires definitely to occupy a catholic point of view and it seeks readers in all communions.

Two Great Bible Courses

For Summer Study

When the summer season comes adult classes often become restless under the courses of study that have been followed during the year. Why not consider for your class one of the splendid courses on the Bible which have been especially prepared for class study? One of these deals in Old Testament life, the other with the New Testament.

BY DR. HERBERT L. WILLETT.

is a course treating in a most attractive way the mountain peak personalities of the Old Testament. Moses, Samuel, David, Elijah, Isaiah and the other great spokesmen for God are here made to live again in twentieth century life. A thoughtful class will have its interest renewed by this fine course.

"The Life of Jesus"

BY DR. LOA E. SCOTT.

is a question and answer study of the life of Jesus and is especially adapted to High School and adult age. Hundreds of classes have been built up on the basis of this attractive course, and there is no reason why your class should wait until autumn or winter to begin the work.

DON'T WASTE THE SUMMER! MAKE IT COUNT FOR GENUINE STUDY!
Send $1.00 for a copy of Dr. Willett's book, 50c for Dr. Scott's, or $1.35 for the two. Then decide which you will choose for your summer study.

Volume XXXIII JUNE 22, 1916 Number 25

Concerning Weddings

ARE YOU INVITED TO THE WEDDING?

This question is being asked a good many times this month. With general prosperity, weddings are much more numerous this year than last. Perhaps most of us will go to a wedding this month. We certainly will if we are invited, for no other social function so interests the whole population, from small boy to grandmother.

What are you going to give the young people?

Of course, everybody will give something. There will be the table on which is piled silver and gold, and scattered around the room in profusion are the gifts which have cost the donors much thought, and often a good deal of money.

We will want to give our congratulations and best wishes. We will prophesy joy and prosperity of every sort. We will offer good counsel.

But the ghost haunts the feast.

How long will this new home last?

In the whole United States, one married couple in sixteen secures a divorce. There are sections in the United States where the ratio would be one in five. Nor are these divorces the only tokens of marriages that were ill-advised. Thousands of unhappy souls carry burdens which they lightly contracted. They are now repenting in leisure but in much sorrow.

Ought we not to stop some weddings?

We need new divorce laws, and judges with conscience to enforce them, but we need more to delay or even prevent some weddings. It is a delicate thing to do, and no one can succeed unless he appeal to something that is even holier than human love. Perhaps the wedding that we are soon to attend needs to be preceded by more courtship. Next year it would be a sweeter and holier union than it could be if made in the haste of a short acquaintance.

We remember other weddings which were the beginning of tragedy. In one home there was not a proper economic footing for the new union. Another reveals the fact that there should have been a more careful examination of candidates for marriage, physically, mentally and socially.

However, it may be that the wedding we are invited to is one that satisfies the deep places in our hearts. The young people are well mated. How handsome they are when they are together!

What kind of a wedding shall it be?

Few of us ever go to a wedding where there is not a minister. Though we do not believe marriage is a sacrament in the ancient sense, we want to surround it with all of the flavor of religion. If religion is as big as life, of course that is right. We want the minister there.

Perhaps we will be tempted to try to stimulate an artificial wedding joy by turning a religious service into a carnival. With rice and old shoes, we will laugh the blessing of the man of God out of the hearts of the congregation. It is the day of a lifetime for our young friends. It is improbable they will ever be married again. Every little incident of the wedding day will be written indelibly in their hearts. How they will wish that some clown, who feels not the grace of God on this high day, had not been invited! They feel the appropriateness of the minister's words, that they shall not enter into the holy relation "unadvisedly or lightly, but reverently, discreetly, soberly and in the fear of God."

If we are very well acquainted with the young people, we shall drop them a quiet word of advice before they hurry away. It is rather late to do this, however, for they should have accumulated this wisdom through the years.

The union formed on this wedding day is for life. Even if there were no statute requiring this, that would likely be true, for those whom God hath joined together are not to be torn asunder either by the wrath of man or by the grip of misfortune. Marriage lasts longest of the human relationships, longer than the relation which binds the child to his parents or the parents to the child. How necessary to begin laying broad and deep on the wedding day the foundation of a lasting friendship!

No home is solidly built, which is not built upon religion. It was to say this that we invited the minister to the wedding. The new home will not get far, without the principle of sacrifice. Sometimes one, sometimes the other, makes all the sacrifices in a home. The ideal home is one where the only rivalry is to be pre-eminent in self-denial.

We must warn the young people that the new home will need the grace of patience. The wedding togs, the innocent disguises of courtship, these and many things else will soon be laid aside. The young people will see each other every morning at the breakfast table. They will meet the jars and annoyances of housekeeping, and after a while of the rearing of children. Patient souls will persevere and make their home perfect through suffering.

Perhaps the bride has resigned her Bible-school class and the young man will not act as usher at church any more. They think they ought to have a vacation from the church. And perhaps they will take a vacation from prayer, too, and from the Bible. They intend to come back, but they may never be as near to God again. We might well say to them, in a quiet place, that marriage should bring them closer to the church and closer to God than ever before.

The Freemasonry of all Married People makes ready to receive the new members. It is the circle of those who have taken upon their strong shoulders the heavier burdens of the race. It is the group of those who care for the future of God's world and help to make ready for it. The sour and disappointed woman will see the bride soon and instruct her in her "rights." The man will be tempted by his old companions to neglect his newly-made home. Let the Freemasonry of all Married People find this a time to speak for the good of the order.

We should exalt the home and the marriage relationship. The young married people must not doubt for one moment that they have joined those who know the truest and deepest joys of the children of God.

The Soul of Latin America

An Interpretation of the Spiritual Life of the People Whose Evangelization the Panama Congress Was Called to Consider.

BY CHARLES T. PAUL.

THE founders and prophets of the Latin American republics were characterized by great expectations. Their political idealism was derived from the New Testament, or from Lamertine, who spoke of democracy as "the direct reign of God, the application of Christian ideas to the world of politics." Montalvo, of Ecuador, declared that democracy would be the law of the nations, "if some day the spirit of the Gospel were to prevail." His prophetic enthusiasm inspired of faith in the perfectibility of men was expressed in exalted conceptions of the destiny of the future inhabitants of South America, "who" he said, "will be our descendants when the traveler shall sadly seat himself to meditate upon the ruins of the Louvre, the Vatican or St. Paul's."

Simon Bolivar, liberator of five republics, dreamed of a state with a tribunal of moral authority to banish vice and reward virtue. To the early reformers and emancipators everything seemed possible when once the power of the Spanish dominion was broken. Their minds were luminous with visions of ideal commonwealths based on justice, righteousness and peace. This sublimated idealism found its most ardent and vibrant expression in the poets who, in the decades following emancipation from 1810 onwards, rose to sing the hopes of the new born nations. Their verses throb and glow with soaring optimism, with exalted valuation of life, with doubtless confidence in the potencies of society waiting to be revealed. Joaquin Castellanos hymned "the new garden of the Hesperides," "the new Eden"—"our fair America, the oasis where after rough journeys over arid wastes pilgrim humanity may pitch its tent."

"THE POEM OF LATIN HOPE."

Olegario Andrada, the laureate of the Argentine, in his noble epic "Atlantida," which has been called the poem of the Latin hope, celebrated Latin America as "the golden promise of humanity's future," calling the world to behold "the fairest of visions" and to hear "in the colossal hymn of the deserts, the eternal communion of nations." He salutes Colombia, "the opulent bearing in its bosom the inexhaustible youth of the world." Venezuela is hailed as a "vast hearth of life and animation, cradle of the great Bolivar and everything great beside;" Bolivia is "the land of restless genius and constant valor, dreaming of wide horizons." Peru is "the seat of a virile people astir with the seed of redemption." Chile is "more valorous in industry than in war." Brazil receiving the surging kiss of the Atlantic "will realize increasing greatness with enlarging freedom;" Uruguay "yielded her bosom to the caress of progress" and the Argentine "forever in quest of sublime ideals, a young nation lulled in its very cradle by immortal songs calls to the feast of its wealth all who worship at freedom's sacred shrine."

LITTLE OPTIMISM TODAY.

But it cannot be said that this note of buoyant confidence and hope is the dominant strain of Latin American literature today—of either its poetry or the deliberate prose of its social and political aspirations. Indeed, the high expectation accompanying the rise of the democracies suffered eclipse in the minds of many of the emancipators, before they passed from the scene of action. For example, Bolivar looking backward upon his great work of political deliverance and outward on the social conditions which followed it, wrote: "Those who have served the cause of the Revolution have ploughed the sand." Reflecting on the moral poverty of his people he said, "if it were possible that a portion of the world should return to its primitive chaos, such would be the last phase of America." Shortly before his death in 1830 he had reached the state of pessimism indicated in his memorable words: "There is no faith in America, neither among men nor among nations. Treaties are scraps of paper (papeles), constitutions are mere books, elections are combats, liberty is anarchy and life is a torment."

"THE BLIGHT OF PESSIMISM."

It is a conservative statement of fact to say that the pages of the most brilliant of contemporary Latin American authors, with few exceptions, bear in a conspicuous degree the blight of pessimism. There is the frankest avowal of the loss of social hope, of depreciation of the value of human life, of the worthlessness of all struggle or effort for improvement, and the concomitant of such avowal is usually a loss of belief in God and the soul.

Let us take for example Manuel Gonzales Prada, Peru's most eminent critic and litterateur, and present director of the National Library at Lima. No foreigner has ever ventured such searching analysis and such scathing exposure of conditions in Peru as that which Senor Prada has presented in a recently published work. With an invective beside which the Old Testament prophets were mild he declaims against "La mentira social," "the social lie." Everywhere he sees weakness, falseness, corruption. The government is "imbecility in action." "Littleness abounds in everything, littleness in characters, littleness in hearts," "What publicist," he cries, "will break the muzzle of gold?" "What poet will thunder with anger engendered by wrong?" "Peru is a sick organism; wherever the finger is applied to her she exudes pus."

A WAIL OF DESPAIR.

But Gonzales Prada has no remedy for the disease: he has no faith in the state or in man. Seriously he raises the question as to whether man is worth little or nothing. He exults in debasement, "Why deny human perversity? There are men who kill by their very shadow, like the manchineel of Cuba or the upas tree of Java." He laughs at friendship: "Our friends are accursed plots where we sow wheat and reap weeds." What motive can there be for social effort when life itself is regarded as a bane? Here is the fundamental proposition which underlies the writer's despair:—"Why desire to live? If life were a blessing the surety we have of losing it would of itself suffice to turn it into an evil." "We should all believe it (life) a dream if sorrow did not prove to us the reality of things." "Existence and sorrow are synonymous. The most worthy work of a God would be to reduce the universe to nothing." Gonzales Prada, brilliant essayist, master of a faultless Castillian style, the acknowledged leader of a whole coterie of young disciples, stands towards the close of his career with a wail of despair upon his lips, with no constructive or saving message for his needy country.

In recent years a new group of poets has arisen called the modernists, whose avowed mission is to sing again of the America of Columbus and Bolivar—"the vast province of Utopian dreams." The group, including among many others such writers as Amadeo Nervo of Mexico, Julian del Casal of Cuba, Rufino Blanco, Fombona of Venezuela, Jose Asuncion Silva of Colombia, Gallegos del Campo of Ecuador, Jose Santos Chocano of Peru, Jaimes Freyre of Bolivia, Julio Herrera Reissig of Uruguay, Diego Duble Urrutia of Chile, Enrique Banchs of Argentine and Ruben Dario of Nicaragua.

THE GREATEST OF MODERN LYRISTS.

These modernists profess to give us the last and highest word of the present Latin American ideal and aspiration. The dean and outstanding genius of them all is Ruben Dario of Nicaragua who has written with such beauty of form and sentiment that he is regarded by many as the greatest of modern lyrists. And it is in Dario that the undertone of despair which characterizes this entire school finds its saddest and most arresting voice. Even through his most exalted verse, in the words of Spain's most penetrating critic, Juan Valera, runs "the negation and contempt of God;" and, as to man, "a pessimism which disturbs with its dissonances now with a shriek of pain, now with an outburst of laughing scorn."

Even when one turns to Dario's "Songs of Life and Hope," expecting some strong positive note of optimism and confidence one is disappointed. In one lyric entitled "Melancholy" he speaks of going blind and distracted through a bitter world, bleeding drops of melancholy, breathing agony and bearing a burden of woes he can scarcely endure. And in another he sings the proposition that life's great fatality is life itself.

"For there is no greater sorrow than the sorrow of being alive.
Nor great burden than that of conscious existence."

In history he sees that goodness and honesty are but as "the foam on the sea," while evil is triumphant.

"Together we have seen the wrong.
And how in the turmoil of the world.
A triumphal arch for every vice is reared."

LIFE WITHOUT WHY OR WHEN.

Among the latest compositions of the Peruvian Chocano are two pieces entitled "The Useless Struggle" and "Nocturn." In the first he says, "In this futile war against chance I see only the mouth of the opening grave" and in the second he confesses himself crushed by the thought of useless striving, of building on the air, of ploughing in the foam, of living an entire life without a why or a when.

Another typical utterance is that of Julio de Rivalta of Guatemala who, confronted by human need and sorrow, seeks only a sentimental escape.

"So fierce the struggle, so intense
The weariness of life I feel,
Why speeds not my departure hence?
In sleepless nights is my appeal."

And he prays that some invincible power would snatch from him the image of suffering and put it into some unfeeling heart.

Perez Flores of Ecuador echoes a Buddhist lament in his verse of "gloomy desolation and hollow pain," realized in man's existence which is "illusion deceptively sustained like the sad symphony of the sea."

LATIN AMERICA'S NEGATIVE NOTE AND THE MESSAGE NEEDED.

Only one more quotation is given of hundreds which might be offered to illustrate the negative message of Latin American letters—the loss of the zest of life, of confidence in man, of social sympathy and hope. It is from the "Nihilismo" of the Cuban lyrist, Julian del Casal.

"To every groan now I am deaf,
Now I am dead to every smile.
Nought in the future stirs my soul,
Nought in the present I deem good;
If I look to the horizon all is dark,
If I bend to the earth, all is mud."

Over against this philosophy of materialism and despair so largely held by the intellectual classes of the southern republics, how opportune the message of Christ with his gift of new life, his revelation of God, his sublime faith in the redemptibility of men, his vision of a coming kingdom of brotherhood! How can there be moral, social and religious progress in Latin America unless the intellectual leaders are themselves inspired with some dynamic of hope? Thousands of brilliant men in these countries sincerely believe that Christianity is a dead issue. The answer of a buoyant evangelicalism, conscious of its abounding life and longing to share with all men who have it not what it believes they need, is this: Dogmatism may be dead, mediaevalism may be dead, ecclesiastical forms and institutions may be but empty shells from which life has departed; but Jesus Christ lives to reinspire and to save Latin America, to more than fulfill the dreams of her greatest seers. Latin America waits for the manifestation of Christ's love and power in the devoted service of his true disciples, seeking to interpret and apply his principles and spirit to all phases of personal and national life.

The War and Spirituality

R. J. CAMPBELL in the British Weekly

A FRIEND wrote to me while I was in France commenting upon the remarkable sign of the times evidenced by the fact that the secular press is now devoting so much space week by week to spiritual subjects. Before the war, he said, this would have been unthinkable; people would not have wanted it, whereas now they do almost universally.

REV. R. J. CAMPBELL

The wide interest shown some months back in the letters of the Rev. E. A. Burroughs to the Times, so far from having died away, has spread abroad and is finding expression through media still more unusual. From what one can see the same is largely true of our Colonies and the United States.

AFTER THE WAR—WHAT?

My correspondent asked, and others have asked since, whether from my experience I thought this tendency was likely to survive the war and how much it portended for the future. Frankly, I do not know; it would be impossible to say. There are other facts pointing in an almost opposite direction from those just indicated, such as, until the recent drastic regulations were introduced, the increase of drinking among the poorer classes, and an observable disposition towards vicious enjoyment among those better off. I do not think the larger attendance at public worship in the first few months of the war has been generally maintained. I may be mistaken in this, but such is my impression.

Neither is there overwhelming evidence that the whole nation has betaken itself to intercession on behalf of those who are maintaining our cause at home and abroad as unquestionably did seem to be the case at the commencement of the struggle. Here again I may be wrong; it is so difficult to generalize. And fervor cannot be kept at high pitch for very long. People may fall back into their ordinary habits of life without ceasing to feel deeply and seriously on the great matters at issue and their responsibility to God for dealing rightly with them.

RELIGION MUCH DISCUSSED.

And, as aforesaid, there is the undoubted fact to be taken into consideration that in quarters where religion was never mentioned before or even treated with contempt it is a theme of constant discussion now, and surely this is all to the good. If the secular press finds it worth while to open its columns continually to subjects with a religious bearing there must be an important change somewhere.

It may be that we shall have a violent reaction in the period immediately following the declaration of peace, just as there was a violent reaction against the Puritan regime after the death of Cromwell, and the recall of King Charles the Second. The wildest license was indulged in then; the nation at large appeared to change its character from grave to gay, certainly it changed its tone. There would have been no harm in laughter and jollity after so much of Puritan seriousness, but a looseness of morals supervened which speedily brought down our national credid and made us play a meaner part in the councils of Europe. Of course, this may happen again, but somehow I think not.

A POSSIBLE REACTION.

We shall be very poor after the war, poor in substance and in the loss of so large a proportion of our best manhood on the field of battle, and it will take us long to recover. What we are witnessing today, both of good and ill, alluded to above—the new mood in which we find ourselves—is due mainly to our disillusionment with civilization. Taken on the whole we have been living for wrong values and are now paying the price.

As the great German thinker, Rudolf Eucken, kept on telling us for years and years before the war began, civilization had got into a cul de sac; we had fallen into the habit of looking for all our good on the outside of life. Men tend to become like their pursuits, and the ordinary man of the Western world had become so wrapped up in considerations of material good as to be gradually rendering himself incapable of imagining or desiring any other kind of good. (By the way, one of the saddest disappointments to me, as to many others in connection with the war, is the fact that Eucken has now gone right over to the Prussian militaristic side and denounces England as the main cause of the outbreak of hostilities and the friend of barbarism as opposed to enlightenment. Well, well!)

EUCKEN AND THE WAR.

If there were one country more than another of which his indictment was true it was Germany, but we were all more or less tarred with the same brush, and now we are finding it out. If you had asked a Greek statesman in, say, the days of Pericles what civilization was for, what the object of statesmanship was, he would have told you at once, to make good citizens. If you were to ask any European statesman the same question today he would have no answer unless it were to say that getting the greatest amount possible of comfort, ease, and abundance were what was aimed at.

WHAT THE WAR MEANS.

Undoubtedly that is what an ordinary political speech points to and assumes in those to whom it is addressed —or did up to July, 1914. Now all is changed. Our material civilization has failed us; it has done nothing for the soul, as witness German devilry in the field. Intellectual cleverness may have no relation to character unless to make it a greater force for evil; salvation, individual or collective, is not to be won by material efficiency but by change of heart. We are having to begin at the bottom again and learn our lesson through much tribulation. "Though our outward man perish, yet our inward man is renewed day by day."

For the moment, at any rate, or so it would seem, the nations are wistfully taking account of the eternal once more. How much this means we cannot yet be sure; it may mean a return to the time-honored observances of the Christian faith, and it may not.

BRITISH SOLDIERS AT THE FRONT.

As to the situation with our soldiers opinions differ. I can but describe them as I found them. It was a strange experience to take church parade in camp, or, better still, an ordinary evening service in one of the numerous large huts erected within the war zone, and compare it with what used to be in the old days.

The psychological atmosphere was very remarkable, especially in the case of men who had been in the trenches. There was an intensity, an eagerness, to hear, a reverence and responsiveness not usual, I should imagine, among the same class at home. I scarcely think it would be true to say that they dwelt much upon the ecclesiastical view of things as such. It may even be questioned whether they thought of the church as having any greater claim upon their allegiance than heretofore.

Denominations were mixed up in the most extraordinary way—I do not mean, of course, in the regulation military services, but in the voluntary ones. Church or chapel, it seemed to matter little, there they were.

A question about transubstantiation was put to me in one of my meetings, and I incautionsly answered it, never dreaming that Roman Catholics were present. But there were. One rose and objected, so I inquired if there were any more, and found quite a large number. I was careful to keep off divisive subjects after that. There was no need to mention them.

OBSERVATIONS AMONG THE SOLDIERS.

What these brave fellows wanted was to hear and ask about supersensuous realities, about God, the soul, and the life to come. The last Sunday night before I came away was wet and stormy, and I had to drive about ten miles to conduct evening prayer and give an address at a certain camp. I thought nobody would be there, but the place was crammed from end to end. I wonder if many London churches were equally full at the same hour; I doubt it.

KNOWLEDGE OF GOD DESIRED.

And would those same soldiers to a man have been found in church a year and a half ago? I doubt it still more. Life takes on a new perspective for those who are looking death in the face day after day, and doing it not for themselves but for the land they love and a cause greater still. It must lead them to see new meanings in the mystery of the Passion of Christ for man's salvation, and a new beauty to desire, a deeper fellowship to be realized, with Him whose pierced hand holds the sceptre of omnipotence, and on whose brows a glory rests that had not been but for the crown of thorns.

Counting Our Assets

By Shailer Mathews

RELIGIOUS teachers are always tempted to magnify the evils of society. The literature of moral idealism is a continuous lamentation upon the sins of contemporaries and the virtues of our ancestors. We are still urged to restore the olden-time honesty of fathers, the modesty of mothers, the filial piety of sons, and the domestic faithfulness of daughters. Men and women have to be dead at least two generations before they can be regarded as saints.

Particularly is this true in a day that finds itself startled by a terrible war. Just why we should be so surprised that Christian nations should fight each other is hard to say. They have always fought—and fought bitterly. If the Puritans did not kill as many people at the same time as can our modern artillery, it was not because of any lack of desire. The spirit was willing but the ammunition was weak.

We may very easily paint the present situation, like all moralists, in too dark colors. Civilization has not collapsed. Millions of men are fighting each other, but vastly more members of the same nations are going about their daily business. Schools and universities, hospitals, libraries, the institutions of charity, family loyalty, respect for property rights, and even a desire to apologize for being at war, have not disappeared. Certain soldiers have yielded to the backward pull of war and have turned primeval savage, but the same is true, though less openly in many countries where there is no war.

What really has happened is that we have discovered that internationalism has not been Christianized.

Yet even this is too pessimistic a statement.

There never was a time when the peace movement was so strong as at the present moment.

There never was a time when more sensible and promising efforts were made to outlaw war.

There never was a time when Christian leaders have less championed war. The very fact that Christianity is blamed for permitting a war to exist, and that the church is condemned for not bringing the war to a close, is evidence that the world is taking Christianity and the church more seriously than ever before.

Is it conceivable that on the Continent of Europe there could be waged today the Wars of Religion which followed the Reformation? Is it conceivable that the churches of Great Britain could today oppose each other in persecution and battle as in the seventeenth century? Is it conceivable that those who are opposed to war should be persecuted today as were the early Quakers?

While we recognize the awfulness of the present world-struggle, and while we uncompromisingly seek to make a war a matter of archaeology, let us not overlook the solid accomplishments of the Christian spirit. It is only sensible to realize that we cannot make men over again in a moment. We can change their moral attitude rapidly but not the social ideas which determine the operations of their moral life. The man who cannot realize that there has been a definite and steady rise of the tide of morality since Professor John Hus was burned alive at the behest of churchmen is threatened with melancholia.

We have not made the world into the Kingdom of God, but we have made it much less the kingdom of Satan. God's will is not done on earth as it is in heaven, but God is much better obeyed than he ever was before.

God has not left his world and although there are tares in the field there is more seed.

Let us count our liabilities if we must, but as sensible folk let us count our assets as well.

Union Churches

In order to break down the sense of isolation which exists among union churches, and to let workers in this field know of the progress of the movement toward unity in other communities, we are maintain ing this open forum. We wish to present plans of organization and work of united, federated and community churches, and to chronicle the progress of the movement as a whole. We ask any reader who knows of any union church that has not previously been reported in this current series to send us information concerning it. Address: Howard E. Jensen, care of "The Christian Century."

THE QUESTION OF MAXIMUMS.

There has been much energy, and at times, unfortunately, no little heat expended upon the discussion as to whether the reunion of Christendom is to be effected upon the basis of maximums or of minimums, and as to the definition of the maximums or minimums upon the basis of which alone is reunion possible or desirable. The discussion has a modern sound, but in truth goes back as far as Bishop Andrewes, who protested against the labors of John Durie on behalf of Christian union in the seventeenth century, declaring that he sought "no pax in terris except it first be seen how it can stand with gloria in excelsis."

But the wholly abstract and academic character of this discussion is becoming increasingly clear in the light of the actual experiments in Christian unity which are being conducted in all parts of the country. For church unity, as it is actually being realized in the concrete instances which we are chronicling in this department, is concerned with neither maximums nor minimums, but with realities.

The realities of religion upon the basis of which union churches are actually springing up are not found in those creedal earmarks whereby we distinguish Christians of one denomination from another, but in those fundamental qualities of character and conduct which mark the Christian spirit wherever it appears, and by means of which we recognize our true fellowship with the saints of all the ages. The intellectual content of belief varies with generations and individuals, but true faith, aspiration and service are everywhere and forever the same. When the depths of the soul are sounded, when the heights of faith are scaled, when with eager feet we follow Christ in paths of loving service, then do we recognize our common spiritual kinship.

Harry Emerson Fosdick has struck this deeper note of unity on the basis of realities when in his little book on "The Meaning of Prayer," he says: "As in our Christian hymns, where we leave the more superficial difference of opinion and go down into the essential spirit of worship, Catholics and Protestants, Jews and Gentiles, men of every shade of special belief and sectarian alliance are authors of the hymns we all sing, so in prayer men of opposite opinions agree as one. Luther, the Protestant, is alien at how many points from St. Bernard, the Catholic, and yet Luther says, 'In the faith wherein St. Bernard prays, do I pray also.'"

Let us formulate for the Christian Union Movement a new slogan: "NOT MAXIMUMS AND NOT MINIMUMS, BUT REALITIES!"

THE COMMUNITY CHURCH AT HYDESVILLE, CAL.

The "Community Church of Hydesville, Cal.," is entering upon its second year of usefulness. It is a federation of two older organizations of Congregationalists and Disciples, the membership of which had dwindled to negligible proportions. But a few choice spirits among the remnants of both organizations furnished the nucleus out of which has grown an institution which ministers vitally to the religious life of the community.

The response of the people has been most encouraging. Before the Community Church was organized there was no regular preaching at either church, and such occasional services as were held were attended by a mere handful of people. Now the church maintains regular preaching services with good audiences, and an efficient Sunday-school with an attendance much larger than that of the combined schools before the union. A good choir with regular practice adds to the attractiveness of the services. A Boy Scout Troop has been organized which includes almost every boy in town. The church also has a Ladies' Guild, a real "aid society," a small but helpful prayermeeting, and seeks in a systematic way to develop and direct the social life of the people.

But the church does not limit itself in vision and mission to its own community The Articles of Agreement state, "It shall be understood that the name 'Community Church' does not imply the dissolution of existing organizations or any breaking of denominational ties. It is desired to encourage fellowship in missionary enterprises through denominational organizations and to conserve what is best in denominational life and ideals. The denominational organizations shall therefore be maintained as custodians of the property and channels of communication with the denominational interests at large."

Rev. Frank E. Boren, pastor of the church, writes, "No emphasis is placed upon denominational interests locally. Just now we are arranging Children's Day Exercises, the offering at which will be divided equally between the two denominational societies. There was practically no fellowship of this sort here before the union work was started. We will probably have far more of the larger fellowship now than ever before. About all that denominational fellowship amounts to in most cases is an occasional missionary offering and perhaps an individual here and there who reads a denominational paper and thus keeps up some interest in the larger work."

Members are received into the congregation upon a simple confession of a desire and purpose to live a life of faith in Jesus Christ and of devotion to his ideals. Those who desire further denominational fellowship are encouraged in their desire and assisted in the fulfillment of denominational requirements, although this is not a condition of membership in the Community church.

Mr. Boren believes that such organizations as that at Hydesville will be conducive to long and successful pastorates and will make possible the realization of the best ideals of church efficiency in small communities. The smaller churches suffer from too frequent ministerial changes which result in the disorganization of all systematic plans for pastoral work and religious education.

Poets and Poetry

WORDSWORTH: HOW TO KNOW HIM. By C. T. Winchester. This volume is one of the unique series on famous literary men edited by Prof. Will D. Howe. The theory according to which these books are written is that the way into an author's works is via his personality, and in the volumes already off the press the writers succeed admirably in making the readers to "know" their subjects. Wordsworth had but little history aside from his poetry itself, and much of his writing is woven interestingly into the discussion of the man. (Bobbs-Merrill Co., Indianapolis, Ind. $1.25 net.)

CARLYLE: HOW TO KNOW HIM. By Bliss Perry. Another volume of the series above described. This review may seem to some readers out of place under the head, "Poets and Poetry." But, after all, Carlyle was a great poet. Anyone who has read his "Sartor Resartus," his "Hero Worship" or his "French Revolution," will testify to that fact. Professor Perry, of Harvard, has here led us into the inner rooms of this remarkable man's thought-life. (Bobbs-Merrill Co., Indianapolis. $1.25 net.)

SPOON RIVER ANTHOLOGY. By Edgar Lee Masters. Almost a best seller, this. It was reported several weeks ago that already 12,000 copies of the book had been sold. This fact, of course, does not prove that poetry has become popular. It does mean for one thing that advertising has become an effective art. There are some fine bits of poetry in the book, for instance this, spoken of Lincoln:

"And I saw a man arise from the soil like a fabled giant
And throw himself over a deathless destiny,
Master of great armies, head of the republic,
Bringing together into a dithyramb of recreative song
The epic hopes of a people."

In this book a cemetery located down on Spoon River, somewhere near Beardstown, Ill., is poetically visited and the graves opened up, and the long-dead inhabitants of a certain prosaic little village are made to tell the stories of their lives and of their passing. Here is the post-mortem report of "Jonas Keene":

"Why did Albert Schirding kill himself
Trying to be County Superintendent of Schools,
Blest as he was with the means of life
And wonderful children, bringing him honor
Ere he was sixty?
If even one of my boys could have run a newsstand,
Or one of my girls could have married a decent man,
I should not have walked in the rain
And jumped into bed with clothes all wet,
Refusing medical aid."

We shall say nothing concerning the above except this: that a few of the selections in the volume come nearer being poetry than "Jonas Keene's" little speech. (Macmillan Company, New York. $1.25.)

POEMS: BY HARRIET MCEWEN KIMBALL. It is like passing from the gloom of a graveyard into a beautiful cathedral to read this book of religious verse, immediately after laying down the "Spoon River" production. The work of Harriet M. Kimball was highly praised by Whittier, Edmund Clarence Stedman, and others. She has been called the Keble of America. Here is just one of her beautiful poems.

"Without I hear the beating of the rain,
Tho howling winds that tell the storm's increase:
O covert sure that he who seeks may gain!—
Within abideth peace!

"Without I hear the sound of feet that halt,
And grope and stumble in the blinding night:
O blessed faith that serveth in default
Of what men call the light!

"O rest, O wayside inn, where home is not
For the poor pilgrim to that city fair
Where strife shall cease and doubtings be forgot!
The Lamb, the Light is there!"

God be thanked for this poet of the spirit! (Young Churchman Co., Milwaukee.) T. C. C.

Rev. Frank W. Warne, D. D., bishop of Southern Asia for the Methodist Episcopal Church, makes the following interesting statement as to evangelization in India. He says "There were baptized by our church in India last year, 35,000; turned away by our church in India last year, 40,000; waiting inquirers who have waited in vain, 150,000; people who are beginning now to turn toward Christ, 500,000 to 1,000,000; people in the caste in which the movement is now on, 11,000,000; total number of the community among whom the movement is now on, 50,000,000."

One of the many good stories in which the late ex-President Timothy Dwight figures goes back to the days of his tutorship at Yale College, when he was charged with a certain measure of discipline.

A sudden midnight commotion on the campus drew him from his room and his long legs enabled him to gain quickly on the runaways. Seeing that he would shortly be abreast of them, he called out, "Gentlemen, if you do not run a little faster I shall be obliged to overtake you."

THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY

EDITORIAL

PROGRESS IN RELIGIOUS EXPERIENCE

THE writer to the Hebrews exhorted his hearers in the following words: "Therefore leaving the principles of the doctrine of Christ, let us go on to perfection; not laying again the foundation." It is just this that some Christians are unwilling to do. There must have been men in the early church that continued to be more interested in the way to get into the church, than in the process of achieving the well-rounded life in Christ Jesus. They were the Christians who tarried by the font, when they should have been in the vineyard.

The Disciples of Christ have sometimes used the restoration concept and talked of restoring doctrines, ordinances and the New Testament life. The latter element has sometimes been slurred over as if it would take care of itself if only the first two matters received proper emphasis. Just the opposite of this has proved true in our experience. Many of our churches today are dying for the lack of vital piety. Correct in form, they are dead in the things of the spiritual life.

In the days that lie before us, we will often need the text from Hebrews. It will not lead us to despise "first principles" but it will lead us to seek the deeper things of God.

This wonderful religious life that lies beyond first principles involves an understanding of the mind of the living Christ in the circumstances of our modern life. What would Christ have me be and do in this complicated modern world? We must seek it by a closer walk with Him.

Great unexplored sections of the Bible must be opened up to our minds. We need not only the texts that tell of the beginning of salvation's process, but those equally useful sections of the great book that lead to the fuller life of the Spirit. Do we know the prophets and psalms as we should?

When we have found in that realm which is beyond first principles the spirit of prayer, and of missions, and of service; when we know God not by hearsay, but for ourselves, we shall have sounded some of the depths of our wonderful religion.

AN OPPORTUNITY FOR HOME MISSIONS

THE Disciples were among the earliest to do work among the Russian immigrants in America. First in New York and later in Chicago, results were achieved which in view of the trifling expenditure were most encouraging.

There are probably about 300,000 Russians in the United States. These have not scattered much, but are mostly in large groups. New York has 80,000; Scranton, Pa., 46,000; Pittsburgh, 40,000; Newark, 25,000; Chicago, 30,000; Philadelphia, 13,000; Boston, 5,000; Milwaukee, 5,000. There are perhaps 50,000 others in the United States.

Instead of a life and death struggle to finance evangelistic work in many sections of the country where people are often well cared for religiously, why should not the Home Society challenge the missionary spirit of the brotherhood by asking for funds for the care of these immigrants? As yet, but little is done among them, though they are beginning to interest to some degree other great home missionary bodies.

The Disciples have several advantages in this work. They have the advantage of an early start. They find the members of the Orthodox churches not averse to the Disciple practice of baptism. The Slavic mind has already responded to the kind of preaching the Disciples do.

These new immigrants need many things. Illiteracy is high among them, many not being able to read even in Russian. The anarchist propaganda finds most fruitful soil here. The Russians are living in some of the worst quarters of the great cities. To reach them we have only to go with education, social service, and a kindly interest in all that concerns their higher welfare. This attitude will open their hearts to the larger and truer interpretation of the Christian religion which it is our privilege to furnish.

Were our home mission forces to challenge us with a big program for a group of immigrants like the Russians, the days of penury and want for the society would pass.

SOCIAL SERVICE IN THE CHURCHES

IT IS within the span of one man's life, and less, since the first bit of interest in social service was organized in the Protestant churches. How amazing the developments have been in this period is shown by "A Year Book of the Church and Social Service in the United States," prepared by Rev. Harry F. Ward, and published by the Missionary Education Movement and the Federal Council of Churches. This meaty book which sells for the small price of fifty cents contains full information about the social service work of the various denominations. Disciples will secure it of their social service secretary, Prof. A. W. Taylor, Columbia, Mo. Instead of being a dry catalogue of facts, the book contains both factual matter and interpretation.

In telling the story of the development of social work in the churches, the Presbyterian denomination figures prominently. The work of Rev. Charles Stelzle is epoch-making in its significance.

He brought his denomination—and in a measure, the entire Protestant movement—into touch with the labor movement, so we are having less to say these days about the differences between the church and labor.

It was also through Mr. Stelzle's labors that Labor Sunday was inaugurated. It has received the sanction of union labor and is now recognized throughout the whole country in every communion.

The Home Mission Board of the Presbyterian denomination has taken over the spirit and point of view of the social movement in its entire propaganda, with a great increase of effectiveness. It is only very much belated Home Mission boards that fail now to see the great advantage of this way of doing religious work.

It is not only in the denominational program, but in the schedule of activities of the local church, that the year-book will help with its suggested activities that may be carried on within the parish itself.

THE MOVING PICTURE AND THE CHURCH

THERE can be no doubt that the moving picture is now a national institution. In Portland, Oregon, the total audiences of the moving pictures shows in a week total more than the number represented in the population. This is to be contrasted with the fact that in any given week the ordinary city has a church attendance less than half the population. In New York and in Cleveland, it can be shown that one-sixth of the people visit a moving picture show daily.

The amount of moving picture film that is produced each year would go three times around the earth. The national board of censorship throws out the more vicious sort, but what is left runs to this enormous total. The total money spent in the United States last year for moving picture shows exceeds the expenditures for church work many times and runs to the total of $350,000,000. In Springfield, Ill., as in many other cities, a poll of the school children will show that their favorite game is no longer baseball or "Blind Man's Buff," but the "movies."

The church has begun to meet this situation with three different kinds of treatment.

One is to take interest in the proper local censorship of all films. This insures a much higher grade of pictures.

Another mode of treatment is to become even more active and request certain films at the picture houses and to offer to give publicity for "church nights" when high grade educational pictures are to be shown.

Many churches are using their own outfits, though the expense will be prohibitive to many organizations. Rev. Christian F. Reisner, of New York, uses the movies in his church for the children on Saturday afternoon, and on Sunday a bit of film is shown in the Bible-school, often illustrating Bible subjects.

The whole subject of the relation of the church to the moving picture is dealt with in most suggestive fashion in a booklet which is supplied for ten cents by the Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America.

CALLING SOCIAL SERVICE NAMES

IN LAST week's issue of the Christian Standard there appears the following naive bit of editorial writing, which is typical of the whole point of view held by that journal:

> We recall Cornelius, also. There was another good man who prayed and gave alms—social obligations appreciated there all right. Yet, when the apostle came, it was not long till he was commanding Cornelius to be baptized. Social consciousness without obedience was not acceptable to God in New Testament times; dare we assume that it is now? This modern gospel of social service is of the earth, earthy. It savors not of the things that be of God.

It is another case of thinking the gate is more important than the pasture. Baptism has its place in the Christian experience. Its place is not to make the development of Christian character in Christian service a mere side-show.

To the principle, "Where the Bible speaks, we speak," should be added perhaps another, "What the Bible emphasizes, we emphasize." Certain obscurantist influences among us have not only made our teaching on baptism ridiculous by their absurd emphasis, but they have utterly misrepresented the whole point of view of our people. The New Testament has less than a page on baptism. Most of its teaching is on the achievement of the Christ life.

The object of our religion is to make Christ-like men and women. That is salvation. We want no salvation that is magical, or wholly future in its benefits, or remote from life. We want the salvation which Jesus and the apostles came to preach, which redeemed men from their sins here and now, and led them into fullness of life.

A religion without social service is a religion that the New Testament knows nothing of. The Good Samaritan, of whom Jesus spoke, believed in social service. In the Judgment parable, the people were divided to the right and left, sheep and goats, not by baptism, nor by opinions of any sort, nor even by ecclesiastical connection, but by the fact that they either had or had not fed the hungry, given drink to the thirtsy, clothed the naked and visited those sick or in prison. Paul practiced this wonderful life of service in the early churches. To reject this is to practice a kind of criticism of the New Testament more drastic than an unbelieving critic ever attempted.

MINISTERS' SONS THAT DID NOT TURN OUT BAD

THE joke about the minister's son being a bad boy is pretty well exploded by the political events of the year. The two leading nominees for the presidency of the United States are the sons of ministers.

Woodrow Wilson is a son of the Manse. His father was a Presbyterian minister in Virginia. Though his son did not take to the ministry, he has continued a faithful member of the church. His call to the presidency of Princeton University gave him about as much evidence of the approval of the Presbyterian denomination as would likely come to any man.

Charles E. Hughes is the son of a Baptist minister. The elder Hughes was formerly pastor of Trinity Baptist church, New York. Ex-Justice Hughes, too, has been a school-teacher, though never an educational administrator. He has occupied the position of President of the Northern Baptist Convention, which is the highest honor in the power of his denomination to bestow.

The hotel lobby at a national convention is a discouraging place. It is full of drunken, loud-mouthed politicians whose countenances proclaim their sins. The two clean men who will head our political parties encourage us to believe that it is this type of man that is equipped to survive in the inner and higher circles of America's political life.

It would be discouraging if the sneer that ministers' sons turn out badly, proved true. A glance through "Who's Who" dispels the ancient calumny. There is no profession that has so many eminent sons born in its ranks as does the ministry. Every eminent profession and calling in life has been graced by ministers' sons. This is due to the fact that religion in the home is not a failure, but is, indeed, the most important factor of all in bringing up children.

A BUSINESS MAN ON CHICAGO DISCIPLES

IT WAS a good exhortation that Mr. C. C. Chapman, of Los Angeles, gave Chicago Disciples at their dinner recently. He contrasted the infant Chicago of forty years ago with infant Los Angeles of a more recent time. In that period missionary interest has developed. He asserted that if the Disciples in Chicago forty years ago had been as missionary in spirit as they now are, or as the Los Angeles churches are, great institutions would have been created which now have no being. The Disciples have failed utterly wherever they have not caught the missionary vision.

In Chicago, as in many other large cities, the day is late for the kind of propaganda which should be carried on. In many places there are groups of Disciples, but real estate values are too great to permit of the easy building of church plants. It is at the beginning of a new situation that missionary effort should be expended energetically.

The Larger Christian World

A DEPARTMENT OF INTERDENOMINATIONAL ACQUAINTANCE :: By Orvis F. Jordan

Would Make Chicago Dry.

Rev. Philip W. Yarrow of the Morgan Park Congregational church, Chicago, has has been made superintendent of the Dry Chicago Federation. It is the plan to take advantage of the present state law and force an election on the saloon issue in Chicago during the spring of 1917. Since Rev. Charles Mitchell has been elected bishop, it will be necessary to find another president for the movement.

English Church Wants More Elasticity.

The Young Men's Christian Association in its work in the trenches of Europe has rather frightened the English church leaders. The Bishop of London said recently that he "feared that the Young Men's Christian Association might become the starting point of a new religion, if the church failed to retain its young men after the war." The bright and human talks on religion given by Association leaders have compared all too favorably with the dull ecclesiastical routine of church sermons, says another Episcopalian. There is demand everywhere for more elasticity and freedom in the worship of the church and there is even talk of organizing prayer meetings for free prayer, which would be an innovation indeed. While the Free churches of England have felt the war influence, it is clear the establishment is also facing important changes.

A Church That Has Made History.

The Jefferson Park Presbyterian church is fifty years old and is preparing to celebrate its golden jubilee, although the exact date is not yet fixed. The church was at one time ministered to by the Rev. Francis A. Patton, who led in the attack on Prof. David Swing, which led to Prof. Swing's withdrawal from the Presbyterian ministry. Dr. Patton afterwards became president of Princeton university and of Princeton Theological seminary. The evangelist "Billy" Sunday was a member of the church and was superintendent of the Sunday-school before entering upon his public career. The church now carries on institutional work among several nationalities. The Rev. Francis J. Martin is pastor.

Baptist Young People to Assemble in Chicago.

The Baptist Young People's union, which was organized in Chicago twenty-five years ago, will hold its twenty-fifth anniversary in the Coliseum July 6 to 9. The organization is a national one and delegates are expected to be present from all sections of the country. Plans are being made for an attendance of 10,000. On June 25, Baptist pastors will exchange pulpits and preach on young people's work. It is said the cost of the preparation of the Coliseum for the convention was $22,000. The president of the union is the Rev. Frank L. Anderson of Chicago, who will deliver the president's address. The convention sermon will be preached by the Rev. E. Y. Mullins, president of the Baptist Theological seminary, Louisville, Ky. Dean Shailer Mathews will speak on "Baptists Co-operatively." The general secretary of the union is the Rev. James A. White of Chicago.

Divinity Schools Get New Buildings.

Two divinity schools of Chicago are to have new buildings. The Garrett Biblical Institute (Methodist) has laid a corner stone for a $150,000 building to replace Heck Hall which burned two or three years ago. The building will be used as a dormitory and is part of a plan calling for quadrangle construction that will furnish a complete home for the work of the divinity school. The Divinity School of the University of Chicago is breaking ground for a $200,000 building that will provide a home for the class-room activities of the school which have been held hitherto in Haskell Museum.

Southern Presbyterians Honor Country Minister.

Partly in order to meet the charge that the church does not honor the country minister, the Presbyterian church in the United States (South) elected as moderator this year Dr. C. W. Crafton who has held one charge in Mississippi for forty-three years, which includes his entire ministry. He has two churches ten miles apart and they have a combined membership of about two hundred people.

U. P. Headquarters Will Move to Chicago.

At the General Assembly of the United Presbyterian church this spring, it was voted to remove the educational board headquarters from Monmouth to Chicago. The Assembly confronted a committee report eliminating a number of home missionary officials but the report did not prevail. Neither did they vote to reduce the size of the Assembly. The financial problem will be faced by trying to raise more money. The question of the exclusive use of psalms in the music of the church was thrashed out on the floor of the assembly and it was finally voted to table the whole discussion since unanimity was lacking.

Cannot Stop Talking Union.

Though there will be no immediate action on church union by the Presbyterians of Canada, they cannot stop talking about it. Two-thirds of the members favor joining in a union with Methodists and Congregationalists. They have delayed action on account of the formidable and rather noisy minority. The General Assembly is meeting in Winnipeg and has to consider majority and minority reports on union.

Unitarians Have Annual Meeting.

Fifty per cent of the Unitarians live within fifty miles of Boston. It would be hard to find another denomination so localized. Each year they hold what is called anniversary week, and this year the meeting was held in Boston, May 21-26. The speakers indulged in considerable criticism of the movement, and one man spoke of infusing life into the "dry bones of Unitarianism." The speakers advocated a liberal evangelism with a positive message, attention to devotional literature and liturgy. The central fact of Unitarian doctrine was called "moral passion," which was much stressed. Rev. William L. Sullivan came to Unitarianism some years ago from the Roman Catholic communion and now fills a pulpit where Robert Collyer and Minot J. Savage were so long famous. He was an outstanding figure of this meeting.

Stonemen Criticised for Sunday Activities.

The Stonemen's Fellowship was criticised by the various denominational organizations of Philadelphia for holding a public parade on Memorial Sunday and firing salutes in memory of dead members at the navy yard. The use of the golf grounds on Sunday was also opposed by the ministers at the same time.

"Billy" Sunday to Have Fine Tabernacle.

The effort to erect a wooden tabernacle in Boston for "Billy" Sunday has failed but he will on that account have one of steel and concrete which fact will only increase the interest in his movement. A very aggressive committee is preparing for his coming to the city.

Ministers Shift Denominations.

The restlessness of the ministry is one of the signs of the times and the ease with which ministers pass from one communion to another is to be noted. A Baptist contemporary speaks of two of his brethren going to the Congregationalists, one to the Unitarians, one to the Episcopalians and one to Christian Science. This paper states that all of these men were from conservative seminaries.

Anti-Saloon League Will Hold Convention.

Many of the eminent leaders of the great denominations of America are on the program of the Anti-Saloon League Convention, which will be held at Indianapolis, June 25-29. There will be reports from many of the dry states of the successful working of state-wide prohibition. Hon. Sam Small of Georgia has been chosen to give the keynote address of the convention. One of the sessions will be presided over by a Catholic priest, Rev. Father J. J. Curran, of Wilkes-Barre, Pa. The music will be led by W. E. M. Hackleman and E. O. Excell.

Catholic Statistics.

There is a Catholic population of sixteen and a half million souls (including infants) in the United States. It is interesting to note that half of this population approximately is in four states: New York, Pennsylvania, Illinois and Massachusetts. It is stated that a million and a half Catholic children are taught in parish schools. Ten thousand churches and five thousand mission churches furnish a spiritual home for this population. There are about twenty thousand priests in the United States. While many Protestant sects have fewer ministers than churches, the Catholics have more than enough to go around.

Golden Text: If we believe that Jesus died and rose again, even so them also that are fallen asleep in Jesus will God bring with him. 1 Thessalonians 4:14. Lesson 1 Thessalonians 1; 2:17-20; 4:13-18: 1 Thessalonians 1; 4:13-18 printed. Memorize verses 4:16, 17.

1 (1) Paul, and Silvanus, and Timothy, unto the church of the Thessalonians in God the Father and the Lord Jesus Christ: Grace to you and peace.

(2) We give thanks to God always for you all, making mention of you in our prayers; (3) remembering without ceasing your work of faith and labor of love and patience of hope in our Lord Jesus Christ, before our God and Father; (4) knowing, brethren beloved of God, your election, (5) how that our gospel came not unto you in word only, but also in power, and in the Holy Spirit, and in much assurance; even as ye know what manner of men we showed ourselves toward you for your sake. (6) And ye became imitators of us, and of the Lord, having received the word in much affliction, with joy of the Holy Spirit; (7) so that ye became an ensample to all that believe in Macedonia and in Achaia. (8) For from you hath sounded forth the word of the Lord, not only in Macedonia and Achaia, but in every place your faith to God-ward is gone forth; so that we need to speak anything. (9) For they themselves report concerning us what manner of entering in we had unto you: and how ye turned unto God from idols, to serve a living and true God, (10) and to wait for his Son from heaven, whom he raised from the dead, even Jesus, who delivereth us from the wrath to come.

4 (13) But we would not have you ignorant, brethren, concerning them that fall asleep; that ye sorrow not, even as the rest, who have no hope. (14) For if we believe that Jesus died and rose again, even so them also that are fallen asleep in Jesus will God bring with him. (15) For this we say unto you by the word of the Lord, that we that are alive, that are left unto the coming of the Lord, shall in no wise precede them that are fallen asleep. (16) For the Lord himself shall descend from heaven, with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and with the trump of God: and the dead in Christ shall rise first: (17) then we that are alive, that are left, shall together with them be caught up in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air: and so shall we ever be with the Lord. (18) Wherefore, comfort one another with these words.

VERSE BY VERSE.

1. Paul, and Silvanus, and Timothy. "Silvanus" is the full Latin form of "Silas." This verse is the salutation. The church. The letter was directed to the church.—In God the Father and the Lord Jesus Christ. This phrase explains what constitutes the community a church.

2. We give thanks to God always for you all. This is Paul's usual method of writing, following the salutation with thanksgiving.—Making mention. Sometimes used in the sense of "remember."—In our prayers. When engaged in offering my prayers.

3. Work of faith. It is an inner state, or condition of life. At the same time it is a power compelling to action. Where there is genuine faith there will be genuine works. —Labor of love. There can be no true love without some expression of it in service.—Patience of hope. Their trial was so severe that nothing could endure except a patience born of a great hope.

4. Your election. This and the kindred words are used of God's selecting men or agencies for special missions or attainments.

5. How that. What follows is explanatory to "your election."—Our gospel. The gospel as preached by Paul and his colleagues. It may refer to some special emphasis Paul was making at this time.—In word. The gospel did not appear to them as mere learned discourse.—In power. A power of spiritual persuasion and conviction.—Assurance. The persuasion that the message was divine.—We showed ourselves. . . for your sake. Their self-sacrificing devotion to the people was convincing.

6. Ye became imitators of us. "Be ye imitators of me, even as I also am of Christ," is the message of Paul to Corinth, see 1 Cor. 11:1.—Having received the word in much affliction. The affliction referred to was mentioned in our last lesson.

7. So that ye become an ensample. Notwithstanding the hardships they were to set the people an example.—In Macedonia. Thessalonica was the capital of the province. —In Achaia. Corinth was the capital of this province.

8. Hath sounded forth. The verb here means a loud, unmistakable proclamation. The gospel was proclaimed by word and life.

9. They themselves. This statement is in contrast with the "we" in verse 8. The people in the places visited by Paul are his best witnesses for his converts.—Entering in. The thought of verse 5 is resumed.—How ye turned unto God from idols. This sentence indicates that the majority of Paul's readers in the church at Thessalonica were Gentiles and not Jews.

10. To wait for his Son from Heaven. Wait in patience and confidence on his coming.—The wrath to come. Literally, the wrath which is coming. The opposition to sin. The phrase does not imply a speedy coming although the general tone of the passage points in that direction.

4:14. That Christ died and rose again. It is an early statement of the resurrection of Jesus.—That are fallen asleep in Jesus. They died believing in Jesus.—Will God bring with him. "The dead are not dead, they are with the living God."

4:15. This we say unto you by the word of the Lord. It may refer to a statement not recorded or one direct to Paul.—We that are alive. The Second Advent was thought to be near at hand.—Shall in no wise precede them that are fallen asleep. Those living should have no advantage over the dead.

4:16. The Lord himself shall descend. The description is intended to convey the meaning that the reunion of the dead and living will be accomplished by the Lord in person. —The trump of God. The trumpet heralding the appearance of God.

4:17. In the air. The language is figurative and is intended to emphasize the divine energy with which it shall take place.

4:18. Comfort one another with these words. While these words were not fulfilled as the disciples expected, they are true and shall ever be our comfort.

The Spirit of Thankfulness

The Lesson in Today's Life.

BY ASA McDANIEL.

GOD has two dwellings: one in heaven and the other in a meek and thankful heart. The worship most acceptable to him comes from a thankful and cheerful heart. If I were given a measure of sand with the information that it contained iron, I might look for the particles with my unaided eyes and search for them with my clumsy fingers, and be unable to find the iron; but if I took a magnet and swept the sand with it, the particles of iron would be drawn to it by the mere power of attraction. The unthankful heart, like my fingers in the sand, discovers no mercies; but let the thankful heart sweep through the days, and as the magnet finds iron, so it will find in every hour some heavenly blessings.

Paul had the thankful life. His prayers were full of thanks. The letters to the Ephesians, Colossians and Philippians all have the note of thankfulness in the early chapters. Gratitude should be the summit of the Christian graces, and is to be diffused through all of them. This is the life the Christian should live. Thankfulness should mingle with all our thoughts and feelings, like the fragrance of some perfume penetrating through the common air. It should embrace all events of life. Gratitude will add the crowning consecration to service and knowledge and endurance. It will tune our spirits to the finest of all issues, for it will lead to glad self-surrender, and make of our whole life a sacrifice of praise.

There are times, we all know, at which thanskgiving is natural and easy. When we are prosperous and happy; when our loved ones are feeding in green pastures; and when we have escaped some great danger, or recovered from some severe illness, the floods of gratitude are natural. Even in such circumstances we are possibly not so thankful as we ought to be. Perhaps if we were, our lives would be a great deal happier.

Some of the common, every-day things of life we are not always thankful for, not expressively so at least. Think of our health, soundness of mind, and our calling in this world; the faith we repose in others and which others repose in us; think of the love for family and all those sweet and tender ties that bind our lives into one; and with these fresh in mind and a multitude more that might just as easily be called to the focus of consciousness, ask whether we have been duly thankful to the Father of every gift.

It may seem a little hard to give thanks in everything, but we would not be so apt to protest against the idea of giving thanks in everything, if it had ever been a well founded habit of ours to give thanks in anything. To be of real value gratitude must rise from our lives just as naturally as perfume comes from the flower. If our lives have been touched with the glow of Christ's great love, then they will exhale in fragrance and shoot up in flashing tongues of ruddy light and beauty, to spend themselves in helpful service.

Disciples Table Talk

Kalamazoo Bible Class in Feature Banquet.

Something out of the ordinary was the recent banquet given by the Alpha Phi Class, of the church at Kalamazoo, Mich., at a local hotel. One big feature was an address by Geo. W. Knepper, pastor at Ann Arbor. The other was the reading of messages on Bible study from some of the country's famous men. The following sentiment was written and sent by President Wilson especially for the occasion: "The White House, Washington, April 1, 1916. No study is more important to the child than the study of the Bible and of the truths which it teaches, and there is no more effective agency for such study than the Bible-school. It certainly is one of the greatest factors in our lives in the building of character and the development of moral fibre, for its influence begins almost as soon as the child is able to talk and continues throughout life. The Bible-school lesson of today is the code of morals of tomorrow. Too much attention can not be paid the work which the Sunday-school is doing.—Woodrow Wilson." Congratulatory letters were received from ex-Vice President Fairbanks, Champ Clark, speaker of the National House of Representatives, Lawrence Y. Sherman and others. A part of Chas. W. Fairbanks' message follows: "The Bible-school is essentially the great nursery of the church. (The V. P. candidate is not up to date, or he would not call the Sunday-school a 'nursery'!) It makes for morality and good citizenship. It is a blessing to the individual, the home and the entire community. There is no fitting substitute for it." Speaker Clark wrote: "My own judgment is that Bible-schools do a great deal of good. Without taking into account the great religious value of the Bible, it is incomparable for its literary value. When I get the brain-fag, I read King Solomon's Proverbs and St. Paul's Epistles and have profited much thereby."

Chicago Disciples Meet at Dinner.

Disciples of Chicago filled the banquet room of the Great Northern Hotel, on Monday evening, June 12 at a get-together dinner of the men and women of the different churches. The banquet was under the auspices of the Disciples' Social Union and of the Christian Business Men's Association. C. C. Chapman, who was a Disciple in Chicago from 1872 to 1903, spoke in a most telling way of the policy of the Disciples in Chicago as compared with that of Los Angeles Disciples in the early history of Los Angeles at a later date. He insisted that Chicago began being missionary too late in its history. C. C. Morrison spoke of the Disciples at the Panama Congress and made a deep impression upon the Chicago people with his story of the prominent part taken by Disciples at that memorable gathering. There were short addresses by Austin Hunter, W. G. Winn, E. S. Ames, Leon Loehr and W. C. Pearce. O. F. Jordan was the toastmaster of the evening. The C. B. M. A. re-elected its directors and the Disciples' Social Union elected as president, E. M. Bowman; vice-president, O. F. Jordan; treasurer, Leon Lohr.

Herbert Moninger Memorial Fund Complete.

Upon the death of Herbert Moninger, in 1911, the suggestion was made that a Bible Chair be endowed at Bethany College in his memory. The first money for this fund was paid in at Bethany Park, in the summer of that year. The Bible-school department of the American Society was asked to raise the $25,000 necessary to establish the memorial. H. Newton Miller was asked by President Cramblet, of Bethany, to become financial agent for the fund. R. M. Hopkins now reports that the last dollar needed for this work was deposited in time for a message to be sent to Bethany on Commencement day, June 8. J. G. Holladay, of Norfolk, Va., who made the first suggestion of the plan; C. M. Rodefer, and Geo. F. Rand made the final payments, the first two giving $100 each and the last $1,000. About fifteen hundred schools made offerings and there were five hundred individual offerings. Thirty-seven individuals gave $100 or more each, and twenty-four Bible-schools contributed $100 or more. These names will appear on a bronze tablet to be placed in the college this summer. The fund is a permanent one. Only the interest will be used. H. Newton

The late Herbert Moninger, in whose memory a Bible Chair has been endowed at Bethany College.

Miller has been called to become the first professor in the new department. Mr. Miller was a classmate and life-long friend of Mr. Moninger. In addition to his work at Bethany he studied for a while at Harvard. He has also had a rich experience in local church work and in general missionary service. For two years he has been teaching at Bethany in another department, but his entire time will be given to the new enterprise beginning next fall. A dedicatory service will be held, probably in September. This is the second such victory of this sort that the Bible-school department of the American Society has registered; the other was the establishment of a chair of religious education in the College of the Bible, Lexington, Ky.

Christian University's Fifty-ninth Commencement.

June 4 was the date of the opening of the sessions of the commencement exercises at Christian University, Canton, Mo. The baccalaureate sermon by Dr. Vannoy, of New York City, is reported to have been one of the most impressive sermons ever preached to a C. U. graduating class. The School of Music had a splendid program on Monday evening, and the School of Religion on Tuesday morning. In spite of rains both sessions were well attended. On Tuesday evening, at the Oratorical contest, a $35 prize for first place was won by H. O. Rocks, and a prize valued at $15 was awarded Paul Cook. Wednesday morning was in charge of the Juniors, as usual. Later in the day came the Commencement address by Shailer Mathews, of Chicago. This was a frank discussion of the college and democracy in the light of the European war. The reporter states that Dr. Mathews' visit to Canton was his first and speaks in enthusiastic terms of the Chicago educator and his work at the university.

Do You Know Any Alaska Disciples?

With the coming of Harry Munro and wife to Alaska as missionaries, it is hoped to form new churches, and Secretary R. M. Hopkins asks that all readers of this paper knowing of any Disciples now living within the borders of Alaska, write him about them, giving names and addresses. Mr. Hopkins states that a few Disciples were found there last summer, among them being the following: Seven Disciples at Seward, among whom are Mr. and Mrs. Leslie Cramer, formerly of Washington City, and Mrs. C. A. Myers, wife of Seward's mayor; and Miss Emma Lee Orr, for eight years a teacher at Nome. Miss Ruth Reat and Miss Myrtle Record, of Charleston, Ill., go to Anchorage this summer under government appointment as teachers. George Parks, son of Mrs. Marry L. Parks, President of the Colorado C. W. B. M., and Mrs. W. F. Whiteley, sister of E. J. Meacham, are in Fairbanks. Don't forget to send any information you have to Mr. Hopkins, Carew Bldg., Cincinnati.

Indiana Disciples Ask Men and Millions Heads to Aid Bloomington Bible Chair.

One of the important acts of the recent Indiana convention, meeting at Danville, was the passing of a resolution approving the work of the Bible Chair at Bloomington, in connection with the State University. It is the opinion of Indiana Disciples that, inasmuch as the work of J. C. Todd and others in behalf of the Bible Chair, during several years, has made the task of the Men and Millions leaders an easier one, and for other reasons mentioned below, the Chair should be given a portion of the funds raised by the Men and Millions teams. The following is a part of the resolutions passed: "Be it Resolved, that this convention of the Indiana Christian Missionary Association of the Churches of Christ in Indiana approve the effort being made by the Bloomington Bible Chair to secure an assignment of $50,000 for the endowment fund for the Bloomington Bible Chair, and that we express it as our conviction that a campaign in the State of Indiana by the Men and Millions Movement without recognizing the interests of the Churches of Christ in the more than five hundred Christian church students that attend Indiana University, and the work being done and contemplated, would be of serious injury to this important work and would deprive the Bloomington Bible Chair of much of the result of its own labor. It is therefore the desire of this convention that the Bloomington Bible Chair be assigned an amount from the funds of the Men and Millions Movement consistent with the opportunities for Christian education among our students at Indiana University and the financial work already accomplished by the Bloomington Bible Chair in the State of Indiana."

Michigan Disciples to Meet at Lansing, July 11-14.

The date of the state convention of Michigan Disciples is July 11-14, and the place is Lansing. Some of the features are the following: C. W. B. M. address, Mrs. Josephine M. Stearns, Indianapolis; State address, M. H. Garrard, Battle Creek; Address to Preachers, W. B. Taylor, Bethany, W. Va.; "The Minister and His Devotional Life," Fay C. Wing, Wayland; "The Minister and His Study," W. G. Loucks, De-

Packing Christmas Gifts for Tibet.

First church, Los Angeles, Cal., supports the work of James C. Ogden at Batang, Tibet. Early this month a package of Christmas gifts, having considerable value, was sent to them. It will take from now until Christmas time for this box to reach its destination. It will cross the ocean to Shanghai, then go up the Yangtse river on a steamer, then be transferred to a houseboat; and after a long journey transferred to the back of a yak and carried over three mountain passes. The express company states that they have never sent a package to this region before, and are making a story of it in the monthly journal.

Courage Brings Success at Fairmont, W. Va.

Central Church, Fairmont, W. Va., has had some trying times in the past several years. Among other discouraging things the congregation had to meet was the toppling over of a new church home a few years ago, due to the foundation giving way. But a cheap, modern tabernacle was at once constructed as a meeting-place. Then Clarence Mitchell was called as pastor two years ago. The new leader, who had been a successful evangelist, went to work with aggressiveness, and in less than two years had brought about the completion of a splendid new church home, one of the finest in the state. A parsonage has also been built. Many substantial people have been gathered into the work, and the body of Disciples at Fairmont now take the lead in all local activities pertaining to religious development. J. J. Taylor has just held a meeting for the church, and within five weeks the Bible-school has been increased in attendance from 198 to 452; 168 persons have been added to the church membership. Earl Adams, of Linneus, Mo., and William Leigh assisted in the music.

Tragic Death of Otis Hawkins, N. B. A. Representative.

Disciples, especially of the Southwest, will be shocked to learn of the death of Otis Hawkins, who for six years has served the National Benevolent Association as solicitor for the southwestern states, with headquarters at Dallas. The Christian Courier, of Dallas, reports the circumstances of his death as follows: "Mr. Hawkins was in our office Monday, but showed signs of extreme illness and soon returned home. Headache, following a long trip in the interest of his work and an attack of ptomaine poisoning, made him delirious Monday night, and Tuesday morning his physician ordered a trained nurse. While Mrs. Hawkins was at the door to meet the nurse the sick man got out of bed and procured a revolver in the room and shot himself through the head. He died shortly afterward at the Baptist Sanitarium. Only delirium resulting from the intense pain can explain his act." Mr. Hawkins had just completed the task of building up the Juliette Fowler Homes for the Aged and Orphans, in Dallas, and had been called to assist in the general offices of the association at St. Louis. The deceased was born at Norfolk, Va., June 22, 1880. He graduated from the law department of the State University of Virginia, and engaged in the practice of his profession in New Orleans, La. In November, 1905, he was ordained to the Christian ministry in the Soniat Avenue church of that city. After a year's ministry at Crowley he was called to the State work of Louisiana. Later he was minister at Denton and South Dallas, Texas, resigning from the latter place to take the work that he laid down before his death.

F. F. Walters Makes Good Record.

Four years ago F. F. Walters went to Texas from Independence, Mo. His work has been crowned with success in Wichita Falls. This is one of Texas' greatest churches. He has seen the $50,000 building completed and equipped, Bible-school graded, membership doubled, missions increased tenfold. The Wichita Falls congregation pledged this year $600 to foreign, $300 to C. W. B. M., $600 to all other missions. Last year they gave about $1,200 to missions.

Some Speakers at the Inland Empire Convention

Rosalia, Wash, will be the meeting-place of the Inland Empire convention this year, the date, June 26-29. Among the program participants are the following: O. G. Shanklin, W. D. Willoughby, L. E. Sellers, A. F. Van Slyke, J. A. Longston, W. J. Clarke, George Fowler, Mrs. W. A. Gent, E. S. Muckley, J. H. Booth, J. E. Davis, George H. Ellis, Mrs. Laura D. Garst, I. H. Teel, Hermon P. Williams and C. S. Thomas.

Features of the New York State Meet.

New York Disciples will meet this year at Wellsville, July 5-9. The following are some features planned: Ministerial Association Program, participated in by G. W. Morgan, Harris Miller, L. B. Withee, F. M. Gordon, and C. A. Brady. Bible School Sessions, led by F. M. Gordon, I. L. Parvin, W. A. Young, Katherine E. Staub, I. E. Ried, R. M. Hopkins, W. J. Clarke, Miss C. P. Maus, Miss Hazel Lewis, W. H. McLain, Marion Stevenson and Finis Idleman. C. W. B. M. sessions, with the following on the program: Mrs. Duncan Sinclair, Mrs. Laura G. Gould, Mrs. Ellie K. Payne, Mrs. A. G. Doust, Mrs. L. C. McPherson, Mrs. Carrie B. Jerome, Mrs. Emma G. Leonard. Other speakers are: W. A. Haushalter, M. M. Amunson, F. A. Higgins, B. S. Farrell, J. H. Craig, G. H. Brown, F. W. Burnham, J. H. Mohorter, A. A. Sebastian and E. W. Allen.

Disciples Ministers at Bethany Beach, Delaware.

Bethany Beach, located in Delaware, is becoming a popular summer resort, especially for Disciples. The program and Sunday evening services are under the management of Earle Wilfley, pastor of Vermont Ave. church, Washington, D. C. representing the Christian Missionary Society of Maryland, Delaware and the District of Columbia. Mr. Wilfley will give any information desired regarding the resort. At Bethany Beach there is a coastline greater and more varied than at Atlantic City or Cape May. The following ministers have accepted invitations to preach on Sundays this summer: H. C. Armstrong, of Baltimore; Leslie L. Bowers, of Washington, D. C.; Irving S. Chenoweth, of Philadelphia; Earle Wilfley, of Washington, and T. E. Winter, of Philadelphia. July 16—August 27 will be the including dates of the program.

The father of Lura Thompson Porter, David J. Thompson, passed away at his home in Carthage, Ill., on June 1. The deceased was in his eighty-third year, and was a devoted member of the Christian church. Mrs. Porter and other members of the family have the sincere sympathy of The Christian Century and all Disciples, especially of the state of Illinois.

—K. F. Nance, formerly pastor at First church, Hutchinson, Kan., sailed on "The New York" for Liverpool, Eng., on June 10, en route to France, where he will enlist for a few months in relief work, in order to familiarize himself with actual conditions "at the front" preparatory to lecturing on the subject of Red Cross and Relief Work in this country during the coming winter.

—Allen T. Shaw, of Mt. Sterling, Ill., church, gave his third high school commencement address at Alpha, Ill., recently and also delivered the baccalaureate sermon at Bowen, the memorial oration at Mt. Sterling and the commencement at Bevier, Mo. Thirty-five persons have been added to the membership at Mt. Sterling in the past two months. The attendance has been unusually large.

—The ministers of Wood County, O., met in the Bowling Green church on June 12, and perfected a county organization with the following officers: President, W. C. Prewitt, Bowling Green; Vice-president, D. W. Miller, Weston, and Secretary-Treasurer, Geo. W. Schroeder, Rudolph.

—H. H. Peters, pastor of First church, Paris, Ill., will close his work with that congregation September 1, to become State Secretary of the Illinois Christian Missionary Society, with headquarters at Bloomington. Mr. Peters has been pastor of the Paris church almost four years and prior to that was the Endowment Secretary of Eureka College for four years and a half.

—In a contest just closed between the Bible-schools of Richmond Street church, Cincinnati, and Lawrenceburg—Bright, Ind., the latter combination won by 26.94 points. The Cincinnati school won on the points of Bible reading and total attendance, but the Indiana contestants carried off the honors on the other seven points. The winning schools received a large American flag as their reward on June 18. J. D. Garrison is pastor at Lawrenceburg and Joseph Keevil at Richmond Street.

—As chairman of the Playground Commission of Norfolk, Va., C. M. Watson, pastor at First church, had part in the opening of an athletic field in a local park and in the authorization of the purchase of a downtown city block for play purposes. It is very clear, from reports coming in from Disciple churches over the country, that the pastors of the brotherhood are fulfilling their commission as "among you as one that serveth."

—Geo. W. Schroeder, of Rudolph, O., preached the G. A. R. Memorial sermon at Jerry City, O., also that of the Ladies of the Maccabees of Rudolph.

—Levi Marshall, of Nevada, Mo., church, speaks highly of the work of C. R. Scoville and his party in the union meetings at Nevada conducted by eight churches, and closing May 21. The Disciples congregation has already received an addition of about 175 members from the meetings.

—June 4th was observed at East End Bible-school, Pittsburg, Pa., as Primary-Junior Day, other departments having had a previous Sunday assigned them. Heart souvenirs were given each person on entering. At the close of the lesson the Junior Superintendent, Mrs. T. A. Jackson, took charge of the school and a program was given, consisting of songs and recitations by the Junior department, and an Illustrated Ribbon Chart, by Mrs. Jackson. Hand books, the work of the Juniors, were displayed, and the older attendants were loud in their praise of the excellent work done under Mrs. Jackson's supervision.

—The Bible-school at Central church, Peoria, has doubled in attendance since Feb. 1, now averaging 500. There have been 70 additions to the church since that date. In the recent revival following the dedication of the new $80,000 building, there were 34 additions. H. E. Sala is doing some remarkable things for this church.

—O. F. Jordan, of Evanston, Ill., preached on "Religion and Politics," June 11. "I have no apologies for discussing politics in my pulpit," Mr. Jordan said, "the prophets were inspired politicians. If religion is to be as big as life itself its spirit must pervade all things."

—Since E. T. McFarland came to the work at Texarkana, Ark., there have been 182 persons added to the membership. The evangelistic campaign just closed under Crayton S. Brooks was voted the most successful effort in the history of the church.

—James Small, of Kansas City, has closed a ten-day series of evangelistic services at Central church, Springfield, Mo., in preparation for a building campaign.

—Over one-half of the necessary funds have been raised for the erection of the new church home at Peru, Ind., where T. J. Brock ministers.

—C. H. Winders has been elected president of the Protestant Ministers' Association of Indianapolis. T. W. Grafton is on the executive committee.

—N. H. Robertson, pastor at Watseka, Ill., preached the baccalaureate sermon at the local high school, on the theme, "Pay the Price."

—G. I. Hoover, of Indianapolis, delivered the principal address at the corner-stone laying of the Milroy, Ind., church.

—A few days ago, at St. Louis, a board of arbitrators met with the purpose of adjusting the long-standing differences between the National Benevolent Association and the Christian Women's N. B. A. The arbitrators were: Z. T. Sweeney, Columbus, Ind., chairman; Edgar D. Jones, Bloomington, Ill., secretary; W. P. Aylsworth, of Lincoln, Neb.; T. H. Adams, of Findlay, O., and S. E. Fisher, of Champaign, Ill. The board is acting at the instigation of the Christian Ministers Association of St. Louis. No word has come of the success of the effort.

—Bethany College will build a new $50,000 gymnasium this summer, thanks to the gifts of friends.

—I. L. James, recently resigned from the superintendency of Southeastern Bible-schools, has been succeeded by Homer F. Cooke, who has headquarters at Jacksonville, Fla.

—Myron C. Settle, who has completed two years of useful work for religious education at Gary, Ind., has been appointed to the superintendency of the Bible-schools of the Northwest. He will begin his new work in the autumn.

—John R. Golden has been nominated for governor on the Prohibition ticket.

—The speaker at the May meeting of the Christian Ministers Alliance, of Kansas City and vicinity, was Prof. Arthur Braden, of the Bible Chair, University of Kansas, who discussed the question, "What is Christianity?" The program committee for the next year is made up of Baxter Waters, Elmore Sinclair and E. F. Leake.

—During the thirteen years of the pastorate of Stephen E. Fisher at University Place church, Champaign, Ill., the membership has been increased from less than a hundred to over a thousand.

—At a social given by the Christian Endeavor Society at Central church, San Diego, Cal., recently, nearly two hundred enlisted army men were present.

—Earl H. Fife, of the Fife evangelistic company, will have charge of the music at the Southern California convention, at Long Beach, July 20-30.

—The following is quoted from the Christian Courier, Dallas, Tex.: "This is the revival meeting season in the South. Few occasions are more enjoyable for the people of God than are the times of the successful revival; and a real revival is frequently needed. But the large per cent of failures has had the effect of discouraging the brethren and making many of them question the propriety of engaging in revival efforts."

—On one Sunday last month, at Wichita, Kan., Bible-school, twenty-five per cent of the total attendance of the school were in the class of Judge J. N. Haymaker. Over a hundred men attended this class session.

—At a recent meeting of the "Loyalty Endeavor Society," at University Place church, Des Moines, two young women volunteered as missionaries. They were Miss Gladys Denny, daughter of Prof. C. O. Denny, long connected with Drake, and Miss Holmes, daughter of a former Disciple minister of Nebraska.

—Terre Haute, Central, Bible-school has begun a contest with other schools of the city, the purpose of which will be to maintain a high average of attendance through the summer. The contest will run for three months and a silver loving cup will be awarded the winning school.

—Chas. S. Earley, of Oskaloosa, Ia., who has just closed a fine meeting at Paola, Kan., reports that a new church building will be erected at this place. Mr. Earley is making good in his evangelistic work.

—The Loyal Sons and Loyal Daughters' classes of the Miltonvale, Kan., Bible-school, have provided separate rooms for their work, and are making some needed repairs on the church building.

—Prof. A. M. Haggard will deliver several addresses at the North Dakota state convention in Fargo, June 24-27.

—Prof. A. D. Veatch, of Drake University, recently made a trip through Kansas.

—"Unless housing conditions in St. Paul (Minn.) are changed, the day is coming when we will have a Five Points or a Bowery," was a statement made by Pastor S. T. Willis, of First church, St. Paul, in a recent sermon. Mr. Willis advocated public ownership of general utilities.

—Geo. H. Combs gave an address before the convention of the Southwest Iowa District convention, held at Shenandoah.

—The corner stone of the new $25,000 Bible School House of Ninth Street church, Washington, D. C., was laid on June 6. Peter Ainslie and E. B. Bagby made addresses. Geo. A. Miller is pastor at Ninth Street. The proposed building will accommodate 1,000 persons.

—W. H. Hampton, pastor at Queen City, Mo., invited the local W. C. T. U. to have charge of a temperance service at his church, and he preached on "The Battle With Booze." The church was packed, the newspaper reporting this as "the best lecture ever heard in the city." Mr. Hampton writes that here is one way to prevent the "summer slump."

—E. H. Wray, pastor at Steubenville, O., gave the baccalaureate sermon to the local high school graduating class, and the sermon was printed in full in one of the daily papers.

—Secretary Bert Wilson gave the alumni address at Cotner University this year.

—The new officers of the Southern California Christian Ministers' Association are: Chas. F. Hutslar, president; C. C. Bentley, vice-president; S. M. Bernard, secretary, and G. W. Thompson, treasurer.

—"The largest advance registration in the history of the Lexington School of Methods," is the report from Lexington, Ky.

—Homer W. Carpenter, pastor of the Shelbyville, Ky., church, has resigned to become chancellor of Transylvania University, the College of the Bible and Hamilton College, Lexington, Ky. Mr. Carpenter is a graduate of Transylvania.

—Geo. L. Peters, of North Side church, Omaha, Neb., delivered the baccalaureate sermon to the graduating class of the University of Omaha.

—Eugene Bible University, Eugene, Ore., has succeeded in its campaign to raise an endowment fund of $200,000.

—In his baccalaureate sermon delivered before the 450 graduates of Iowa State College, Ames, Ia., Burris A. Jenkins, of Kansas City, said: "The man who thinks is the man who doubts; the man who is sure of everything is the man who has no real beliefs and convictions worthy of being sure about."

—The Foreign Society reports some of the offerings already sent in from Children's day: Fourth church, Columbus, O., $400; East End, Pittsburg, Pa., $350; Richmond Ave., Cincinnati, $228.77; Rushville, Ind., $300; Clarinda, Ia., $202.49; Hannibal, Mo., First, $100; Atchison, Kan., First $110.57; Hagerstown, Md., $292.13; Warren, O., Central, $300; Columbus, O., Indianola church, $105; and many others, smaller in amount but fully as creditable, from other churches.

—R. F. Thrapp, now of First church, Los Angeles, recently visited his old home at Jacksonville, Ill., Central, and over eight hundred persons greeted him at a reception.

—During the early part of next month J. W. Allen, of Spokane, Wash., a Disciple minister for exactly fifty years, will celebrate the anniversary.

—The Disciple churches of Texas have planned to raise $250,000 as an endowment fund for Texas Christian University, Dallas, Carr-Burdette-Carlson College, Sherman, and Midland College, at Midland. T. C. U. will receive the larger portion of this fund.

—Carey E. Morgan, of Vine Street church, Nashville, Tenn., has not been strong since his illness six weeks ago, and has been granted a four months' vacation, part of which time he will spend in New York City.

—Joseph Fort Newton, of the Liberal Christian church, Cedar Rapids, Ia., has been asked to consider a call to City Temple, London, where he will preach during July. The Cedar Rapids congregation propose to build a temple for the great preacher in their town if he will remain with them.

—Walter S. Rounds, of the Taylorville, Ill., church, preached the local baccalaureate address on the theme, "The Quest of the Kingdom."

—Ellis Purlee, pastor of the Sacramento, Cal., church has been elected president of the Sacramento Valley District of Disciples for the present year.

—Hartford City, Ind., congregation has voted to build an addition to its present property.

—Missouri Christian College, Camden Point, Mo., has closed its sixty-seventh year.

—R. H. Robertson, pastor at Centralia, Ill., preached the high school baccalaureate sermon this year at Centralia, his theme being, "Purpose in Life."

—John R. Golden gave the leading address at the service in connection with the laying of the corner stone of the proposed three story church building at Mt. Vernon, Ill.

—June 4 was "Minnie Vautin Day," at the Leroy, Ill., church. Miss Vautin was formerly a teacher in the Leroy schools. When she determined to become a foreign missionary three years ago, the church there started a movement to support her work, and since that time the congregation has been loyal to its task.

—W. H. Book is beginning his twelfth year as pastor at Tabernacle church, Columbus, Ind.

—J. H. O. Smith is holding a meeting in Greenville, Tex.

—A debt of $7,000 on the new $65,000 building at Somerset, Pa., has been reduced in the past month.

—Fred W. Condit, of Hamilton, Mo., preached the baccalaureate sermon at Kidder Institute this year.

NEW YORK A Church Home for You. Write Dr. Finis Idleman, 142 West 81st St., N. Y.

—Maxwell Hall, formerly pastor at Uniontown, Pa., and Portland, Ore., has served as Superintendent of Religious Education in the Jackson Boulevard church, Chicago, for the past six months, and has done splendid work. Austin Hunter, pastor at Jackson Boulevard, writes that he believes some strong church should employ Mr. Hall for his entire time in this important line of activity. Jackson Boulevard had a Children's Day offering of $376.

—At the Transylvania and College of the Bible commencement, three candidates received the M. A. degree, forty-one the baccalaureate degree, two the Classical diploma in the College of the Bible, and two the English diplomas. Of the baccalaureate graduates twenty-nine were Bachelors of Arts, two Bachelors of Science, seven Bachelors of Practical Theology and three Bachelors of Divinity. F. D. Kershner delivered the commencement sermon, Col. Miles M. Dawson, of New York City, gave the address to the graduates, and Mr. Earl McCash and Mr. Edwin Marx gave addresses for the graduating classes. All were reported excellent. The alumni banquet this year was attended by 143 former students, the 48 seniors being guests of the Almuni Association.

—Montana Disciples voted at their recent convention at Billings to meet at Bozeman next year. L. Hulser, of Great Falls, is president for this year.

—W. B. Clemmer, of Central church, Rockford, Ill., writes that all missionary offerings are exceeding former results in spite of the heavy demands made by the new building. A $48 Children's day offering is reported, with 346 present. Eight additions to the membership were recorded three weeks ago. Mr. Clemmer recently spoke at the Memorial and Unveiling services of the Woodmen of the World, at Beloit, at Rockford and at Lanark.

—Claris Yeuell is supplying at New Cumberland, W. Va., during the summer. The Children's day offering here was $25. C. C. Johnson, of Cadiz, O., is supplying at Arnold's Creek and Mt. Pleasant, W. Va., where Mr. Yeuell has been preaching.

—T. C. Kennedy, of Indianapolis, lectured on Radium before the Men's Club of the Tabernacle church, Columbus, Ind. He brought with him a tube of radium, which is quoted at present as worth four million dollars an ounce.

—Granville Snell, one of the live district evangelists of Missouri, took a map with him to the state convention at Sedalia showing the places where he has held meeting during the past seven years, and also the points where there are pastorless churches.

NATIONAL BENEVOLENT ASSOCIATION NOTES.

The association is rejoicing in the most generous response to its Easter appeal in the history of its work. To date the increase in the number of offerings over the best previous record is nearly six hundred, and the increase in the amount is nearly six thousand dollars. However, the total amount received is far below the goal set, $50,000. This amount must be received if the work is to be kept up to the standard.

The association is rejoicing in a large number of annuity gifts. They have been coming in at the rate of from four to six a month lately; none of them large, but many of them are new.

The association has been the beneficiary of two wills recently. Twelve hundred dollars has already been received from the will of the late Mary S. Bunting.

Some fifteen hundred dollars is being expended this spring in improvements on the Cleveland Home. This Home is doing fine work.

The general secretary has gone to Atlanta to hold a conference with Messrs. Cory and Miller, of the Men and Millions Movement, with a view of laying plans for securing permanent equipment for the Southern Christian Home.

The Master Scientist

By Joseph Richardson

AN INDEX TO THE HEALING POWER OF THE CHRIST

"Grown weary of searching for the grain of truth amid the chaff of many volumes on Christian Science, Theosophy, New Thought and the like, we have been waiting for some sensible, scientific, readable book, containing the essence of Truth. The long-looked-for volume has appeared under the title 'The Master Scientist.' Its size and appearance betoken its quality. It is a nugget of pure gold, with the alloy removed: it is a handful of the finest wheat, with the chaff taken away. It is crammed full of healthy teaching and wholesome counsel. Its words are with power."

L. O. Bricker, D. D., Minister First Christian Church, Atlanta, Ga.

"After having read your little book 'The Master Scientist' I am constrained to express my very deep appreciation of this very simple and strong discussion of the spiritual meaning and power involved in the teachings of our Lord. You have shown beyond any question that Jesus was the supreme artist of life. I am persuaded more and more that the Divine Love can be made to be so organically related to the human spirit that one shall feel Its Power as he does sunshine or electricity. You have done a splendid piece of work. I trust that the little book may have a wide circulation and that it may bring great comfort and strength and power to thousands. It is a tonic. I wish you to know of my personal indebtedness to you."

E. L. Powell, D. D., Minister First Church, Louisville, Ky.

We Have Purchased Revell's Entire Stock

of Dr. W. T. Moore's Great

"History of the Disciples of Christ"

Which is a comprehensive story of the Disciples movement from the early days up to the present, with especial reference to the great characters who have led in the plea for a reunited church. Dr. Moore has gathered from many sources the material for this history, and his ripe experience and wide knowledge have enabled him to weave the facts into a most attractive and valuable book.

Dr. W. T. Moore as Author

There is certainly no other man in the brotherhood who has done or can do what Dr. Moore has done in this work, for no other man of like ability has been so close as he to the "history in the making" which he here sets forth. T. W. GRAFTON says: "Such a work was needed before the generation whose lives touched those of the pioneers had passed away, and none possess the literary gift of doing the work better than W. T. Moore."
And D. R. DUNGAN declares that "W. T. Moore is better prepared than any other man among us for this great task."
The GLOBE-DEMOCRAT, of St. Louis, thus speaks of his fitness for writing the volume: "He speaks as one having authority, as one intimately identified with the movement's history for more than forty years. Dr. Moore has written a historical work that will be monumental for decades to come, and a century hence will be an invaluable source-book."

THE GLOBE-DEMOCRAT continues: "The story Dr. Moore tells tingles the blood and fires the imagination, for it is a story of religious pioneers and adventurers of the highest character, who dared singlehanded to attack the denominational lines that were being drawn tighter and tighter in the nineteenth century. It is strictly an American story. No other country could have been the scene of the phenomena Dr. Moore narrates with the trained hand of a journalist. The conditions he describes of American religious life a century ago are almost incredible.

Three Reasons

WHY YOU SHOULD SECURE THIS GREAT BOOK:

1. Because this is probably the only history of the Disciples that will ever be written by a man who saw this remarkable movement develop in its earlier phases.
2. Because of the intensely interesting personal descriptions of the Disciples pioneer leaders given by Dr. Moore from first-hand observation.
3. Because of the splendid array of pictures presented in the volume, of the men who have made the movement, and scenes that have become famous for their connection with the early phases of its development. The pictures alone are worth all that the book costs.

One Great Reason

Why You Should Order Your Copy NOW:

Because there is a very limited number of copies still on hand. These will be sold in a VERY SHORT TIME.

This is a sumptuous volume of 700 pages, beautifully printed and bound, and sold by the publishers at $4.00, $5.00, and $6.00 for cloth, half morocco, and full morocco respectively. We now offer this great work for—

$2.50, $3.50 and $4.00

DISCIPLES PUBLICATION SOCIETY, PROPRIETORS, : 700 EAST 40th STREET, CHICAGO

Disciples Publication Society

The Disciples Publication Society is an organization through which churches of the Disciples of Christ seek to promote undenominational and constructive Christianity.

The relationship it sustains to the Disciples is intimate and organic, though not official. The Society is not a private institution. It has no capital stock. No individuals profit by its earnings.

The charter under which the Society exists determines that whatever profits are earned shall be applied to agencies which foster the cause of religious education, although it is clearly conceived that its main task is not to make profits but to produce literature for building up character and for advancing the cause of religion.

The Disciples Publication Society regards itself as a thoroughly undenominational institution. It is organized and constituted by individuals and churches who interpret the Disciples' religious reformation as ideally an unsectarian and unecclesiastical fraternity, whose common tie and original impulse are fundamentally the desire to practice Christian unity with all Christians.

The Society therefore claims fellowship with all who belong to the living Church of Christ, and desires to co-operate with the Christian people of all communions as well as with the congregations of Disciples, and to serve all.

The Christian Century, the chief publication of the Society, desires nothing so much as to be the worthy organ of the Disciples' movement. It has no ambition at all to be regarded as an organ of the Disciples' denomination. It is a free interpreter of the wider fellowship in religious faith and service which it believes every church of Disciples should embody. It strives to interpret all communions, as well as the Disciples, in such terms and with such sympathetic insight as may reveal to all their essential unity in spite of denominational isolation. The Christian Century, though published by the Disciples, is not published for the Disciples alone. It is published for the Christian world. It desires definitely to occupy a catholic point of view and it seeks readers in all communions.

What They Say

Of Dr. H. L. Willett's New Book

"The Moral Leaders of Israel"

The Living Church, Milwaukee.

FOR many a long year the Old Testament has been a dark continent in education, even in religious education, but now it is coming to its own and experts in religious pedagogy are recognizing its value in instilling the fundamental principles of religion and in the ethical training of the young. The vivid stories and noble heroes of the primitive days of God's religion on earth strongly appeal to the child's imagination, and with grown people, too, the Old Testament, rightly interpreted and rightly understood, is full of inspiration and power. Prof. Willett's book contains a series of twenty-six lessons, carefully worked out, with the Prophets of Israel for its themes, including not only Isaiah, Amos, Hosea, Micah, etc., but also Moses, Samuel, Elisha, etc. With his thoroughness of scholarship, the writer has been able to give not only the very complete and instructive presentations of the great leaders of thought, action, and character in Israel, but also to apply their teachings and experiences to the problems of our own day. Now that all of us are beginning to learn that great truth which was confined to a few until recently, namely, that the chief office of the prophet is not to foretell the future but to teach and preach God's lessons, warnings, and helps for the duty of the hour to the people, we are finding as never before many effective helps in the prophets for our guidance in present-day problems. In this book these are admirably treated and so simply and clearly that their lessons go home to the average layman and do not for their understanding require the technical knowledge of a scholar.

The Heidelberg Teacher, Philadelphia.

We know of no author who has given such brilliant studies on the Prophets and Leaders of Israel. And then it is all so clear and sane, that any teacher can follow the argument all the way through. There are hosts of students who will find themselves wondering that the way was not made so plain long before. There is scholarship on every page, but speaking with such a winsome and sincere spirit that it is heart speaking to heart. It will be a revelation of the permanent value of the truths spoken by the holy men of old, for the stirring and exciting times in which we live. When philosophy is dumb, human speculation humbled in the dust, and poetry dragging along with a broken wing, Amos, Isaiah and the rest of this great spiritual throng will speak a "thus saith the Lord," and the waves and disorder will be stilled.

The Continent, Chicago.

"This is the first of two volumes treating the work of the Old Testament prophets. All the questions arising out of the most recent study of this most important subject are popularly and comprehensively treated."

The Advance, Chicago.

"This is the first of two volumes which are to constitute a survey of the entire prophetic ministry of Israel. Doctor Willett combines in notable degree ripe scholarship and power of popular interpretation."

The Fourth of July Then and Now

WAS THE FOURTH OF JULY A MISTAKE?

The story of the revolutionary days reveals a spirit of independence which was impatient with the tardy recognition of colonial rights by Great Britain. There were voices in Parliament that were raised in behalf of America, eminently that of Edmund Burke. Public sentiment in England was tending in the direction of the colonies.

What if the continental congress had waited?

An unbroken unity of Anglo-Saxon power in the world would seem to many a most desirable thing in these days. Did not the world lose by the precipitateness of America something that would have been of enormous advantage to the world's life?

The Fourth of July is really Independence day for the whole English-speaking world!

Before the revolt of America, the world had never seen a colonial policy which was based upon anything but exploitation. Spain had looted Mexico, and the priceless civilization of the Incas in Peru had gone down before free-booters. France, with religious idealism, had sent missionaries to America in great numbers, but her policy was also one of exploitation. King George in laying taxes upon America was no worse than many another. His only sin was that of anachronism. The death knell of colonial oppression had in the providence of God been struck. Behind lay the story of the conquering armies of Alexander the Great, and of Julius Caesar, with subsequent greed and idleness. Before lay the new world, which was to establish the rights of man.

On the Fourth of July began the colonial freedom of Canada and Australia and New Zealand. It was on this day that the possibility of Great Britain's power as a colonizing and civilizing agency in the world came into being. Only America's freedom could have taught stubborn kingcraft the lesson it needed to learn. Great Britain's policy of colonial freedom is the corner-stone of the empire.

The Fourth of July marked an epoch in the religious history of mankind. For the first time the democracy of Jesus was written into the structure of the state.

The great watchwords of the French revolution, "Liberty, Equality, and Fraternity," have sometimes been thought to have had an atheistic origin. They are in reality the watchwords of the gospel. Only the reactionary character of the church in unhappy France and the reckless and irreverent spirit of the leaders of France's emancipation have disguised the true state of affairs.

The evolution of France and the evolution of America differed in this: that our forefathers recognized the religious quality of their political ideals. They said: "We hold these truths to be self-evident, that all men are created equal, that they are endowed by their Creator with certain inalienable rights, that among these are Life, Liberty and the pursuit of Happiness." The great document which is the charter of American liberties again and again asserts the faith of its makers in the providence and blessing of Almighty God.

This religious spirit kept our liberties from being abused, as was the case in the French Revolution. Liberty from the hand of God is a different thing from liberty as the self-assertion of a humanity untamed by any thought of Overruling Power.

The Fourth of July, 1916, will dawn on a different world. A great continent has been reclaimed from the wilderness. The world's metropolis is on these shores. The world's wealth is predominantly here. The inventive genius, the organizing talent, the restless energy of a young giant nation awaits the control of ideals.

The perils that await us are not those which the jingo papers assail us with. Our danger lies neither in Germany, England nor Japan. It is in the heart of America herself.

Once our forefathers gave up luxury in behalf of liberty. Are we not in danger of giving up liberty in behalf of luxury? The colonists knew that the blockade of their ports would throw them back for years upon their unaided resources. Our hunger for luxury has fastened industrial chains upon the necks of countless thousands. The demand for dividends makes us blink at child labor, and an eighty-four hour week in some industries. We tolerate death-dealing machinery because damage suits are settled more cheaply than safety devices are provided.

May we not impose on others the very tyranny which we fought for years to escape? A section of our press at this Fourth of July season is busily advocating an unbroken dominion of America over the Panama Canal. What this will cost to the liberties of our neighbors is no more a matter of concern to these false counsellors than was freedom in the thought of the evil advisers of King George. If we are no longer able to be indifferent to the course of international politics, if we have power which we are about to use in directing changes in the map of the world, our history demands that we shall use our mighty prestige in behalf of our ideals.

This nation began in a search for God and Liberty. Early Pilgrims and Baptists and Quakers came to this country to claim the right of establishing a social order founded in Love of God and regard for the rights of the individual. Dare we abandon what these sought?

During these days, in every church there should be a flag. In every pulpit should be a patriot. The man who mumbles dead phrases in the face of living deeds is a false prophet. Our times demand a new phrasing of America's responsibility to the world. We need to proclaim her the nation raised up and endowed with power that she may bring the whole world to the feet of the God of Liberty and Humanity. Before she may do this, she must confess and atone for her own sins.

In humility of spirit, we should seek to lead the world to a peace founded on Law and Justice, to a social status where life is exalted above property, to a religious attitude which will make all humanity seek to co-operate with the purposes of Almighty God.

A Little Church in a Big City

By Charles Darsie

Minister Belmar Christian Church, Pittsburg *

FOR the same reason that the smaller nations of the world have often most profoundly affected its history, smaller churches have often had the most real influence. The Cedar Avenue church of Cleveland has been like Greece among the nations. "Old Cedar," as she is familiarly called by former members, was like the little man who never grew up. As a church enterprise among the Disciples of Christ, it did not attract attention. Neither its pastor nor its members were much concerned about growing big. For twenty years no evangelistic revival was held. The members were satisfied with the delightful fellowship they enjoyed and had no pronounced ambition to add numbers to their fellowship.

It was a case of "like preacher, like people." Harris R. Cooley, pastor of "Old Cedar," never seemed to become a promoter of large ecclesiastical enterprises. Always known among his friends as Harry Cooley, to distinguish him from his father, he was ever regarded as a young man expected to perform great achievements whenever he should overcome the handicap of immaturity. And so, for more than twenty years, he ministered happily to the little congregation which never came to have two hundred members.

PASTOR OF A MISSION.

In 1880, Harris R. Cooley, fresh from college, succeeded his father as pastor of the little mission on Erie street. Lathrop Cooley, the father, was an old-fashioned preacher of the Disciples of Christ, a church builder, a keen business man, and an organizer. His son, Harry, proved to be a dreamer, whose castles in the air had little connection with committee work, church advertising, or large evangelistic reports. Harry was tall and pale. Socialism had been the subject of his graduation oration in a day when Socialism stood for anarchy and revolution. The young man carried his head in the clouds; but some doubted at times whether his feet always touched the ground.

In 1882 the little mission congregation moved from the hall on Erie street, to its own modest brick building on Cedar avenue. The young pastor had acknowledged talents. Everybody expected that some day he would develop into one of the leading preachers among the Disciples. Bashfulness was supposed to be his greatest obstacle. Later on, there was a suspicion that he lacked ambition. The outcome of Dr. Cooley's ministry has shown that his mind was too much occupied with other problems to become really interested in mechanical church building.

TOUCH WITH HUMANITY.

The burden of his heart was like that which made his Master have compassion on "the multitude, who are like sheep that have no shepherd." The young pastor was wrestling with the problems of the poor and needy. His sermons were full of appeals for suffering humanity. His vacations were spent among the social settlements of London and his reading, during his leisure hours, was largely along social lines. He was profoundly influenced by a term spent in attendance upon a radical summer school at Oxford University in England.

It must not be forgotten in the telling of this story that Dr. Cooley's ministry occurred at a time when there were not in the whole country a dozen proclaimers of what we now know as social Christianity. His pulpit utterances were very different in spirit and in aim from the messages regularly delivered from the surrounding pulpits. And, as we might expect, a different class of listeners were attracted by the Cedar avenue type of church life. Many members of Cedar church had made the rounds of the Disciple churches of Cleveland, only to stop at the little brick meeting-house with its tall, bashful preacher and say to one another: "This is what we have been looking for. It suits us pretty well."

SOME DISTINGUISHED ATTENDANTS.

Nor should we think that the members of the little church were all obscure people. Men and women of national reputation and importance, together with some of the leaders of city life, were regularly in attendance upon the services. The family of President Garfield, after that statesman's death, the librarian of the City Library with his family, prominent educators and business men were found among those who listened to the pale young man, whose heart burden was the problem of human need. There were young people also who received their life impulses from Dr. Cooley's ministry and who went from the modest activities of Cedar church to places of power in larger church fields. Ministers of pronounced success, missionaries, Y. M. C. A. workers, and social settlement leaders, a considerable number, received life-long impulses under a ministry that could not exalt itself.

Among these people, who found a peculiar interest in Dr. Cooley's ministry, came a man, who was destined to transform and embody the Cedar Avenue Church life in a special way before the world. Tom L. Johnson, self-made traction magnate, quietly dropped into the little church on a bright Sunday morning, and when the invitation hymn was sung after the custom of the Disciples, presented himself with his young wife for membership in the congregation.

THE COMING OF TOM L. JOHNSON.

At the time of his introduction to the church, Mr. Johnson was unknown to Dr. Cooley. The hand of fellowship was given and the benediction pronounced before the modest preacher had any inkling of the identity of the distinguished additions to his congregation. But the advent of Mr. Johnson was destined to mean much in every way to the life at Cedar; for Mr. Johnson was conspicuous in just those qualities that Dr. Cooley lacked. The traction magnate was pre-eminently an organizer and promoter.

But before proceeding with the account of Mr. Johnson's activities, another movement within the little church that throws a good deal of light upon its character should be described. Frederick Strickland, settlement worker at Hiram House, Cleveland, had organized a club, which met in his own home at stated intervals for the discussion of any questions that its members might introduce. Now it happened that some circumstances of Mr. Strickland's home life made it inconvenient for this informal organization any longer to meet there; so that it became necessary to find other quarters. It was but natural for Mr. Strickland to think of Dr. Cooley and Cedar church, as being interested in the same questions and problems as he himself was facing. So the club which seems to have had no name by which it is remembered, asked permission to use the Cedar church building for one evening in the week and upon being granted their request, proceeded to make the city at large wonder at the kind of meetings that were permitted in the church.

A FREE FOR ALL CLUB.

For this club had an unchurchly membership and discussed many questions in most unconventional fashion. The membership of the organization had been brought together in the foreign and congested section of the city and contained many men of many ideas. Anarchists and Socialists, philosophers of different kinds, single taxers, free thinkers—they were all free talkers—and many others, who had peculiar political, religious, and social ideas, were brought together in an organization that provided for the freest expression of views upon any subject whatsoever that might be introduced. No restrictions were placed upon the members except the restrictions of free speech and fair play. There were no stated officers. A different chairman was chosen each evening, lest matters should get into a rut.

The newspapers of the city began to publish the most startling utterances, made in Cedar church pulpit. Enemies of all churches and opponents of all governments found a free platform there for any and all statements of opinion that they were inclined to make. Reporters haunted the meetings and, with customary zeal for publishing the unusual and the sensational, made the little church notorious.

A FREE PLATFORM.

And then came a break with the Disciples of the city and of the nation. A few persons, otherwise desirable, but who did not want to be immersed after the custom of the Disciples, asked for admission to the congregation. Dr. Cooley, never much interested in the building of ecclesiastical organizations, was inclined to admit them on the ground of their Christian character, previous standing in other churches, and their common interest in Cedar avenue aims and ideals. The official board of the church endorsed Dr. Cooley's views and the new members were received, but not without scandal and bitterness in the surrounding churches.

One can readily see that such a church, with its peculiar atmosphere and life, and continuing for a considerable term of years in this unique way, had certain possibilities, which only waited executive leadership to ripen into more pronounced results. The fullness of time comes in church circles as in other situations. It came to Cedar avenue, when Tom L. Johnson received a change of heart.

THE SOCIAL CONVERSION OF JOHNSON.

In the midst of his church activities and surrounded by the influences, which we have described, Mr. Johnson had occasion to take a railroad journey of considerable length. He was without company on the train and the train boy determined to sell him a book. One book in particular the train boy recommended as specially good. The conductor of the train, happening through just at that time, added his recommendation to the boy's urging by saying that the book was well worth reading. So Mr. Johnson, having nothing else to do to while away the tedium of the journey, bought the book and proceeded to read it through. All of which has more to do with his own future and the future of his church than appears at first glance.

For the little book that Mr. Johnson purchased was one of Henry George's works, and Tom L. Johnson's mind had for a long time been prepared to receive a new view of life. Struck with the force of Mr. George's teachings, Mr. Johnson lost no time in reading all the works of the single tax exponent. He became a convert to the spirit of social progress, sought the acquaintance and the friendship of the author who had so influenced his mind, and announced that he was ready to devote fortune and his remaining years to the promotion of better social conditions.

THE CHURCH'S LIFE REVOLUTIONIZED.

It is hardly possible that, in so small and so congenial a congregation as Cedar Avenue Church, such a change of ideals by its most forceful member should not affect the whole band. It is said that there was more political conversation at the close of services than religious sentiment. The whole life of the church was given a new bent. A neighboring Jewish rabbi was invited to preach and his sermon received wide notice in the public prints. Folks called the church a single tax club and not a church. Many of its leading members spent their social hours together in discussing the probable effects of a universal adoption of the views of Henry George. And so Cedar Avenue Church was regarded with suspicion as to both politics and religion.

Then Tom L. Johnson ran for Congress and was elected. Like his pastor, he began to do things that men called impractical and illogical. He had made a large part of his fortune in steel, protected by a high tariff. On the stump, however, Mr. Johnson denounced the tariff as the creator of special privilege and a robber of the common people. Unlike his pastor, Mr. Johnson brought his doctrines before the people in a large and successful way. After completing his term in Congress, Mr. Johnson made a spectacular campaign for the office of mayor of Cleveland and was elected. The account of Tom L. Johnson's campaigns is a story in itself and has revolutionized political life in Cleveland.

THE BIG TENT.

The feature of Mr. Johnson's campaigns in Cleveland was the "big tent." He had certain doctrines to preach and he needed a platform from which to set them forth. So the big tent became a feature of all his work. The big tent was a traveling, political camp meeting. Like the services at Cedar Avenue church, the doctrines proclaimed were unconventional, if not illogical. Mr. Johnson had been a favorite of fortune, gained by special privilege. He now became the champion of the common people against special privilege. He cared absolutely nothing for consistency. The street-car interests, with which he had been most closely identified, became the most conspicuous objects of his attack. His method was that of the preacher. All Cleveland was to be reached by his views, as he had seen the little church on Cedar avenue come under the influence of the spirit of its beloved pastor. To Tom L. Johnson and his friends, reform movements came to be religion.

After his election to the office of mayor, Mr. Johnson was besieged by office-seekers. As the organizer and head of a great municipality, the street-car president appeared in his best light. He was a natural judge of human nature and of the abilities of men to perform special tasks. He secured from everywhere, even from the ranks of his political opponents, the men who were fitted to carry out his own ideals. Under him were radicals and conservatives, Democrats and Republicans. His political organization came to be almost invincible. Yet his appointees did not always seem to be selected with a view to their political strength. Mr. Johnson was making an organization to carry out his views. He relied on the political camp meeting in the big tent to make his realized and unrealized plans the ideal of the voters of the city.

FROM PULPIT TO CITY HALL.

It is but natural that in the selection of such a band of lieutenants to aid him in so great a task the new mayor should turn to his old friend and pastor. Dr. Cooley stood for social relief and brotherly good will. He was a unique figure among the ministers of the city, where he had labored for almost a quarter of a century. He was prominent in Mr. Johnson's experience as a leader in civic religion. So Dr. Cooley was asked to leave the little church and take an office in the City Hall, where he could see his dreams come true. He decided to make the change. His social gospel was transplanted from the hot-house to the wide-world field.

A strong and helpful influence came into Dr. Cooley's life near the end of his pastorate. For years a confirmed bachelor, he had fallen in love with a cultured woman. She was a gifted professor of Hiram College, where Dr. Cooley had taken his degrees and where he often visited as a friend and alumnus. Miss Clark was dean of women. Her marriage to the bashful, scholarly Cleveland pastor was highly advantageous to both. Like his friend, Mr. Johnson, Cora Clark differed from Dr. Cooley in executive ability and the ambition to do great things.

A CIVIC REVOLUTION.

Now it is probable that, had Dr. Cooley married Miss Clark early in life, his ministry would have been altogether different. For Miss Clark came from a staunch, Disciple family and would doubtless have influenced her talented husband to more practical efforts in church building. But coming into his life when he and his church were under the influence of social theories and the strong personality of Tom L. Johnson, they were all swayed by the new political possibilities. And so Dr. Cooley became Tom L. Johnson's director of charity and correction. He took with him as private secretary J. B. Vining, a deacon of the Cedar church congregation, also a single taxer, and a man of energy and force.

The era of the Tom L. Johnson policies in Cleveland is yet too new to describe its final effects; but there is no doubt of its being really a new era. All municipal elections have taken on the character of old-fashioned evangelistic services since Mr. Johnson, as he expressed it, took the people into his confidence in the big tent. The motives presented to the voters are largely religious; of the same sort of religion as prevailed for so many years at "Old Cedar."

PRISON REFORM.

One of the very first reforms, instituted by the new administration, was a different treatment of criminals. Dr. Cooley, himself, was the organizer of this new method. In spite of the frantic objections of political enemies and the fears of good people generally, Dr. Cooley began by paroling a large per cent of the prisoners in the city workhouse. He made these prisoners understand that they were to have the opportunity to make good. The city would co-operate and encourage. Municipal judges were told that the policy of the City Hall would not be to take vengeance upon offenders against the law, but to save them. Their families needed them. They were valuable to the city. They were worth saving for their own sakes.

Dr. Cooley also believed that the surroundings of the prisoners might be made to improve their prospects in life. Against a great deal of opposition, the city was led to purchase a farm of 2,000 acres, outside the city limits. On separate corners of this tract of land were placed the correctional and relief departments of the city. In addition, a tuberculosis hospital was erected at the highest point. On this great farm prisoners were given opportunity to work out their own salvation, apart from the noise and dirt of the city. The old workhouse had been dark, and ill-ventilated, and crowded. On the farm there were sunshine and fresh air.

DR. COOLEY AND PRISONS.

Instead of the old-fashioned dark cell, Dr. Cooley planned for refractory prisoners what he called a "reflection room." Humane treatment and faith in human nature were made to do their part in renewing the bond of life. As an outcome of the policy, Dr. Cooley was enabled to announce that 90 per cent of the prisoners found worthy of parole rewarded their benefactor by making good.

The poor were also treated with consideration. The colony or almshouse buildings were built about an enclosed court and cloister, where all might live together as a great family. There was work, according to his ability, for every member of the colony to occupy his thoughts and prevent stagnation. There was a measure of good will and love manifested to all. Aged married couples, who had spent a lifetime together, were not separated, as in so many institutions. Dr. Cooley raised the plea that poverty should not be made to carry with it any pang of homesickness that could be avoided. Over the door of the home for married couples was placed the motto, "To lose money is better than to lose love."

THE LONG FIGHT.

Meanwhile, Mayor Johnson had been exceedingly busy fighting continuous battles with the corporations that he designated "special privilege." He was contending for cheaper street-car fare, gas, water, electric light for all the people. It was to be a long fight and stubborn, as those who are acquainted with the parties involved well know. Elections, bond issues, court injunctions, law suits, the organization of new corporations to fight the old, state-wide elections and the lobbying of bills in the state legislature, all these activities and more made Mr. Johnson's life a continuous round of controversy and work. Into the struggle he poured his fortune, as well as the preeminent intellectual and executive talents of his personality. To it he sacrificed his life, ended before its time by the exertions of a too strenuous career.

"OLD CEDAR" AS A SPRING OF LIFE.

But the object of Mr. Johnson's struggle was accomplished. Today in Cleveland practically every policy advocated by Mr. Johnson is adopted. Neither his political associates nor the opposition would now think of going before the electorate of the city without a program that called for civic welfare and social progress. The old designation for Cleveland was the "Forest City." With the dying of so many of the trees and the growth of so much that is in accord with the Golden Rule, the city's leaders like to call it the "City of Good Will."

So the little church that never seemed to grow up finally did grow up until it became a great kingdom and filled the whole city. Out of its life came the promised spring of water unto larger life for all. The church itself has received no advertising for its achievements. Many churches go into the so-called reform business for advertising purposes mainly. But "Old Cedar" takes its place in a changed locality and under another name among the smaller churches of the city. It may perhaps never be of ecclesiastical importance. But what it has accomplished will never cease to be of importance to all cities.

British, French and Belgian firms are already making plans to rebuild the towns and cities ravaged by the war . .

The Challenge of the War

An Open Letter to the Ministers of America From the League to Enforce Peace,

William H. Taft President *

THE present war has challenged the moral ingenuity of the world. For years we have preached the ideals of peace and have hurled indictments against war. While the world was at peace it was easy to feel that we had done our duty and discharged our responsibility when we had lifted our voice against war in pulpit, in university, and in the market place. A long period of peace had lulled the world into a false security. We did not feel a driving urgency about our work for international peace. We were going along quietly doing what we could to educate public opinion against war, but we did not feel an immediate responsibility for devising actual machinery of international organization that would make war less probable.

Then there burst upon the world overnight the most brutal, the most ruthless, and the most gigantic war of history. The flower of human brotherhood that the Christian forces of the world had been watering and nurturing for centuries was withered by the hot breath of hate. The results of years of struggle for social justice, for democracy, and for larger opportunity for the common man, were thrown on the scrap heap and all the energies of mind and heart were harnessed to the machinery of war. The most hopeful of us began to wonder whether our civilization was more than a thin veneer. We began to wonder what part the Cross was to play in a world of Cannons. But when we came out of the daze into which the first few weeks of the war plunged us, we began to see that it was not the part of men to let our disappointment over the apparent breakdown of civilization paralyze our efforts toward the establishment of that more permanent peace among nations without which the clock of religious, social and industrial progress may, at any moment, be turned back for a generation when the passions of war are loosed.

BUILDING DYKES.

The people of Holland were compelled to build dykes to hold back the water and give them a chance to carry on, uninterrupted, the constructive tasks of their agricultural, industrial, commercial, and social life. This war has taught us that if we are to carry on, uninterrupted, the work of religion and democracy we must build dykes to prevent the inevitable recurring overflows of the primitive passions of war that sweep away the fruits of civilization in their rush.

This war has taught us that the most urgent, the most necessary, the most fundamentally religious duty now before us is the devising and adopting of some method other than war for settling the disputes that are bound to arise between nations. Unless we can do that, we can never be sure that at any moment the results of generations of preaching and teaching may not be consumed in the fires of war.

The best thinking of the world as well as all the lessons of history indicate that the only method by which the dangers of war can be practically eliminated, is by substituting law for war among nations just as we have substituted law for war among individuals within the nations. In the early days of this nation, in the early western community, every man went armed and settled his own disputes with his pistol. After a time public opinion began to say that men should use their reason instead of their guns in settling disputes; but the old method of settling quarrels between individuals was not given up until society created courts and put power enough behind them to insure their operation.

A STEP FORWARD.

Today, except in unusual instances, individuals do not use their own force to settle their disputes, but delegate the use of force to the police. Civilization took a great step forward when the Policeman took the place of the Duelist. There is no reasonable ground to hope that the nations of the world will at this stage go so far as to disarm and create an international army and navy to police the world. We have not got that far in international affairs. But we have got to the point where there is ground to hope that at the end of this war the community of nations will do what every primitive community sooner or later does, namely: In a primitive community when the honor of the women and the property of the town are no longer safe from outlaws, all men, even the most peace loving, unite in forming a Vigilance Committee, in which they agree to use their combined force to see that outlawry is kept down and the peace of the town maintained.

The United States is today in exactly the position of a man of peace in a frontier town. It is our duty to suggest and stand ready to join an International Vigilance Committee, in which the nations of the world shall join in saying that they will use their combined power if necessary to force any nation with a grievance to submit its difficulty to an International Court or Council of Conciliation before declaring war.

Such a method might not prevent all wars, but it would at least make a nation stop and count ten before striking a blow; it would give the masses of a nation a chance to express themselves before they were committed to war; it would make it impossible for secret diplomacy and autocracy to rush a nation into war. It would enforce a cooling off process. There is little doubt but that if every supposed cause for war had to stand an examination in an open court or council before the eyes of the whole world, nine out of every ten wars would be prevented.

AT THE END OF THE WAR.

Civilization has advanced by slow degrees, by taking one step at a time. It seems practically possible that at the end of this war the nations will be willing to enter a League to enforce the submission of all disputes to an international court or council of conciliation for a complete examination before war can be declared. Beyond that it is doubtful whether they will go. It is doubtful whether the nations will agree to submit to the enforcement of the decisions of such a court. It is practically certain that the nations will not disarm for years to come. Shall we not, therefore, take the one step that is possible? Shall we not say that if nations must arm, the armaments shall be used to support law rather than to break it?

*This letter was sent to 10,000 ministers last month, accompanied by a letter urging them to explain to their congregations the platform of the League to Enforce Peace. The letter was signed by ex-President Taft, Bishop Luther T. Wilson, of the Methodist Church, Shailer Mathews, and the Rev. Charles S. MacFarland, President and Secretary of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America, the Rev. J. B. Remensnyder, the Rev. Arthur J. Brown, Hamilton Holt, and Fred B. The Flag

BY FRANKLIN K. LANE.
Secretary of the Interior.

THIS morning, as I passed into the land office, the flag dropped me a most cordial salutation, and from its rippling folds I heard it say: "Good morning, Mr. Flag Maker."

"I beg your pardon, Old Glory," I said. "You are mistaken. I am not the President of the United States, nor the Vice President, nor a member of Congress, nor even a general in the army. I am only a government clerk."

"Well, you helped to clear that patent for the hopeful inventor in New York, or pushed the opening of that new ditch in Colorado, or made that mine in Illinois more safe, or brought relief to the soldier in Wyoming. No matter whichever one of these beneficent individuals you may happen to be, I give you greeting, Mr. Flag Maker."

"Yesterday the Congress spoke a word which will open the door of Alaska, but a mother in Michigan worked from sunrise until far into the night to give her boy an education. She, too, is making the flag. Yesterday we made a new law to prevent financial panics; yesterday, no doubt, a school-teacher in Ohio taught his first letters to a boy who will write a song that will give cheer to millions of our race. We are all making the flag."

"But," I said impatiently, "these people were only working."

Then came a great shout about the flag.

"Let me tell you who I am.

"The work that we do is the making of the real flag.

"I am not the flag, not at all. I am but its shadow.

"I am whatever you make me, nothing more.

"I am your belief in yourself, your dream of what a people may become.

"I live a changing life, a life of moods and passions, of heartbreaks and tired muscles.

"Sometimes I am strong with pride, when men do an honest work, fitting the rails together truly.

"Sometimes I droop, for then purpose has gone from me and cynically I play the coward.

"Sometimes I am loud, garish and full of that ego that blasts judgement.

"But always I am all that you hope to be and have the courage to try for.

"I am song and fear, struggle and panic, and ennobling hope.

"I am the day's work of the weakest man and the largest dream of the most daring.

"I am the Constitution and the courts, statutes and statute-makers, soldier and dreadnaughts, drayman and street-sweep, cook, counselor and clerk.

"I am the battle of yesterday and the mistake of tomorrow.

"I am the mystery of the men who do without knowing why.

"I am the clutch of an idea and the reasoned purpose of resolution.

"I am no more than what you believe me to be and I am all that you believe I can be.

"I am what you make me, nothing more.

"I swing before your eyes as a bright gleam of color, a symbol of yourself, the pictured suggestion of that big thing which makes this nation. My stars and my stripes are your dreams and your labors. They are bright with cheer, brilliant with courage, firm with faith because you have made them so out of your hearts, for you are the makers of the flag, and it is well that you glory in the making."

Suffering and Success.

Dr. Edward Judson at the centennial exercises in memory of his father, Adoniram Judson, at the Northern Convention in Boston, said: "I always keep a picture of my father in my study; he has always been an inspiration to me. We folks need human guides to lead us in the footsteps of the great Pathfinder. Separation deepens affection. Love has two elements: the disposition to enjoy and possess, and the passion to serve. I believe my father's influence was stronger than if I had been brought up under his care. The difficulties in his life have always helped me when under the pressure of obstacles, the thought of the terrible privations of his life, the prison with fetters for a year, the separation from his wife, the oppression of the government, the six years without a conversion; the disappointment at the end of his life that so little was done; the thought of such things spurs my footsteps. Remember this: If we succeed without suffering, it is because some one has suffered before us; if we suffer without success, it is because some one will succeed after us."

Union Churches

In order to break down the sense of isolation which exists among union churches, and to let workers in this field know of the progress of the movement toward unity in other communities, we are maintain ing this open forum. We wish to present plans of organization and work of united, federated and community churches, and to chronicle the progress of the movement as a whole. We ask any reader who knows of any union church that has not previously been reported in this current series to send us information concerning it. Address: Howard E. Jensen, care of "The Christian Century."

ODESSA, WASH.

The union of the Protestant churches at Odessa, Washington, is unusual in that a Methodist and a Presbyterian church reconstituted themselves into a united and harmonious organization of Congregationalists.

Rev. W. S. Pritchard, pastor of the church, writes: "At the time of the union Odessa was a small town of about 90 people, about four fifths of whom were Germans, ministered to by four German churches. There were two English-speaking Protestant churches, the Presbyterian and the Methodist Episcopal. The Presbyterian church was organized first, about 1902; later, about 1909, the Methodist church was organized. After a few years of the keenest rivalry the people began to see and feel that some other plan might be better. Conferences were held resulting in a decision on the part of both churches to unite on a Congregational basis. Delegations were appointed to go to their respective denominational bodies and to request permission to transfer titles to property. This permission was readily granted, on condition, of course, that the funds expended by these denominations be returned.

"A Union Commission of six, three representing each church was appointed to circulate a subscription paper and to secure a pastor. A canvass of the entire membership was then made, and each asked to unite with the Congregational church on his own application, and not merely as a member of either of the other churches. Other Christians of the community were asked to join the new church. The result was the organization of a Congregational church with 58 charter members, which was two more than the combined resident membership of the churches uniting. All but three or four of the resident members of the negotiating churches united with the new organization.

"Today we have a seven-room modern parsonage and a beautiful church plant worth together over $10,000. There is a constituency of over 100 families. The pastor is the only English-speaking Protestant minister in a section of country 25 miles square."

Not only has the union increased the membership of the church, but it has solved its financial problem. Before the union the two churches were supported by their Home Missionary Societies to the extent of $700, whereas last year the single church paid over $125 to benevolences, besides providing liberally for its own local needs.

KENNEWICK, WASH.

The union at Kennewick, Wash., is similar to that at Odessa in that the passion for unity triumphed over denominational preferences. In this instance two churches, a Congregational and a Presbyterian, had built rather expensive buildings, as a result of which both were encumbered with a heavy debt. As a result of conferences between the two bodies the Congregationalists sold their building and applied the proceeds to the debt on the building of the Presbyterians. The Presbyterian church then disbanded and its members came into the Congregational church by letter. This church now has a membership of 127, a Bible-school enrolment of 174, pays its pastor a salary of $1,200 a year, and contributes $137 annually to missions and benevolences.

The church is a most harmonious one, the pastor stating that it is impossible to distinguish between its constituent elements.

This work of the Congregationalists in Washington is a ministry of reconciliation in which the Disciples of Christ should rejoice, and in which they should play a leading role wherever opportunity affords. The Disciples are historically committed to Christian union. Who, if not they, should be the torch-bearers along the way which the denominations are traveling toward the Disciples' Promised Land?

THE MASTER'S VACATION

IT IS an interesting and significant verse in Mark which reports of Jesus: "And he saith unto them, Come ye yourselves apart into a desert place and rest awhile. For there were many coming and going and they had no leisure so much as to eat." The period described is at the close of the mission of the Twelve who had been sent forth two by two. That the purpose of the Master to give his faithful followers a needed rest was frustrated is no argument against its validity.

There was, of course, the physical weariness of the workers. The Master knew what it was to be hungry and thirsty and weary. No apostle of the strenuous life ever put into the service of humanity more consecrated energy than did He.

There was need, too, of spiritual refreshing. These Twelve were not to preach any more until there was a fresh message in their souls. The weary round of public meetings, with people coming and going and asking questions, had taken from them the freshness of spirit which is necessary in interpreting religion in a forceful way to the people.

There were the temptations, too, of public life. It was so easy to be popular by sensational methods and so hard to be true. One might jump down from the temple's height, or take the crown of an excited populace. More difficult was the lonely walk to Calvary.

The quiet times in the Master's life were spent in prayer. Before the delivery of the Sermon on the Mount, the Master was alone on the mountain top in prayer. When he was asked to assume the leadership of a military movement of revolt against the government, he sought the same source of strength and power.

The man who thinks he needs no vacation has not worked as the Master has worked; or perhaps he has not the spiritual sensitiveness to discern his inner needs. A vacation may be an occasion to the flesh for some, but it has its uses in the higher life of the spirit.

FRIENDLY RELATIONS WITH THE BAPTISTS

THE Disciples and Baptists of Missouri have taken steps which look in the direction of more friendly relations. It is evident that in states with a measure of the southern tradition there has been no love lost in the past. The Baptist Standard of June 24 mentions a kind of religious (?) attitude among the Baptists when it says: "Not infrequently this accentuated virtue issues in a prognathous zeal against some class of people with which one does not agree, against the Catholics, for example, or against heresy, or in the South, against the Campbellites." This attitude of a certain order of Baptists has been matched by an apostatizing order of Disciples.

The Disciples of Missouri through their state convention created a Commission on Christian Union which during the past year sought to establish fraternal relations with the state conventions of other religious bodies. For one reason or another, these efforts have not brought a response except in connection with the Baptists. The state convention of the Baptists appointed a committee to confer with the Disciples and a program has been drawn up looking toward increased friendliness between the two bodies.

The ministers are urged to exchange pulpits and the state conventions are to appoint fraternal delegates to exchange visits. The state mission boards are also to confer with each other to avoid friction and duplication in every way possible.

The program adopted by the two conventions has the merit of not attempting everything at once. To be effective, there must be sustained interest which will patiently iron out the prejudices that have been accumulating through the years. There is no other reason why these two bodies should not be working in the closest harmony, nor why they should not ultimately obliterate every distinction which now makes of them two groups.

WHY HAVE WE NEGLECTED THE POLES?

THERE are three million Poles in the United States. As the hope of a national revival of Poland grows dimmer, greater numbers of these people will come to this country. Of all the war sufferers, the Poles have suffered most. After the world conflict is finished many high class Poles with broken fortunes will seek this country. Just prior to the war 430,000 Poles came to this country in five years; of these 278,000 made permanent homes here.

The Poles are intensely religious by nature, as are most Slavs. They have 500 Polish Catholic churches in America, besides the sixteen organizations of Catholics who have repudiated the Roman obedience. There is evidence, however, that they tire of the round of ritual unillumined by the higher things of the Christian faith. In Milwaukee there has been serious defection on account of the parish school question.

The Poles present great contrasts in their cultural life. They are more given to crimes of violence than other Slavs, and are often in police court for drunken brawls, drunkenness being a great curse among them. At the same time Chopin, Sienkiewicz and others attest the quality of the Polish cultural life.

The Poles tend to congregate in cities, and in Chicago there are three hundred thousand of them, making Chicago the leading Polish city of the world, not excepting Warsaw.

It is a singular fact that while the denominations have competed to evangelize Swedes and Germans of Lutheran heritage and relatively higher modes of life, they have passed to one side the enormous Polish population. No single evangelical denomination has a thousand Polish members, and there are probably not two thousand Polish Protestants in America.

At the same time, the Catholic authorities report that one-third of the Poles of America are outside any church. It is a disappointing fact that home missionary leaders have sought the racial groups where quick and relatively easy returns were secured, but have neglected so signal an opportunity as the Polish race presents.

PREACHERS AND AD MEN GET TOGETHER

THE Associated Advertising Clubs of the World are meeting in Philadelphia this week. A section of the convention is being devoted to the study of the advertising problems of the church. The Disciples are represented on the program by Finis Idleman, who speaks on "Putting a Down-Town Church on the Map." O. F.

Jordan is on the Advisory committee, which deals with church problems.

Rev. Roy B. Guild will speak on "Sensationalism versus Sanity." This topic expresses very nicely the real issue in church publicity. So much of the religious publicity in the past has been irreligious—to use a Celtic form of speech—so that there is need now that the church place emphasis on the motto of the big organization of business men, which motto is, "Truth."

No church is justified in promising something which it cannot deliver or in raising expectations which are not to be realized. No church can afford to make the public believe that its chief business is anything else than the cultivation of the religious life. When publicity shall dare to be as religious as other forms of church activity, it will be far more effective, judged by every canon.

AN EDITOR PREACHES TO PREACHERS

MINISTERS are quite willing to denounce the sins of editors, both religious and secular. The editors on the other hand have had such respect for "the cloth" that they have passed by the sins of their brothers of another profession with reticence.

The sin of irreverence is one to which the minister is particularly susceptible. Deadening familiarity with spiritual things sometimes takes away from the leader the sense of mystery which is in the hearts of the people. In no regard is this more true than with regard to prayer. The following words from the Chicago Post have a peculiar value at this time:

"Some day a minister, invited to offer the invocation at a national party convention, will measure up to his opportunity, and a prayer will be uttered that will thrill the country as the words of Lincoln's Gettysburg address have thrilled it.

"The occasion is one that should appeal to the zeal of religion and the fire of patriotism, yet most convention prayers are long-winded and platitudinous, perfunctory extemporizing in pious phraseology. Presumably the average preacher is so in the habit of praying that he scorns preparation, and is betrayed into generalized petition that carries no throb of conviction and no sense of reality.

"The politicians, doubtless, regard the invocation as a mere formality, a courtesy to religion and the local clergy, a necessary but often tedious delay in the real business of the session. The minister has done little to disabuse them of this idea. He might if he would take his part in the program seriously; pray as if he believed in God, and make his prayer in spirit and diction a real and worthy keynote for the convention."

THE PSALMS OF ISRAEL

PERHAPS we are permitted to have favorite books in the Bible, since the New Testament shows great preference for one certain book in the Old Testament. There are one hundred and eighty-three scripture quotations in the New Testament, and of these one hundred and sixteen are from the book of Psalms.

Great souls have been nourished upon these immortal lyric poems. Martin Luther going to meet all possible devils at Worms stays his soul upon them. Those who have died with a verse of the Psalms upon their lips are an innumerable company.

The Psalms, like a modern hymn-book, are the product of a great company of writers, most of whose names are unknown to us. It helps us to know that Cardinal Newman, author of "Lead Kindly Light," was inspired to write by his stormy journey on the Mediterranean and by the greater storm within his own soul. We could wish to know more of the human experiences from which these psalms grew. Failing this, we rejoice that we have the psalms and that we know something of their reference to the experiences of Israel in her national life.

A people's attitude towards the Psalms may be taken as a gauge of its spiritual life. A denomination which has but little use for the Psalms knows but little of the meaning of communion with God. All literalists, legalists and doctrinaire religionists flee the book of Psalms as they would a plague. The mature saints, the mystics and pious souls of the church revel in its great emotions.

The Book of Psalms is like a chain of mountains. There are high places and low valleys. There is the ninety-first psalm and then there is the imprecatory psalm. There is revealed in certain psalms a delicacy of spiritual perception akin to the New Testament; as in the twenty-third Psalm. In other psalms are set forth the justice and the retribution of the Old Testament religious life.

A new sense of the nearness of God and of his wonderful providence is the reward of the man who lives with the psalm singers of Israel.

J. J. HILL ON THE BIBLE

JAMES J. HILL, the empire builder of the great northwest, had a Scotch Presbyterian training, though he married a Roman Catholic and was often in close fellowship with leaders of the latter denomination.

He was greatly interested in higher education and believed that the Bible should be a part of the plan. He said: "We are making a mistake to train our young people in all lines of knowledge and to give them the full equipment of college and university for undertaking the big tasks of life without making sure also that those fundamental principles of right and wrong as taught in the Bible have become a part of their equipment."

Becoming acquainted with the Bible cannot wait on college or university, important as biblical courses in these institutions are. If the Bible is to influence life in the largest way, its stories and precepts must be given to the child very early. Religious education in the home and in the Bible-school becomes an indispensable part of the training of the worthier type of man or woman.

CENSORING THE MOTION PICTURE

IT WILL be encouraging to Christian people to know that the great motion picture industry is subject to some of the restraints imposed by the consciences of church leaders. The National Board of Review of Motion Pictures has in its membership such great moral leaders as Dr. Charles S. Macfarland, P. F. Jerome, Mrs. George Swinburne and Mrs. Howard S. Gans. There are now 10,500 reels a year passing before the eyes of these censors. Since each of these reels is duplicated from thirty to one hundred and fifty times, the importance of the service of the censor will be seen.

Before the censorship was established, many evil things in motion pictures went unchallenged. The moral tone was often bad. There weree sacrilegious presentations and misrepresentations of the church and of its ministry. There was an appeal to the sensual and the criminal in the audience.

While cheap vaudeville shows go uncensored in many cities, it will be hard to bring the motion picture show up to the level it should attain. It is clear, however, that the intelligence of Christian leaders has prevented the motion picture from being the menace to spiritual life which it might have become.

The Larger Christian World

A DEPARTMENT OF INTERDENOMINATIONAL ACQUAINTANCE :: By Orvis F. Jordan

Presbyterians Vote to Unite.

The Canadian General Assembly of the Presbyterian church by a vote of 404 to 89 has decided to unite with the Methodist and Congregational bodies, to form the "United Church of Canada." It is planned to have the union consummated immediately at the close of the war. The negotiations have gone on for twelve years. There is a small irreconcilable minority opposed to the union and they may go on for a time using the name of the Presbyterian church. The new United Church will be a most vigorous exponent of evangelical religion in Canada.

Would Aid the Blind.

The Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America has joined in the appeal of the British-French-Belgian Permanent Blind Fund to secure funds to train the men blinded in the war for useful economic service. It is stated that there are already 25,000 of these blind men, victims of the great war, and the number may be more than a hundred thousand before the war is over. Some of these have become so despondent that they have taken their own lives. Dime banks will be distributed in the Sunday-schools, and other means of co-operation will be afforded. The banks may be secured from the Federation headquarters, 105 E. 22d St., New York.

Englishmen Unite to Pray.

The denominations in England do not unite as freely as in the United States, which fact makes the more remarkable the union prayer-meeting at Manchester recently. There were English clergymen of the establishment, Presbyterian, Congregational and Baptist ministers, and an Armenian priest, all led by a Salvation Army band to a park where a great open air prayer-meeting was held. The number of silk hats in the congregation indicated that the community leaders were in attendance. The secret of the prayer-meeting was the feeling that victory in the war will come as a result of moral force rather than physical force.

Who Will be City Temple Pastor?

In many ways the leading Protestant pulpit of the world is City Temple, London. Since its former pastor, R. J. Campbell, went to Anglicanism, a new pastor has not been secured. Rev. Hugh Black was called but declined. Dr. J. H. Jowett is supplying there this summer but whether he would allow his name to be presented to the congregation is not known. The latest rumor with regard to the situation is that Rev. Joseph Fort Newton, Liberal preacher of Cedar Rapids, Iowa, will be called to the great London pulpit. He is to speak there the latter part of the summer.

Well-Known Pastor Becomes Evangelist.

One of the leading pastors of Canada was Dr. J. L. Gordon, who kept filled a Presbyterian church in Winnipeg with two thousand sittings. It is now reported that he has invaded the United States and will evangelize in the western section of the country.

Dr. Broughton Goes Back to Atlanta.

Dr. Len G. Broughton after a period of service in London and more lately in Knoxville, Tenn., has been called back to his old church at Atlanta, Ga. A debt which was incurred in the previous pastorate will be raised and the church will be rejuvenated, it is hoped.

Agnostic Turns Christian.

One of the astonishing results of the war in England has been the conversion of Horatio W. Bottomley, editor of the weekly, "John Bull." He said recently:

"Today, in my fifty-fifth year, and after about as strenuous a life as any man of that age has ever lived, I believe in God and in the immortality of the soul of man. I am not sure that if poor Foote (the leader of the English freethinkers whose death was recorded a few weeks ago) had died a few years ago, I might not have been a candidate for his successorship. But now it is too late. The great world war has done it. In war there is a mighty alchemy, transmuting the base metal of human experience into the pure currency of faith. Pure rationalism, however scientific, has no word of comfort for weary watchers or of solace for human hearts. I believe that God has a divine purpose for not only the blood of heroes but equally for the tears of women, the quivering anguish of the human heart and the sacrificing effort of unselfish aim."

Give New Secretary Good Words.

Dr. J. Y. Aitchison is the newly appointed Home Secretary of the Baptist Foreign Mission Society. He has recently served on the team of the Laymen's Missionary Movement with great success and is now to carry on the promotional work for his denomination. A dinner was given to him at the time of his leaving Chicago in which many of the leading dignitaries of the Baptist denomination participated.

Finds Flaw in Text Book.

Dr. Melbourne P. Boynton has aroused considerable interest by his discovery of a peculiarity in a certain text book used in Chicago schools. It is called "A Civic Manual for Chicago and Cook County," by S. R. Winchell, and is published by A. Flanagan and Co. In a list of leading institutions is a two hundred word description of Roman Catholic activities, while nothing is given of Protestant activities. The City Club, an outstanding institution of the city, is disposed of with eight words.

Denomination Adopts Neckties.

There has recently been a great convention of the Church of God at Anderson, Ind. A noticeable feature of the gathering was that for the first time the men wore neckties. Previously this was regarded as superfluous and an extravagance, therefore a sin, The women, also were dressed in colors.

Publishing House Makes Money.

The Publishing House of the Methodist Church, South, is prospering. Its sales for the year ending February 29, 1916, amounted to $1,029,906.31, showing an increase over the preceding year of $36,770.20. The total profit for the year was $121,171.60. The net assets of the Publishing House at Nashville and the branch houses at Dallas and Richmond are $1,548,749.51. The Book Committee ordered a dividend of $15,000 to the annual conferences for the benefit of the conference claimants.

Woman Wants Seat in Diocesan Convention.

The Episcopal Diocesan Convention of Boston was thrown into a near panic recently by the appointment of a woman for a seat in the convention. Lawyers were sought for an opinion on the state of the church law and at last Bishop Lawrence ruled against seating the woman. A committee will have the case under advisement until next year. The Methodists admitted women to the general conference ten years ago, in the northern branch of the church, and the Congregationalists have for many years accorded women the privilege of sitting in the National Council. Only a few women have availed themselves of their privileges in these denominations.

Congregationalists Get Out Year-Book.

The Congregational Year-Book has been delayed on account of the scarcity of paper. It is now out and shows a very healthy growth in that denomination. The general summaries show that over 70,000 members have been admitted to the churches during the year, with a net gain of 17,232. The gain in men was 8,519, almost equaling the gain of women members, 8,713, a fact worthy of special notice. The Sunday-schools shows a gain of 8,230 members, the Young People's Societies of 4,353 members and the men's organizations of 5,746. The total of benevolent contributions to all causes was $2,433,205, a gain over 1914 of $161,165. There are thirty-seven churches having a membership of over a thousand, and 200 with a membership between 500 and 1,000. Of churches reporting no admissions on confession of faith there are 509 reported.

Presbyterians Increase in New York.

In spite of the muck-raker's occasional joyful shout that the church is dying, the Presbyterians in their recent annual report show that they have never in their history had so many members in New York as at the present time. During the past year over 2,500 persons have been received into the sixty churches, bringing the total membership up to 35,691. Seven churches received more than 100 upon examination—Ascension, Labor Temple, French Evangelical, St. James, Madison Avenue, Fifth Avenue and Harlem-New York.

PAUL AT ATHENS.

Lesson for July 16.

Golden Text: In him we live, and move, and have our being. Acts 17:28.

Lesson Acts 17:16-34. Verses 22-34 printed. Memorize verses 22, 23.

(22) And Paul stood in the midst of the Areopagus, and said,

Ye men of Athens, in all things I perceive that ye are very religious.. (23) For as I passed along, and observed the objects of your worship, I found also an altar with this inscription, TO AN UNKNOWN GOD. What, therefore, ye worship in ignorance, this I set forth unto you. (24) The God that made the world and all things therein, he, being Lord of heaven and earth, dwelleth not in temples made with hands; (25) neither is he served by men's hands, as though he needed anything, seeing he himself giveth to all life, and breath, and all things; (26) and he made of one every nation of men to dwell on all the face of the earth, having determined their appointed seasons, and the bounds of their habitation; (27) that they should seek God, if haply they might feel after him and find him, though he is not far from each one of us: (28) for in him we live, and move, and have our being; as certain even of your own poets have said,

For we are also his offspring.

(29) Being then the offspring of God, we ought not to think that the Godhead is like unto gold, or silver, or stone, graven by art and device of man. (30) The times of ignorance therefore God overlooked; but now he commandeth men that they should all everywhere repent: (31) inasmuch as he hath appointed a day in which he will judge the world in righteousness by the man whom he hath ordained; whereof he hath given assurance unto all men, in that he hath raised him from the dead.

(32) Now when they heard of the resurrection of the dead, some mocked; but others said, We will hear thee concerning this yet again. (33) Thus Paul went out from among them. (34) But certain men clave unto him, and believed: among whom also was Dionysius the Areopagite, and a woman named Damaris, and others with them.

VERSE BY VERSE.

22. In the midst of the Areopagus. Areopagus was the court and not the place. Here was frequently assembled the noblest blood of Athens.—Ye men of Athens. The classic phrase for beginning a speech.—Ye are very religious. Paul's words could be taken as a compliment or as a criticism, but they must have been intended as a compliment

23. Objects of your worship. Athens was the home of Greek philosophy and the center of Greek worship. Petronius says that it was easier to find a god than a man in Athens.—To an unknown god. The Athenians feared that there might be a god that they had not heard of and who must be propitiated. The phrase had a pagan sense, but Paul gave it the higher meaning.—Ye worship in ignorance. The phrase is too strong; it would be more true to the original Greek if it read "whom ye worship not knowing his name and nature."

24. The God. The creator of all things. This fact swept away their idols, and the multitude of their gods.—The world. The word is used here to mean the visible creation. The ordered universe.—Lord of heaven. This God is also Lord of the heavens as well as of the earth.—Dwelleth not in temples. Their gods were placed in temples and there remained.

25. Served by men's hands. Refers to clothing the gods in splendid raiments and then offering them food and costly gifts.—He needed anything. Needed anything in addition to what he has.—He himself giveth. All things come from God. The one Paul was declaring to them.

26. He made of one every nation of men. These Athenians did not enjoy this, for they called all men not Greeks barbarians.—Seasons. The stages in a nation's history.—Bounds. The word in the singular means the fixing of boundaries, and so is here transferred to the fixed boundaries themselves.

27. Haply. Perhaps—Might feel after. Jesus is the answer to the longings of the soul to find God.—He is not far from each one of us. God is waiting for us to open our spiritual eyes that we may see evidences of Him all about us.

28. In him we live, and move, and have our being. We are surrounded by his pervading spirit which sustains and guides our movements in the world.—We are also his offspring. A line from one of the poets from Paul's province, named Aratus.

27. Being then the offspring of God, we ought not to think that the Godhead is like unto gold. If we are the offspring of God; God himself, therefore, cannot be like any material substance, such as could be seen on every hand in the places of the gods.—The Godhead. Or, that which is divine, RVm.

30. The times of ignorance therefore God overlooked. Passed or suffered unnoticed.—Repent. To turn. To turn from worshiping idols and worship God.

31. In which he will judge. Both the Stoics and Epicureans rejected the idea of a future judgment and retribution. The man. Or a man, RVm. This has reference to Jesus.

32. We will hear thee concerning this yet again. Like Felix, they would wait for a more convenient season, but there is no convenient season in the land of Never.

33. Paul went out from among them. Having stirred their minds, and created discussion and also having received a polite dismissal, Paul left the famous court.

34. Dionysius the Areopagite. A man of distinction. He was afterwards bishop of Athens, and met a martyr's death, if we may trust tradition at this point. At the foot of Mars Hill there are the ruins of a church dedicated to Dionysius.

Feeling After God

BY ASA McDANIEL.

WHEN Paul landed in Athens he found the people blindly groping after God; he would lead them from darkness to the glorious light in the presence of God. They were worshiping the art of their own hands. He tried to lead them from seeking God in the things made of gold and silver, and to seek him in spirit and truth. The process has always been going on and can be seen today in many of our great mission fields. Many of the very best examples of the transforming power of the gospel of Jesus are seen on the rim of human experience, where this groping after God has been going on for centuries. Men have found him under the guidance of consecrated teachers of his word in life and story.

In a very real sense we are all groping after God. The advance guard see him but faintly; the great multitude of mankind rest in the revelation of God that they received from their fathers. This is not always vital in their lives. It is not theirs, it has been borrowed from a friend. It lacks the compelling power and interest of a sense of God, secured by personal effort. Paul was not alone anxious to have them quit their worshiping idols; but he was equally interested in having them find the true object of worship.

When we come to realize that God is not far from each one of us, then we shall begin to find him in the common experiences of our lives. When Jacob went to Bethel he did not expect to find God; but he was agreeably surprised and exclaimed, "Surely the Lord is in this place and I knew it not!"

If our souls were sensitive to spiritual truth we would have to exclaim with Jacob, "Surely the Lord is in this place (experience of my life) and I knew (failed to appreciate) it not!"

We have not allowed the teaching and life of Jesus to make our spirits sensitive to the presence of God in the common things. We have looked for him in the high places and failed to see him in the "sparrow's fall" or the "beauty of the lilies."

The people of Athens were on the brink of the highest things and yet missed them. The air was filled with the evidences of God, but they failed to see him. In this the morning of the twentieth century is it not true that we stand in the presence of our divine father and do not recognize him, because we expect to find him only in houses of worship and not in the everyday things of life?

A story is told of Nicholas Herman: When he went to the monastery, he was so awkward and uneducated, and broke so many things, that they put him in the kitchen to wash kettles and pots. His soul was more skillful in its task, than his fingers were with the china. He had a calm belief in the presence of God with him everywhere and at all times, and his countenance showed that God's presence was more real than aught else. Men traveled long distances to talk to him in his kitchen. He told them that "The time of business does not differ with me from the time of prayer, and in the noise and clatter of my kitchen, I possess God in as great tranquility as if I were upon my knees at the sacrament."

When we live the spirit of the above story, God will be real and vital in our everyday life. When we study our own spirits in their present relation to God nothing will be so satisfying and real to us as the consciousness of his presence in us working upon our souls, to make them good, pure, strong, true, and brave, so that we may have communion and everlasting fellowship with him.

Disciples Table Talk

W. A. Shullenberger Elected to Drake Board of Trustees.

When D. R. Lucas was pastor at Central church, Des Moines, he acted as a Drake Trustee, and Dr. Breeden succeeding him at Central followed him also as a Trustee of Drake; Finis Idleman then succeeded Dr. Breeden. The latest addition to the Board is W. A. Shullenberger, new pastor at Central, who succeeds Dr. Idleman on the Board. Two other new members recently elected to the Board are B. Frank Prunty and Dr. Grimes. Mr. J. B. White, of Adel, Ia., who was a member of the original Board of Trustees and has been one of the most active ones for thirty-five years, has been made a life member.

Burris A. Jenkins Goes to War.

One of the recent recruits for service in the Mexican War of 1916 is Burris A. Jenkins, pastor at Linwood Boulevard church, Kansas City, Mo. Dr. Jenkins has been given leave of absence for six months by his congregation, and has already left for the south as Chaplain with the Third Regiment, Missouri.

Two Editors Will Debate.

C. C. Morrison, editor of The Christian Century, has been invited by P. H. Welshimer to debate with S. S. Lappin at the coming Doctrinal Congress at Canton on receiving the unimmersed into the churches. The Congress management is advertising this event as one of its big features.

Commencement at Drake University.

There were 208 graduates in the line of march at Drake this year. The women were represented by 146 and the men by 62. The College of Liberal Arts sent out 25 men and 27 women. Among the graduates in law there were 23 men and 1 woman. In the College of Education class there were 99 women and not a single man. Of the College of Fine Arts there were two men out of the 19 gradutes. Seven young women received diplomas from the Home Economics department, and ten young men from the Bible department. John William Gratton received the "Class of 1915 Medal" as being the one "having been of the greatest service and utility to the university and its best interests during his years at College." This medal is granted annually to some graduate receiving the baccalaureate degree. The Commencement address this year was delivered by Dr. Clyde Furst, formerly of Columbia University, but now Secretary of the Carnegie Foundation for the Encouragement of Teaching. His subject was "Liberal Education." The closing event of the day was the conferring of the degree of LL.D. upon Governor Geo. W. Clark. The total enrollment at Drake the past year was 1529, or 163 more than last year.

Madison A. Hart to Lead Missouri's Disciple Hosts.

At the state convention of Missouri held at Sedalia, and closing on June 15, the following officers were chosen to lead during the year 1916-17: President, Madison A. Hart, Columbia; vice-president, F. L. Moffett, Springfield; recording secretaries, E. B. Shively and Arthur Stout. Over 600 delegates were reported in attendance at the sessions. B. A. Abbott, of St. Louis, is the retiring president. Feature speakers were: George H. Combs, B. A. Abbott, B. A. Jenkins, A. McLean, Grant K. Lewis, Fred Kline, L. E. Sellers, H. J. Derthick, B. L. Smith, Mrs. Allena Grafton, Mrs. Ross and others. Resolutions were adopted indorsing national prohibition; workmen's compensation laws, search and seizure laws for protection of prohibition territory; pensions for widows and orphans; extension of juvenile courts; civil service throughout the state and a more effective provision for settlement of industrial disputes by arbitration. The 1917 convention will be held at Mexico.

A Great Church in Detroit.

C. J. Tannar began his fourteenth year as pastor at Central church, Detroit, Mich., last month. During these years under his leadership three other churches have been established in the city, and there are now 200 more members at the mother church than when it began to swarm. One of the younger churches, that at Grand Boulevard, has a fine new plant costing over $18,000, and the new pastor, W. G. Loucks, is reported by Mr. Tannar as doing excellent work. Central gives $1,000 per year toward the Boulevard work, and the same amount to Grand River Avenue church, to which F. P. Arthur ministers. Central church and Bible school support Dr. Shelton as their living link in Tibet, and three of the church families care for three other living links in their own names. One of these missionaries is in China, two in the Philippines. The church has a strong C. W. B. M. of 100 members, and 117 persons were added to the congregation last year.

Harry Munro Has Sailed for Alaska.

On last Sunday Harry Munro, missionary of the Bible School Department of the A. C. M. S., sailed for his field of work in Alaska His passage from Seattle to Anchorage, his first stop, was the gift of First Church Bible-school, Seattle. He spent the hour immediately preceding his departure with this school. Mr. Munro's wife, and daughter Anna Laura, remain with his parents in Sawtelle, Calif., until the spring of 1917. On the route west through the States, Mr. Munro and Secretary Hopkins were royally entertained at St. Louis, Sedalia, Mo., Kansas City, Hutchinson, Kan., and other points. Twenty stops were made in Kansas. At Sedalia, Mo., the party found Missouri's convention in session and hearty greetings were given the outgoing missionary and Mr. Hopkins. At Kansas City conferences were held with G. W. Muckley, H. F. Branstetter and Secretary D. H. Owen, of Kansas. At St. Louis Richard Heilbron, of the Christian Board of Publication, gave a breakfast for the travelers. Secretary Hopkins reports that the Alaska Equipment Fund continues to grow. About $500 has been pledged or paid in. It is expected to make the fund $1,000. Every Bible-school, and many adult classes, should have part in this worthy enterprise. One cannot but admire Mr. Hopkins' efficient method of "putting it over"—by means of perfectly legitimate publicity. He should be strongly backed up in this laudable task.

Drake University Graduate Goes to War Zone as Evangelist.

Kirby Page, of Houston, Texas, a graduate of Drake University '15, who is now serving as private secretary to Mr. Sherwood Eddy, International Secretary of the Young Men's Christian Association. is sailing with Mr. Eddy on the New Amsterdam on July 8 for the war zone. Mr. Eddy is planning to spend three or four months holding evangelistic meetings in the various warring countries. Some 38,000,000 men and boys are now under arms; 4,600,000 are shut up in the great military prisons until the end of the war; more than 2,000,000 are in the hospitals; more than 3,000,000 have already been killed. In the face of terrible suffering and strain, men are more serious minded and thoughtful than ever before. Everywhere an unprecedented response is being given to the Christian message of consolation and hope. Thousands of men are turning to Christ during these dark days. Mr. Eddy begins his work with the British troops in the great concentration camps of England, Ireland, Wales, Scotland, France and Egypt. Later he plans to hold evangelistic meetings in the great military prisons of Russia and Siberia. and possibly may remain long enough to hold meetings in other countries. Mr. Page is to accompany him to assist in the preparations and follow-up of the meetings and will have unlimited opportunities for personal work among the soldiers and prisoners. His European address will be care of Brown, Shipley & Co., 123 Pall Mall, London. It is earnestly desired that his friends shall daily remember him in intercessory prayer that he may be guided of God and may be used in leading men to a better knowledge and a closer walk with Jesus Christ, our Saviour.

Commencement at Texas Christian University.

Enrollment in all the colleges of Texas Christian University during the past year was larger than ever before. The financial outlook of the school is reported to be brighter now than in previous years. The commencement exercises this year began with those of the Fort Worth College of Medicine, which is the medical department of the T. C. U. Prof. W. M. Winton, of the university, gave the address. At the baccalaureate exercises the following day R. H. Miller, of the Men and Millions movement, gave what is reported to have been "one of the most masterful addresses of its kind ever made in Fort Worth." Features of the next day were the Senior class exercises in the morning; the Reed Oratorical Contest at 2 o'clock; a ball game in the later afternoon, and the annual alumni banquet at night. The final exercises were held the following morning, Dr. T. S. Clyce, president of Austin College, Sherman, Tex., giving the Commencement address.

J. M. Philputt Makes Preaching Pilgrimage.

James M. Philputt, of New York, preached for his brother, Allan B., in Central church, Indianapolis, Sunday, May 21. During the month of May he made a preaching pilgrimage with Mrs. Philputt to the haunts of his youth. He began at his birthplace in Flat Creek, Tenn. Then up through southern Indiana to Salem, where he had his first pastorate and to Bloomington, where he was educated at the State University. Every Sunday and some days of the week he preached in churches that he had served in earlier years. He and Mrs. Philputt are now at their summer home at Pemaquid Point, Maine.

—The Christian Endeavor Society at Central church, Des Moines, still holds the banner for attendance at the local union meetings. In a recent meeting of the union Central had 181 of its 182 enrolled members present.

—Herbert Swanson, student of the Bible-college at Drake, recently paid a visit to the Foreign Society secretaries at Cincinnati, with a view to making arrangements to go as a missionary to Tibet. Mr. Swanson has another year at Drake, but wishes to go out a year from next autumn as a helper to Dr. Shelton. His home is in North Dakota.

—Ex-Governor Hanly, of Indiana, was one of the speakers at the state Sunday-school convention of Nebraska, held at Falls City, June 20-22.

—Norton, Kan., is not a large town, but there is a Bible class at the Christian church there—the Loyal Bereans—which has an attendance of several over 100. It is one of the largest classes in the state.

—H. H. Harmon, pastor at First, Lincoln, Neb., recently addressed a joint meeting of the Lincoln Courts of Ben Hur.

Rev. B. A. Jenkins, who will serve as chaplain in Mexico.

Rev. M. A. Hart, elected president of Missouri Disciples' organization.

—Oscar W. Riley, Athens, O., asks readers of The Christian Century to notify him by postcard of those who are known to possess a set of the Millennial Harbinger, either entire or in part. Mr. Riley has in mind preparing an index volume to the complete set, if there are a sufficient number of sets to justify the effort.

—Wilford H. McLain, Ohio's State Bible School Superintendent, will give two courses in the Eastern School of Methods, which is to be held at Wellsville, N. Y., July 7-14.

—During the four years' service of W. B. Zimmerman as pastor at Pleasantville, Ia., 350 persons were added to the church membership. In addition, 94 were enrolled with the community church at Beech, Ia., to which Mr. Zimmerman gave much time. He is now pastor at Mitchellville, Ia., and is continuing his work at Drake.

—E. G. Campbell, recently come from Bryan, Tex., to the University of Chicago, would like to serve some church within reach of the city. He will be here for three months, and his address is 5718 Kimbark Ave.

—The Bible-school at Girard, Kan., has added a bungalow to the rear of the church building for the use of Bible-school classes.

—Several of the schools of Kansas have made contributions for the building of a new church in West Topeka.

—The Board of Education of the Disciples of Christ, C. E. Underwood, secretary, looks forward in the near future to employing an educational expert who shall assist in the organization and standardization of administrative and educational work in its constituent colleges.

—Mrs. A. R. Spicer, wife of Oklahoma's aggressive state secretary for the Disciples, writes that Mr. Spicer was taken seriously ill June 9, and is now in an Oklahoma City hospital. The physician reports that the trouble is overwork, and the outcome will not be known for a month.

—G. I. Hoover, Indiana State Evangelist of the Eastern District, reports that a new church of thirty-four members has been established at Waldron, Shelby Co., Indiana. This was the last large unit of population in which a church of the brotherhood had not been planted. A Bible-school was organized and both church and school are doing splendid work. W. E. Carroll, of Shelbyville, preaches regularly for the congregation every two weeks at the afternoon hour. The congregation has recently purchased two of the best available building lots in the town, offering a splendid site for the erection of a house of worship. The basement of a permanent structure will probably be erected in the near future.

—The Loyalty Endeavor Society of University Place church, Des Moines, is vitally interested in missions. Several of its members have volunteered for the foreign field. It is supporting a student at Nanking, China, and the evangelist Panna Lal, at Jubbulpore, India. It is a double Life-line Society in the Foreign Christian Missionary Society.

—The Program Committee for the Southern California convention, to be held in Long Beach, July 20-30, is composed of the following named persons: Lloyd Darsie, J. Walter Carpenter, C. F. Hutslar, R. W. Abberley, Edgar Lloyd Smith, R. W. Blackburn.

—The Alpha Delta Class movement is the latest thing in organized classes. Several years ago the original Alpha Delta class was organized at Jackson Avenue church, Kansas City, with the motto, "The Christ Life is the Right Life." Now an Alpha Delta Union has been formed, and it is proposed to organize an Alpha Delta class in each of Kansas City's schools, and perhaps others outside of the city.

—I. N. McCash was in Des Moines recently, especially for the purpose of officiating at the marriage of his son, Buell. His daughter, Stella, was married in the west a few days ago.

—The Philo-Christos class, at Central church, Des Moines, has a band of 29 pieces.

—Within the Christian Endeavor organization at Central church, Des Moines, has been organized what is known as the Good Citizenship Club. A charter membership of twelve young men is reported. The purpose of the organization will be the study of questions of government and reform.

—The Foreign Society sends report of a number of Children's day offerings, of which the following are a few: Hamilton, O., Lindenwald, $83.50; Miami, Okla., $71.55; Omaha, Neb., North Side, $78.19; Webster Groves, Mo., $65; Gerlaw, Ill., $74.77; Mt. Sterling, Ky., Bible-school, $110; Kendallville, Ind., $57.74; Shelbyville, Ky., Bible-school, $104.42; Longview, Tex., $60. Most of these offerings are much larger than the apportionments, some of them being 100 per cent in excess of the amounts asked for.

—Burris A. Jenkins delivered the baccalaureate sermon at the University of Texas, at Austin. The largest class in the history of the university is reported, there being 334 Seniors. The commencement address was given by Judge Nelson Phillips of the state Supreme Court.

—Eighty-seven churches were represented in the attendance at the Lexington (Ky.) School of Methods held last week. But seventy-six were represented last year. It was hoped when the above report was sent that other incoming students would still further swell the enrollment. A. W. Fortune's daily Bible lectures were a strong feature of this year's sessions.

—L. G. Batman, pastor at First church, Youngstown, gave the baccalaureate sermon to 130 graduates of the Rayen Schoo. of Youngstown. His theme was "The Way Up."

—S. B. Owings, recently resigned at East End, Quincy, Ill., will attend Christian University, Canton, Mo., in the autumn.

—Frank W. Allen, of Springfield, was a speaker at the Better Community conference held at Champaign, Ill., June 13-15.

—H. E. Sala, of Central church, Peoria, has just started on a 3,000 mile auto trip of six weeks. He and his family will visit Ohio, Pennsylvania and New York City, and thence will make a tour of the coast south and back over the Alleghenies. Mr. Sala is his own chauffeur..

—The men's class at the Galesburg, Ill., church has reached a membership total of 100, and celebrated the event with a banquet on the evening of June 15. H. A. Denton, pastor, gave a talk on "The Men of Galesburg for the Man of Galilee."

—E. F. Daugherty, of Vincennes, Ind., delivered the baccalaureate sermon at the Indiana State Normal, at Terre Haute. J. Boyd Jones, pastor at Central church, Terre Haute, speaks highly of the address.

—L. J. Marshall, of Wabash Avenue, Kansas City, Mo., has purchased a farm near Lees Summit, Mo., and will live through the open season in his summer home there, going to and from his work in Kansas City in his auto.

—W. S. Lockhart, of South End church, Houston, Tex., was requested by some of his congregation to speak from his pulpit on preparedness. Mr. Lockhart's statement of opinion was epitomized in the following words: "A man can be a good citizen of the United States without shaking in the knees or being scared to death. I believe in a sane program, but preparedness means war, and not peace."

—An every member canvass was made at Keokuk, Ia., on June 25.

—Miss Eva Lemert, Bible-school expert, has closed her work at First church, Springfield, Ill., having accomplished some remarkable things in the eight weeks of her leadership.

—O. S. Reed, of Manzanola, Colo., church, dedicated the new soldiers' monument at Salida, Colo.

—A. B. Robertson, who leads at Ashland, O., has been elected president of the Ashland County Ministerial Association.

—John I. Roberts, who graduated this year from Drake College of Liberal Arts, and also from the College of the Bible, will enter the University of Chicago in the autumn. He is preparing for mission work in South America. Mr. Roberts is spending the vacation season with his parents in Trenton, Mo.

—The members of all the churches of Pittsfield, Ill., were invited to a reception given by the Disciples congregation there to their pastor and his wife, Mr. and Mrs. D. N. Wetzel. The occasion was the celebration of the twentieth anniversary of their marriage.

—Frank Vennum, of Urbana, Ill., a trustee of Eureka, has given that college $40,000, $30,000 of the amount to go into the construction of a new "Vennum Science Hall," and $10,000 to be expended on equipment. Work on the new building will begin at once.

—The young people of the church at Arbella, Mich., are planning to put a basement into the church building next year.

—A few weeks ago W. W. Wharton, of Roodhouse, Ill., church, resigned his pastorate there, but the congregation asked him to reconsider; this he did, but he has finally decided definitely to leave Roodhouse. The local paper speaks most favorably of his character, ability and his Christian courage in standing up for his principles and for the higher interests of his community. Mr. Wharton has already left this field.

—Walter Scott Cook, pastor at Wilkinsburg, Pa., First, writes that the new building there is now under roof and ready for the plasterers. This plant will cost complete about $42,000; it is of colonial architecture throughout, seating about 700 persons, with seventeen class and departmental rooms besides the main auditorium and balconies. The dedication will be held in September of this year. Mr. Cook is preaching a series of "Summer Preparatory Sermons." The following are the topics treated: "Ploughing Deep," "Sowing the Seed," "Encouraging Growth," "Sleeping in Harvest," "Marketing Your Grain," "The Fun of Work," "Alexander Mackay," "The Bonds of Love," and "The Profits of Religion." The services are now being held in a local theater.

—Franklin Street church, Grand Rapids, Mich., has purchased a lot for the erection of a new building in about a year. In the meantime some needed repairs are being made on the present building.

One of the beautiful things on the foreign mission field is the great affection of the "native" for the missionary's babies. The good woman in the picture helped care for tiny Josephine Estelle Smith in north Japan, after the mother had passed into the spirit world. In a few weeks the babe joined the mother, and O'Ino san turned her attention to baby Hartzell Garst. In turn she cared for Gretchen, Morrison and Rachel Garst, and other babies in the mission have been mothered by her. The baby in the picture is Rachel Garst. She has not seen her nurse for over seventeen years. Note in the later picture the clinging of the mother hands about the young girl's hand. O'Ino san's joy in this reunion is depicted in her radiant face. Since November 1884 O'Ino san has been a consistent Christian, and her face at the age of sixty-two is testimony to the faith that fills her soul. O'Ino san is the first woman convert to the Christ in the work of the Disciples in Japan.

The President, Lexington, Kentucky

—The Loyal Men's class of First church, Davenport, Ia., entertained the Loyal Men of the churches at Rock Island and Moline, Ill., recently. About 100 men were present, and plans were made for a United Brotherhood of the Christian Churches of the tri-cities.

—A nine-reel presentation of Hugo's "Les Miserables" was given at First church, Fresno, Cal., on a recent Sunday evening.

—Secretary F. W. Burnham was given the degree of LL.D. at the commencement exercise at Eureka College this year. W. F. Richardson, of Kansas City, Mo., was similarly honored.

—The Christian and Congregational churches at Newport, Me., have voted to federate. J. W. Reynolds, for thirteen years pastor of the Christian church at Assonet, Mass., has been called to the pastorate.

—East End, Pittsburg, John R. Ewers, pastor, is planning for a revival next year to be led by E. L. Powell, of Louisville. J. C. Archer, of Yale University, will supply Mr. Ewers' pulpit during August. East End is the church that is behind E. I. Osgood, missionary in Chuchow, China, and a grand reception is being arranged for him upon his coming to this country in the autumn. The liberality of this Pittsburg congregation is again seen in the fact that a box of books was recently sent to our school in Livingston, Tenn., to which work East End church gives regular support.

—A program has been received of the Winfield (Kan.) Chautauqua Assembly, of which Pastor R. W. Gentry is platform manager. "The Rural Community" is one of the up-to-date topics which will receive attention during the sessions. A series of classic motion pictures will be given preceding evening programs.

—This week, June 27-30, is being held at the University of Chicago an Institute of Religious Education. Two lectures are given each afternoon, at 3:30 and 4:45. At the earlier hour Professor W. S. Athearn is giving a series of lectures on "Current Problems in Religious Education." His lecture for June 29 is "The Training of the Teachers of a Community," and for June 30, "Problems of Adjustment in Present-Day Sunday School Agencies." The meetings are held at Haskell Assembly Room, and no charge is made for admission. Rev. J. W. F. Davies, Director of the Community House at Winnetka, Ill. lectures at the later hour.

—Professor E. E. Snoddy, of Transylvania College, will be the convention speaker at the Nebraska state convention which will be held at Bethany Park, Neb., July 25-30.

—During H. H. Harmon's ten years of service at First church, Lincoln, Neb., there has been a growth in membership from 375 to 900, and in property value from $8,000 to $70,000.

The Master Scientist

By Joseph Richardson

AN INDEX TO THE HEALING POWER OF THE CHRIST

"Grown weary of searching for the grain of truth amid the chaff of many volumes on Christian Science, Theosophy, New Thought and the like, we have been waiting for some sensible, scientific, readable book, containing the essence of Truth. The long-looked-for volume has appeared under the title 'The Master Scientist.' Its size and appearance betoken its quality. It is a nugget of pure gold, with the alloy removed: it is a handful of the finest wheat, with the chaff taken away. It is crammed full of healthy teaching and wholesome counsel. Its words are with power."

L. O. Bricker, D. D., Minister First Christian Church, Atlanta, Ga.

"After having read your little book 'The Master Scientist' I am constrained to express my very deep appreciation of this very simple and strong discussion of the spiritual meaning and power involved in the teachings of our Lord. You have shown beyond any question that Jesus was the supreme artist of life. I am persuaded more and more that the Divine Love can be made to be so organically related to the human spirit that one shall feel Its Power as he does sunshine or electricity. You have done a splendid piece of work. I trust that the little book may have a wide circulation and that it may bring great comfort and strength and power to thousands. It is a tonic. I wish you to know of my personal indebtedness to you."

DOES YOUR CHURCH NEED A NEW HYMNAL?

You can afford to postpone getting one until you have had opportunity to examine

The Disciples Hymnal

Edited by Charles Clayton Morrison and Herbert L. Willett

NOW NEARLY READY FOR PRESS, AFTER FIVE YEARS OF PREPARATION

It can truly be said that this book will mark the highest reach of hymn book construction among the Disciples of Christ, and the editors have endeavored to make it the best hymnal in the entire American Church. Neither labor nor expense is being spared to make a book that will satisfy and inspire every church that uses it. Three features are being especially emphasized:

Hymns of Christian Unity
Hymns of Social Service
Hymns of the Inner Life

The mechanical work on a hymnal of this high grade moves slowly, but it is confidently expected that the books will be ready for delivery in September. The manuscript is now in the typographer's hands. The publishers regard THE DISCIPLES HYMNAL as the most important single piece of service the Disciples Publication Society has ever rendered the Disciples and the general church.

We will be glad to receive from pastors or other responsible officers of churches requests for a returnable sample of the hymnal. Your name will be placed on file and a copy forwarded as soon as the first edition comes from the press. In writing please state the approximate number of books your congregation will need.

DISCIPLES PUBLICATION SOCIETY, PROPRIETORS, : 700 EAST 40th STREET, CHICAGO

Disciples Publication Society

The Disciples Publication Society is an organization through which churches of the Disciples of Christ seek to promote undenominational and constructive Christianity.

The relationship it sustains to the Disciples is intimate and organic, though not official. The Society is not a private institution. It has no capital stock. No individuals profit by its earnings.

The charter under which the Society exists determines that whatever profits are earned shall be applied to agencies which foster the cause of religious education, although it is clearly conceived that its main task is not to make profits but to produce literature for building up character and for advancing the cause of religion.

The Disciples Publication Society regards itself as a thoroughly undenominational institution. It is organized and constituted by individuals and churches who interpret the Disciples' religious reformation as ideally an unsectarian and unecclesiastical fraternity, whose common tie and original impulse are fundamentally the desire to practice Christian unity with all Christians.

The Society therefore claims fellowship with all who belong to the living Church of Christ, and desires to co-operate with the Christian people of all communions as well as with the congregations of Disciples, and to serve all.

The Christian Century, the chief publication of the Society, desires nothing so much as to be the worthy organ of the Disciples' movement. It has no ambition at all to be regarded as an organ of the Disciples' denomination. It is a free interpreter of the wider fellowship in religious faith and service which it believes every church of Disciples should embody. It strives to interpret all communions, as well as the Disciples, in such terms and with such sympathetic insight as may reveal to all their essential unity in spite of denominational isolation. The Christian Century, though published by the Disciples, is not published for the Disciples alone. It is published for the Christian world. It desires definitely to occupy a catholic point of view and it seeks readers in all communions.

Two Great Bible Courses

For Summer Study

When the summer season comes adult classes often become restless under the courses of study that have been followed during the year. Why not consider for your class one of the splendid courses on the Bible which have been especially prepared for class study? One of these deals in Old Testament life, the other with the New Testament.

"The Moral Leaders of Israel"

BY DR. HERBERT L. WILLETT.

is a course treating in a most attractive way the mountain peak personalities of the Old Testament. Moses, Samuel, David, Elijah, Isaiah and the other great spokesmen for God are here made to live again in twentieth century life. A thoughtful class will have its interest renewed by this fine course.

"The Life of Jesus"

BY DR. LOA E. SCOTT.

is a question and answer study of the life of Jesus and is especially adapted to High School and adult age. Hundreds of classes have been built up on the basis of this attractive course, and there is no reason why your class should wait until autumn or winter to begin the work.

DON'T WASTE THE SUMMER! MAKE IT COUNT FOR GENUINE STUDY!

Send $1.00 for a copy of Dr. Willett's book, 50c for Dr. Scott's, or $1.35 for the two. Then decide which you will choose for your summer study.

Is Religion About to Die?

WHAT IS HAPPENING TO RELIGION? IS IT ABOUT TO PERISH?

The prophets who have predicted the death of the church have been a long procession. The European war had gone on but a few months when reputable magazines began printing articles proclaiming the death of the church and the death of socialism. Both are still with us. If the war has done anything to religion, it has made it more universal than ever before. From the trenches of Europe come stories of men reading the New Testament and giving their hearts to God.

A quarter of a century ago, men thought the new science would end the reign of religion. It seemed to them that religion was a mythical explanation of life to be superseded by exact knowledge. Soon Huxley differed from Darwin in his attempt to account for the human soul entirely by evolution. Now a galaxy of great names in science stands also for a faith in God.

It was thought, by the fearful, that the higher criticism was about to destroy the Bible. The ark of God was being steadied by terrified souls who unwittingly betrayed a kind of unbelief in their fear. After a quarter of a century of higher criticism, the Bible is more read than ever, and more universally used and respected. Historical study of the Bible has not taken away its religious usefulness.

The latest method of proving that religion is about to die is by means of statistics. One popular magazine points out that New York churches are going backward, and then draws the conclusion that the whole country will follow in the wake of its metropolis. Others show that the percentage of gain in the churches is slackening, though it is still greater than the gain of population. The death of rural churches is adduced as an evidence of old age and death for the church. All of these appeals to statistics refuse to face all the facts. It is still true that church membership grows in excess of the population. Until it lags behind the growth of population, statistics will have a hard time proving the death of religion.

The religious nature of man, now as always, finds expression in a variety of ways.

The existence of all our American "isms" shows a deep interest in religion which needs only wise direction to be a great positive force for good. The man who would amputate religion from his life would feel like a one-armed man, a cripple. Perhaps nearly every person in America shows some kind of religious interest.

Our secret societies, of which there are a great variety, are able to exist chiefly by reason of their religious features. Demanding a faith in God, having a Bible on the altar, opening and closing meetings with prayer, passing resolutions showing faith in the immortality of dead brothers, are but a few of their religious activities.

Religion is deeply imbedded in the social movement. A majority of social workers are church members. Most of them have a religious attitude toward the world. They are the missionary heroes of the home land.

The great reforms live by religious idealism. When the saloon dies it will have as its epitaph, "Here lies John Barleycorn, slain by the Christian Voter."

Nor are we to find in the great world war anything but cause for optimism. Never before have nations sought so arduously for excuse and justification. Never has the Christian conscience acted against barbarism so certainly. The worst of all the wars may be the Armageddon of war.

The church is not to be described as a dying institution. We test life by activity. The savage prods the dead lion to prove his demise. If the lion comes up with a roar, he is not dead.

The missionary movement is of itself sufficient to prove the vitality and power of the church. There is nothing comparable with it, this side of the apostolic age. The student volunteers from our best young life, the millions of dollars from the consecrated pocket-books of humble Christians, the statesmanlike plans, the wonderful spirit of the movement, all proclaim loudly that Christianity is but just come of age. Its manhood and ripened maturity are on ahead.

The church is the only institution nineteen hundred years old that has retained its original life.

Other religions are older, but these have undergone such changes as to be scarcely recognizable. Judaism is now no more like the Judaism of Jesus' day than it is like Christianity. Buddhism has experienced revolutionary changes. The Christian church glories in a continuous history, and can claim a living interest today in the fundamental ideas of the New Testament.

"Upon this rock I will build my church, and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it."

Why are religion and the church so like a rock in the stream of history? Why does the church today show an enthusiasm and a consecration unmatched anywhere?

It is religion which has given humanity insight into the values of the inner life. The abiding and eternally valuable things of the human soul have through it been made manifest.

Religion alone has proved an adequate basis for the brotherhood of man. Other brotherhoods are limited. Even socialism, with its many virtues, talks paradoxically of brotherhood and class consciousness. Religion is content to talk of all men as brothers.

It is the religious man who finds the Supreme Will of the Universe. He believes our world is good. He believes that struggling, evolving humanity does not live in vain, but that all creation moves forward to one great divine event.

Religion will never die while man has a soul.

Can Man Know God?

By Joseph Fort Newton *

> "I found an altar to the Unknown God."—Acts 17:23.
> "This is the eternal life that they might know God."—John 17:3.
> "Now we know in part."—I. Cor. 13:9.

HOW eloquent was that altar to the Unknown God erected in Athens. It was not an altar of atheism, but of that eternal mysticism which grows up in the heart of man in the presence of the mystery of life.

There were many gods in Athens, so many that it was said to be easier to find a god than a man, but all those myriad gods did not explain the mystery of the world. Something deeper than any philosophy lingered in the light, in the blades of grass, the leaf, the sparrow on the wall, and man had hope that some day the great beautiful thought which hovered on the confines of the mind would at last alight. Hence an altar to the unknown, awful Reality deeper than thought, above all gods, before which they bowed with awe-struck reverence.

Unfortunately, we have no records of the rites used in the worship at that altar of mystery. No doubt it was a silent worship; as the Samoan chief said to the missionary: "We know that at night Some One goes by amongst the trees, but we never speak of it."

THE ALTAR TO "THE UNKNOWN."

So it is today. Other altars may have fallen, but that altar to the Unknown remains. In the beginning was mystery, and as knowledge widens, the mystery deepens. If the old mysteries disappear, new ones take their places, and the shadow becomes vaster, more inclusive, more pervasive. Yet it loses its chill and gloom and grows more gracious and purposeful, and in the darkness a sense of an Infinte Reality makes itself felt. Because that Reality is most real therefore it is most hidden, and man needs "the infinite liberty of the shadow."

Can man know God? If so, how? Let us take the first question first, albeit to reverse the order and tell how man can know God would be to show that he can be known.

At the front door of our inquiry, we are met by that attitude of mind, much in vogue a few years ago, which Huxley called by the name of Agnosticism. It does not affirm, it does not deny, but remains neutral in respect of the deeper issues of life, content to say that it does not know.

A LIMITED PHILOSOPHY.

As a reaction from the extremes of over-belief, as a protest against those who mistake faith for knowledge, as a rebuke to the blasphemous familiarity with ineffable things, this mood commands respect. But as a final philosophy it is untenable, in that it assumes not simply the impotence of the human, but of the Divine mind; since a God man cannot know is at the same time a God who cannot make himself known. Our inability to reach Him is possible, only because of His inability to make Himself intelligible.

With those who make a flippant use of this mood to put out of mind the profound and poignant problems of life, we have not to do here. Verily they have their reward, and may be left to the tragedies of life which subdue, if they do not dismay, the strongest man.

Still less is there need to tarry in the midst of a war of words. Spencer used the word Unknowable as the title of one section of his "First Principles." But in the text he used, instead, the word Unknown—for how can we know that a thing is unknowable? Even the word Unknown involves us in deep difficulty, since we must know something of a subject to say that we know nothing about it.

HERBERT SPENCER QUOTED.

When we say that we know nothing about biology, we imply that we know with what the science deals, though not acquainted with its principles and details. As Socrates put it in a famous saying, "We only know that we know nothing, and we do not even know that." If our knowledge is relative, so, surely, is our ignorance, else we are doomed to perpetual spiritual idiocy. But enough; if we go beyond the title used by Spencer we find this very remarkable passage:

"Besides that definite consciousness of which logic formulates the laws, there is also an indefinite consciousness which cannot be formulated. Beside complete thoughts, and beside the thoughts which though incomplete admit of completion, there are thoughts which it is impossible to complete, and yet which are still real, in the sense that they are normal affections of the intellect. Observe in the first place, that every one of the arguments by which the relativity of our knowledge is demonstrated distinctly postulates the positive existence of something beyond the relative. To say that we cannot know the Absolute, is, by implication, to affirm that there is an Absolute. In the very denial of our power to learn what the Absolute is, there lies hidden the assumption that it is; and the making of this assumption proves that the Absolute has been present to the mind, not as a nothing but as a something."

"INDEFINITE CONSCIOUSNESS."

Truly he wrote with a heavy hand, in a style as ponderous as a procession of elephants—his pages a dark forest in which the Absolute is present as a Something to the mind, inspiring all our thought, yet playing hide-and-seek with us! But what did he mean by that indefinite consciousness, and those incomplete thoughts?

Did ever anyone who thought reverently of God, much less held communion with Him, imagine that He could be analyzed or defined? Certainly not the Bible. The fact of an unknown and perhaps unknowable element in the Divine nature, an agnosticism which is an inevitable shadow of faith, nowhere finds finer expression than in that Book of the Presence. In one of the boldest passages ever written about the nature of the Eternal we are told that the seer, hidden in the cleft of a rock, saw only the vague, vanishing glory of God.

Wherever the word God is mentioned in the Bible, it carries, as in no other book, the sense of an invisible and unknown grandeur, rebuking alike a perverted piety which would define him and an agnosticism which would draw a circle of thought and shut Him out.

KNOWLEDGE LIMITED BUT REAL.

Limited our knowledge surely is, limited in myriad ways, but absolute nescience is an absurdity and a contradiction. "Now we know in part"—a tiny part, it may be—but our knowledge is real as far as it goes. The surgeon does not have to drain all the blood out of my body to know what my blood is. A few drops will do. We do not have to empty the ocean in order to know the quality of its waters that wander afar in distant seas. A cupful is enough. No man of science need journey all the way to the sun to learn what its elements are. He can find that out in his study. The man of science knows in part, but he knows; the man of faith knows in part, but he knows.

How do we come to this knowledge of God, and what is its revealing secret? Surely the answer to the question, can man know God? is that he cannot really know anything else!

"Oh, to preach or hear some day a worthy sermon on 'In Him we live and move and have our being!'" cried Phillips Brooks in one of his letters.

HOW OUR DEEPEST KNOWLEDGE OF GOD COMES.

Of necessity our deepest knowledge of God comes through what is most godlike in us, as ever the mystics have taught. Here lies the meaning of that profound word which Pascal heard whispered in his heart: "Thou wouldst not seek Me hadst thou not already found Me," and upon this principle rests the way of life as Jesus taught it.

Two methods seem to have been employed by the Master in his efforts to make man aware of God, and while they were often, if not always, blended in their use, we keep them apart in our study.

The first was that by which he sought to direct the attention of men to the unrecognized presence of God in their own thoughts and impulses, for he knew that men possess what he possessed, only they do not recognize it as God. This truth underlies nearly all his parables, especially those which use the best there is in man to teach us of God. Always he proceeded on the principle that men have a light and power which, if obeyed and followed, makes God a reality in the heart.

Here is a great secret, if only men would look into it, yield to it, trusting what is highest in the soul to teach them the highest reality. Once a man makes this discovery, he will no longer think of God as far off, weaving veils of wonder on the hills of mystery, but very near, even in the hidden chamber of his heart.

THE VOICE WITHIN.

For example, no man was ever more certain of God than Newman, and when he examined himself so mercilessly, as was his habit, he found that the basis of

---

*Dr. Newton is the brilliant preacher at the Liberal Christian Church, Cedar Rapids, Ia. He has recently been called to the City Temple, London, Eng., and is preaching from that pulpit during this month. R. J. Campbell resigned as pastor of the famous London church several months ago.

his certainty was the moral sense. Not otherwise could he account for that awful voice within him, passing judgment upon his motives, his thoughts, his acts, demanding that he live righteously. He had no faculties or facts other than those which every man has by virtue of his humanity, and they gave him an overwhelming sense of God.

Those who think they do not know God should reflect that no imaginable dance of atoms, no conceivable action or reaction of forces, could have produced the Moral Sense. To create a Moral Law, or a single tenet of it, there must be a superior moral Will to enact it. Faith in the moral sense is not the enemy of reason; it is trust in a moral reason greater, deeper and wiser than our own.

Newman was right. The Moral Sense is God within us, whom to know aright is life forever more, and to obey whom is to be free and clean.

"GOD IS HERE."

No wonder a great man of science wrote over his door the words, "Live innocently, God is here." No faint echo, no dim image, but God himself, the ground and goal of all things, lives and speaks in each of us.

"By all that he requires of me
I know what He Himself must be."

Whence came that high and pure ideal which beckons us, commands us, casting over our fleeting days the white light of the Eternal? Whence that haunting beauty which eludes while it allures us, leading us from the animal to the angel shape?

Mau did not create it. He cannot destroy it. It was ere we were born; it flashes and glows in our hearts; it will shine over our graves when we have fallen into dust. What is it? What can it be save the presence of God Himself within us hallowing our lives, the very light and glory of His face! By as much as we love it, obey it, and follow its radiance, by so much do we really live. Infidelity here is the death in us of all that makes for the beauty and joy and rhythm of our days.

THE MASTER KEY.

And what shall we say of that impulse to love, to pity, to serve, to give ourselves to others, if it be not the spirit of God moving to and fro in our hearts! "He that loveth is born of God, and knoweth God, for God is Love,"—there is the key to the truest knowledge of the deepest reality!

After this manner Jesus sought to awaken men to the wonder of facts before unobserved, and lead them to know Him in whom they lived and whose presence was as the breath of life.

His other method was used less frequently, and defies all analysis. In moments of deep emotion, and under the sway of the love and truth which he allowed to rule his life, he seemed to speak as God: "The words that I speak unto you I speak not of myself, but the Father that dwelleth in me." At such times he did not simply tell the truth; he imparted it. His spirit became incandescent, and the Spirit of God within him leaped like a flame in his words, bringing those who heard, and we who read even today, into an instant and profound sense of God. Such was the rapt and revealing mood in which he said:

"Come unto me, all ye that are weary and heavy laden, and I will give you rest."

"Thy sins are forgiven thee: go in peace. Neither do I condemn thee."

"He that loveth his life shall lose it; and he that hateth his life in this world shall keep it unto life eternal."

"And I, if I be lifted up, will draw all men unto me."

HOW DO WE KNOW GOD?

How can man know God? Ask the little bird how it knows that the soft air will bear it up on its flight amid the living green of rustling woods and the glint of laughing waters!

By the same token, we know him whom we love by yielding to his promptings, by surrender to his will, by trusting ourselves to his "love that will not let us go."

Evermore the principle of Jesus holds true: "Whoso wills to do the will of my Father shall know of the truth"—shall know, not guess, not fear, not falter. He shall know, and walk "the big eternal ways with immortal lures calling him ever on;" shall know, and feel beneath his feet the way of life everlasting rising to the heights; shall know, and his good right hand of brotherly love will take a firmer, finer grasp of his fellows and lift them when they fall.

Ay, he shall know the truth that makes man free, makes him grow younger as he grows older, gentler as he grows wiser, sweet of heart, full of hope, happy and undismayed by dark death and all that it may hide or hold within its heavy draperies.

This is life renewed and radiant, life in its splendor and prophecy.

"In clearest vision, amplitude of mind,
And reason in her most exalted mood."

Profound thinking is the privilege of the few; profound living is open to all.

LOVE IS THE KEY.

Why by thinking can find out God? asked a seer of the far olden time. Action is the word of God, said Mazzini; thought alone is only his shadow. But Love it is that joins thought and action, duty and deed, vision and service, that so the Vision may grow and abide, making the path of life shine more and more unto the Perfect Day.

"He that dwelleth in love, dwelleth in God and God in him," wrote that Disciple whom Jesus loved; with whom agree all the Saints and Mystics who have made trial of this deep and daring Way of Life.

"By love he may be gotten and holden, but by thought never," is the testimony of Plotinus, and a cloud of witnesses confirm his insight.

With one accord they tell us that Love is the great revealer, that "Love is above all, and when it prevails in us all we shall all be lovely and in love with God and one another."

THE MYSTIC THE TRUE REALIST.

Knowledge of truth is knowledge of God, but Love is the inner secret, the whole secret, the open secret of the great mysticism—for mysticism is the love of God.

It is, therefore that the Mystic knows,not by vague rumor and confused report, but by the fact that he passes from the outer court into the inner sanctuary where the sweet voice sounds and the vision dwells. He is the true realist, the true scientist, the thinker who faces the profoundest facts of the life of God in the soul of man.

Now we know in part, but Love foretells a day when faith shall cease to be, when Hope shall find its haven of peace shut in by the Hills of God, and we shall know even as we are known—for we shall be like him whom we love.

"What if the vision tarry?
God's time is always best;
The true Light shall be witnessed,
The Christ within confessed."

Can the Church Come Back?

By Scott Anderson

ISRAEL came out of Egypt, and later returned from Babylon; the church survived the dark ages and was the supreme factor in bringing the renaissance. Omnipotence is pledged to its support, and Christ said, "The gates of hades shall not prevail against it." Therefore, we are optimistic concerning the church's future, and are confident that it can and will "come back."

However, only two of the host who escaped from Pharaoh entered Canaan, and a remnant took advantage of Cyrus's change of heart and returned to the "glorious land." Luther and his contemporary reformers did not lead the army of the Lord from captivity to freedom in "mass formation," but when they sounded the gospel trumpet the loyal soldiers of Christ left the crowd behind, as did the three hundred brave Gideonites of old, and followed their leaders to liberty and victory.

So in our time we should not expect the whole nominal church to escape from its deplorable captivity and rise en masse to a place of leadership and power in the world; for, as in Paul's day, "They are not all Israel who are of Israel," but there is a remnant of overcomers who will welcome deliverance from bondage in spiritual Babylon and will "return and rebuild the tabernacle of David that is fallen down." But the "little flock," the true church, can regain the highest respect of mankind, reach the world, and shape the destiny of the nations only upon certain conditions:

THE PASSING OF THE PRESENT "CIVILIZATION."

The saints must denounce and renounce this so-called "civilization," which divides mankind into opposing groups with conflicting interests, results in war and its own destruction. Behold Europe's great commercial tragedy and the industrial unrest throughout the world! The spirit, systems and sorrows of this dying civilization are not of God; but of the world.

This is the devil's kingdom, the last phase of the world order represented by the great, showy image in Nebuchadnezzar's vision. This idol was ground to powder by the stone cut out of the mountain without hands, which grew and filled the whole earth. Daniel tells us: "When the beast is slain * * * the saints of the Most High shall take the kingdom, and possess the kingdom forever, even forever and ever."

A tree is known by its fruits: the fruit of the tree of this present civilization is godless fortunes, grinding poverty, perpetual strife and cruel war. Therefore, we must protest against this thing in the name of the Lord; must acknowledge our gross spiritual blindness in having designated as "Christendom" (Christ's kingdom) that civilization which is now going up in smoke; must repent of the support we have given to an evil social order that is now falling from its own rottenness, and of having welcomed into the churches the builders and beneficiaries of this world order that is crumbling and must go before Christ's kingdom can come in power and glory on the earth. We must disavow and wash our hands of this king-ruled, trust-ridden, interest-clashing, dreadnaught-defended, world-warring last phase of the devil's reign.

DENOMINATIONALISM MUST END.

We must acknowledge that denominationalism is not and never was of God, but the fruit of misplaced emphasis and lack of brotherly love, that it is contrary to the genius of our religion, the prayer of Jesus, the admonition of the apostles, the best interest of the kingdom, is wholly indefensible, and must emphasize by word and deed the imperative need of immediate union of the people of God, union based upon faith in Christ and loyalty to his ultimate purpose of establishing throughout the earth the reign of heaven.

Denominational union on this basis is not probable, but union of the saints, those who have the "seal of the living God on their foreheads," who hear the voice of the good shepherd and follow him, those who are willing to "come out of Babylon, that they partake not of her sins and receive not of her plagues," these spiritual, heavenly minded saints of the Most High can and will effect this blessed union.

We must abandon the cheap, sensational, high-pressure methods of evangelism of recent years which place the Christian propaganda on a lower plane than commands the respect of even the children of this world, and has brought into the churches legions of the unregenerate.

ZEAL NOT FOR NUMBERS, BUT FOR SOULS.

Our zeal must be not for numbers, but for souls. We must remember the admonition of the great preacher in the wilderness of Judea, "Bring forth, therefore, fruit meet for repentance"; and how Jesus turned and said to the multitude, "If any man will come after me let him count the cost * * * let him take up his cross and follow me;" which was like saying to them: "Discipleship is likely to result in your crucifixion, but this is not too much to pay for the world's redemption and the crown of life."

We must make it clear to all that faith in Christ, repentance from all sin, individual and social, municipal, state, national, and international, followed by whole-hearted allegiance to Christ as the rightful and coming king of the whole earth should by all means precede baptism and church relationship; that those "who are in Christ are new creatures, old thing have passed away and behold, all things have become new."

FAITH IN THE BOOK.

We must convince men that to become a Christian is the most reasonable, and yet the most radical, revolutionary, far-reaching step ever contemplated in life, that it means separation from the world and the bringing in of everlasting righteousness.

Since the Bible is the text book of the Christian religion, the most sacred and influential book on earth, "a lamp to our feet and a light to our pathway," and contains the only trustworthy forecast of the world's future and destiny, and since unbelievers consider that to discredit our sacred writings is to discredit our Christ and God, and since the Bible has been ruled out of most of the schools of our country on the ground that it is a "sectarian book," before the church can "come back" the saints must proclaim from the housetop their faith in the Book, the Old Testament and New Testament, "God's Two Witnesses."

It is my candid judgment that if these conditions are met in the near future, the church can "come back" and become again the salt of the earth and the light of the world; but it is my further belief that only the consecrated ones will realize the present weakness of the divided nominal church, see the necessity for this general repentance, spiritual overhauling, and shifting of emphasis; but the saints will have this discernment, will wisely interpret the signs of the times, will appreciate what the apostle Peter calls "present truth," and encouraged by the promise of the "crown of righteousness at his coming" will break away from Babylon and all entangling alliances with the world, rally around the Master and, purified and chastened, become as never before his triumphant army of conquest in the world.

The Visitor

The Santiago Conference

THE Presbyterians and Northern Methodists have strong missions in Chile. They far outweigh all other evangelical agencies there. In Santiago and Valparaiso, the two great cities lying near together, these bodies are especially strong. Beside them in Southern Chile there is some Anglican work, and, if I am not mistaken, a Baptist mission or two. At our regional conference for Chile held in Santiago the delegates were predominantly Presbyterian and Methodist.

Many of the problems of this mission field are due to the parity of these two denominations. Both have substantial properties in the form of schools and churches, through which very fruitful work is being done. But the difficulties in the way of an enlargement of policy involving a reconstruction of the present situation appeared repeatedly in our conference. If one wants a demonstration of the sort of nuisance that denominationalism makes of itself on the mission field one will find it in Chile. And this without reflecting in the slightest degree upon the personalities of the missionaries, all of whom are consecrated and very capable workers. I think in all our journey we found no group of missionaries whose personnel averaged so high as we found in Chile. But Methodist interests have to be looked out for, and Presbyterian interests have to be considered, and the result is that the interests of the Church of Christ are sometimes sacrificed. The trouble is not with the missionaries, but with the denominational system under which their work—difficult and discouraging enough at best—has to be done. I believe there are great possibilities of Christian advancement in Chile if the two great boards represented there would surrender their denominational pride and sense of proprietorship and conceive their investment of men and money in that country in the undenominational terms of the Church of Christ. Some steps have already been taken in this direction—in the co-operative publication of a weekly paper and in the beginnings of a union theological seminary. These show the trend and disposition to be in the right direction, but a far more thorough-going reconstruction is necessary if the kingdom of God is to come with power.

The conference itself felt this and committed itself to an unambiguous resolution setting up a united Chilean evangelical church, "undivided by the denominational distinctions which obtain in other parts of Christendom," as the recognized goal of its endeavor. This resolution was regarded with skepticism by only one member of our deputation, but it met with instant and enthusiastic support from the entire body of Chilean delegates and most of the missionaries. The fact is that the native churches on this mission field cannot imagine any good reason why they should be divided into Presbyterians and Methodists and Baptists, and a North American ecclesiastic who feels it necessary to keep alive the old divisions finds himself decidedly out of tune with the actual missionary situation. After five days' conferring and praying together our gathering of about one hundred delegates adjourned with greatly increased knowledge of the situation but leaving most of the problems about where we had found them. Of no other conference in our series of regional gatherings in the South American republics could this be said. In every other instance we felt that we had squarely met the problems and had made positive contribution toward their solution. But we left Santiago and the brave missionaries there with a feeling of depression in our hearts, which was lightened, however, by the faith that God's good Spirit has a way of bringing about results even from men's failures. I cannot help hoping that the boards of these two leading denominations may adjust their interests in Chile in such a way as to open up the wider doors of opportunity the young church is plainly eager to enter.

Several events in connection with our visit at Santiago stand out especially in my recollection. One was the great theater meeting, a report of which was reprinted in The Christian Century a few weeks since. I will not go over it again. But it was a remarkable meeting, commanding the attention of the city as no other public gathering under Protestant auspices had ever done before.

Yet it is doubtful if this meeting surpassed in significance one held the very next evening in the great assembly hall—an exquisitely beautiful auditorium—of the national university. The place was packed to the third and topmost balcony. It was the first time the university had ever lent its auspices to a Protestant function of any sort, and the President or "Rector" of the University was taken severely to task in an editorial in "La Union," the conservative newspaper of Santiago for permitting it. The affair was cited to the board of regents as ground for the dismissal of the Rector from his position. We did not hear that any attention was paid to this demand, however. On the contrary the meeting left so good an impression in the minds of the few students who were present that they arranged for a meeting in the same place to be addressed by Prof. Eduardo Monteverde, of Montevideo, and Mr. Charles J. Ewald, Y. M. C. A. secretary for South America. These gentlemen together with Prof. Erasmo Braga of the Presbyterian Theological Seminary at Campinas, Brazil, were the "orators" at the first meeting. The second meeting, arranged by the students, proved to be a great ovation for Messrs. Monteverde and Ewald, and when the latter announced that a Y. M. C. A. would be organized in the University it was the signal for enthusiastic demonstration. This is one of the many evidences of the ripeness of the minds of the Chilean people for the evangelical gospel.

I should like to tell of a visit to his excellency, the President of Chile, Senor Luis San Fuentes, which a group of six of our deputation were invited to make. I should in all courtesy report the receptions given for us at Santiago College, the Methodist school for girls, and at the "Instituto Ingles," the Presbyterian school for boys, also the extraordinarily interesting evening spent by four of us at the "High Life Club," the leading club of the city, as guests of the proprietor of our hotel.

The experiences of Sunday when we went in all directions preaching, it falling to my lot to address a great meeting of men only in the afternoon at the First Presbyterian Church and to hear President Paul preach in Spanish (which he didn't) at the same place in the evening—it is hard to pass these interesting recollections by without proper comment. But I wish to use part of my space this week for more recent visitations, and so will close for this time.

OUR South American deputation met in Indianapolis, June 14-16, to formulate its report and recommendations—or findings, as they are called in missionary parlance—for the use of the mission boards and the Committee on Co-operation in Latin America. We came to Indianapolis at the invitation of the College of Missions, through President Charles T. Paul, who was a member of the deputation. Not all were able to be present, but the various points of view were well represented. Dr. A. W. Halsey, of New York, Rev. T. B. Penfield, of New Jersey; Miss Carrie J. Carnahan, of Pittsburgh; Mr. and Mrs. Charles J. Ewald, of Montevideo; Rev. H. C. Tucker, of Rio de Janeiro; Dr. Irene T. Myers, of Transylvania College; President and Mrs. Charles T. Paul, of Indianapolis; Mr. S. G. Inman, of New York, and the Visitor sat around the table in the Executive Committee's council room for three days going over the problems of mission work in South America and setting down our convictions as to the policies the boards should in the future adopt. The renewal of the fellowship which we had enjoyed for more than three months in the far away continent was a great delight to all of us. It was interesting to observe the results of the long and repeated discussions which the deputation had given to the problems, at the regional conferences and on the long voyages, for when we came together at Indianapolis after being at home about five weeks we found ourselves so nearly of one mind about all vital issues that the only remaining task was to find the right words in which to convey our common convictions.

I would like to take the readers of The Christian Century into a session of our conference. In lieu of that I would like to present in the pages of the "Century" the deputation's "Findings" on mission work in South America, and I will do so when it becomes proper to give them to the public. It seems to those of us who came into such intimate contact with the conditions and problems of the field itself that these "Findings" are of the utmost importance. The deputation was determined to make its recommendations deal with concrete realities. I do not think a more careful analysis of conditions on any mission field has ever been made nor more statesmanly plans proposed for correcting errors in administration and for greatly increasing missionary effectiveness than were formulated by the members of this deputation.

During the days of our stay in Indianapolis we were literally "at home" in the College of Missions, sleeping in the comfortable rooms left vacant by the students whose vacation had begun the week before our arrival, and eating in the college dining room with our hostess, Mrs. Laura Delaney Garst, the dean of residence, and the ten or a dozen students who still remained in the house. The members of the deputation commented repeatedly on the unusual facilities afforded by the College of Missions for the higher equipment of missionary candidates. We were all impressed with the spirit of the house. There was an earnestness and a spontaneity about the devotions in the morning and at table time that brought inspiration to us all. One could not help congratulating the College on the extraordinary influence upon the lives of the missionary students of Mrs. Garst's personality and wholesome, spiritual life.

We found President Paul and his faculty busily occupied in gathering up the loose ends of the school year which had closed a few days before our arrival. Mrs. Atwater has her C. W. B. M. presidential office in the College of Missions Building, and sat with our deputation through some of our deliberations, as did also several other members of her executive staff.

Butler College was in the midst of Commencement activities which our duties unfortunately kept the Visitor from participating in. But an evening spent with President and Mrs. Howe after their duties and the Visitor's were over was a delight. This household has been passing through a deep grief since the tragic taking away of its eldest daughter two years ago. The mystery of God's way with men's souls is being again illustrated in the spiritual life of Dr. and Mrs. Howe. Bereft of a daughter, they seem to be contriving all kinds of beautiful plans to bring to pass in the world some of the things that she would have done had she lived. Not more significant, but more outstanding than other plans is the gift of a $10,000 memorial made in the Men and Millions campaign recently when Dr. Cory and his company were in Indianapolis. This instance is but a single public illustration of a feeling and purpose which find outlet in many unheralded acts and plans of the same sort. All the evening as we talked together of the things of the church and the Kingdom I kept thinking what a wholesome enrichment and mellowing of soul has come to their strong lives as a result of the sorrow that bowed them down. It just seems to be the divine way of greatening people!

On the Sunday morning following the Visitor worshiped with Seventh church in Indianapolis, preaching for the pastor, Rev. Clay Trusty. This church seems to me to be about as near the model church as churches nowadays get to be. In a community that wants a church—and not all communities do—Mr. Trusty has developed an institution that ministers comprehensively to all sides of human need—the spiritual, the physical, the cultural, the practical, the social—and with such true balance and proportion as never to dim for a moment the fact that the institution is primarily and all the way through a CHURCH, not a club or a social settlement, but a direct and unmistakable organ of religion. I find myself often hesitating to commend the institutional church ideal because of many institutional churches which have lost their distinctively religious character. But I had no inhibition of this sort as I stood in the pulpit of Seventh church. The entire service was deeply and reverently religious. I wish the land was dotted over with churches like this.

That evening I spent with Rev. Charles O. Lee and his congregation at Danville, Indiana. Here in a town of some 2,500 people I found an ex-Chicago pastor and a house of worship more beautiful and more commodious than anything owned by the Disciples in Chicago. The church house is the finest public building in the community except for the court house and the normal college buildings. The funds with which it was built were given by one individual who wished to give to the congregation a plant through which it could render a type of service to the community wider in scope than the conventional church undertakes. Mr. Lee, the pastor has been with the congregation less than a year, but he is already succeeding in correlating many of the interests of the community on the basis of the church as a religious but undenominational center of the community's life. Everything that heart could wish is in this building—social rooms, class rooms, kitchen and dining rooms, assembly rooms for the Sunday-school, prayer-meeting room, and a perfectly fascinating gymnasium, and at the center of it all is a well-nigh perfect auditorium for worship. I spoke on South America to a congregation that filled every seat. Mr. Lee and his people recently entertained the Indiana state convention of Disciples, and I can hardly imagine a more comfortable meeting place for that body.

EDITORIAL

WHO IS A CHRISTIAN?

THE gospel teaches us to ask, "What must I do to be saved?" This question is one full of humility. It recognizes the sin of the man who asks it. It is a question to be asked not only at the beginning of the Christian life but many times afterwards. It is not a matter which may be settled once for all as the good old Calvinistic theology used to aver in its doctrine of the perseverance of the saints.

This, however, is not the question that many ecclesiastics have been asking through the Christian centuries. Their query has been, "Who is a Christian?" By this they have meant to ask: Is he a baptized person with a certain type of religious experience? Is he a person who belongs to some one certain kind of communion? Such questions as these spring not out of humility but out of pride and a sense of spiritual self-sufficiency.

It was such interpretations of this important question that resulted in the persecutions of the past. In these days it is in reality the question which stands in the way of the progress of Christian union. Too large a part of the Christian world is willing to shut up the favor of God to some small section of the Christian community.

Alexander Campbell answered the question "Who is a Christian?" in a spirit both humble and catholic. Here is his definition of a Christian: "Every one that believes in his heart that Jesus of Nazareth is the Messiah the Son of God, repents of his sins and obeys him in all things according to his knowledge of his will." In explaining this position he said, "I cannot make any one duty the standard of the Christian state or character, not even immersion in the name of the Father, of the Son and of the Holy Spirit, and in my heart cannot regard all that have been sprinkled in infancy, without their own knowledge and consent, as aliens from Christ and the well-grounded hope of heaven."

It is this larger spirit of fellowship which must prevail.

DISCIPLE LEADERSHIP IN THE LOCAL COMMUNITY

THERE are to be found a few men, who think they are Disciples, who consider it an evil thing to join in union enterprises. These men have the same delightful consistency as a drunken prohibitionist or a millionaire socialist. There are more of us who have felt righteous when we have joined in union religious movements in the community which others have originated and carried to successful issue.

Is it not the business, however, of Disciples to originate plans for fellowship in any given city? This they should not do with an air of assuming a kind of denominational leadership, but in the spirit of service, to advance their fundamental idea.

Why should not communities have joint meetings of the official boards of the churches? Such meetings would take on a representative character. The official boards of any community, if they had a community consciousness for tional religious activities, the organization has broadened might arrange to throw the weight of the church on the right side of moral issues arising from time to time. Such a plan would depend less upon formal methods of organization than on the spirit of good-will and fellowship which would be begotten by contact between the men who are supposedly the most loyal to local churches.

Too often, plans for Christian union and for co-operation are preacher-made affairs. The laity fail to respond to them as heartily as they might, because they had no voice in making the plans.

It should be the genius of Disciples to initiate various useful forms of co-operation in the community, for it is not enough simply to acquiesce more or less heartily in the plans of others. Our plea for Christian union demands constructive work, if it is to be anything more than pleasant talk.

A GREAT Y. M. C. A. ENTERPRISE

THE new Y. M. C. A. hotel on Eighth Street in Chicago is a model cheap lodging house. The building is fireproof in every respect. The rooms are small but every one of them is well-ventilated, and the beds and furniture are most comfortable. The young man who is a stranger in the city will suffer no loss of self-respect in stopping here while he becomes permanently located.

The social program of the hotel is admirable, showing the wisdom of the board of directors, of whom our own Mr. E. M. Bowman is now chairman. The hotel provides a room for holding meetings. There are shower baths, free check rooms, game tables in the rear lobby and each evening there is an entertainment in the hotel for the guests.

The employment bureau in the hotel is one of the important features of the service. The young man who is out of work is put in touch with opportunities for employment with reputable firms on the basis of his talents and capabilities.

The rates for rooms range from thirty to fifty cents per night. The hotel charges for its service, which is as it should be. This prevents the pauperizing of the unfortunates of the city. The charges are so much less than for like accommodations elsewhere that the enterprise is still to be classed as philanthropic. When the hotel fills up, as it is rapidly doing, it is hoped that the income will just about meet the outlay.

The successful completion of this enterprise indicates somewhat the evolution of the Y. M. C. A. through the years. Originally confining its work to the more conventional religious activities, the organization has broadened its program, living up admirably to the words in its triangular ensign, "Body, Mind and Spirit."

PURITANISM AMONG CHICAGO CATHOLICS

ARCHBISHOP Mundelein, who recently came to Chicago, has been making revolutionary changes here in approved Catholic methods. His substitution in the parish schools of the English tongue for the foreign has been noted. His enforcement in America of the rule of the Pope that Catholics shall not use public dances as a means of securing church funds has also been noted. Priests are forbidden to attend any kind of a dance.

Following this comes the announcement that priests will not be allowed to attend a theater, though some exceptions within reason will be made for private theatricals. The judgment of the archbishop, "The tendency of the theater is downward," seems rather too radical and sweeping to stand.

Before one allows himself an attitude of complete pessimism as regards the modern stage, he needs to examine some of the plays which have been produced in recent years. Such an examination may prove enlightening. Jerome's "The Passing of the Third Floor Back" revealed the powerful influence of the Christ in transforming a sordid boarding house community into character and religious spirit. The Christ comes as a Stranger and a Friend. His power is kindness, and faith in the better nature of people. It is safe to say no sermon in many a day has so exalted Jesus Christ as this play.

Nor are we to forget such powerful appeals to the higher internationalism as that contained in "The Melting Pot." In this story the most bitter of racial hatreds, that of a Jew for the Russians who murdered his people, is overcome in the light of the higher reason of universal brotherhood.

It may be just because the stage is growing too religious that Catholic leaders tend to make it taboo. They perhaps fear its liberalizing and modernizing tendency on the doctrines of the church, just as they have feared the religious teaching in the ritual of secret orders.

From a puritanism based upon such sordid considerations, may we be delivered.

INFIDEL LEADER NO LONGER POPULAR

SINCE the days of Robert Ingersoll there has been no one in this country who has prominently represented infidelity. That great orator of the movement left no successor in America worthy his memory. In Chicago, however, there has been in recent years a Turk who had passed from Mohammedanism to a severely orthodox type of Christianity and from this to the materialism of Haeckel. His name is M. Mangasarian.

For a while Mr. Mangasarian had some vogue by reason of his perversity in taking positions usually the opposite of the best conscience in the city. He has railed at the churches and has declared that there never was a historic Jesus Christ. His "rational" fellowship mounted up into the hundreds, drawn from various sections of the city. A men's brotherhood, which cultivated the philosophy of Haeckel, had a catechism which they gave to unsophisticated preachers who were invited in to air their views.

This year Mr. Mangasarian left the city early in May for an extended vacation. Before his going, for many weeks, his audiences had been growing noticeably less. He was reported to be discouraged over the failure of people to be interested longer in his tirades against Christianity. His future plans are uncertain.

This is entirely natural. Infidelity is a barnacle on the ship of religion. It rides on the steam furnished by the ship and not by its own power. It has no enthusiasm to furnish for holy causes. Its ethical influence is not positive but rather otherwise. It has been lacking in social spirit and builds no institutions. In place of the Christian's beautiful hypothesis for the universe, it offers only the blackness of doubt and despair. It can be understood how many with Cicero would "rather be wrong with those that believe than right with those who disbelieve." Other countless thousands possess the more positive attitude of those who "know in whom they have believed."

DO YOU KNOW YOUR RELIGIOUS NEIGHBORS?

DO YOU know the religious people of your town, and their thought life? Have you ever become acquainted with the wonderful stories of heroism in Baptist history? Does the life of John Knox enrich your own religious life? Have the journals of John Wesley ever given you insight into the deeper things of the spirit?

We think we know our religious neighbors, but often enough that knowledge is superficial. Too frequently it is only knowledge so called, for our ideas are only prejudices.

The Christian world owes the Federal Council of Churches of Christ a real debt for bringing out a book with a brief exposition of the history and doctrine of the thirty-two denominations that are represented in that organization. It is all too brief, but it will arouse interest in many to investigate further the wonderful religious history of the people about us.

DO YOU KNOW YOUR TOWN?

KNOWING your town is more than having a knowledge of the geography of its streets. The church is interested in people, not in buildings.

It is interesting to know the racial constituency of a town. Many an Illinois town has been built of Kentucky stock in the long ago. That is important. The number and kinds of immigrants in the community are a serious factor of the community life. It is the smaller groups of immigrants that are most frequent neglected by religion, such as Greek fruit-dealers, or Chinese laundrymen.

It is important to know the conditions of life in a community. The local bureau of charities can tell about the poverty of the community and its causes. The truant officer can tell of its juvenile delinquency. A visit to the courts will reveal the crime and divorce and social friction of the people around the church.

Of course, there are churches that do not care about their town. They have a lot of nice people organized into a church and there are enough to pay the bills comfortably. New people seem an intrusion in an intimate fellowship. The church, however, that knows the spirit of the Master is the one that goes out into the highways and the hedges to constrain them to come in.

One of the best and most American suburbs of Chicago has a population of thirty thousand people, with only six thousand Protestant church members, and probably less than four thousand Catholic communicants. This indicates that over one-half the people old enough to hold membership in the church are outside its fellowship.

The unchurched part of the population is to be discovered and reached by that intimate study of the community which makes one acquainted with the group life and familiar with the social problems. Only thus may we effectively cultivate our field.

PICTURES IN THE CHURCH

THE question as to the use of pictures and statuary in the church was a burning one in Martin Luther's day. In those days prayers were said to pictures and in the case of ignorant people, the thought of the worshiper did not go beyond the image or picture.

The peril of praying to pictures has long since passed for Protestants. Gradually the art that has been under taboo has been coming back into the church. It began coming back with the crude and gaudy pictures in the art windows. It is now beginning to come back by hanging on the walls of the Sunday-school rooms the reproductions of great works of Christian art.

The reason children are less inclined to sit in Protestant church services is the length of service and the barrenness of the walls. Both may be remedied with profit.

The Larger Christian World

A DEPARTMENT OF INTERDENOMINATIONAL ACQUAINTANCE :: By Orvis F. Jordan

Religious Bodies Declare for Prohibition.

The various bodies are taking stronger positions on the subject of the liquor traffic than ever before. This year several great denominations in their national gatherings have made pronouncements. The General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church, the General Assembly of the United Presbyterian Church, and the Southern Baptist Convention have each made an earnest and unequivocal appeal to the National Congress to submit a prohibition resolution.

Chautauqua Idea Grows

It is now over forty years since the first Chautauqua was founded by Bishop Vincent of the Methodist Episcopal church. Its original idea was to develop the usefulness of the Bible-school, but it has long since taken on a more widely diversified form of service. There are now three thousand Chautauquas in various parts of the world. At the original assembly, there is a total of 20.000 regular campers every year. The program this year is particularly fortunate in having great representatives of the leading denominations on the program.

Educational Promoters Meet.

The Interdenominational Council of Church Boards of Education was held at Wilkesbarre, Pa., June 8-11. This meeting illustrates the truth that almost all forms of Christian activity are being organized these days upon the basis of interdemoninational fellowship. Among the various interesting developments of the meeting was the election of Rev. R. Watson Cooper, D.D., Litt. D., as executive secretary. He is a Methodist and is an experienced man in the field of education. The organization plans to further the whole movement for the development of the church college.

Honor Mayor's Critic.

Mayor Mitchell has been roundly denounced by certain leaders of the Catholic church for his attitude on the inspection of charitable institutions. A leading accuser was Father Farrell, a Jesuit priest. It has, therefore, occasioned more than a passing notice that Manhattan College, a Roman Catholic school, should confer on him recently the degree of LL.D.

Religious Teaching in State University.

State universities have usually lacked the liberty of presenting courses bearing in any way on religion. This inhibition seems to have been overcome in West Virginia, for Dr. Francis Strickland has been teaching philosophy in that institution the past year and he has given a course on "The Philosophy of the Christian Religion." In this he has had the cordial support of the university administration. In addition to teaching philosophy, Dr. Strickland has preached frequently in Methodist pulpits.

Congregational Seminary Makes Changes.

The commencement this year brings to notice the changes that are coming to the Chicago Theological Seminary of the Congregationalists. The graduate work of the institution is now being done at the University of Chicago. The English Institutes on the west side may be removed and perhaps in the end the west side plant will be entirely abandoned. The seminary leaders are well satisfied with the results of the first year of work on the campus of the University of Chicago.

Russian Church Comes out for Prohibition.

The Russian Church bears official testimony to the beneficial results of prohibition in Russia in a statement presented to the Czar, and signed by the several Metropolitan bishops, from which the following is quoted: "By the decree of your majesty the Russian people from whose weakened will the chains of alcoholism have fallen are now reaching up toward the temple within the soul—that soul which your majesty has indeed brought out of a prison of misery by the prohibition edict. Fear of God has been awakened. Respect for the laws and ordinances of the Church have been strengthened. Faith and old Russian godliness have been reawakened. The people's capacity for useful work has been noticeably increased. Criminality has lessened. Happy holidays are no longer darkened by debauchery. Quarrels have ceased. All the people of many-tongued Russia, united in one large and peaceful family, are ready to fight the impudent invader to the last drop of their blood. Moral standards have developed in the people's intercourse. Peace and quiet have been established in the homes. Fathers and mothers have found their lost children; wives their husbands; and children their parents."

Rural Leaders Will Confer.

Last year a very successful conference was held at the Michigan Agricultural College on the rural church and community welfare. It has been decided to make this a permanent feature and this year the conference will be held July 11-22. Lectures will be given by Rev. Warren H. Wilson, of New York City, Prof. T. J. Meek of James Milliken University and Rev. A. R. Atwood of Lansing. Dean R. S. Shaw will give his famous lectures on the agricultural resources of Michigan. Dr. Alexander Cance of Amherst, Prof. E. D. Jones of the University of Michigan and Dr. E. Mumford will lecture on marketing, cooperation and the organization of rural communities. Lecturers explaining the extension work of the college and giving instruction in the organization of boys and girls' clubs will be open to all the ministers.

Why Not go to College?

Can you give a good reason for your failure to attend? If so, write it to one of our College presidents.

Why Not Attend a College of the Disciples of Christ?

Can you give a good reason for preferring another? If so, write that reason to one of our College presidents.

Why Not Contribute to the Christian Education of others?

If you can show a good reason for not doing so, write the reasons to the College presidents, or to the undersigned.

If you can think of no insurmountable obstacle

Attend a College of the Disciples of Christ.

If you can think of no reason why you or your Church should refuse to contribute to Christian Education, send your check to the College of your choice or to

PAUL AT CORINTH.

Lesson For July 23.

Golden Text: Be not afraid, but speak and hold not thy peace. Acts 18:9. Lesson Acts 18:1-22. Verses 1-11 printed. Memorize verses 9, 10.

(1) After these things he departed from Athens, and came to Corinth. (2) And he found a certain Jew named Aquila, a man of Pontus by race, lately come from Italy, with his wife Priscilla, because Claudius had commanded all the Jews to depart from Rome: and he came unto them; (3) and because he was of the same trade, he abode with them, and they wrought; for by their trade they were tent-makers. (4) And he reasoned in the synagogue every Sabbath, and persuaded Jews and Greeks.

(5) But when Silas and Timothy came down from Macedonia, Paul was constrained by the word, testifying to the Jews that Jesus was the Christ (6) And when they opposed themselves and blasphemed, he shook out his raiment and said unto them, Your blood be upon your own heads; I am clean, from henceforth I will go unto the Gentiles. (7) And he departed thence, and went into the house of a certain man named Titus Justus, one that worshiped God, whose house joined hard to the synagogue. (8) And Crispus, the ruler of the synagogue, believed in the Lord with all his house; and many of the Corinthians hearing believed, and were baptized. (9) And the Lord said unto Paul in the night by a vision, Be not afraid, but speak and hold not thy peace: (10) for I am with thee, and no man shall set on thee to harm thee: for I have much people in this city. (11) And he dwelt there a year and six months, teaching the word of God among them.

VERSE BY VERSE.

1. After these things. The events which took place at Athens.—Corinth. The capital of Achaia, the southern province of Greece. It was a very important city.

2. Aquila. Very little known.—Priscilla. Diminutive of "Prisca." Since Paul usually mentions her first it has been inferred that she was the more cultured.—Claudius. He came to the throne in 41 A. D., as the successor of Caligula.— Had commanded all the Jews to depart from Rome. This edict was not fully carried out or maintained, as we know by the Acts.

3. They were tentmakers. They made the tents used by shepherds and travelers. They may have woven the cloth also. It was a Rabbinical principle that whosoever does not teach his son a trade is as if he brought him up to be a robber.

4. He reasoned. He preached to them in the synagogue where the people gathered.—Persuaded.—Greek, "sought to persuade." RVm.

5. When Silas and Timothy came down from Macedonia. Friends are great helps to a lonely worker. One plus two are far more than three in results for the kingdom of God.—Paul was constrained by the word. He was relieved of anxiety by the arrival of his friends with money, and stimulated to greater activity in preaching the word.—Testifying to the Jews that Jesus was the Christ. Jesus was the Christ and their Messiah.

6. They opposed themselves. The Greek words mean "they set themselves in battle array." Concerted resistance.—Blasphemed. Uttered railing and slanderous words.—He shook out his raiment. Shook all the dust from his garments. This is constantly done by Orientals.—Your blood be upon your own heads. You alone are responsible. They were careless as to their fate. They were not worthy of eternal life.—From henceforth I will go unto the Gentiles. This referred to his stay at Corinth for we soon find him speaking to Jews at Ephesus.

7. He departed thence. He departed from the synagogue as his preaching place.—A certain man's house. His preaching place. A common practice in that day.—One that worshiped God. A Gentile proselyte, who gave Paul the use of his home.

8. The chief ruler of the synagogue. He was an important man. Paul himself baptized him. 1 Cor. 1:14.—Many of the Corinthians believed and were baptized. Many of the native Greeks in the city.

9. And the Lord said unto Paul in the night by a vision "He passed from the strife of tongues into the presence of the Eternal Friend."—Be not afraid. The very best of us need all the encouragement we can get. "Keep right on for you are doing my work."

10. I am with thee. This is the promise to every true disciple, see Matt. 23:20.—I have much people in this city. Paul could not be harmed until his work was done.

11. He dwelt there a year and six months. This was the length of his stay in the city. —Teaching the word of God among them. He always preached in houses and synagogues where he stopped. Here he wrote his letters to the Thessalonians.

Preaching the Word

BY ASA McDANIEL.

PREACHING the word is not shouting the "old shibboleths" without regard to their being of service in the complex life of our day. It is rather the presentation of the gospel so that it shall create a new social order built upon the ideals of Jesus. Since this new kingdom is to be composed of individuals the gospel will always have to do with the individual. The message must be so delivered as to make the individual of service to his time as Jesus was of service to his, while on earth. In the very nature of the case the message cannot be the same for all men and for all time. Our environment is constantly changing and we must be able to meet the changes. It is our business as teachers to make "the word" help the individual in this changing order.

Broadly speaking, there are two ways of preaching the Word. The first is by the use of speech, and the other by the life we live.

The first method may be by public discourse given under a great variety of circumstances. Such preaching can rise no higher than its source. The danger is that it may become professional and lose much of its power. But it cannot be overestimated in the work of moulding public opinion. Everywhere men are moved by the words of a great teacher or preacher.

Another method of speaking the Word is by conversation. It is a much slower process, but at the same time a sure one. There is no better way to get close to the life of a boy than to go with him in the woods and in the hush of God's great temple talk to him about the great problems of life. A real leader can get closer to a boy than most fathers. This method is more difficult than the former because the one you seek to influence has a chance to talk back, and find your weak points.

Music furnishes a good and profitable way of preaching the Word, and when we sing with this purpose real results will be seen.

The printed page is growing to be a more and more powerful means of preaching the Word. As teachers and Sunday-school people we are not using this method of preaching as we should. It may be because some people are so unwise in flooding the public prints that others keep out, but whatever the cause we are not making full use of this powerful way of preaching to large crowds. Every school and church should have its press agent, a man or woman trained for the task.

Passing to the consideration of life as a most effective way of preaching the Word.

An illustration will serve our purpose: Mrs. P—— was always present at church, in the front seat, unless illness kept her at home. She never was known to speak a word in public. She never took a prominent part in the church work. Yet her long, faithful and Christian life in that community; her sweet spirit and helpful interest in the community life gave her great power with her friends. It is the opinion of those who know her that more people have been led to walk in the way of the Lord by the quiet, motherly spirit of Mrs. P——, than by all the public addresses given in her home church.

The life is all important, for it gives wings to the words of the speaker and power to the gospel, in saving men. We forget the words of the teacher, but we never forget the teacher if he has touched and helped our life.

A RECENT BOOK—"THE MASTER SCIENTIST."

The author of this meaty little book professes admiration for the founder of the Christian Science faith, but does not accept the doctrines of that movement. He sets forth his own faith and especially his appreciation of Jesus Christ from the point of view of an idealist.

To make stronger the positions he takes, there are numerous quotations from the great books of recent years. It would be hard to find assembled in one small volume more worthy utterances of great men than are given in this book.

We can understand, of course, how others who see Jesus in another light, and appreciate him in a different way, might criticise the positions taken in many instances and declare the whole treatment incomplete.

We are sure, however, that those who are fortunate enough to read this volume will have only spiritual blessing and uplift. It is the product of a truly religious soul and brings a message that hard-headed Americans particularly need. There is a spiritual atmosphere in the book that is wholesome and good. Disciples Table Talk

Lexington School of Methods, 1916 Was the Largest in History.

The world's record was made at Lexington, Ky., in its school of methods this year. The largest graduating class in the history of schools of methods is reported, there having been 137 graduates. At least that is the belief of W. C. Pearce, who was present in this school as an instructor. This is the fifth year that the "Annual Kentucky Summer School of Methods" has been held. Each year has registered an increased attendance over the year preceding. Roy K. Roadruck, registrar of the 1916 session, reported a total registration of 287, representing 103 churches. Of the graduates, 98 were first year students and 39 advanced students. The address to the graduating class was given by W. C. Pearce, of the International Sunday School Association. Dean Walter Frazee presented certificates to the class. Roger T. Nooe, pastor at Frankfort, gave them a word of greeting, and W. C. Bower, of the Bible college at Lexington, offered a prayer of consecration. Other persons participating in the exercises were President Crossfield, of Transylvania, and President McDiarmid, of Hamilton College. An outstanding feature of the sessions of the recent school was the series of Bible lectures given by Professor A. W. Fortune, of the College of the Bible. He discussed such questions as "Who Is God?" "Who Is Man?" "Who Is Christ?" An address that met with a hearty welcome was that on "The Christ Life—How Live It?" Miss Lucy K. DeMoss treated the question of missions in the Bible-school; Marion Stevenson considered general pedagogical methods in the Bible school; Miss Cynthia Maus had charge of the discussion of secondary division methods; Miss Hazel Lewis treated problems of the elementary division; W. J. Clarke gave instruction in adult methods. All these are reported to have been at their best throughout the sessions. Professor Bower gave courses in Observation, and R. T. Nooe lent inspiration to all the days of the school with his devotional studies. Two special features planned for the entertainment of the guests were a reception at Hamilton College, and the Alumni Banquet, at the same school. Praise is given the special lectures given each evening during the sessions by Miss Lewis, Mr. Stevenson, Professor Bower, Dr. Irene Myers, Miss Maus and Professor Snoddy. Their lectures were, respectively: "The Elementary Division Related to the Community;" "The Aim of Christian Education;" "The Privilege and Dignity of the Teacher's Vocation;" "The Call of Latin America;" "The High School Credit Plan" and "The Building of the Rural Community."

W. F. Cowden, at Los Angeles, Cal., Meeting Bids Harry Munro God-speed.

When W. F. Cowden, herald of the new Northwest of a generation ago, laid his hand on Harry Munro, the new Alaska missionary of the American Society, another new day for the Northwest was announced, of which Mr. Munro will soon become a leading light. The meeting at Los Angeles was called to give greeting and farewell to the new missionary to Alaska. It was held at Broadway church. Mr. Munro's parents, who live at Sawtelle, Cal., were present. They, with Mrs. Harry Munro and Anna Laura, were presented to the Los Angeles group, who have promised to care for Mrs. Munro and little daughter until Mr. Munro has prepared a place for them in his new field. Mr. Hopkins, Bible school secretary of the A. C. M. S., reports that the entire meeting was surcharged with spirituality. He also writes that all the way through the west the missionary party was met by representatives of numerous churches and schools; in many places flowers and other gifts were brought. It is good news that the Equipment Fund continues to grow. There has already been pledged a total of $624, but the One Thousand Dollar goal is to be reached.

First Church, Philadelphia, Will Have New Home.

For several years it has been realized that the work at First church, Philadelphia, has not made the progress it should, largely because of the fact that the field in which the church is located is one which lends little support to religious work. It was felt that a location should be found in a growing neighborhood of young home-owners. This plan has been carried through, a piece of ground having been purchased for about $12,000 in a better part of the city. The new home will be erected this year. This will consist of a chapel, seating 550 in the assembly room, a tower, and an auditorium to be erected later which will seat 800. Exclusive of the tower, the chapel will cost about $40,000. The building will be Gothic in type, and will be of stone. First church has made a good record during the four years' administration of Irving H. Chenoweth, in spite of the handicaps above mentioned: One hundred new members have been added, fifty per cent increase in income is reported and a new spirit of hopefulness has been developed in the congregation.

Rev. Irving S. Chenoweth, who leads First church, Philadelphia, in erecting a splendid new building this year.

Springfield, Ill., to Have Modern Church School.

A thoroughly scientific and modern school for training teachers and other religious workers has been organized at First church, Springfield, Ill. It is known as the School of Religious Education and Social Service. Directors of the school, being leading educators of the city, have secured a competent faculty. The course of study has been outlined and various subjects will be taken up one night each week, beginning October 1. I. M. Allen, principal of the high school, who was recently made head of the department of Religious Education in First church, will be educational director of the new school. T. N. Ewing, pastor of First Methodist church, W. J. Johnson, pastor of First Congregational church and Frank Waller Allen, pastor of First Christian church, will be among the faculty. Superintendent of Schools Hugh S. Magill, Jr., Miss Emma R. Grant, Mrs. John O. Rames, Miss Bertha Kimble, Miss Susan E. Wilcox, and F. O. Edwards, all of whom are among the leading educators in Springfield, will be on the faculty. With this array of the best talent obtainable, the school promises to become one of the most important institutions in the civic life of the city. It offers a three years' course in Biblical, professional and departmental work. The school is open free of charge to any one desiring to take the work, the only cost being the purchase of the text books on the part of the pupil.

Texas Educational Movement Conference at Dallas, Tex.

Texas Disciple leaders are in dead earnest in undertaking the proposed Educational Movement in behalf of the Disciple colleges of the state. About 150 ministers and laymen attended a conference and luncheon held at Texas Christian University a few days ago. Clifford S. Weaver, Secretary of the Movement, called the meeting to order and introduced the toastmaster, S. J. McFarland, of Dallas, Chairman of the Ways and Means Committee. He made an introductory speech and then presented Pastor W. P. Jennings, of McKinney, who spoke of the importance of the hour and paid a tribute to the founders and builders of the Texas schools. Nine of the ten team leaders were present and were presented to the conference. They are as follows: J. W. Kerns, Austin; John G. Slayter, Dallas; L. D. Anderson, W. B. Parks, and E. M. Waits, Fort Worth; F. G. Jones, Midland; W. P. Jennings, McKinney; H. M. Bandy, Alpine, and F. F. Walters, Wichita Falls. A. E. Ewell, Palestine, the other one, missed his train on the way. Two-minute talks were called for from E. M. Waits, F. F. Walters, Dr. Bacon Saunders, V. Z. Jarvis, J. F. Holt, F. G. Jones, J. W. Kerns, H. M. Bandy and W. B. Parks. R. H. Miller and A. E. Cory, of the Men and Millions Movement, and John G. Slayter, of Dallas, made stirring talks. Mr. McFarland reported that the trustees and advisory board members of the three Texas schools. present had contributed $26,000 to the fund during the conference, and that he expected the gifts from those who could not be present would bring the sum up to $50,000, or one-fourth of the entire amount to be raised.

As to Lloyd-George's Church Affiliations.

There has been a good deal of discussion as to the church affiliations of David Lloyd-George, the famed English statesman. Some have said, "He is a Baptist," others "He is a Disciple;" but J. E. Davis, pastor at Central church, Spokane, Wash., has found ample evidence that his membership is now with a Disciple church. Here is Mr. Davis's communication:

"Some time ago the pastor of the First Baptist church here in Spokane and I had a dispute about the church membership of David Lloyd-George. I asserted that Mr. Lloyd-George was a member of the Christian church and the Baptist minister asserted that Mr. Lloyd-George was a member of the Baptist church. A short time after the minister of the Baptist church addressed Mr. George in London and Mr. Lloyd-George's secretary answered him in this brief word: 'Mr. Lloyd-George says to tell you that he is a Baptist.' The minister of the Baptist church read this letter before the Research Club in Spokane. That got on my nerves since I was of the opinion that he was a member of the Christian church, and I wrote immediately to Mr. Sweeney, and Griffith P. Williams, of Criccieth, Wales I presented the situation to Mr. Williams of Criccieth, and he sent the following word; and I want to offer this letter to you, for I feel it will set the matter of the church membership of David Lloyd-George at rest among both the Baptists and the Disciples. The letter follows: 'Dear Sir: Replying to yours relative to Mr. Lloyd-George's church membership, will say that his original membership was with us at Criccieth. Since living in London he has membership with the Baptists while there, but still retains his membership with us at Criccieth. He was with us last Lord's Day. (Signed) Griffith P. Williams.'"

Remarkable Success in Iowa Village Church.

Any person who thinks the church is dying in rural and village communities should visit Glenwood, Ia., and study the history of the church there during the past few months. Glenwood is situated in the richer section of the state. Up to a few months ago, the church there had a struggle to live. When H. Edgar Hall came into the field as pastor a new era began. The following are some of the indications of the success of his work. Within the past nine months the Bible-school has grown from an attendance of 45 to be the banner school of the county. The next district Bible-school convention will be held at this church. A live junior C. W. B. M. has been organized. The church membership has increased from an enrollment of 100 to three times that number. A Gospel team and Brotherhood have been organized and are being successfully conducted. The church building has recently been painted, a large extension will soon be dedicated, and a parsonage is planned for the near future. On the last Sunday reported five adults were added to the membership of the church.

—At a convention of the Fourth district, Mo., churches, four men pledged $1,200 to place two evangelists at work in the district. J. B. Taylor is supertendent in this section of Missouri.

—At the dedication service of Streator, Ill., church, over $7,000 was raised by G. L. Snively, which amount was sufficient to cover the indebtedness on the new building and to allow one or two thousand for other purposes. Floyd Tucker is the new pastor at Streator.

—Fifty persons were recently added to the membership at First church, Lincoln, Neb. First church has just celebrated the tenth aniversary of the coming of H. H. Harmon to its pulpit, and several goals set were realized. Over 800 were in attendance at the Bible school on this day of celebration.

—The annual Children's day service at Norwood, O., Bible-school, was held in the beautiful City Hall auditorium. The school, numbering 843 on that day, met at the church and marched to the city, a double line of about 200 men of the men's class acting as a protection to the women and children as they marched. The program was excellent, C. R. Stauffer, Norwood's pastor, writes. The offering amounted to $450. The school at Norwood is sending one of its own members, Miss Anna Louise Fillmore, to China, and will support her next year. The church supports Mrs. J. C. Ogden in her work at Batang, Tibet. Mr. Stauffer is closing his fourth year at Norwood.

—R. J. Bennett, pastor at Sharon, Pa., writes that his pulpit was recently occupied by Erasmus Wilson, the "Quiet Observer" of the Pittsburg Gazette-Times, who is widely known through his writing.

—Walter S. Athearn will lead in a school of methods to be held in Cleveland, O., Sept. 25-29. W. H. McLain, Ohio state's superintendent of Bible-school thus early invites all within reach to attend. Mr. McLain gave the address and presented the diplomas to the 1916 teacher training class at Second church, Warren, O., the exercises being held June 25.

—It is reported that George P. Rutledge, having resigned from Broad Street church, Columbus, O., is now in Cincinnati, where he will be connected with the Christian Standard. Mr. Rutledge was formerly pastor in one of the Philadelphia churches.

—The following "special days," on recent Sunday mornings at Kokomo, Ind., yielded excellent results: "Fathers and Sons," "Mothers and Daughters," "The Family," annual sermon to the Round Table, Memorial sermon for the Grand Army and W. R. C. The Federated Missions of Kokomo promoted a Community Celebration of the Fourth for the foreigners of the city. Business men contributed freely to the enterprise. Flags and music and refreshments and speeches and auto rides, were some of the means used to teach the alien brothers that they are loved. David H. Shields, Kokomo pastor, was made the general chairman of arrangements for the day.

Bethany Park Training School

The seventh annual sessions of the Bethany Park Training School for ministers, Sunday-school and Christian Endeavor workers will be held August 8-18. Bethany Park was the first ten-day training school organized among the Disciples. It was established for the purpose of training church workers, and there are many marks of evidence that it has been successful in this field. Those who have graduated are its friends and supporters. There are a large number who have attended at least four years. Another evidence of its value lies in the fact that many church schools have been made more efficient by those graduating from this school.

The faculty for 1916 is up to the standard. To mention the names is sufficient: Miss Hazel A. Lewis, Miss Cynthia P. Maus, Mrs. Ida M. Harrison, W. J. Clarke, Prof. Alva W. Taylor, Pres. H. O. Pritchard, F. D. Kershner, E. B. Barnes, A. McLean, Frank Lowe, Jr., C. E. Hill, E. W. Thornton and Garry L. Cook. Every phase of Sunday-school and young people's work will be covered. There will be found special courses for all ministers, Sunday-school teachers and officers, and Christian Endeavor workers.

One excellent feature of this school is the low cost. The standard of the faculty is high, but the cost is low. Thirteen dollars pays the bill on the grounds. Gate fee, meals, lodging and tuition are included in this. This is cheaper than staying at home!

Opportunities for recreation are good. Boating, bathing and all kinds of land sports will be given attention. The evening entertainments are also a feature of Bethany.

For information, schedule of subjects and classes for either first year or advanced work, address the dean, Garry L. Cook, 821 Occidental Building, Indianapolis, Ind.

The Bible College of Missouri

The Bible College of Missouri has just closed the most successful year in its history. The enrollment was 239. Twenty-three of these are preparing for the Christian ministry, seven for the mission field, and thirteen for other lines of distinctively religious work. Seventy-seven expect to teach, sixteen will be journalists, eight will enter law, twelve medicine, and ten business. The other eighty are divided among nine colleges. All of these students except fourteen are of college and university grade. Forty-six of them are graduates of some college. Fourteen of them are university graduates.

The relations between the Bible College and the State University are as cordial as could be asked for. During the past year the university has approved another Bible College course for credit towards the A. B. degree. There are now eight courses approved towards that degree, and one further course towards the degree of B. S. in Ed.

The Bible College is making a beginning this summer toward conducting a summer session. One man only is offering two courses. In this connection an effort was made to enlist the other religious schools of the state, but the attempt was made too late. It is hoped another summer to conduct a joint religious session in connection with other Missouri schools.

There were over four thousand students enrolled in the University of Missouri the past year. The opportunities of the Disciples of Christ through the Bible College of Missouri in relation to this body of students is of the utmost importance, the cosmopolitan character of the State University makes against a sectarian brand of Christianity. In that regard it becomes an admirable ally of a movement set to foster Christianity pure and simple.

Address— JOS. A. SERENA, Pres.

—Frank G. Tyrrell, pastor at Pasadena, Cal., was invited to address a union meeting of the churches of Goldfield, Nev., on July 2. The meeting was in the nature of a patriotic celebration.

—Claude E. Hill, new leader at First church, Chattanooga, Tenn., is making a good start. He reports 25 additions to the membership in the last few Sundays. Mr. Hill writes that he has a great oppotunity in this field.

—The business men of Canton, Mo., offered a medal this year to the student of Christian University who should make the highest record as an orator. Howard O. Rocks, a young ministerial student gave an address on "World-wide Permanent Peace," and carried off the prize. Just ten days prior to this victory Mr. Rocks won the prize in a prohibition contest, and became delegate in the state contest.

—After sixteen years of service at Linden Avenue church, Memphis, Tenn., W. H. Sheffer has resigned this work. He will close his service on September 1, and will spend a few months in the evangelistic field. He already has plans made for September.

—New York Disciples meet this week at Wellsville.

—C. C. Morrison, editor of The Christian Century, has been invited to occupy the pulpit at Linwood Boulevard church, Kansas City, Mo., during the six months' leave of absence of the pastor, B. A. Jenkins, who will serve as chaplain with some of the Missouri troops going to the Mexican border. Mr. Morrison has not decided whether he can undertake this work, but he preached at the Kansas City church on last Sunday. Two weeks ago, 101 persons were added to the membership at Linwood Boulevard at the Sunday services, and at services held during the week preceding about fifty others. This ingathering was in part a result of the "Billy" Sunday meetings, which have just closed in Kansas City.

—L. G. Batman, of First church, Youngstown, O., invited the members of the local militia and of the third field hospital to attend service at First on the evening of June 25. The military companies, led by a band, marched with the hospital company to the service. The mayor of the city and the president of the Board of Commerce of Youngstown were honored visitors. Mr. Batman's sermon topic was "Devotion to Country and God."

—J. G. Waggoner, well known Illinois Disciple, has removed from Lanark to Canton, Ill.

—It is reported that Dallas, Tex., has subscribed $11,373 toward the $200,000 fund which is being raised for the three educational institutions of the Christian church located in the state.

—West Washington Disciples are meeting this week in their annual convention. The meeting-point is Tacoma. The Oregon churches convene next week at Turner, the date being July 8-16.

—Edward Scribner Ames, of Hyde Park church, Chicago, is spending six weeks at his summer home, in Pentwater, Mich.

—A. L. Ward, pastor at Central church, Lebanon, Ind., is the latest among Disciple pastors to receive the gift of an automobile from the church congregation.

—A. M. Haggard, of Des Moines, Ia., writes that he is spending the summer at Pinecliffe, Colo., and invites friends to call on him there during the next three months.

—W. Vernon Lytle, who has resigned the work at West Union, Va., will leave in September to enter Yale University.

—The congregation at Fisher, Ill., will have a new and modern building. Andrew Scott ministers at Fisher.

—According to the State Superintendent Garry L. Cook, of Indiana, there are 206 Senior Christian Endeavor societies in that state, enrolling 6,868 persons. Thirteen new senior societies were organized during the past year.

—An adult class organized at Hanna, Alberta, Can., is reported about to become a full-fledged church organization.

—The "Christian Men Builders" is the name of the young men's class at the Third Christian Bible school, Indianapolis, which had 166 young men present recently. This organization makes special features —According to the last quarterly report of organized adult class advance, 1,921 certificates were issued during the quarter to classes organized during that period. Pennsylvania stood first on the list, with 384 new classes.

China Mission Convention

We China missionaries have recently held our twenty-eighth annual convention. After another year of isolated labor in our several mission stations where each had been wrestling with his own problems and trying with limited means and workers to cope with his particular situation it was a source of unique satisfaction to get together once more as a whole mission and to experience the sympathy, encouragement and inspiration attendant upon such a gathering. We met from April 7 to May 1 in Nanking, the ancient southern capital whose "age-flecked walls,' though eloquent with historic reminiscence, have yet seen much of the storm and stress incident to the unfolding of New China. Nanking is the largest and most centrally located of our stations. To reach it our members used a variety of modes of travel. Some of our Luchowfu representatives came overland borne in chairs on the shoulders of stout coolies; others came on the tedious house-boat trip. The members from Nantungchow and Wuhu arrived on various ones of the modern river steamers which ply up and down the broad Yangtse. Those from Chuchow and Shanghai could enjoy the comforts of railroad travel.

Those of us who are permanently stationed in Nanking appreciated greatly the opportunity of having in our homes these fellow-workers, most of whom we had not seen since last summer and the few hours which we had for visiting with them were an especially enjoyable element of the convention. An additional pleasure was the presence at some of our sessions of several friends outside our mission group. There were Miss Jessie V. Jerome and Miss Mattie Pounds who have been traveling in the Orient during the year and Mr. W. E. Anderson, chaplain of the Asiatic fleet, who led one of the morning devotional services. We welcomed these guests the more cordially because they represented to us the great, interested home constituency.

Some Missing Faces.

Though all of our stations were represented not all of our number were present. Some were detained in their stations on account of illness. The absence of two especially familiar faces was realized with deep sadness and regret. It seemed almost impossible to conceive of ourselves as going through an annual convention without Mr. Meigs and Dr. Butchart. They had always been our leaders and we could not but miss sorely their wise counsel and guidance. In the opening address of the president, Mr. Charles Settlemeyer, mention was made of the death of these two staunch workers since the last convention as the greatest loss sustained in many years by the China mission. The same address, however, also gave us cause for joy in reminding us of the three new workers whom we have welcomed into our midst within the same time. Miss Collins and Miss Wilkinson are the first of the C. W. B. M. workers to come to China: next year they will be with Miss Vautrin in the girls' school at Luchowfu. Miss McCallum, sent by the F. C. M. S., has come to supply a long-felt need in the girls' school in Nanking and will be associated with Miss Lyon whose many years of efficient, devoted service has built up a school of which we are all justly proud.

The convention meetings were all held in the newly completed home of Mr. and Mrs. Settlemyer. The keynote of the several sessions was Efficiency. During the course of the meetings three very suggestive papers were read on the subject. Two of these, "The Efficient Station," by Mr. Dannenberg, of Chowchow, and "The Efficient Committee," by Mr. Sarvis, of Nanking, definitely forwarded discussion in a practical way by giving suggestions which were later adopted in the resolutions of the convention. The third, which was less a paper than an exceptionally fine, inspiriting address was "The Efficient Missionary," by Rev. J. Leighton Stuart, of the Nanking School of Theology. Mr. Stuart is the son of a missionary, was born in China, is possessed of unusual attainments in the Chinese language and is otherwise a man of wide culture and education. His careful, scholarly presentation of his topic was notable for its profound, sympathetic insight into the Chinese mind and heart as well as for a note of fine Christian mysticism.

Advance Steps.

The business sessions of the convention were occupied chiefly with revising the statement of Policy and Rules for Mission Organization and Government, although there was the usual large number of minor matters to have their share of attention. We were glad to know that a Secretary for the Orient is to be sent out to us soon and it was a satisfaction to join our votes with those of the Japan, India and Philippine Missions in asking that Mr. R. A. Doan be the one appointed to this position which we feel is going to answer a great need in our work here.

The spirit of the convention was of the best. About the discussions there breathed an atmosphere of cordiality and loyal goodwill and regard for the opinions and wishes of the other fellow which was most gratifying. "The longer I am in the mission," commented one of the older missionaries after one of the sessions, "the more I believe in it." This was but one form of expression of the appreciation which we all felt of the reigning spirit of Christian love and harmony in our midst—a spirit, by the way, which is not necessarily easier of achievement on the mission field than it is in the home land. The personal reports of the workers all sounded notes of progress and hopefulness and encouraged us to look for yet greater developments in the future.

The Master Scientist

By Joseph Richardson

AN INDEX TO THE HEALING POWER OF THE CHRIST

"Grown weary of searching for the grain of truth amid the chaff of many volumes on Christian Science, Theosophy, New Thought and the like, we have been waiting for some sensible, scientific, readable book, containing the essence of Truth. The long-looked-for volume has appeared under the title 'The Master Scientist.' Its size and appearance betoken its quality. It is a nugget of pure gold, with the alloy removed: it is a handful of the finest wheat, with the chaff taken away. It is crammed full of healthy teaching and wholesome counsel. Its words are with power."

L. O. Bricker, D. D., Minister First Christian Church, Atlanta, Ga.

"After having read your little book 'The Master Scientist' I am constrained to express my very deep appreciation of this very simple and strong discussion of the spiritual meaning and power involved in the teachings of our Lord. You have shown beyond any question that Jesus was the supreme artist of life. I am persuaded more and more that the Divine Love can be made to be so organically related to the human spirit that one shall feel Its Power as he does sunshine or electricity. You have done a splendid piece of work. I trust that the little book may have a wide circulation and that it may bring great comfort and strength and power to thousands. It is a tonic. I wish you to know of my personal indebtedness to you."

The Great Problem of Fatigue

Has it ever occurred to you that practically every adult person, who works, is an habitual drinker of some beverages other than water? Physicians have explained the reason. They tell us that mental and physical work inevitably produce "Fatigue," which is nothing more nor less than Nature's call for refreshment or for stimulation. Under modern conditions of life (which we call civilization) it is impractical for most of us to drop our work simply because we are tired, and yet the scientists tell us to continue our work during fatigue is absolutely injurious to our nerves and muscles.

They explain that under such circumstances the judicious use of refreshing beverages relieves the fatigue by removing the resistance to the nervous and muscular impulses, making our work easier and lighter, in very much the same way that oiling a machine reduces the friction and prevents its becoming overheated.

Nature has provided us with the ideal lubricants to overcome the injurious effects of fatigue. They are the xanthin (pronounced zan-thin) beverages, including beef tea, cocoa, coca-cola, chocolate, tea and coffee. The scientists tell us that the xanthin beverages refresh the nerves and muscles by a process similar to actual lubrication and without affecting the will in the least, therefore without exciting one to overexertion as is the case with artificial stimulants.

In the case of beef tea and other meat extracts the refreshing principle is an animal product called xanthin; in cocoa and chocolate, a vegetable xanthin known as di-methyl-xanthin, or caffein. When these beverages are digested they are all converted into the animal form of xanthin, which is a normal and constant ingredient of the flesh and blood of all animals and is essentially abundant in the tissues of young animals and children. Many scientists regard this xanthin as the natural stimulant and as the explanation of the remarkable freshness, alertness and activity of children and young animals. As we grow older the quantity of xanthin in our bodies gradually diminishes, we become less alert and active, and feel a great need for the xanthin beverages.

Coco-Cola is therefore the same as tea and coffee except that it is carbonated, is flavored with ripe fruit extracts and contains no tannic acid or caffeol. The carbonation of the fruit flavors combine with the caffein to give a delicious and refreshing beverage that quenches the thirst and relieves fatigue more perfectly than tea or coffee, in spite of the fact that coca-cola contains only about one-half as much of the active principle, trimethyl xanthin.

In their desire to give the public a thorough understanding of their product, The Coca-Cola Company has issued a booklet containing the scientific opinions of the world's leading authorities, explaining the composition and the refreshing qualities of the drink. Write for a copy, read it carefully, and you will understand why Coca-Cola is the nearest approach to a perfect solution of the world's greatest problem of fatigue. A copy of this booklet may be had by addressing

Disciples Publication Society

The Disciples Publication Society is an organization through which churches of the Disciples of Christ seek to promote undenominational and constructive Christianity.

The relationship it sustains to the Disciples is intimate and organic, though not official. The Society is not a private institution. It has no capital stock. No individuals profit by its earnings.

The charter under which the Society exists determines that whatever profits are earned shall be applied to agencies which foster the cause of religious education, although it is clearly conceived that its main task is not to make profits but to produce literature for building up character and for advancing the cause of religion.

The Disciples Publication Society regards itself as a thoroughly undenominational institution. It is organized and constituted by individuals and churches who interpret the Disciples' religious reformation as ideally an unsectarian and unecclesiastical fraternity, whose common tie and original impulse are fundamentally the desire to practice Christian unity with all Christians.

The Society therefore claims fellowship with all who belong to the living Church of Christ, and desires to co-operate with the Christian people of all communions as well as with the congregations of Disciples, and to serve all.

The Christian Century, the chief publication of the Society, desires nothing so much as to be the worthy organ of the Disciples' movement. It has no ambition at all to be regarded as an organ of the Disciples' denomination. It is a free interpreter of the wider fellowship in religious faith and service which it believes every church of Disciples should embody. It strives to interpret all communions, as well as the Disciples, in such terms and with such sympathetic insight as may reveal to all their essential unity in spite of denominational isolation. The Christian Century, though published by the Disciples, is not published for the Disciples alone. It is published for the Christian world. It desires definitely to occupy a catholic point of view and it seeks readers in all communions.

The Bethany System of Sunday School Literature

Represents the highest point yet attained in the field of Bible-school literature. It is not of the flash-in-the pan, printed-in-a-hurry-to-sell sort of literature. The 129 texts of this series are prepared by the leading experts of the entire Bible-school world. They are substantial and meaty. They present a greater amount of material than any other series; teachers' texts have fully a third more material than other systems afford. Such leaders among the Disciples as Finis Idleman, Edgar D. Jones, L. O. Bricker, H. H. Harmon, John W. Alexander, Frank W. Allen, Irving S. Chenoweth, Howard T. Cree, T. E. Winter, P. J. Rice and hundreds of others, pronounce the Bethany System absolutely the best adapted to the purposes of genuine religious education.

A suggestion: Send us on a postal card names and addresses of your superintendent and other Bible-school leaders who might wish to see samples of this fine body of literature.

Shall Sunday be the Lord's Day?

WHAT SHALL WE DO ON SUNDAY?

This question is one that is continually asked. The young people of the stores and offices ask it as they look forward to their rest day. The children ask it when restrained by their elders. It is the subject of much debate between strict religionists and secularists.

The Pharisees in Jesus' day had made the Sabbath one of the most important institutions of Israel. It was the feature of the life of the Jews which seemed most to set them apart from their heathen neighbors.

Jesus most often came into conflict with the Pharisees on the question of the observance of the Sabbath. He healed people on the holy day to the scandal of the religious leaders of his time.

The disciples went through the fields on a Sabbath day and plucked and ate the ears of corn and were unrebuked by the Master. They had violated three of the forty-nine regulations with regard to the keeping of the day. Jesus met the issue squarely and made the immortal declaration, "The Sabbath was made for man, and not man for the Sabbath."

Paul seems not to have required the keeping of the Sabbath in any way by the Gentile Christians. His position that these Christians were not subject to the law emancipated them from the Sabbath.

The use of the first day of the week as a day of worship and of sacred memories of Jesus Christ, sprang up early. For a while Jewish Christians kept both days, until at last the church made it an offence to keep the Jewish Sabbath.

Constantine established Sunday in the law as a holy day and from this time on, with varying degrees of strictness, the Lord's Day was observed apart from other days.

Our trouble today is the conflict of ideals between a legalistic Sabbath of modern puritans and of the secularist Sunday holiday of those of different training. The immigration movement in America has brought the differences of social custom into the sharpest relief.

There is gradually emerging a third viewpoint which may reconcile legalist and secularist in the higher principle once given us by Jesus Christ.

The legalist seeks to foist his social customs on the rest of the community by process of law. He acts thus always and about all things.

The modern puritan would bar from the Lord's Day every kind of amusement, even the most innocent. Many Scotch mothers would punish a son for whistling on the Sabbath, as they rightly call the kind of a day they observe.

Although historically the Lord's Day has been a feast day and not a fast day, although the deeply religious medieval England gathered its people together after church service for archery, athletic sports and games, forbidding only salmon fishing and bear-baiting, some modern puritans would bar from the holy day everything that would tend to bring a smile to any man's face.

The secularist is busy trying to break down the puritan Sabbath. He believes it just so much human loss. He promotes ball-games and theaters and debates and excursions for Sunday. He urges humanitarian considerations.

Suppose the consumptive iron-moulder asks you whether he shall go to the woods on Sunday, or stay in his house, what would you say? The secularist will despise you if you hesitate in your answer to that man. But the secularist cares for healthy bodies and ignores the sick souls of the community.

If America is to have a new Sunday in which we all shall joyfully join, it must rest upon the basis proposed by Jesus Christ. Disciples who have read Alexander Campbell's Sermon on the Law, which separated him from the puritans of his day, will have no difficulty in going over to this point of view of Jesus Christ, "The Sabbath was made for man." The Lord's Day as well as the Sabbath, and every other religious thing, is made for man, and not man for the institution.

The Resurrection Day of our Lord is essentially a joyful day. Long-faced Sundays are not a proper celebration for this tremendous idea of an Ever-living Christ.

The Lord's Day is a day for the family. The religious instruction that a busy father cannot give his children on other days is due then. The happy family out on a thoughtful Sunday afternoon stroll is one of the cheering sights of city life at its best. The family buggy in the country is often a place for the searching of hearts and the inspiring of great purposes in the lives of the children.

The physical welfare of man is promoted by the observance of the Lord's Day. Again and again it has been proved that laboring men need one day's rest in seven. The steel trust has recently granted it. Labor unions fight for it with even more enthusiasm than some religious organizations.

Kindly human ministries belong to Sunday. There are shut-ins that wait to see their friends on that day. There are lonely people for whom Sunday is a nightmare, as is shown by the suicide reports of the city on Monday morning. It is our privilege to find and help these wretched ones.

The Lord's Day is pre-eminently a day for the church. One might wonder if the church could live without it. If this is so, there is a great obligation upon those who know the meaning of the Lord's Day to employ this good day in building up the walls of the local Zion.

The way to keep the Lord's Day is to live pre-eminently in the spirit and according to the will of Jesus Christ.

"I was in spirit on the Lord's Day."

Is Denominationalism Doomed?

An Interview With Rev. Harold E. Brierley, of London, England.

E. HERMAN, IN THE HOMILETIC REVIEW.

LIKE all great conceptions, the idea of church-union has suffered sorely at the hands of its friends and advocates. It has been rarefied into thin air by idle dreaming, and contracted into a crank's hobby by premature scheming. In new countries, such as Australia, where the fettering and cramping effect of denominational divisions is more keenly felt, the leaders of the churches have come together and framed a basis for corporate union which, however, itself hung very much in the air, for the simple reason that the people entirely lack that church-consciousness which alone can make an external union something better than a mere utilitarian expedient. To merge a number of religious associations into one great organization may make for superficial efficiency; what it can never make is a united Christian Church.

THE PRESENT CRISIS.

The reason why so many of our noblest and most clear-sighted Christian teachers and leaders have deprecated all efforts toward corporate union is that they feel strongly that before one can have a great united church one must have churches. Only those who possess church-consciousness can unite to repair the breaches of the Christian Zion.

The present world-crisis has done much to turn the thoughts of Christian people, and notably of English Free-Churchmen, to the much-vexed subject of union, so that golden dreams and leaden schemes are alike in the air. Of all those who have sought of late to bring the great ideal of union before our minds, none has done so with more sanity of outlook and dynamic power of appeal than Rev. Harold E. Brierley, a well-known London Congregational minister and a son of that prince of religious essayists, Jonathan Brierley—"J. B." of the London Christian World—who for many years through the religious press preached weekly to a world-wide congregation.

Mr. Brierley belongs to the new rising type of Free-Church ministers. Judged by certain time-honored conventions which are supposed to be of the essence of English non-conformity, he is decidedly out of the common, and in nothing more so than in his strong consciousness of churchmanship.

MR. BRIERLEY'S POSITION.

Mr. Brierley flung the gauntlet down to the tyranny of denominationalism in a remarkable letter in the Christian World, and his challenge issued in an interesting correspondence, besides letting loose a flood-tide of opinion and appeal in the pulpit and on the market-place. Mr. Brierley will have nothing to do with schemes, judging that the day for them has not yet come. What he stands for is the creation of a true church ideal and church-consciousness among Christian people; above all, for the creation of a spiritual passion for union. Only such a passion can make union possible and, once it is created, nothing can stay its translation into hard fact.

Mr. Brierley, who ministers to a large congregation drawn from many parts of London, has a strongly marked individuality, and not a little of his distinguished father's versatility and fertility. His claim to Huguenot descent on his mother's side has naturally given him a keen interest in French life and thought, and his early education in Switzerland made him master of the French language. In reply to my inquiry as to whether he did not think the whole question of church-union premature at this stage, he hastened to define his position.

ARE THERE REAL DISTINCTIONS?

"I have all through tried to make it clear that I do not consider the present moment opportune for any attempt at reconstruction. In a sense my attitude is destructive: that is to say, I have tried to give articulateness to the vague and unreasoned feeling in the minds of most Christians of to-day that our denominational system is wrong. I have tried to point out that denominationalism is already superseded in fact, though not in form. My contention is that our denominational divisions have ceased to have distinctive value. The specific spiritual principles and aspects of truth to which the various denominations once testified are to-day part of the common stock of the Free-Church faith. Is there a single really vital element of that faith that would be lost through the passing away of denominationalism? And if not, what justification have we for impairing our efficiency and jeopardizing the progress of the kingdom of God by clinging to what even so many of its upholders in theory count a dead letter in practice?

"My assertion that there are no such things today as specifically denominational principles has been challenged. I have been told that, e. g., the Congregational ideal is vastly other than the connectional, be it Methodist, Presbyterian, or—if you like to go so far afield—Episcopalian (provided that a non-monarchical episcopate be meant). But is that really so? Our Congregational ideal may be expressed in one phrase—'the real presence of our Lord.' We believe that wherever two or three members of his Church are gathered together, there he is in the midst of them, ready to speak and work through each. Now Methodism or Presbyterianism may not lay the same emphasis upon this truth, or state it in the same direct manner; but surely there is nothing in the Congregational ideal to which either the Methodist or the Presbyterian could not agree—nothing which is not implicit in his own doctrine of the church, though it may not be explicit.

DOES DISCUSSION HELP?

"With regard to matters of government, the approximation is obvious to all. Congregationalism, in the sense of Independency, has been tried and found wanting. One need only go to a new country, such as South Africa, where I spent some time a few years back, in order to see that there is no chance for small, scattered churches on the basis of Independency. There must be centralization and connection, if only to the extent of a sustentation fund. The time for constructive schemes of union does not seem to have come as yet, but it is time for taking counsel together in serious discussion."

"But do you think a discussion by leading men would be of any real use when the people are not yet ripe for union; when, for instance, it is extremely difficult even to get the members of the various churches in a given district to unite for a communion service?"

"I don't think that counts for very much," said Mr. Brierley. "People are unwilling to attend these services for the simple reason that they know they really mean nothing. The National Free Church Council has for many years done its best to foster inter-denominational unity by united meetings and services of all kinds, and what is the result? There is little more unity among the separate denominations than there was twenty years ago when the Council began its operations. We have more united meetings, more concerted effort in certain directions, that is all. We pray and sing together and confer together on a variety of subjects, but so far there has been no sign of any inclination to sacrifice a single one of the things which keep us apart.

LEADERSHIP THE GREAT NEED.

"Of course from its very nature such a body as the National Free Church Council can not speak with any real authority. Our great need is leadership. We want a man, or several men, of the caliber of the late Dr. Rainy—men qualified to lead, and prepared to lead, men of statesmanlike mind and of heroic determination—who will convince us that there is no time to be lost, that we must either unite, or perish as corporate forces."

"But," I urged, "no amount of leadership can make up for the lamentable absence of a true church-consciousness among the rank and file of our membership. Is it not the case that so long as the 'religious club' conception of the Church prevails, amalgamation—for it would be amalgamation and not union—would only exhibit on a large scale and a hundred times intensified the worst features of our present type of churchmanship? If our motive is to be anything higher than the ambition to match the organic unity of the Church of England with the unity of a national United Free Church, then we must first revive the spiritual and apostolic doctrine of the Church as the body of Christ."

PASSION FOR UNITY LACKING.

"I entirely agree with you, and my aim throughout is to help toward the revival of that passion for unity which springs directly from a revived church-consciousness. In one sense our people are, as you say, not ripe for union, that is, for any practical constructive scheme. But I believe the time is fully ripe for discussion of the right kind in church meetings and courts.

"While it is true that many of our people lack a true conception of the church, it is equally true that they feel our denominational divisions to be a reproach and a hindrance. They feel that there is something profoundly wrong in a state of affairs which allows bodies to remain divided when they are no longer opposed in principle. There is a tendency toward a spiritual synthesis—people are trying to feel their way toward a spiritual basis of union. You seem to think that there is a tendency to base the desire for union upon merely utilitarian considerations. I admit that; yet I would not for a single moment rule such considerations out of court. I confess to being something of a pragmatist, and can not see why considerations of what you call utilitarianism, but what I like to term efficiency, should be incompatible with a truly spiritual movement toward union.

WHY UNION?

"I would base my plea for union upon a twofold consideration. I would say first and foremost that our present divisions can not commend themselves to the Lord Jesus Christ. That is the fundamental consideration. But if we owe personal loyalty and obedience to our Lord, we are also responsible for the carrying out of his commission in the best and most efficient way, and here is where so-called 'utilitarian' considerations must be given their rightful place.

"The question of our empty churches and the terrible overchurching of certain districts is surely not a question of mere utilitarian interest! The most momentous spiritual issues are bound up with it. I could take you to a typical London district where, within a radius of about a mile, there are twelve nonconformist churches, none of them more than half full, and most of them far from half full. Several of them support mission halls in the same neighborhood so close together that they disturb one another when they sing. That such a state of affairs makes for practical inefficiency and for financial weakness is obvious; but what of the spiritual side of things? Would any one be prepared to maintain that a necessarily competitive relation of the various churches in one district makes for spiritual dynamic or edification?

ENORMOUS WASTES THROUGH DIVISION.

"The waste of money is serious enough, especially when for years to come the incomes of all religious organizations will be sorely reduced; but what of the waste of men? What of the consequent depression and loss of heart and hope? What of the influence of such a condition upon the surrounding constituency?

"We have been told ad nauseam that our divisions are justified by an 'underlying unity'; but do we really believe that divisions can possibly minister to unity where they have no absolute and vital reason for being? Overlapping and the consequent competition is a tragedy at all times; but when it is allowed to persist without any adequate excuse, when churches are acquiescing in it in order to uphold divisions, the historical reasons for which are actually unknown to the bulk of their members and would mean nothing were they known, the case seems hopeless. We have arrived at a point when our divisions are merely divisions, when the consequent material and spiritual waste and the demoralization of a competitive atmosphere are felt to be intolerable."

WHAT THE WAR IS TEACHING THE CHURCH.

"Do you not feel that the present world-crisis has opened the way for a new movement toward church union?"

"Most decidedly," agreed Mr. Brierley. "I believe that the great call of the present crisis to the Christian churches is to renounce all damaging divisions. On every hand vicious dividing lines are disappearing, and, where they still seem to subsist, it needs only one decisive blow to bring the ramparts down. The war is teaching us that unity does not come by cut-and-dried schemes and plans, but is born of a great common ideal and purpose. When people ask me how I am going to start putting my theories into practice, I tell them that I have no scheme or program whatever. What I want to see is the inspiration and growth of a heart-movement toward union.

"Some of my friends ask me why have I waited so long before making my voice heard on the matter. There is only one answer—the present crisis has seemed to me to constitute a call to break silence; for the war has effected an enormous change in the psychology of the public mind, and words that would have fallen on deaf ears a year ago meet with an eager response to-day. The time has come for a public discussion of the matter.

THE LADS IN THE TRENCHES.

"We must take the present awakening at its flood-tide. Men who have seen political, social, and economic traditions destroyed in a day, as it were, and have proved the strength of union with the driving-power of a great common purpose behind it, will be ready to listen to the call to realize the dream of a united church—nay, they will expect and demand such a crusade from their religious leaders. Think of our lads in the trenches! They have realized the unity of the nation; many of them are passing through a vital and acutely personal religious experience. When they return, how are they likely to view churches which have hugged their divisions to their breast while the nation was sacrificing its divisions to a common cause? What will they think of churches still acquiescing in waste and dismemberment, still lacking concentration and the dynamic of one great purpose? I much fear that not a little of the religious force that has been generated in the trenches will be lost to our divisive Free Churches."

HOW CAN THE PULPIT HELP?

"How would you utilize the pulpit in the cause of Church union?"

"Mainly by expounding the apostolic doctrine of the Church; and in doing this I would take my starting-point from the Congregational principle of faith in the real presence of Jesus wherever two or three members of his Church are assembled as a church. I feel this offers a broader basis and makes a more universal appeal than any kind of sacramental doctrine. I would seek to revive the church ideal and to make it prominent once more—prominent, but not supreme. For while the sense of the real presence of Christ can be realized in its fulness only within the fellowship of the Church, it is realizable by the individual apart from the Church."

"What developments, if any, do you anticipate in the matter of our public worship?"

Mr. Brierley was emphatic upon the persistence of "free" prayer. "Whatever liturgical element may be introduced—and for myself I welcome a liturgical element—I can not conceive of Free-Church worship without free prayer. The old reproach that the devotional part of our services is scamped and regarded as mere 'preliminaries" has little point today. On every hand a greater reverence and dignity are characteristic of our worship. Of course, in the Free Churches the conduct of worship depends entirely upon the man in the pulpit. That is risky, but wherever there is a genuine church-consciousness, the congregation will insist upon an atmosphere of true worship.

"It is for the minister to imbue his people with a right sense of what the Church is and stands for, and then they will demand from him a devotional service which shall be adequate to their church-consciousness. That is reasoning in a circle, if you like, but it is not a vicious circle. With regard to prayer—I find no lack of the spirit of prayer among Christian people. Indeed, what has kept many intellects sane at this time has been the reality and grasp of prayer—they have a hold on God in prayer and are safe. Nothing has impressed me more during these months than the united prayer-meetings in my own district, in which two Anglican churches took part. It was not merely the encouragement and inspiration of seeing the vicars of those two churches coming with hundreds of their parishioners to unite in prayer with us in my own school-room; the meetings themselves were full of spiritual uplift and made a deep impression upon me."

ENTER INTO THY CLOSET.

These hours of repose were, I think, the most valuable hours of the day, and the day of repose the most valuable day of the week. I had but one rule for its observance—to do no manner of work. Sometimes I read a novel or poem or a devotional book; sometimes I slept; sometimes I simply listened. In June, 1889, I preached in Plymouth Church a sermon born of my own experience, on "Listening to God." From this sermon I quote a few sentences:

"The art of listening is an art; but of all forms and phases of that art spiritual listening is the highest. To listen to the voice of men, getting from your next-door neighbor some knowledge that you do not possess; getting from every kind of teaching and out of every man you meet some new impulse and some new equipment—that is art. But to stand face to face with the Almighty, to listen to the Voice that makes no trembling on the air, to receive the impression that produces no external symbol on the printed page, to hear God, this is the highest of all."—Lyman Abbott, in his Reminiscences.

How Childhood Pays for the War.

My opportunities were exceptional. I talked with a friend of my husband, a captain in the cavalry.

"So you think the war has not changed us?" he said. "Come with me."

He took me to hospital after hospital. Outside, these looked as they had always looked; but once inside the doors, you saw that they were overflowing. Literally overflowing. They overflowed into the schools, which were full of wounded, nursed for the most part by volunteers from among the women of the city; and I was to learn later that nearly every schoolhouse in France was similarly burdened, education paying its tax to war along with all the other activities of life.—The Christian Herald.

Faith is letting go of anything tangible and resting in God alone. Reason can climb to the highest peak of understanding, but beyond is space where Reason can find no foot-hold, owing not to defect but to limitation. Faith has no limitation, therefore it is only when Reason, entrusting itself to the wings of Faith, is borne through space that it finds eternal satisfaction and active rest in God.—The Living Church.

The Visitor

Across the Andes

WE LEFT Santiago all too soon. It is a very fascinating city. Surrounded by mountains like Jerusalem it feels compact and complete, for in recent years it has grown very rapidly and is still growing. A half-million souls now reside in this capital city of the Chilean Republic. Our need to be in Buenos Aires, on the direct opposite side of the continent, at a certain date compelled our deputation to charter a special train to carry us over the Andes, as the regular train runs only once a week. We left Santiago in the early evening and arrived at Los Andes, a town in the foothills, at 10 o'clock, where we remained all night. At 7 o'clock next morning our train was awaiting us on the narrow gauge track ready to climb the mighty ranges. By this time our party had been reduced to about thirty, some fifteen having been left behind at Lima, La Paz, Valparaiso and Santiago. There yet remained with the deputation the Argentine and Brazilian missionaries and native leaders who had been with us at the Panama Conference.

For thirteen hours of a perfect day we were circling amid the lofty peaks of the Chilean and Argentine Andes. We crossed the pass at about 13,000 feet, most of us getting out for a light snowball frolic when we came to the divide. At one point we could see where the old trail branched off from the route taken by the railroad. This trail was the way across the mountains before the railroad was built. At the place where it crosses the divide the Argentine government placed a great marble figure of Christ—the Christ of the Andes—some years ago as a token of the friendship that must always obtain between Chile and Argentina. This extraordinary monument is one of the sights of South America. We, like most modern travelers, had to miss it, because no one nowadays goes by way of the old trail. Still some of us felt that had not the duties of our deputation compelled us to go straight to Buenos Aires we would have liked nothing better than to extend our stay in the mountains by two or three days and go over the pass on mule-back, taking in "The Christ of the Andes."

I shall not indulge my pen in any imaginative description of the sights of the mountains. And this is an exhibition of real self-restraint on the part of the aforesaid pen, as no other such temptation to undertake a piece of "fine writting" has been encountered on this journey. I can only refer in a matter of fact way to the height of some of the great peaks that arose above us—Tupungata, 22,000 feet and Aconcagua, 23,000 feet,—the charming little Lake of the Incas that nestled in a hollow of mountains, the comfortable arrangements made by the railway for our journey, the steep inclines where the engine had to grip the cog slats that lay between the rails and even then to go but little faster than a man could walk, the spiral winding of the rails around the side of mighty hills enabling us at times to look down hundreds of feet below on the very ground we had covered an hour before, the long tunnel that pierces the last hill at the top of the Cordillera—these are some of the facts with which my recollection of the journey is studded. Most of the beautiful scenery is on the Chilean side, though the Argentine side is not devoid of attractiveness. We run down at lively speed. No power is needed, Gravitation takes us down to a level of 2,000 feet, where we find ourselves passing great detached masses of red colored stone that remind one of the Garden of the Gods in Colorado.

By 8:30 in the evening we arrive at Mendoza, a city of 50,000 people, the center of the chief wine producing country of South America. We are on the edge of the great flat Argentine prairie now—there'll be no more mountains, not even a hill, this side of the Atlantic coast which is about 700 miles away. We spend the night in Mendoza. On the morrow we visit the great statue of San Martin, an elaborate heroic memorial picturing with extraordinary realism the scenes connected with the raising of an Argentine army a century ago to go to the aid of Chile in her struggle for independence from the Spanish rule, a struggle through which San Martin had just victoriously carried Argentine herself. The city is practically new, though one of the oldest on the continent, having been rebuilt since a long protracted earthquake, or series of quakes, destroyed it some fifty years ago.

At Mendoza I attended a Methodist mission, the only Protestant work in the city. They had arranged a big reception for us and their beautiful house of worship was packed full of people eager to hear their Bishop Shepard, of Kansas City, who was in our deputation. Several others of us spoke.

We left Mendoza in the early afternoon and found ourselves in a through train due to arrive in Buenos Aires in exactly twenty-four hours. They do not use our Pullman kind of sleepers, but follow the European fashion of compartments. The rails are laid a little wider than our standard gauge, so a compartment berth, which runs lengthwise across the width of the car, gives you plenty of room to stretch out in. The ride was thoroughly comfortable. We anticipated heavy dust, but a rain seemed to have fallen all the way ahead of us and we passed across the flat pampas as enjoyably as though we were sitting in our own parlor. There was nothing to see on the way but cattle, cattle and yet more cattle, hundreds of thousands of head of as fine beeves as one ever looked at. We passed through no cities, hardly through an interesting looking town. There are very few populous centers in Argentina. People gravitate to the large cities, and especially to Buenos Aires, where even the governors of many of the provinces of the Republic make their residence. Colonizing the country is very difficult, though efforts are being made now by the immigration department of the government to carry the shiploads of Italian, German and Spanish immigrants past the attractions of the great city at whose port they enter and into the open interior where the greater economic opportunity awaits them.

We arrived at Buenos Aires in the middle of Sunday afternoon. With a facile hospitality we will always remember, our baggage was taken through the customs without care or thought by any of us while we, meantime, were conveyed in automobiles to a large public hall in the center of the city where we found a great congregation of Christian people awaiting us. That ride from the station disclosed to us the fact that we were in a new world as compared to the cities on the west coast of the continent. Buenos Aires is a wonderful city. With a million and a half of souls it is outranked in the western hemisphere only by New York, Chicago and Philadelphia, if indeed Philadelphia is any larger. And there is no city in North America more beautiful in outward aspect than Buenos Aires. Boulevards, parks, public buildings, churches, residences, business streets—everything that makes an impression on the traveler is superb. The city feels at once like Paris, and you find on inquiry that it is being developed with Paris constantly before its eye as a model. Statues memorializing events in the Argentine history and drawn from classic lore abound everywhere in great profusion. There is a touch of the artistic about everything. When you have been in the city awhile this decorative aspect of things begins to pall on your heavier Yankee sensibilities. You'd like to see things a little more practical and useful. But this may be a matter of taste merely, and it has long been an established principle with mankind that concerning matters of taste there ought to be no dispute. So we will leave the Latins of Buenos Aires to their own likes and preferences and return to our meeting at the Italian Opera Hall. It was a welcome meeting. Our speeches brought the messages of Panama to the missionary forces and the young church. The singing was led by the Salvation Army band. The whole occasion was full of inspiration, though we were conscious of a certain tension in the situation, the cause of which we learned the next morning.

On Sunday evening after a long street car ride of more than an hour I found myself at the door of what I supposed to be the single Disciples' mission church in South America. I scanned the sign board over the door to find some distinguishing title among the Spanish words by which I could be sure, before opening the door, that it was really the church of my own brethren which I had been hunting for. But I found no suggestion of "Disciples" or "Church of Christ." I just saw the Spanish words for "Evangelical Church," with which words I had at that time become quite familiar. Still not quite certain that I was at the right door, I listened to the voice that was speaking within and recognized it as that of President Charles T. Paul, of the College of Missions, Indianapolis, and so I went in. When I had accustomed my ears to the surprise of hearing my "companero" speaking in the Spanish tongue with an apparent fluency equal to that possessed by one born in old Madrid, and unable to make out what he was saying, I fell to reflecting on the sign over the door. The more I thought of it the more enthusiastic I became over that sign. The whole Protestant movement in Latin America goes by the name Evangelical. The people understand that that term describes the Christian churches that are non-Roman. But besides this title all the houses of worship bear some denominational name or other—Methodist Episcopal, Baptist, Presbyterian, etc. These denominational distinctions are the occasion of confusion among evangelical converts and the butt of ridicule on the part of the Roman church. But here is a little chapel that does not wear any denominational title nor do its workers care for any denominational distinction, nor does the great organization in the United States—the Christian Woman's Board of Missions—whose funds support it, leave any desire to plant or foster any denominational doctrines or interests in this Rome-blighted land. This chapel is simply evangelical; its workers are Christians or Disciples only, acknowledging their unity with all Christians and with all evangelical churches in this community and everywhere in the world. They have no sectarian interests to serve: they care to serve only the Kingdom of God, and in doing so to hold uninhibited and unprejudiced communion and intercourse with all other Christians and Christian congregations of whatever name or sign.

I later told the substance of these musings of mine to the leading Methodist missionary leader of Argentina, adding, however, my honest confession that we Disciples did not ourselves quite live up to our undenominational ideal. His response greatly cheered me. He declared with fervor that he hoped the day would come, and expected it to come soon, when the name Methodist Episcopal would be taken down from every church planted or supported by Methodist mission funds in South America. Our only hope of taking these countries for Christ, he said, lies in a united church on the mission field.

I pointed out to him that I believed the Disciples' missionary organizations of North America would presently be considering the expenditure of a greatly increased sum of money in South America, and that I, for my part, had no interest in encouraging them to do so unless the mission forces on the field and the mission boards at home could get together in some great union program which would eliminate denominational control and denominational distinctions in mission work. In other words, I said, the more undenominational a mission work is the more money I believe the Disciples will give to it.

He liked that spirit and said so. And then, having won his approval to that sort of policy when the shoe was on my foot I decided to try it on his foot and see what reaction I would get. So I called his attention to the fact that the Methodist Church of Buenos Aires had recently sold its property for a large sum—if I remember accurately it was something like $200,000. This sum is going to be reinvested in Christian enterprises in the city. It will be far and away the largest amount of money ever spent at a single stroke in South American evangelical missions. Now, I said, it seems to me that the expenditure of that vast fund ought not to be controlled by the Methodist board in the United States, but by all the boards working co-operatively on a great united policy of mission work in Argentina. What do you think of that? I asked.

"I think that is absolutely right," he said, and to complete my amazement at his grasp of the principle of Christian unity, he added:

"The fact is that what the Methodists do with this money concerns the Baptists and Disciples and all the rest of you quite as much as it concerns the Methodists. It isn't Methodist money. It's Christ's money, and it ought to be spent on a big union program, a program that takes into account all the rest of Christ's work in this country."

Well, that kind of talking rejoiced my soul. I felt like saying Simeon's prayer and going home!

But see how far I have wandered away while Dr. Paul is speaking in an unknown tongue! I sat beside Mrs. Paul in Santiago on the previous Sunday evening when her distinguished husband had given the high sign of cold feet on the agreement he had made with her and me to speak in Spanish, and instead, had fallen back upon an interpreter. But now he is positively eloquent in Spanish. He seems to revel in it. The next evening he tried his Spanish on a more representative audience at an opening session of our regional conference. Afterward the bi-linguists declared that he spoke better than many missionaries who had been on the field ten years. From that time on they couldn't give this modest man enough speaking to do. He was eager for it. He became the hardest worked member of our deputation—in public speaking. He went everywhere. He spoke to Italians in their own tongue, to a French congregation in French, to a German group in the language of the Kaiser and if there had been a Russian or a Chinese colony he would have preached to them in the language "understanded by them all." In all these tongues he had had experience, but in Spanish he had never had occasion to try his linguistic wings before.

Mr. and Mrs. T. F. Reavis and Miss Zona Smith are the missionaries in charge of the Disciples' work in Buenos Aires. They have developed congregations at two points, this one among Spanish speaking and the other among Italian speaking people. The latter has no building, but meets in a rented hall. The building in which the Spanish work is conducted is worth probably $15,000 in American money. Mr. and Mrs. Reavis live on the upper floor of this building. The lower floor is used for congregational and school purposes. On the last Sunday evening of our three Sundays in Buenos Aires Mr. Paul and I insisted on Mr. Reavis doing the preaching. He spoke in Spanish and I could not understand his words, but it was evident that he was finding the hearts of his hearers. Mrs. Reavis is a capable musician, playing the organ in the service. She seconds her husband's undertakings and leads him in the things wherein it is good for a man to be led. The Reavises come from Canton University in Missouri. Mr. Reavis is ambitious to enlarge his usefulness among the Argentine people. He is studying this year in the University of Buenos Aires. In this he sought the counsel of President Paul and myself as well as that of the officers of the Board in whose employ he is. There is no question as to the advisability of such a program. I believe that his influence for Christ will be increased one hundred fold should his strength allow him to continue to study in the University for two or three year. Mr. Reavis confesses that he was greatly helped by attending the Panama Congress. His work is more meaningful in his own eyes since that great gathering. We enjoyed his fellowship with our deputation from Panama to Buenos Aires. I think he took the palm on board our boats for the best stories. I cannot think of Mr. and Mrs. Reavis without deep feeling of desire that their modest work, carried on with pathetically limited resources may be greatly reinforced with other workers and more adequate means. At our deputation's visit to Indianapolis the other day, I learned that there is good ground for expecting the Woman's Board greatly to enlarge their work in this very promising republic.

A HELPFUL SERMON.

A certain bishop of the Methodist Church South was a very eloquent preacher. He told the following story on himself as an illustration of the fact that his sermons did not always have the effect he desired.

He had had what Methodist preachers were wont to call "a good time" preaching in one of the smaller Southern cities, and as soon as the service was over, many people went to him to express their appreciation of his sermon. One woman in particular was most outspoken in its praise.

"Why, bishop," she said, "you can never know what your sermon meant to me. It was just like water to a drowning man!"

THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY

EDITORIAL

DO YOU BEAR THE MARKET FOR YOUR CHURCH?

THOSE familiar with the market reports are used to the terms "bulls" and "bears." The "bear," in the grain or stock market, is the man who has an interest in lowering prices. He tells all the derogatory things he can about the stock in question that he may buy it up at the lowest price possible.

The "bear" of the market is a respectable individual because there are sense and reason in his undertaking to beat down prices for his own advantage. The "bear" in the church has no such respectability because he often indulges a blind and unreasoning pessimism about spiritual things.

The church pessimist is sure the minister's sermons are not as good as they used to be. He finds the audiences falling off. He prophesies near-bankruptcy for the institution. Elijah in the desert is not more cast down than is he. This kind of doubt springs from unbelief.

There are many reasons for believing the best of your church and your minister. Religion is a real interest in the human heart. It is more permanent than any other kind of human interest. There may be waves in this interest; it may have the ebb and flow of the tide. It will not disappear. Your church rests upon this interest.

Your minister, too, is but a man. This month he may not be well, or he may not be happy. He may need your encouragement instead of your doubts. You may depend upon it, however, that religion is big enough to keep most ministers true at heart.

No man makes a mistake in trying for a higher rating in the community for his church and his minister.

A FAITH MADE PERFECT

THE young Christian often starts on the Christian way haltingly. The beautiful hypothesis of faith is alluring but still it has in it a certain measure of uncertainty. The attitude of this Christian may be that of the father of the poor demon-possessed son, "Lord, I believe; help thou my unbelief."

We start life with many hypotheses. These are proved in experience or thrown on the discard for more worthy theories. The Christian adventure of faith is one that brings eventually a glorious sense of conviction. Life lived in this way is life full of the deepest blessings.

We begin living in the service of the Christ ideal of life. Christ is not the only way, but at last we come into a deep conviction that his is the best way. This is a Way in which we cease to be anxious about many things. It is a Way in which service becomes one of the deepest joys. It is a Way which can look at the setting sun of life with but little sadness and a great hope.

We once tried to defend Christianity with elaborate intellectual arguments. We now reply to the skeptic as Philip did to Nathaniel, "Come and see."

NATURE AND RELIGION

IN PRIMITIVE times, man found religious inspiration in the surroundings of nature. Abraham worshiped under the oak of Mamre. Many of the patriarchs worshiped on hilltops, or found religious inspiration in some other striking natural object.

Modern man often stands unawed in the presence of tremendous forces around him which lose none of their wonder after they have been explained by science. The vacation time will make most of us better acquainted with the great out-door world. To deeper religious spirits will come thoughts of the relation of man to all these great processes.

Two men stood viewing Niagara Falls. One said, "What a lot of power is going to waste!" The other said, "How beautiful the water is!" Each of these attitudes is needed at times, but the American needs rather more exhortation to the latter state of mind.

THE LABOR OF LITTLE CHILDREN

THE Protestant churches of America have a social creed. This "creed" deals in large measure with the conditions of labor in this country. Few reforms demanded by this outstanding document are of more importance than that abolishing the labor of little children. Whether in the sweat-shop of the big city or in the cotton mills of the south, it may be said that child labor is sin.

Nothing but the desire for immediate profits leads anyone to take children out of school and away from educative play and put them into the dull routine of the labor that is assigned to children. England learned and is still learning that child labor is the sure beginning of national degeneracy.

The church which is indifferent to a great question like this justly merits the scorn which right-thinking men have for an institution which is more interested in academic theories than in human life and welfare.

WOULD DIVORCE RELIGION AND SERVICE

THE obscurantism in the churches of this country has been thoroughly aroused against social service. The latest fusillade comes from The Reformed Church Review.

> "As we view it, the Church by thus allying itself with secular movements is endeavoring to cure the evils of the social life by a species of legalism, striving to purify the sinful nature of man by attacking the outside, forgetting that crimes and violations of law are the external marks only of an inward demoralization and rottenness of the heart. The root of the evil in the world is in the human heart, and to redeem the world the inner spiritual nature must be first purified. The crime committed is the fruit of sin in the heart. You may punish the criminal for violating the law, but that does not cure the sinful heart. The Christian minister has to do with sin, not with crime. When, therefore, he allies himself with the officers of the law in arresting criminals he is departing from his proper function and weakening his power and ability to cure the sin in the heart."

This journal would doubtless regard Paul's work in raising funds for the poor saints in Jerusalem as so much wasted time.

WHAT TO DO WITH OUR WAR PROFITS

WERE it not for the profits on war supplies, the United States would be feeling the financial depression which has visited so many parts of the world. While the holders of war munition stock are the people who feel most immediately the financial help that has come to this country from the war, in a certain sense our whole population participates in these profits, and in the profits on all other war supplies. Critical voices are raised against us in Europe as a nation which enriches itself on the blood and suffering of sister nations.

The need of famine relief in Europe suggests a way to dispose of these profits which will help to lift the odium from our country and lay broad and deep the foundations of future peace. In every one of the afflicted and overridden smaller nations people are literally dying for lack of food. In all the days of Jewish oppression since the time of bondage in Egypt, perhaps never have so many Jews died from want. They have been herded from place to place in the Russian empire and the Russians have not been able to feed them properly in the great concentration camps.

The need of Belgian relief will be ever pressing until the country is once more restored to its normal economic organization. Before the war it was the most densely populated of the countries of Europe. The people lived only by the greatest economy and by the intensest industry. The war has torn up their fields and taken away their men.

HONEST STATISTICS

IT IS rather embarrassing to see the Disciples of Christ reported every year by the compilers of church statistics as having uncertain reports concerning their institutions.

The trouble lies chiefly with the local church. Many churches put names on the membership roll but never take any off. They will report a membership of a thousand when five hundred is nearer the facts. Many other facts besides membership are now desired by the compilers of statistics, but pastors and church clerks often deem this information unimportant.

We need also some uniform method by which we shall report the active and inactive members of our churches. This distinction has for several years been made in the Illinois year-book, but not in the national year-book. Even when the distinction is made, very loose definitions are given of active and inactive members.

Very often a member resides at a distance, but through letters and contributions maintains some real fellowship with his church, much more real that that of a member who resides in the neighborhood but has not attended church services for five years.

The leaders who get out the national year-book would perform a real service by recommending some uniform basis upon which to report the active membership of the churches.

ARE THE GREAT PEOPLE ALL DEAD?

THE small boy who begins to read history has a feeling of disappointment that he lived too late in the world's history to know a great man. Some kinds of people are talking about the chances people used to have to make money or to climb the ladder of success, with the implication that those days are over.

Perhaps we need to realize that we are living in the greatest epoch of the world's history. It is not the war that makes this epoch great, though its events will have something to do with the forming of a new world. Religion is more alert and resourceful than it has ever before been. Education, invention, indeed everything that is the result of human intelligence is at a high state of development.

It is a time that demands great deeds of us. Sleeping churches must be aroused. Half-efficient Christians must be made ready for service. The call of God comes now to every good man and true to put forth his best in behalf of the kingdom.

THE BOY SCOUTS AND THE CHURCH

MANY of the churches are glad to testify that they no longer have a dearth of boys. They are the churches where a patrol of the Boy Scout movement has made its home. The movement is of comparatively recent origin but in a short time a great company of boys have been enrolled under its banner.

In a formal sense, the Boy Scout movement is not religious. It is not denominational and it may be found in a school building as well as in a church. The churches that have given a roof to the movement have done so because they find that it makes a real contribution to the unfolding life of the boy.

The Boy Scout movement is not militaristic. It rests fundamentally upon a knowledge of nature such as in times past was useful to Indians or to such men as Daniel Boone. On this base has been built up a structure involving much modern knowledge, such as signalling and first aid. The movement has no ritual but it does have an oath of allegiance, and progressive degrees with merit badges.

In connection with a Bible school, the patrol is often a class somewhere between the ages of twelve and eighteen. The boys never meet except under the supervision of adult leaders called scout-masters. Sometimes the scout-master is also the Bible school teacher

That there is a strong ethical interest in the Boy Scout movement is seen in the fact that the scouts' ideal is to do some one a good turn every day. The Scout law has twelve injunctions, one of which is to be reverent.

THE UNION SUNDAY EVENING SERVICE

IN MANY cities and smaller towns there will be held during the hot months union Sunday evening services. The various churches which have done their work in an isolated way during the winter months are driven by the hard necessities of the summer time to combine their forces.

It is in such times as this that the people see the beauty and utility of a common program for the churches of the community. The preacher who can outline in one of these union meetings a comprehensive program for the churches of the community will be heard more willingly than others of the series.

Who other than the Disciple preacher has a deeper obligation to produce such a program? It must not be the product of wandering impulses, but must arise out of a study of community problems. No newcomer to town may undertake to formulate such a plan, but men of experience in the community may easily lay out a system for concerted action which will make religion far more effective in that town.

SUMMER TIME IN THE RURAL CHURCH

MANY rural churches must close during the winter on account of bad roads. It is during the summer months that most of the work of giving the children religious truth is to be done.

At this very time of year when there is a most favorable opportunity to do good in rural districts, there may be no preacher in sight. Perhaps there will be visitors in the neighborhood from the cities, who for a little while are resting in the community—preachers of the gospel. Many a weary city preacher will find an audience far more interested and interesting in the country than he left behind in the city. He has a chance while on his vacation to do some of the kind of preaching that Alexander Campbell did during most of his life, preaching in country districts, with no financial reward in sight. Such an opportunity will test the real joy our preachers have in proclaiming the good tidings.

The Larger Christian World

A DEPARTMENT OF INTERDENOMINATIONAL ACQUAINTANCE :: By Orvis F. Jordan

Christian Leaders Honored With Degrees.

This is the time of year when the honorary degrees are given out and some of those conferred by the great universities this season have peculiar fitness. The awards of the doctorate of divinity possess special interest. All will discern the fitness of the recognition Harvard has thus made of Dean George Hodges and President Henry Churchill King. The former was thus characterized by President Lowell: "A good and faithful servant, who has expended and increased his ample talents in his Master's work." Concerning Dr. King, the Harvard president said: "He has exerted a profound spiritual influence throughout the land by helping large numbers of young men to a broader and deeper apprehension of Christianity."

President Fitch Resigns.

President Albert P. Fitch has gained the credit of building up a well-nigh defunct institution. Andover Seminary, the oldest institution of its character among the Congregationalists, was removed to a site near Harvard University, and here it has come into its own again. Following this success, comes the announcement that President Fitch has resigned and will one year hence become professor of Biblical History and College Preacher at Amherst.

Pittsburgh Protestants Organize.

The federation idea is coming into Pittsburgh. Already eight leading denominations have voted formally to join in The Pittsburgh Council of the Church of Christ. No single denomination has voted to reject the plan and others are expected to fall into line soon.

Churches Remember War Sufferers.

The Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America continues to agitate the importance of large contributions in America for the relief of war sufferers. While chief stress has been placed upon the needs of the Armenians, the cause of the French and Belgian Protestants has also been given considerable attention. Stories come also of terrible suffering in the eastern war zone affecting Jews and Poles with great severity. The visit of Secretary Macfarland has given him first hand information with regard to conditions there.

Mission Secretary Becomes Missionary.

The secretary of the United Presbyterian Foreign Board is Dr. Charles R. Watson. He has been known for his skill and statesmanlike vision in planning the mission work of his denomination. The tidings have recently come of his appointment as the President of Cairo University. This is a new institution planned for the capital of Egypt as the literary and intellectual center of the Mohammedan world.

Little Rock Church in Limelight.

A little church of twenty-five members has been the bone of contention this year between two great denominations. The High Street Presbyterian church of Little Rock, Ark., transferred its ecclesiastical fellowship from the southern to the northern branch of the denomination. As usual in the case of such transfers, there was a great outcry and charges were bandied about. The whole incident, ridiculously small in the actual importance of the event, serves to illustrate the wickedness of the sectional spirit in religion. The union of northern and southern Methodists ought to be followed at once by the union of the northern and southern Presbyterians.

Church Publicity Expounded.

Rev. Christian F. Reisner is secretary of a branch of the World's Advertising Clubs which gives attention to church publicity. The convention of the advertising men has been in session in Philadelphia and stirring addresses have been made on promoting religion with publicity methods.

Union Churches

A COMMUNITY FELLOWSHIP IN IOWA.

THAT modern religion should function in the satisfaction of all human needs is illustrated in the success of the Community Church in rural districts and small towns. At Beech, Iowa, a religious fellowship of this character has been established. It is an experiment, yet the country round about is greatly stirred with the possibilities of usefulness presented. The purpose of the community church movement, if the enterprise can be so designated, is to serve the whole life—the mental, moral, and even physical, as well as the spiritual.

The community about the little town of Beech, without definite church organization, has built a beautiful and commodious church. It has a stucco-bungalow exterior, beautifully finished within, equipped with full basement conveniently divided into social rooms for the purposes of a village church. The lighting and heating plants are modern and of the best manufacture. In all, the building meets the needs of the people. The most notable consideration, however, is the fact that the building was erected and paid for as a community enterprise, with no thought of denominationl control, the uppermost idea being that it might serve the interests of all.

Beech is a new town. It came almost in a night as the result of the extension of the Rock Island short line from Des Moines to Kansas City. The population from Sandyville, three miles distant, was attracted to the railroad, and a new town came into being at the expense of the old. Strangely, the churches of the old town, after much discussion, decided not to move. Thus arose the demand for the new church in Beech.

When the building was but partly completed a few interested workers called me to conduct an evangelistic mission. Pleasantville, Iowa, church to which I was ministering, kindly let me supply my pulpit and I accepted the invitation. Seats were secured and the mission opened. At first the purposes of the meeting were indefinite. After a week it was decided that the invitations should be given and some simple organization formed. Invitations were regularly given for the next ten days in which ninety-four responded. The services were conducted on a broad and liberal basis and the joy of the work was indeed great. While the larger number of the persons making the good confession united with the Disciples, or stated this as their preference, this was due to local conditions rather than to the character of the preaching. The sermons were delivered with the thought of a full gospel presentation and a perfect co-operation of the country-side. In the provisional organization, which will no doubt become permanent, all believers of whatsoever faith were asked to come with perfect freedom, the test of fellowship being unstated except as to life.

The plan of organization was as simple as possible. Each member was asked to state his denominational preference and was so enrolled. An advisory committee of ten facilitates the leadership of the work. From this committee the congregation has elected a chairman, clerk, treasurer and finance committee, each to serve one year. With this easy organization and no special burden of authority from any external source it is thought that success will depend upon the merits of the officers chosen and the support which the membership accords them. With the aims which the body has set before it realized, the community fellowship will be contributing more as a united force than would be possible should division of interests prevail.

Following the meeting, the Fellowship called Professor Sherman Kirk, of Drake University, to minister in the Beech church. His work has been constructive and it has conscientiously carried forward the highest aims of the people. The little building, costing almost four thousand dollars, has been dedicated free of debt in less than six months after the meeting was held which gave the congregation being. The dedicatory services were in the hands of Rev. Walter Sandy, who was born near the town.

That the work will succeed is assured from the illustrations of similar works. The many such fellowships rapidly springing up over the country are calling attention to a long neglected field. The Urbandale church at Des Moines, churches at Hartford, Melcher, and now the new one at Beech, all within a radius of fifteen miles, show what interest is being developed. These organizations are broad and the lines of activity many. Graded Bible-schools, young people's societies, and organizations for men and women are among the lines of service. All are planned to meet a real need in rural community life; all seem to be strong and progressive organizations for real service.

Lesson for July 30.

THE WORD OF THE CROSS.

Golden Text: Far be it from me to glory, save in the cross of our Lord Jesus Christ. Galatians 6:14.

Lesson 1 Corinthians 1:1-2:5: 1 Corinthians 1:18-2:2 printed. Memorize verses 1:22-24.

1 (18) For the word of the cross is to them that perish foolishness; but unto us who are saved it is the power of God. (19) For it is written,

I will destroy the wisdom of the wise,
And the discernment of the discerning will I bring to nought.

(20) Where is the wise? where is the scribe? where is the disputer of this world? hath not God made foolish the wisdom of the world? (21) For seeing that in the wisdom of God the world through its wisdom knew not God, it was God's good pleasure through the foolishness of the preaching to save them that believe. (22) Seeing that Jews ask for signs, and Greeks seek after wisdom: (23) but we preach Christ crucified, unto Jews a stumbling-block, and unto Gentiles foolishness; (24) but unto them that are called, both Jews and Greeks, Christ the power of God, and the wisdom of God. (25) Because the foolishness of God is wiser than men; and the weakness of God is stronger than men.

(26) For behold your calling, brethren, that not many wise after the flesh, not many mighty, not many noble, are called: (27) but God chose the foolish things of the world, that he might put to shame them that are wise; and God chose the weak things of the world, that he might put to shame the things that are strong; (28) and the base things of the world and the things that are despised, did God choose, yea, and the things that are not, that he might bring to nought the things that are: (29) that no flesh should glory before God. (30) But of him are ye in Christ Jesus, who was made unto us wisdom from God, and righteousness and sanctification, and redemption: (31) that, according as it is written, He that glorieth, let him glory in the Lord.

2 (1) And I, brethren, when I came into you, came not with excellency of speech or of wisdom, proclaiming to you the testimony of God. (2) For I determined not to know anything among you, save Jesus Christ, and him crucified.

VERSE BY VERSE.

1:18. The word of the cross. The doctrine that salvation comes to man by the crucifixion of Jesus.—Them that perish. Those who refuse the offer of the gospel to save them. It is Paul's standing expression for the destiny of the wicked.—Us who are saved. Salvation is the certain result of a certain relation to God, which relation is a thing of the present.—The power of God. Not merely a demonstration of God's power, but God's power.

1:19. For it is written. The quotation is from the Septuagint version. It is a free quotation. The wisdom of the wise. This is a parable to the following phrase and means the same thing. The phrase which Paul uses was intended to show the stupidity of Judah in not seeing the fact of the judgment in the Assyrian invasion.

1:20. The wise? The Greek philosopher and his wisdom.—The scribe. The interpreters of the law. The wise men among the Jews. The disputers of this world. The Greek word may mean "inquirer." May refer to Greek sophistical reasoners.

1:21. In the wisdom of God. God's wisdom in dealing with man. The sense of their failure caused them to welcome the gospel.—The world through its wisdom. The wisdom of the world did not bring the knowledge of God's saving power.—It was God's good pleasure. When failure became manifest to the people. The time of his opportunity.—Through the foolishness of preaching. The proclamation of the gospel, which seemed to the Greeks foolishness. Not so much the act, but the substance of preaching.

1:22. That Jews ask for signs. They wanted an exhibition of God's power.—Greeks seek after wisdom. They prided themselves on their understanding and demanded proof that they could understand.

1:23. But we preach Christ crucified. We are not going to be diverted by the hunger for signs.—Christ. The Messiah.—Unto Jews a stumbling block. . . . Gentiles foolishness. These expressions show the opposition the gospel met.

1:24. Them that are called. Those who are willing to accept Jesus as the Messiah.—The power of God and the wisdom of God. Jesus was the power for the Jews and wisdom for the Greeks. He meets the demands of all.

1:25. The foolishness of God. The lowest manifestation of God's wisdom is greater than the highest of man's wisdom. The weakest of God's powers is stronger than the strongest of men's powers.

1:26. Behold. Or, ye behold. RVm.—Your calling. The call of God that comes to you through Christ. Not many wise after the flesh. The wisdom of men.—Not many mighty. Men of authority.—Noble. Well born, men who were not born slaves. It came to mean the better class of freemen.

1:27. Foolish things of this world. He has caused the things men call foolishness to praise him.—That he might put to shame them that are wise. "By exalting over them those whom they despised."

1:28. Base. The reverse of noble.—Despised. The things especially branded with contempt. Literally set at naught. Bring to naught the things that are. To reduce the pretender to ineffectiveness.

1:29. That no flesh should glory before God. This is the reason given for the above plan of God. No flesh should cloud the thought of God.

1:30. Of him. God.—Are ye. "Ye" is emphatic. Ye are his children and in this fact is your true dignity.—In Christ Jesus. God is the cause of your being in Christ.—Who was made unto us wisdom from God. Jesus is the best interpretation of God to men.

1:31. That. In order that.

2:1. And I. I therefore. Not with excellency of speech. He did not come with rhetoric or philosophy. This did not count.—The testimony of God. The message given him by God.

2:22. I determined not to know anything among you, save Jesus Christ. I did not care to know or preach anything beyond Jesus Christ and what I preached about him was that he was crucified.

Paul's Message

BY ASA McDANIEL.

IN Paul's message to the church at Corinth he recognized many good qualities in the people of that great city. By this method he drew the people close to him that they might receive his word. He sweetened their temper by deserving commendation, then gave them the message of the hour. The church at Corinth was made up of freedmen who had not had the best of training in matters of religion. Paul's method of approach was on this account very suggestive and helpful. He knew their limitations, and chose his language so as to be most helpful to them. It is not always our good fortune to be so well understood, before the instruction we have to impart is given. Sunday-school workers cannot become too familiar with Paul's method in dealing with those they would teach.

It is one of the characteristic traits of the class of people to whom Paul wrote, to follow any strong and winning personality. So when Paul was absent other leaders claimed their attention, and division was the result. This had to be corrected. Paul took the only method open to the Christian world to bring back the glories of a united church. He did not spend any time pointing out the errors of their leaders; but urged them to be loyal to their supreme leader, Jesus the Christ. This way of promoting unity among Christians has more promise than any attempt to remove difficulties by argument or by simply evading them. This does not mean that we should ignore the problems, but it does mean that we should seriously ask ourselves, What is the main cause of disunion? What is it, for example, that enables Christians to stand on the same platform when talking of their duty towards their neighbor, and that separates them when speaking of their duty towards God?

The Disciples of Christ have set themselves to the solution of this great question. If we are to have a convincing message it will be necessary for us to reconcile the factions in our own group. Those who have instrumental music and those who do not must live together in the same camp if the world is to take us seriously. It is well enough for us to work for the larger interests of Christian union, but these matters which have to do with the union of our local households must not be overlooked, for here is the real beginning of union. Our difficulties are not all beyond us, but within us, and reconciliation comes of the spirit and not of the letter. It is the willingness of the individual Christian to encourage reconciliation nearest at hand that means union of the Church at large. If we have not love, love that tends to bind us together in Christian union, other gifts and many words and deeds profit us nothing.

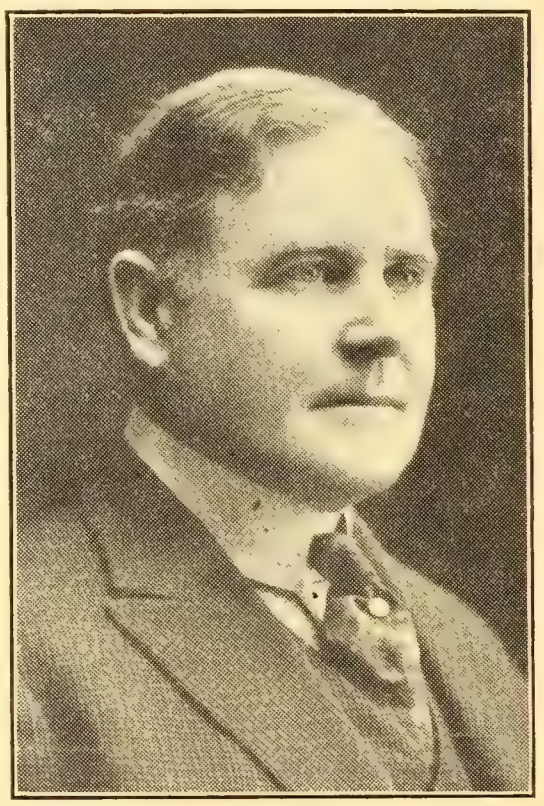
The strong argument for the truth of Christianity is the true Christian, the man filled with the spirit of Christ. The best proof of Christ's resurrection is a living church, which itself is walking in a new life, and drawing life from Him who hath overcome death.—Christlieb.

Disciples Table Talk

Disciple Pastors Lead in Attendance at Community Conference.

One of the cheering signs of the times among the Disciples is the fact that the preachers of this people are taking the lead in lines of social service and community betterment. B. H. Bruner, pastor at Arcola, Ill., writes that about thirty Disciple pastors were present at the recent Community Conference held at Champaign, in connection with the state university there. Mr. Bruner reports that more preachers of the Disciples were present than of any other fellowship. Upon his return home after the meetings, the Arcola pastor delivered a sermon to his congregation embodying the chief facts and truths brought out by the various addresses and reports at the conference.

"Go to Sunday School Day" at Bellefontaine, O.



July 2 was observed by the church at Bellefontaine, O., as "Go to Sunday School Day." Traverce Harrison, the pastor, led in the campaign. The purpose of the day was to demonstrate the power of the Sunday-school. Former residents of Bellefontaine, and hosts from surrounding towns and villages came together for the occasion. The total enrollment for the day's services was 7,239. The day began with three parallel sessions, two of these being held in the great new church building, the other in the city park. Over a thousand men assembled in the park, and they were addressed by Hon. Harry M. Daugherty, of Columbus, O. E. L. Miller, pastor at Belle Center, and C. A. McCalla, pastor at Rushsylvania, made addresses during the day. The day's events included three sessions, a parade in the afternoon, and a concert in afternoon and evening. Over 1,600 people participated in the parade. Bellefontaine's chief of police led. There were 125 automobiles in line. Of Mr. Harrison's class of Loyal Men over 450 marched. This great class has been built up in less than two years from an original membership of about 25.

Unique Fourth of July Celebration in Ohio County.

The Henry County, Ohio, Sunday-school Association has a unique way of celebrating the Fourth of July. With the introduction of a "sane fourth" this organization took advantage of the opportunity, rented the fair grounds at Napoleon, the county seat, with all of its appurtenances and arranged a splendid program. Extensive advertising brings people from throughout the county and vicinity, the attendance this year reaching more than three thousand people. The program this year consisted of an automobile parade, band music, and two addresses besides games and races. William F. Rothenburger, of Cleveland, a product of the county, was one of the speakers. Former celebrations on Independence day in this county were characterized by freely flowing liquor and many arrests. It is to the credit of the church forces that the day has been revolutionized and the county has gone dry twice. This is one of the finest pieces of work ever done by a religious organization. It has now become self-supporting and might well be copied by many other counties, writes Mr. Rothenburger. There is no better way to introduce the unchurched to higher ideals than to capture the management of a national holiday. There was no other celebration of importance throughout the whole county.

Home-Coming Year at Bethany Assembly.

This year (1916) is to be "home-coming year at Bethany Assembly, Indiana. An especially strong program has been prepared at greater expense than ever. Every member of the "Bethany Family," no matter how far he or she may have roamed from the "family hearthstone" is invited and is expected to come back sometime during the Assembly, July 26-August 18, writes W. E. M. Hackleman, president of the Assembly. Bethany has "children" in every state in the Union, and in foreign lands and many of them will be back for the home-coming. The following is the Home-Coming Committee: E. L. Day, Chairman, Indianapolis. L. C. Howe, Vice-Chairman, Noblesville. Clay Trusty, Sec'y-Treas., Indianapolis. Mrs. O. H. Griest, Carlisle. J. C. Todd, Bloomington. Senator E. A. Mock, Tipton. E. R. Edwards, Logansport. G. I. Hoover, Indianapolis. L. W. Jenkins, Martinsville. Mr. Hackleman rejorts that the management will put up a $100,000 Hotel and Sanitarium at Bethany next year, modern throughout and as good as the best and it will be run the year round.

Mr. Garry L. Cook, Dean of the Training School at Bethany Park, Ind.

An Expert in Rural Church Work.

The Christian Century is especially desirous of receiving stories of achievements of churches and schools in rural districts and smaller villages. Every such story helps to some degree in solving the difficult problem of the rural church. A minister who has had unusual success in this field is A. L. Stamper, of New Lisbon, Ind. Some time ago he came to the work at Yorktown, Ind., and found a small congregation worshiping in a small building; he left them a few years later worshiping in a large, well-equipped building, and with a largely increased membership. Mr. Stamper's next call was to the pastorate at Springport, Ind. He took the work for full time, although the church had never before had more than half-time preaching. When he left this field, he had built up a large congregation, and had erected for them one of the best and most convenient buildings in the rural districts of the state. The old building was used as a gymnasium by the young people. In a recent contest held by the schools at New Lisbon and Mooreland, Ind., there were 252 present at Mooreland on the last Sunday, while at New Lisbon, a town of 190 inhabitants, there were 1,856 in attendance! The lodge halls and the United Brethren church building were brought into service to accommodate the crowds. There was a strong teaching force on hand, and classes ranging from 1 to 100 in membership were gathered together. There was a big dinner for all, with addresses in the afternoon. The regular attendance at the New Lisbon church has more than doubled since the coming of Mr. Stamper on Jan. 1, 1916. The congregation recently showed its appreciation of its pastor by presenting him with a new Ford. Mr. Stamper will be one of the experts on the Rural Church at Bethany Park this year.

Final Events in the Trans-continental Tour of Hopkins and Munro.

Secretary R. M. Hopkins writes that the trans-continental tour of the new Alaska missionary, Harry Munro, had its climax in Seattle. This is the gateway to Alaska and the Pacific Northwest. San Francisco and the Bay Cities gave Mr. Munro a hearty word of cheer in the meeting at First church, Oakland, over which R. L. McHatton presided. H. C. Epley and E. T. Porter met the travelers at Salem, Ore., and W. F. Burnham and F. E. Billington gathered together a large audience to hear the missionary at Portland. W. A. Moore, pastor at Tacoma, Wash., led the Disciples of that city in giving worthy greeting. At Seattle a meeting was held at the Y. W. C. A. headquarters with the Missionary Committee of First church, whose pleadings for many years in behalf of Alaska have at last been heeded. A rally on Saturday night was presided over by E. M. Carney, superintendent at First church school. It is this school that presented the steamer ticket for Alaska to Mr. Munro. The Loyal Women's Class is sending a folding organ for the missionary's itinerant work. Mr. Hopkins writes that W. L. Fisher, pastor at First church, Seattle, has promised to make an appeal for the Alaska work at the Des Moines convention.

—For the nine months of the current missionary year ending July 1, the total receipts of the Board of Ministerial Relief at Indianapolis, were $26,303.32, a gain of $9,-449.14 over the same period of last year. Of this amount $18,542.79 is available for immediate use, a gain of $3,538.61. The rest goes into the Permanent Fund and begins at once to bear interest. Since July 1, 1915, the Pension Roll has increased from 124 to 139.

—The Men's Brotherhood of the church at Lawton, Okla., where C. E. Wagner ministers, surprised their pastor by raising the entire indebtedness on the parsonage while he was at the state convention.

—Thirty-two boys and girls from the Masonic Orphanage at El Reno, Okla., were baptized by Frank H. Lash, pastor of the church at El Reno, Sunday, June 18.

—The popular minister at Sharon, Kans., F. W. Lynch, has been elected treasurer of the Sharon Home Coming Association and a member of the committee to provide entertainment for the first annual home coming. He reports growing interest in his work at Sharon and fine crowds. The Bible-school has increased 100 per cent. Night services are being held out of doors, with large attendance.

—Frank B. Ward, Educational director at Pomona, Cal., church, is spending a month of vacation on an auto trip to Mono county, in the northern part of the state. Mr. Ward is doing some home missionary work in this county, attending Bible-school institutes and organizing new schools. Mr. Ward's school at Pomona has an enrollment of over 1,100. C. R. Hudson is the Pomona pastor, also teacher of a men's class enrolling a hundred.

—Geo. P. Taubman, who leads at Long Beach, Cal., has a men's class with a membership of nearly 150.

—The boys of University Place Bible-school, Des Moines, won first place in the inter-Bible-school track meet, recently held.

—When W. A. Moore came to the work at Tacoma, Wash., First, twelve years ago, there were 50 members in the Bible-school, 60 present at morning service and 70 in the evening. The congregation worshiped in a small building. The Tacoma work is now a leader both in membership and in quality of service being done in the community.

—Eight daily vacation Bible-schools are being conducted this summer in the Fayette county, Pa., coke fields, under the supervision of Ray. E. Manley, secretary under the state missionary society.

—Chas. S. Earley, evangelist of Oskaloosa, Ia., will hold a meeting at Clinton, Ill., in November .

—F. Lewis Starbuck, pastor at Howett Street, Peoria, has been re-elected to this work at an increased salary.

—C. M. Smail, of the Beaver Falls, Pa., church, attended the summer school of methods at Asbury Park, N. J., beginning July 6. He was accompanied by his wife and two of his Bible-school teachers.

—W. A. Shullenberger, of Central church, Des Moines, will do some chautauqua work at Oakland, Ia., this summer.

—Graham Frank, of the Liberty, Mo., church, has recently undergone a very painful operation upon his throat.

NEW YORK A Church Home for You. Write Dr. Finis Idleman, 142 West 81st St., N. Y.

—Harry Foster Burns, formerly a Disciple pastor in Peoria, Ill., but now with the Congregational church at Oshkosh, Wis., is preaching at the famous Lincoln Centre, on Chicago's South Side, this summer. His topics during July and August are: July 9, "Dare We Be Christians?"; July 16, "Whence Come Wars?"; July 23, "The Religion of Valor"; July 30, "Jesus' Way of Non-resistance"; August 6, "The Strength of Meekness"; Aug. 13, Man's Nature Revealed in War"; August 20, "Religion the Neglected Factor"; August 27, "The Power of the Unseen." The Sunday morning services, at which Mr. Burns speaks, are held at 11 o'clock.

—The Foreign Society reports that the Bible-schools during the month of June gained nearly $1,600 over the receipts for the same period last year.

—E. N. Duty, for the past five years pastor at First church, Charleroi, Pa., resigned his pastorate the first Sunday in June. The congregation refused to accept his resignation, and induced their leader to remain with them. An increased salary for Mr. Duty is reported.

—Dr. H. L. Willett recently spent three days in Georgetown, Tex., as lecturer at the Summer School of Theology of the Southern Methodist Church of Texas. There were about 200 ministers present from all the conferences in the state. Four days were spent also at the State College of Pennsylvania, where Professor Arthur Holmes is Dean of the General Faculty. Dr. Willett gave a course of lectures here before the summer students. Dr. and Mrs. Willett are now at Chautauqua, N. Y., where he is delivering two lectures daily in the School of the Bible and assisting in the devotional services. He wil preach on July 16. Following this date he will be in Chicago through the entire second term of the summer quarter.

—Jasper T. Moses is now in Pueblo, Colo., where he is serving as teacher of Spanish in the Centennial High School. He has also conducted several evening classes for the University of Colorado Extension Division. Mr. Moses may do some work with the welfare department of the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co., through the summer. The organized work of the Disciples in Colorado is reported as not in very flourishing condition.

—Dr. Burris A. Jenkins, of Kansas City, after being given a six months' leave of absence by his congregation to go as chaplain of the Third Regiment of Missouri to the Mexican border, was rejected by the surgeons when it came to being mustered into the army. His physical condition was excellent, but a stiff knee, the result of an operation of a few years ago, made him unacceptable in the eyes of the authorities. He has returned to his work at Linwood Boulevard, after an absence at camp extending over one Sunday when C. C. Morrison occupied the pulpit.

—The mission offerings of the Endeavor societies will reach $3,000 before the books close. The work at Damoh, India, where many orphans are being cared for, is an outstanding enterprise of the societies.

—The annual education day sermon for the graduating class of West Technical High School of Cleveland, O., was preached this year at the Franklin Circle church by its pastor, W. F. Rothenburger.

—President A. McLean is attending all the Northwestern Coast conventions, and presenting the message of the foreign fields to these state gatherings.

—One of the interesting features of the California state convention to be held in the Municipal Auditorium of Long Beach, July 20-30, will be the exhibit of Religious Forces. The exhibit will occupy 100 square feet of floor space and comprises a car-load of material. It comprises exhibits from nearly every home and foreign mission board in the United States and represents all of the leading denominations. Its importance will be better appreciated when it is known that at the Panama-Pacific Exposition at San Francisco it was awarded the grand prize, four gold medals, 22 bronze medals and four honorable mentions.

Notes from the Foreign Society

The Foreign Society is to have a large group of missionaries home on furlough this year. With 180 missionaries on the field and a eight-year term of service between furloughs, this means that quite a number are home each twelve months. This year it happens that because of adjustments on the field, something like twenty-five workers will be taking their furlough period. These men and women are coming home tired and worn with the wear and tear of the mission field and they should be welcomed warmly by the churches. Most of these will be heard at the Des Moines Convention in the missionary program of the Foreign Society.

It is the plan of the Foreign Society to hold a wide-spread series of rallies this coming winter. Churches wishing these meetings should write at once about it. The plan will be to have one secretary and three missionaries on each team. The Foreign Society is planning for some fine, new moving picture machines, in which the very interesting films taken by the Commission to the Far-East will be shown. All day sessions will be held and the moving pictures shown at night.

News comes that Elder Y. Kawemura, our "John the Baptist" in Japan, baptized six men and six women on Easter Sunday. He also reports that some of the best young men of the town where he preaches are studying the Bible. He is exepcting to hold special evangelistic meetings soon, and asks the prayers of the people of God.

D. O. Cunningham, Bilaspur, India, reports four baptisms. He also reports a Christian wedding. The church is prosperous. The Sunday-school averages about 500 in attendance. He reports that during the month of April the missionaries traveled among 25 villages and had a good hearing everywhere. They visited Kota, a mission under the supervision of the Indian Christian Missionary Society. Mr. Cunningham states that while he is comparatively young in the missionary service, yet he can really see marvelous changes coming over the minds and the hearts of the people where he labors. It is gratifying to know that he believes the war is having no evil effect upon the work he is doing, except that living expenses are much higher. Most things are from one-fourth to one-third higher in price.

Mrs. D. C. McCallum, Vigan, P. I., is now at Everett, Mass., on her furlough. She needs the rest and the strength that will come to her by a visit among her friends on American soil.

Ambassador Morgenthau and the Laymen's Missionary Movement are co-operating with the Armenian and Syrian Relief Committee in the campaign to raise five millions of dollars for the suffering Christians of the near-East.

Bishop Basford says that the Chinese Christians are undoubtedly making a distinct contribution to Christianity.

It is estimated that as many people lose their lives in one year in Africa as a result of witchcraft as were killed in all armies of Europe in the first year of the war.

Guy W. Sarvis, referring to the work at Nanking, China, says, that last Sunday, at the South City Chapel there were twenty baptisms in the Tagalog Provinces.

Dr. G. W. Brown, Jubbulpore, India, says that the total number of members at that place now is 82, against 55 last year. "There are 50 children, making our total Christian community 132—such a change from a dozen years ago when we first came."

Leslie Wolfe, Manila, P. I., reports 30 baptisms in the Tegalog Provinces. The average attendance of the Sunday-schools in Manila is 602. They are aiming to reach 1,000.

Ray E. Rice reports eight boys baptized at Damoh, India, the result of a brief meeting. He is very happy in the work.

E. A. Johnston reports five baptisms at Longa, Africa. Dr. L. F. Jaggard gave 1,200 treatments in the dispensary. The school continues to grow.

Guy W. Sarvis, referring to the spring term of the University of Nanking, says that the attendance has increased about 10 per cent in the academic departments. He refers to Dr. James Butchart in a tender way. He says: "Dr. Butchart was one of the most versatile men I ever knew and was probably the finest oculist in all China."

Stephen J. Corey, Secy.

—Bucyrus, O., church, L. A. Warren, pastor, has started upon the construction of a new building to cost $10,000.

—Will H. Evans, lawyer and Christian layman of Bonham, Tex., gave an address at Wichita Falls, his text being, "I Work and the Father Works." Mr. Evans is known throughout Texas as the man who cleaned up Bonham, winning for the city the title, "The cleanest city in Texas."

—Canton, Ill., church celebrated the twenty-fifth anniversary of the dedication of its building on June 25, with several former pastors and a large attendance of members and friends present. Singing by the Eureka College quintet was a feature.

—Ground has been broken at Paris, Tex., for the new building of the Lamar Avenue Church of Christ. The building will be of hollow tile construction.

—Abbott Book, educational director of First church, Cedar Rapids, Ia., was called recently to Elgin, Ill., by the David C. Cook Co., publishers of Bible-school literature. Mr. Book was extended a flattering offer by this company, but the Cedar Rapids man turned the proposition down. The Cook concern is planning to build a Bible-school plant and conduct a school for the children of Elgin. It will be a remarkable institution, with the most up-to-date equipment. Mr. Book is a son of W. H. Book, for many years pastor at Tabernacle church, Columbus, Ind.

—Reports at the recent state convention of Montana Disciples indicated that there are thirty Disciple churches in the state, with 3,500 members.

—The second quarter of 1916 made records for Central church, Youngstown, O., to which W. D. Ryan ministers. The greatest offerings for missions are reported, and the greatest average attendance at the Bible-school. Over 800 were present on June 25.

—Terrell, Tex., will build a new $15,000 church home. Two-thirds of the amount required is already pledged and raised.

—Roud Shaw, evangelist, with his company consisting of J. Frank Harbison, chorus leader and trombonist; Mrs. Harbison, pianist, and Mrs. Roud Shaw, solo pianist and personal worker, reports success in the meeting at Pleasureville, Ky. Three counties are being reached. Over four hundred additions to the churches of the town are reported. This began as a one-church meeting, but other churches requested that it be made a union enterprise.

—A big feature of the recent Country Church Institute at the Montana Agricultural College was the work of A. W. Taylor, of Columbia, Mo. After his lectures had been given at the institute he went on to Missoula, where he gave two lectures at the university there. The church institute was held at Bozeman.

—Father's day was observed at the Springfield, O., church on July 2. A special men's service was carried through. C. M. Burkhart ministers at Springfield.

—H. L. Willett's sermon on "The Gospel of the Guns," which was recently printed in The Christian Century, was reproduced in full in the Christian Courier, published in Dallas, Tex., and edited W. M. Williams.

—Canton, O., Bible-school had an attendance on June 25 of 7,000, with an offering of $142.54.

—Oklahoma churches are greatly alarmed over the mental and nervous breakdown of their state secretary, A. R. Spicer. His condition is reported to be very serious, and little hope is entertained of his recovery. Mr. Spicer is generally loved by Oklahoma Disciples.

—The Southern School of Methods and Christian Assembly, which was held at Shreveport late in June, under the leadership of Claude L. Jones, pastor there, had an enrollment of forty, representing six states, eighteen Bible-schools. Nineteen students were graduated. Those appearing on the program were Chalmers McPherson, J. B. Holmes, H. E. Van Horn, C. C. Cline, J. B. Lehman, F. M. Rains, Grant K. Lewis, E. L. Thompson and J. T. McKissick. The school will be held at Forbing in 1917.

—Magnolia Avenue church, Fort Worth, Tex., gives every quarter a get-together meeting for the men of the congregation. At the latest one, at which over a hundred men were present, C. S. Weaver and S. W. Hutton were leading speakers. The topic under discussion was "Efficiency," which was defined as "Doing our best and most for Jesus Christ in the shortest time, to the satisfaction of all." E. M. Waits, pastor at Magnolia Avenue, is one of the team leaders in the great Educational movement being carried forward in Texas.

—T. S. Reed, Disciple of Beaumont, Tex., has made an offer to give Texas Christian University, Dallas, Tex., an endowment fund of $25,000 as soon as all debts are paid.

—At last report it was learned that two of the ten teams of the Texas Educational Movement had secured about $12,000 in two towns, at Gainesville and Laddonia. E. M. Waits led at Gainesville and J. G. Slayter at Laddonia.

—The death is reported of Thos. R. Burnett, editor of Burnett's Budgett, a monthly religious magazine of Dallas, Tex., and editor of one of the first papers published by the Disciples in Texas, "The Christian Messenger," which had its home in Bonham. Mr. Burnett was also a preacher.

—J. H. Garrison and wife have taken a cottage at Long Beach, Cal., for the summer. The condition of Dr. Garrison's health prevented his coming east.

—P. M. Kendall, of Canton, O., preached at St. Elmo, Ill., recently, with a view to considering a call to this work.

—Belding, Mich., Bible-school has doubled in attendance, reports Chas. M. Pease, pastor.

—Salem, O., church, led by its pastor, M. J. Grable, is planning the erection of a new Bible-school building, to cost several thousand dollars.

—Anniversaries of three Indianapolis pastorates were observed on July 2. T. W. Grafton, at Third church, celebrated the fourth anniversary of his coming to this pulpit. At Sixth church, G. H. Clarke spoke in observance of his sixth anniversary, and Don. A. McKinnon made this same day a special one because of the fact that he had been with Columbia Place church just one year.

—The 1917 convention of North Dakota Disciples will be held at Minot.

—L. E. Murray, at First church, Richmond, Ind., in a recent sermon, scored the so-called Christians who permit their property to be used for immoral purposes.

—The 15 week attendance contest between the eleven Bible schools of Columbus, O., and First church school at Canton, O., closed on June 25, Canton being the loser by a margin of 1,206. The Columbus schools had a total attendance of 7,147.

—Fourteen additions are reported for one Sunday at Central church, Richmond, Ind., to which field T. H. Adams has recently come.

Claude E. Hill Makes an Appeal

The National Board of Christian Endeavor, at the urgent request of hundreds of our Endeavorers in all parts of the country, and believing that it was the wise and best thing to do, and that the time was ripe for such a move, employed Frank N. Lowe, Jr., of Kansas City, to serve as National Field Secretary.

In requesting that this forward step be taken many individual Endeavorers and many societies pledged their financial support, and it was upon this assurance that our Board felt warranted in placing Mr. Lowe in his present position.

He began work January 1, and from every section of the country which he has visited come the most flattering reports. That such a work as he is doing is needed, and had long been needed, and that he is the man for the place, has already been demonstrated.

But our societies and many individuals who were most anxious to see this work begin, have not met the expectations of our board in the way of financial support. . It has been stated so frequently through our papers, in public addresses and by correspondence that we depend solely on the offerings from the societies to carry on our Christian Endeavor enterprise that it would seem to be unnecessary to state it again. But evidently many societies do not know this or are simply indifferent to the situation and willing to let Christian Endeavor as an organized force among us sink or swim, survive or perish without any effort or assistance on their part.

It must be remembered that the situation is entirely different now from any time in our past.

Prior to this year the expense of maintaining our Christian Endeavor Department has been limited to the employment of one stenographer for part time only, printing, postage and a small amount for the traveling expenses of the National Superintendent. But now we have one man's salary to pay, plus these other expenses, and the salary must be paid promptly month by month.

Before this, if we had no funds on hand, no expenses were incurred and so we kept even. Always the National Superintendent has had, however, to devote considerable time to securing the little money necessary to operate. This has always been a burden.

It is far heavier now that more money is needed and must be had, and it is altogether unreasonable to ask or expect an already busy and heavily burdened man to give himself year after year to raising money.

The worth of his work, our position in the Christian Endeavor world, and our loyalty to our enterprise demands that we should do so. But it must be understood that this year our Christian Endeavor societies, and those among us who are interested in Christian Endeavor and its propagation in our churches, are on trial, and it will be discovered just how much we are interested.

Thus far during the year the response from the societies has not been sufficient to make a very creditable showing. We must do better if we expect to go on. There are ten societies that have made no offering to every one that has contributed, and there is scarcely one of the whole number of non-contributing societies that can plead poverty. Even a small, weak society can give a dollar or two, and if even one-half of the total number of societies in our churches would give something we would have enough money to meet our obligations.

We will need $1,000 between now and the Des Moines convention. It should be an easy matter to secure that sum and the writer still has some hopes. But we are now face to face with a practically empty treasury and our Field Secretary is looking to us for support. Something must be done and done quickly.

Let the societies respond with their offerings. We must not be forced to retrace this forward step and confess that we are too negligent and indifferent to keep one man at work for Christian Endeavor in the whole United States.

The case is urgent! Let the friends of Christian Endeavor societies and individuals come forward with offerings for this work. Send money now to Claude E. Hill.

COMMENCEMENT AT CHRISTIAN COLLEGE.

Christian College, Columbia, Mo., closed its sixty-fifth session on Wednesday, May 31. Forty-six students were graduated from the departments of Arts and Science, Music, Art, Expression, Education.

A large number of guests were present for the closing week. Under the auspices of the Junior class a beautiful May Day Pageant was given the night of May 23. Over 150 students were in the procession. A group of 30 Juniors in Shakespearean costumes formed one section of the Pageant. Later, these characters posed in tableaux representing some of the most famous scenes from Shakespeare's dramas.

In further celebration of the Shakespeare Tercentenary, the School of Expression presented the play, "The Piper," the night of May 26. This was the prize play given at the opening of the Shakespeare Memorial Theater at Stratford-on-Avon in 1910. Miss Harriet Jean Trappe, teacher of dramatic art, took the title role and was supported by a cast of fifty. On the afternoon of May 26 was held the exhibit of the Schools of Art and of Home Economics. The closing concert was given by pupils of the Conservatory of Music the night of May 27.

Baccalaureate services were held at the First Christian church, the night of May 28. Rev. Alvin Lamar Wills, of New York City, professor-elect of Philosophy at Christian, gave the sermon. Mr. Wills presented a strong appeal to the graduates to enter into the larger life of service. The musical program by the college choir and soloists was of a high order.

A garden party was given by the president of the college and the students the afternoon and night of May 29. Class day was celebrated by the Seniors, including the historic planting of the ivy, May 30. On May 31, the Commencement exercises were held in the college auditorium. The speaker was Dr. Frederick D. Kershner. Dr. Kershner's theme was "Two Ideals of Womanhood." It was a scholarly, polished address. Immediately following the Commencement program the Alumnae luncheon was held at the college. Eighty "old girls," with the class of 1910 as guests of honor, met to renew college memories.

Notes of the College.

The Y. W. C. A. has had a good year with an enrollment of over a hundred. The national Jubilee was celebrated the closing week of March. A series of addresses were made at the chapel hour. Two hundred dollars was raised by voluntary subscription for missions, Y. W. C. A., and Red Cross work. Sections of students and faculty met for an hour on Monday of each week and about three hundred bandages and hospital garments were made for the European war sufferers.

During the year the college enrolled 242 students from seventeen states. The largest increase was in the department of Home Economics, due largely to the enlargement and improvements made possible by the gift of a friend in Kansas City. Six students received three years' teaching certificates from the State Department of Education.

Next year Christian College will have students at the Universities of Missouri, Illinois, Iowa, Kansas, Oklahoma, Colorado, New Mexico, Chicago, at Vassar, and at Smith Colleges.

Disciples Publication Society

The Disciples Publication Society is an organization through which churches of the Disciples of Christ seek to promote undenominational and constructive Christianity.

The relationship it sustains to the Disciples is intimate and organic, though not official. The Society is not a private institution. It has no capital stock. No individuals profit by its earnings.

The charter under which the Society exists determines that whatever profits are earned shall be applied to agencies which foster the cause of religious education, although it is clearly conceived that its main task is not to make profits but to produce literature for building up character and for advancing the cause of religion.

The Disciples Publication Society regards itself as a thoroughly undenominational institution. It is organized and constituted by individuals and churches who interpret the Disciples' religious reformation as ideally an unsectarian and unecclesiastical fraternity, whose common tie and original impulse are fundamentally the desire to practice Christian unity with all Christians.

The Society therefore claims fellowship with all who belong to the living Church of Christ, and desires to co-operate with the Christian people of all communions as well as with the congregations of Disciples, and to serve all.

The Christian Century, the chief publication of the Society, desires nothing so much as to be the worthy organ of the Disciples' movement. It has no ambition at all to be regarded as an organ of the Disciples' denomination. It is a free interpreter of the wider fellowship in religious faith and service which it believes every church of Disciples should embody. It strives to interpret all communions, as well as the Disciples, in such terms and with such sympathetic insight as may reveal to all their essential unity in spite of denominational isolation. The Christian Century, though published by the Disciples, is not published for the Disciples alone. It is published for the Christian world. It desires definitely to occupy a catholic point of view and it seeks readers in all communions.

The Bethany System of Sunday School Literature

Represents the highest point yet attained in the field of Bible-school literature. It is not of the flash-in-the pan, printed-in-a-hurry-to-sell sort of literature. The 120 texts of this series are prepared by the leading experts of the entire Bible-school world. They are substantial and meaty. They present a greater amount of material than any other series; teachers' texts have fully a third more material than other systems afford. Such leaders among the Disciples as Finis Idleman, Edgar D. Jones, L. O. Bricker, H. H. Harmon, John W. Alexander, Frank W. Allen, Irving S. Chenoweth, Howard T. Cree, T. E. Winter, P. J. Rice and hundreds of others, pronounce the Bethany System absolutely the best adapted to the purposes of genuine religious education.

A Suggestion: Send us on a postal card names and addresses of your superintendent and other Bible-school leaders who might wish to see samples of this fine body of literature.

THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY

CHARLES CLAYTON MORRISON, EDITOR HERBERT L. WILLETT, CONTRIBUTING EDITOR

Volume XXXIII JULY 20, 1916 Number 29

What Kind of a Minister Do We Want?

DO YOU LIKE YOUR MINISTER?

This question, so often asked by one church member of another, has often to be answered in the negative. The reasons people give for not liking ministers are often trivial and inconsequential. Perhaps the minister failed to see some very important (?) member on the street. It may be that his neckties are not chosen with taste, or that he was seen in his front yard in his shirt sleeves. For the latter offence a Chicago minister recently lost his position.

For a good while we have been sure that we did not want an uneducated minister. Sometimes a man who has never been through college has the equivalent of a college education from his reading and experiences, though very rarely is this the case. Such a man is educated.

Uneducated ministers we find in little favor in any community. We do not like their crude and bizarre conceptions of Christian doctrine. They have not the proper balance and perspective in their thinking. It is the minister of this sort that keeps alive such ancient superstitions as a physical hell for a spiritual being, or of a salvation depending upon magical processes.

The uneducated minister has distorted and inadequate conceptions of Christian ethics. He will often thunder more against the dance than against the social impurity of his community. He will assail a card game like a Don Quixote and leave alone the stock exchange gambler. His preaching leaves you with the impression that theatre-going is worse than not paying your grocery bills.

This minister with the deficient training seldom enters intelligently into the community life. He does not know what in his neighborhood to encourage, nor what to discourage. His leadership is practically a negligible quantity.

Nor are we able to say that he is pre-eminently religious. If he ever is, we are tempted to forgive him everything. It is a well-known fact, however, that our scandals proceed more abundantly from the uneducated men than the educated.

Do we like the educated minister any better?

He, too, has his faults; but they are of a very different character. We have heard some most juiceless sermons from recent graduates of the very best seminaries. We heard one sermon that was a rather poor reproduction of a lecture by a theological professor. The lecture was all right—for seminary students. As a sermon this lecture was the worst of all failures. It had a terminology which the people did not understand. The poor flock did the best they could, but it was hay full of thistles for them.

We knew another seminary graduate who was in a great hurry to liberalize his church. He gave a sketch of what the "dear brethren" had always believed and then modestly told them that they had been entirely wrong and that he would proceed to give them the modern view. They had the modern view for six months and then they had a new minister. This minister knew nothing of pedagogy. Jesus told his disciples that he had things to tell them which they were not yet able to bear, and Paul gave the children milk when they were not able to bear meat.

The modern-minded preacher sometimes has a far deeper defect and one which he shares with his conservative brother. He lacks religion. There is no convincing power in the man who preaches a God that he knows only by reputation. A man may delicately balance the truth as between Trinitarians and Unitarians, but if he does not love Jesus Christ, he cannot preach Him. The minister who preaches social service without ever visiting poor people is only a kind of hypocrite. Most people have more respect for a Robert Ingersoll with a robust conviction of unbelief than a pretended expounder of a faith that has never taken possession of the preacher's soul.

The very habits of thought of the modern minister often tend to lead him away from religion. He confuses natural science with the science of the spirit. His categories are all confused. A man may be both an evolutionist and a deeply religious man, but a belief in evolution does not make one religious.

Where then shall we look for a good minister?

Since we find that ministers last on the average less than three years in evangelical pulpits, and there are evident reasons why many of them should last less time than that, where shall we find the man we want? We have found the inefficient and unspiritual minister in the camps both of the educated and of the ignorant.

Our hope lies with the man who has had the scientific training in religious study, but who has something more.

We want a minister of broader culture than that of the divinity school. We would like him to have an acquaintance with literature and history, and best of all to have a travel experience. Thus he achieves a broad sympathy with humanity.

Our ideal minister will not live and die within the narrow range of institutional life. He will do his part as a citizen. He may serve on the hospital board or on the book committee of the public library. He will not be satisfied to draw a salary just to build up a church. He will want the religious idealism of his life to permeate the entire community in which he lives .

Of course human life is frail and our ideal minister is in our dreams and not on earth. No one man will be at the same time an ideal preacher, pastor, organizer, social leader, religious education expert, social service worker and all the rest. But when we combine both the scientific training and the deep religious experience we shall have as good a minister as we may hope to find.

So far, we have talked a good deal about the minister's deficiencies and not very much about our own. If we had a good leader, would we deserve him? When we go to the doctor we do not argue with him about the medicine. We take our attorney's advice most of the time. We usually respect the teacher's opinion about our little boy. With the minister it is all different. Everybody thinks he knows more about the conduct of a church than the man who has devoted his life to the job. When we find a good minister, we should be willing to follow his leadership in all reasonable ways. He should have time to test and prove his theories. We should form no hasty judgment about his policies. We owe him more. We owe him the love of a grateful people for the Man of God.

Advertising to Fill a Church

BY WILLIAM E. BARTON.

Note: The following is a portion of an address delivered by Dr. Barton at the recent Twelfth Annual Convention of the Associated Advertising Clubs of the World, held at Philadelphia. Dr. Barton knows whereof he speaks, as regards successful church advertising, for he is pastor of one of the best known and most popular churches in Chicago, the First Congregational church at Oak Park. He is also editor of The Advance.—Office Editor.

THE first and best advertisement for any church is the widespread assurance that it uniformly has a service worth attending. No investment in printer's ink can ever be a substitute for this. Equally with every other advertiser, the church must stand ready to deliver the goods and give to the person who enters its doors something worth coming for, and I want at the very outset to register my own conviction that there is nothing else the church has to advertise which is so well worth advertising as the Gospel of Jesus Christ.

In everything else the church has competition, and the minister is likely to find himself at a disadvantage as compared with other men. Other orators can be eloquent, and maybe more so than he; other men can tell stories as funny as his and perhaps more funny. Actors and entertainers of various kinds and degrees can furnish their various and perhaps legitimate kinds of amusement, but the minister is a specialist in the Gospel of the Son of God. If he is true to his calling he can lift himself and his message above all competition in his particular field.

ADVERTISING THE GOSPEL.

I believe in advertising church services, and am glad to say something about its methods, but I wish it understood in advance that I believe first of all in having something to advertise, and that the thing advertised should not be meretricious, or cheap, or theatrical, but fundamentally and invariably the Gospel of Jesus Christ.

But there is no reason why the Gospel should be either preached or advertised in a dull or uninteresting fashion. Jesus was an interesting preacher. He knew how to get the attention of the crowd and how to keep it after he got it. He did not always preach alike; he changed his style of preaching at least four times and always for a reason. He did not depend upon his miracles to bring in the crowds; indeed, he deprecated the gathering of multitudes after that fashion. But he got the people and they heard him gladly.

Every church should consider thoughtfully what are its best and cheapest and most productive forms of advertising. I am satisfied that a good many churches do not utilize to the full the available resources of this character. I place well to the front among advertising agencies the local press. A minister ought to go to the editor of the local paper, or papers, large or small, and say frankly, "I want to help you in every way I can and I want you to help me. I want to give you all the news features you care for in connection with our church work and to report them in a style which you will find interesting to your readers, and I want to know what features of our work you are willing to announce and to report."

If a minister will come to a friendly understanding with the editors of the local press and will cultivate a style of announcement and report which has news value, he can get an immense amount of free advertisement. In order to accomplish this he needs to cultivate a style that is adapted to the press. The first rule is to boil it down, and the second rule is to light it up. The church service can be announced so stupidly that no editor will want to print the announcement and no reader will care to come to the service; or it can be so written that the editor will count it good copy, and that every reader who cares at all for a church service will have an immediate desire to attend.

I am prepared to be told that ministers ought not to seek newspaper notoriety, and I agree heartily with that statement; but ministers ought to seek to let their lights shine before men that they may see their good works and glorify their father who is in heaven. So the first rule which I have learned to follow with regard to advertising outside the church itself is to make the largest possible use of the local press.

AS TO THE BULLETIN BOARD.

I believe in a dignified and well-kept bulletin board. Many church bulletins look shabby and unattractive and a large part of their advertising value is lost through carelessness. If a minister does not select his sermon topics until Thursday and does not get them on the bulletin board until Friday, he has wasted two-thirds of the week.

There are features that have advertising value and these should be studied and used to effect. On the other hand, one must be careful lest in advertising particular features he seems to magnify them and to minimize the great purpose of all preaching. No man should ever belittle his sermon, either in his own mind or in the mind of his people. The message of the Gospel should stand out as the great central thing of concern.

If a minister will seek unusual opportunities of advertising his services he will be likely to find some unexpected assistance.

Jesus Christ and Politics

BY EDGAR DE WITT JONES.

WITH the hoarse voices of the mob still ringing in his ear, Pilate conducted Jesus to one side to examine him privately. Many prisoners had stood before this Roman governor but never one like the Nazarene. Pilate looked at him curiously. No royal robes, no glittering crown, none of the trappings or tinsel of the exalted earth; instead a calm, dark eyed, weary and worn peasant of Galilee.

"Art thou the king of the Jews?" questioned Pilate. Jesus answered, "Sayest thou this of thyself, or did others tell it thee concerning me?" The Roman governor met this question with a disdainful air. "Am I a Jew," he said in answer. As if to say, "Am I a proud Roman acquainted with the fanatical belief of the Jewish race?" Ever so calmly Jesus rejoined "My Kingdom is not of this world."

WHAT WAS JESUS' POLITICS?

"Not of this world." What is the precise meaning of this answer? Certainly in the light of other teaching, in the light of Jesus' own life and the history of the early church, the kingdom that Jesus came to establish has to do very intimately with this world, with the men and women who constitute the world and their institutions. The explanation is found a little further on, in Jesus' reply. He says: "My Kingdom is not of this world. If my kingdom were of this world then would my servants fight."

Significant and eloquent rebuke. The kingdom that Jesus was talking about, and for which he lived and died, is not to be advanced by sword or cannon, cannot be built up by the manipulation of so-called practical politics, nor by the craftiness and chicanery of man.

What was the politics of Jesus? Before that question can be answered we shall have to define the word. The word "politics" is used in two senses today. In the simplest and most fundamental sense politics is the science of government, but the sense in which we employ the term frequently is that of partyism, and often we mean by the term a shrewd scheming and crafty planning and manipulation of men and policies in order to obtain office.

JESUS NOT A SOCIALIST NOR A DEMOCRAT.

The word politics with us is a grimy word, a soiled and sometimes odorous term. In this American use of the term politics we cannot in any way connect the life and ministry of Jesus. With politics of this kind, with which doubtless Jerusalem was not unacquainted, Jesus had nothing in common at all.

Even in the first meaning of the term —politics as a science of government— we cannot find much light from the great Teacher. He was primarily a teacher of religion, not of politics. He seems not to have been identified with any one of the several political parties active in his day in Palestine. He formulated no political system; he made no entangling political alliances. The scripture oftenest quoted to show his interest in political matters is, as a matter of fact, an illustration of how he avoided political questions. The celebrated text "Render unto Caesar the things that are Caesar's" for socialism, or single tax, or any other things that are Caesar's" was in a way an evasive answer. The reply was a rebuke to his critics, and might be interpreted favorably or unfavorably according to the conception held by Jesus' opponents as to whether or not Caesar really owned the coins.

Jesus taught justice and brotherhood, but he did not offer a political or economic program by which these great goals might be attained. He was concerned with the spirit, and was perfectly willing that as men gave place to his spirit they might use as a means to express that spirit the political vehicle that would accomplish in the most practical way the principles he enunciated.

POLITICAL PARTIES HAVE TIME LIMIT.

Political parties come and go, they have their day and cease to be. The average life of a political party in America is about thirty years. New occasions teach new duties. Not only so, but new occasions make the rise of new political parties imperative. The following quotation from Mr. Louis Wallis is very much to the point. The fact that Mr. Wallis is an enthusiastic single taxer makes his words the more significant:

"The Bible does not offer a political or economic program for dealing with these questions of poverty and wealth. Scripture cannot be cited as authority school of sociological thought. Nor should we seek to commit the church to any political party or scheme of social reform. Nevertheless, the Bible of a surety voices the demand for justice in human relationships. It puts the problem of 'rich and poor' definitely before us. The Bible was ahead of the world when it was written. It holds up an ideal of brotherhood that still waits to be realized. The social awakening carries the churches out of theological dogmatism into the great matters of social justice emphasized by the Bible. And while the church may not espouse political parties or schemes of social reform, we are learning that the house of God is a community center where all problems and programs bearing on the moral and spiritual life may be canvassed in an atmosphere of kindly fraternalism."

The spirit of Jesus Christ will revolutionize every institution as men manifest, live by and die by that spirit. Practical politicians object to Christian idealism in political life. It will be a great day for America and the world when Christ's teaching leavens the politics of the world, for when it does the big navies and the big armies will go out of business, and social justice and the Golden Rule will take their place.

What the Church Needs

BY GALEN L. ROSE.

TODAY we hear much of Efficiency Congresses, of doctrinal revivals. and of other conferences and methods for the restoration of life to a church which seems to be lacking in power. Something is wrong. Somewhere in the make-up of the church is a flaw. Somewhere a leak exists that is sapping the vitality of the church; and these are means of restoring that lost vitality.

By this artificial respiration it is hoped to continue for a time at least the breathing of that organization in which it seems, by their actions, that these revivalists have lost confidence. The mainspring, the dynamo, the "head over all things to the church" is seemingly lost sight of as the one who can lead the church into a renewed and enlarged life.

"Our business organization is not efficient; there is waste; herein is the weakness of the church," say some. "We are led away by strange voices, and strange teachings have confounded us; let us seek the letter, let us know the doctrine of our fathers and all will be well," say others. "Let us invest more in our buildings and erect temples to beauty, and those whom we have lost will worship with us once more," comes the cry of yet another group.

But have these solved the problem? Will any of these things, or all of them, give to the church its rightful place?

NOT EFFICIENCY, BUT A VITAL RELATIONSHIP TO CHRIST.

The crying need of Christendom today is not greater efficiency of organization, is not greater orthodoxy of doctrine, is not larger and better-equipped church buildings, valuable as these things may be. The outstanding need of the church, the need of the world that cries out in a voice of anguish that will not be stilled is the demand for a fuller knowledge of and a closer relationship to Christ. Efficiency is profitable for a little; doctrine is profitable for a little; splendid equipment is profitable for a little; but a vital relationship with Jesus Christ is profitable unto all things.

The church has largely lost sight of Jesus himself. Else why have we wandered so far from the beauty and simplicity of his life and teachings? The task in which the church has through the ages seemingly been engaged is in the building up of dogma, the establishment of tradition, the evolving of theory. Each leader in the church has felt it his duty to propound some theory regarding Christ and his mission. And we have taken this word as authority.

We have been not so much interested in Jesus as in what people have said about him. We have been less interested in his teachings than we have been in theories regarding his divinity and just how his atonement was effective. We have built up great systems of dogma to which we have asked men to subscribe as a test of discipleship. We Disciples are ofttimes as guilty as the rest!

JESUS' TEST OF DISCIPLESHIP.

But Jesus never set up any system of theology. Jesus had no interest in forms. He paid little attention to the formal offerings of his time. "I desire mercy, and not sacrifice." No doctrine, however valuable it may be; no ordinance, however sacred and sublime; no dogma, whatever historic place it may hold, did Jesus set up as a test of discipleship. Jesus' religion was not a theology but a life. The great need of the church today is to look back of this wall of dogma that has obscured the Christ, and to say with the Greeks of old, "We would see Jesus."

What was Jesus' answer when men sought the way of eternal life? What was his test of discipleship?

One time a lawyer came to Jesus. Perhaps he was not very sincere in his coming. We are told that he wished to try the Master. He propounded a question: "What shall I do to inherit eternal life?" "How readest thou?" said Jesus. "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy strength, and with all thy mind; and thy neighbor as thyself." Then Jesus spake to him a parable showing that that neighbor was not only the man next door, not only the man of the community, but that our neighbor is the neediest man in the neediest land in all the earth as well.

But what is the point? Jesus taught love of God and love of man as the great essentials to discipleship. The two are inseparable. One cannot love men without loving God. One cannot love God without loving men. A great churchman one time said, "I love men because Jesus loved them." Henry George said, "I love Jesus because he loved men." Both of these men were truly disciples of Jesus. The love of God involves the love of men. The love of God is impssible without the love of men.

AN INTELLECTUAL FAITH NOT SUFFICIENT.

As is the test of our discipleship, so is the test of the church. As the great need of the individual is Christ and his Spirit, so the thing that shall revitalize the church is a close walk with Jesus Christ under the guidance of his Spirit.

The church must take as its one standard Jesus the Nazarene. Its faith must not be merely in the historic Jesus, an easy thing. Nor must it be only an intellectual faith in Christ. But it must be a vital faith, a belief in the Lordship of Jesus that shall demand an absolute consecration to his will and service, a belief that shall make him truly Lord of our lives, individually and as a church.

The Conference at Buenos Aires

OUR regional conference at Buenos Aires opened in a stormy session. All my readers know of the agitation caused in the United States, especially in the Episcopal church, over the Panama Congress. The high church party was opposed to the Congress because it assumed that Latin-American countries were properly to be regarded as missionary territory even though the Roman Catholic church was in possession there. Nevertheless the Foreign Missionary Board of the Episcopal church voted to participate in the Congress. Several members, including a number of bishops and prominent clergymen, resigned from the board, and it was feared at one time that the agitation might seriously affect the unity of that great communion. In the midst of the controversy it was decided by the committee in charge of preparations for the Panama gathering to change its name from "Missionary Conference" to "Congress on Christian Work in Latin-America." There were various reasons, good reasons, for making this change in name, one of which, though by no means the major one, was the desire to conciliate the "high" sentiment of the Episcopal church and bring that communion into hearty and united accord with the Panama meeting. This purpose failed, however, though it gave the more democratic and Protestant party of the Episcopal fellowship a more satisfactory ground on which to justify their participation and that of their Foreign Board in the enterprise. The Episcopal church kept up its controversy to the time the Congress was held in February, and is still keeping it up.

The effect of this action upon the missionaries and the young church, in Latin-American countries was most unfortunate, at least for the time being, though most of us now feel that out of the whole affair a blessing has come to the mission work that could not have been expected had not the issue been raised in the acute form in which it did appear.

The announcement of the change of name from Missionary Conference to Congress on Christian Work was sent out to the mission workers in the various fields, accompanied in the same envelope by a statement declaring the attitude and spirit of the Panama Congress to be one of co-operation with all persons and institutions who would co-operate in any part, if not all, of the program of Christian work in these Latin countries. If a Roman Catholic or an atheist would work with us in the suppression of the liquor traffic, or the eradication of the social vice, or in any other form of human betterment, the hand of fellowship would be extended to him by the forthcoming Congress at Panama. We would not make his acceptance of all our evangelical program and faith a condition of our co-operation with him in those points which he did accept. This was the substance of the socalled "Caldwell resolution" which the mission workers received at the same time they received the announcement of the change of name. Of course, it was natural for them to connect the two, and to make one the explanation of the other. The suspicion spread through all Latin-American mission fields that the reason the name was changed was because the promoters of the Congress, under pressure from the high church Episcopalians, and perhaps from Rome herself, had compromised with Rome and intended to hold a Congress that would encourage what is called a "social service" kind of religious work instead of the evangelical missionary gospel. This was a preposterous notion, to be sure, when one takes into account the evangelical names that stood at the head of the preparation plans, but it was, perhaps, inevitable. In Brazil and Argentina the resentment and suspicion took most formidable shape, though in all the countries we visited one of the duties our deputation faced was to bring reassuring facts to the knowledge of these faithful Christian workers, showing beyond peradventure that the Panama Congress had been thoroughly loyal to the evangelical gospel, uncompromising in its attitude toward the existing Roman Catholic order in Latin-America, and that it considered the countries in Latin-America a legitimate mission field whose occupation, by Protestant Christianity was one of the most imperative obligations resting upon the evangelical churches of the rest of the world.

On our arrival in Argentina we found the missionary forces unhappily divided in their attitude toward the Panama Congress and toward any undertaking that might proceed from it. A protest signed by some sixty or seventy foreign missionaries and national pastors had been sent to the committee in New York at the time the change of name announcement was made. A few of the signers of this protest had later fallen in line with our regional conference, but the great majority of the signers, acting on the principle that our deputation having been appointed by the Panama Congress could not be received without thereby giving approval to the Congress, stayed out of our conferences. Among the disaffected ones were some of the very best Christian leaders in all that field.

We felt some tension in the atmosphere at the big welcome reception given the deputation on Sunday afternoon, but it was not until Monday morning at a preliminary business meeting that the full extent of this hostile sentiment became known to us. We then learned that there were some sixty leaders who might have been expected to be in our conference who would not be there.

One Argentine Baptist pastor, however, Rev. J. C. Varetto, took a different view from his fellow objectors. Sharing with them in the criticism of the Panama Congress, he decided, nevertheless, to attend the conference and test out his views. He was present at the preliminary business meeting on Monday. When the routine business was done and we were about to adjourn until the opening session of the conference on Tuesday morning, this brother got the floor and made his complaint that liberty of discussion had been throttled at the Panama gathering, and that he feared the regional conference was going to be a cut and dried affair, under the control of the leaders but without liberty of utterance. He was reassured by Dr. Halsey, the chairman, and others, who vigorously assailed his strictures on the Panama gathering declaring that no freer forum was ever organized than that at Panama. Senor Varetto then offered a resolution granting the right of any delegate to present on the floor of the conference, any matter that he might desire, whether it came within the scope of the commission reports or not; this resolution was, of course, allowed to pass.

Next morning with about one hundred delegates present, the conference opened. After the routine preliminaries had been dispatched the report of the Commission on Survey and Occupation of the Field was called for. This report was to have received the whole forenoon's consideration. Senor Varetto was on his feet at once, asking the privilege under his resolution of the day before to present a matter for the consideration of the conference. He wanted the conference to make some formal statement against the Roman Catholic church. After he had talked about five minutes protests arose from all parts of the house against his continuance. It was desired, of course, to refer this matter to the business committee and proceed with the order of the day. But our good brother held in his hand a fat manuscript which he had evidently prepared with a view to proving whether or not the conference would allow freedom of speech! It was a trying situation. Nine-tenths of the delegates wanted to go on with the program. But there were some who felt that to satisfy the demands of Senor Varetto who represented the attitude of those not present in the conference, was more important than to follow the order of the day. A heated discussion ended in a close vote by which Senor Varetto was given "all the time he wants." And then the conference settled down to listen to his tirade against the Roman church. The entire forenoon was consumed by his speech. All the hideous terms with which "the man of sin" and various "beasts" in the Book of Revelation are characterized were brought into service in his attack on Rome. There was nothing constructive in it; it merely restated the thing that all of us have heard from certain quarters since we were children and the sort of thing that has been the chief feature of Protestant preaching in South America during these forty years of not very successful mission work in that continent.

Everybody left this opening session with sadness of heart and mental nausea, accompanied by grave misgivings as to the profitableness of the days we were to spend in conference. But some thought they could see good psychological method in the harrowing experience we had passed through. It was believed by those of us who favored giving this belligerent and vituperative sort of thing all the rope it wanted that it would quickly hang itself, and that the conference could then go forward on its constructive program.

That is precisely what occurred. The afternoon session opened peacefully, and for five days, the discussion of the big pressing problems of the mission field went forward in the most perfect harmony. While Senor Varetto was declaiming his well-worn tirade in the morning, telegrams were being sent to as many of the disaffected mission workers as were within a day's ride of Buenos Aires asking them to meet the deputation at once in a friendly conference to consider the misunderstandings that had grown up in their midst. A good number of them came. We spent three periods in these special conferences. A number of the men were persuaded to come into the sessions, and even upon those who could not bring themselves to participate in that meeting a deep impression was made dispelling their suspicion and their objections.

The upshot of all was that our conference left the Argentine situation happily reunited, the air cleared, a larger program, formuated, and the spirit of God more in evidence than our faith had ventured to expect.

Our sessions were held in the assembly room of the Scotch Presbyterian church, a beautiful structure in the heart of Buenos Aires. This congregation, under the leadership of its pastor, Rev. J. W. Fleming, D.D., is doing a remarkable work for Scotch people in developing a number of churches in outlying communities. It has recently opened up a mission for Spanish speaking people.

There are many Scotch residents in Buenos Aires. Many of them very wealthy and able to support strong churches. The inauguration of a mission work in Spanish won the hearty approval and encouragement of our deputation.

The Methodist church has a great congregation, of American residents mainly. It goes by the name "American Church." Its property is at the business center and is worth perhaps a quarter million dollars. It was the Visitor's pleasure to preach for this congregation on the two Sunday mornings of our stay in Buenos Aires.

I believe there are great possibilities for mission service in these large and resourceful foreign speaking congregations, if the missionary passion could be awakened in them.

I also enjoyed preaching at the Vesper service of the Scotch church at Telleres, and at an idependent English speaking Methodist church at Lomas, two suburbs of Buenos Aires. Before our departure a farewell platform meeting was arranged to be held at the same hall where we were welcomed two weeks previously. Several of us made addresses speaking through an interpreter. I would like to mention some of the efficient and admirable leaders of the work of Christ in this great city of Buenos Aires, but I would not know when to stop if I should begin. They endeared themselves to us all, and their farewells at the station when we took our train for our boat at La Plata will ever be remembered.

Union Churches

Church Union in Canada

Who can read the communication which we present this week and not feel that this is the day of opportunity for us as Disciples of Christ? We must either prove our loyalty to our historic plea for Christian union, by our activity on its behalf, or else, having made the great refusal, we must be content to see our most cherished ideal realized apart from us.—HOWARD E. JENSEN.

Dear Sir:

I have just seen the announcement in The Christian Century concerning the open forum of union churches. No doubt you are aware of the great union movement now in progress in Canada wherein the three leading denominations are taking active steps toward organic union. The Presbyterian General Assembly meeting in Winnipeg this week has taken a vote of four to one in favor of union. For two years the Methodist and Congregational churches of Canada have been waiting for the Presbyterian church to take this step. A year ago the Presbyterian General Assembly recorded a majority in favor of union, but on account of the large minority in opposition, it was decided to table the resolution. This year, in spite of the opposition of the anti-unionists the motion to enter the union carried by a vote of 406 to 88.

Much, however, remains to be done to complete the negotiations between the three great denominations. But all Canada is awake to the fact that the most significant religious movement of her history is in progress right now.

For several years union churches have been springing up here and there throughout Western Canada. Not a few federated churches of Methodists and Presbyterians have been formed, with pastors chosen from either of the denominations in the federation. These federations frequently failed because of denominational jealousy within the federation. But where union churches have been formed without regard to denomination the venture has proved to be successful almost without exception.

These union churches have been formed with a view toward affiliation with the general organic union when it shall come. In order to promote a sense of fellowship between these dissociated units and to demonstrate to the denominational bodies that real organic union is a success, a meeting of layman delegates and pastors serving these community churches was held at Regina in the early part of April. About 20 such churches were found in western Canada. There are doubtlessly many more which have not yet been located.

It was found that many of these community churches have representatives of every Protestant denomination within the community. In every case the community church stands in high favor in the community and is almost universally without opposition. Seldom is any denominational church found to be holding forth in such a community, and where it does attempt to do so, it receives little support. The difference between the denominational and the community church is just about this: that the former seeks to fit the community to itself while the latter seeks to serve the community by meeting its actual needs. This problem of fitting the church for community service furnished a leading topic of discussion at the Regina meeting. It was also decided to organize these units so that they might co-operate more effectively in creating and developing union sentiment. Plans were made regarding missions and benevolences and other interests in the

Just a year ago I was invited by the union churches at Herschel and Spring Lake to become their pastor. After considerable delay I undertook the work. There are seven different denominations represented in the Spring Lake church, and probably as many at Herschel. A splendid spirit of union prevails. I have never ministered to a congregation more at peace within itself.

Any person belonging to any Protestant body and professing faith in Jesus Christ as Lord and Saviour who wishes to associate himself with the union church is welcomed. In fact, even Catholics attend each of my churches regularly. Many Episcopalians are members. If a census of the congregation were taken I believe it would show more of that faith than any other represented in the union. The Episcopal church has made no application to enter the union, but its communicants are among the most active members of community churches.

The churches at Herschel and Spring Lake are about six miles apart. Just two weeks ago I was asked by the representative of Stranraer, another small town about ten miles away, to come and preach for them. Their first meeting was held in a hall, and was largely attended. My three appointments form a right-angled triangle, and the round trip, allowing for short cuts across the prairie, is about twenty-two miles. Standing in the center of my triangle, I have a parish about twenty miles in diameter in which I am monarch of all I survey. There is no other ordained minister or even student within my circle.

So far as I know, I am the only Disciple minister who is pastor of any of these churches, but it is a splendid place for a Disciple. A good brother told me one day that I am not pastor of a real union church because we are not united on the question of baptism. May I be pardoned for saying I had almost forgotten that. If that good brother were engaged in the union movement, he would see that there are so many other big things to unite on that he would not quibble about the difference between a cupful of water and a few gallons of it in their relation to the Kingdom of God. If we are going to wait until the religious world is united upon the question of baptism there will be no general organic union as long as the world stands. But if the union spirit is there every man will give to every other man the freedom of honest conviction.

Do not think that I am unconcerned about the question of the mode and purpose of baptism, but I do think that under the existing conditions in this great new country, where preachers are at a premium and souls are wasting for the want of a shepherd, the great burning question is how to shepherd the greatest number of souls with the least amount of squandering of the resources at hand.

The Disciples should have a part in this great movement toward unity. Our people have a chance right now to show whether they mean it or not when they plead for church union. The Disciples cannot mould such a movement as this by criticism from the outside. If they would mould this movement, they can do it only by playing a leading role within it. Perhaps this union will not be ideal; nothing this side of heaven is ideal. But it marks a long stride forward toward the day when all God's people will be united in his worship.

PROGRESS AMONG THE DISCIPLES OF CHRIST

OUR young ministers who have just come from the great institutions of learning and who are now in their parishes, feel sometimes that the Disciples are not making progress as they should. The contrast between the free air of class room discussion and the decided convictions of village church members is very marked. Once in a while a young man becomes so utterly discouraged that he leaves the Disciples, either to enter the ministry of another communion or to go into some other calling. The testimony of some who have done this ought to be known to any who contemplate such a step.

In the first place, the conservative spirit is not confined to any denomination. Rev. Jenkin Lloyd Jones left the Unitarians many years ago because they were too conservative! They had opposed Mr. Jones' social work. There is no communion today that is so progressive that the up-to-date man will not find problems in advancing fresh and modern views of religion.

The chief thing to say to our young ministers and to our impatient young laymen is that the Disciples have made enormous progress in twenty-five years. A quarter of a century ago, there was such unanimity of sentiment that the same sermons were preached everywhere. Now we have varying conceptions of religion and free discussion. Questions are considered freely that had not arisen then. A church twenty-five years ago that would practice Christian union would be obliged to conceal its practice or suffer great hardships. This is no longer true.

The Disciples are a big, roomy fellowship. They have the great conceptions of religion, conservative and progressive. They have an educated leadership which in free discussion will do its part in shaping the future of religion in America. No man can have a better religious opportunity than to share in the deep religious interest among our people.

In days to come, the Disciples have something to do in America. We have already some big agreements. All Disciples are democrats in religion. From the days of Alexander Campbell, we have insisted on treating the Bible as any other ancient book and in giving it a historical interpretation as opposed to the allegorical or dogmatic. We all agree in hoping for the union of all God's people, however we may differ as to the means to be taken to reach that goal. There are other great agreements, and as time passes these will increase, to become our contribution to the great reunited Church of the Living God.

A SENSE OF COMMUNITY RESPONSIBILITY

THE church at Rensselaer, Ind., of which Rev. Asa McDaniel is pastor, has adopted a program which clearly recognizes the responsibility of this county seat town to the rural districts of the county. The pastor has been preaching as often on Sunday in rural districts as time would permit. There are still many isolated communities not being reached by the gospel and five of the laymen of the church who are educated and tried in their loyalty to the church will go out and interpret the gospel in various school-houses over the county.

Should this experiment meet with encouragement, the church is ready to face the program of employing a second minister who will spend all his time in Jasper county. The rural districts would do their part in his support, but the big church of the county seat would take a large part of the responsibility.

This plan has many things to commend it. Disciple churches have been so fearful of their autonomy that they have often preferred to die rather than to sacrifice a rather fictitious kind of liberty. The plan of a supporting county seat church compels no church in the county to co-operate, but its economic advantages are so great that nearly every small community would gladly receive the man selected by the central church. It has something of the same theory of organization in it that led Paul to select leading cities as centers from which gospel propaganda went out.

The county seat church will not be unrewarded for what seems a program of great unselfishness. The retired farmers of the county usually go to the county seat. Here they spend their declining days. The church that is in active touch with the whole county will not have to evangelize the people past middle age. The newcomers to the town will already be loyal Disciples.

The chief reason, however, why such a program should commend itself to a church is that it is only thus that the rural districts are likely to have an adequate religious care. These districts need more social co-operation, more adequate conceptions of religious education, and certainly a bigger interpretation of the gospel than is given by the average peripatetic ministry which visits these sections at irregular intervals. Just now the automobile is bringing a few of the more fortunate farmers to town. The town church will not in the long run care for the country community directly. The open country must have the gospel brought to its very door.

THE ALLIES OF THE CHURCH

THE church has often been suspicious and resentful of those organizations which are not churches but which do many things that might be called church work.

The fraternal orders came in for their share of opprobrium. Absurd rumors were scattered about the community with reference to these organizations. They had their faults, as churches have theirs. But they did care for the sick, relieve the distressed, bury the dead and visit the widows and orphans. Judged by the great Parable of Jesus, concerning the Sheep and the Goats, these lodges were in some communities more Christian than the church. At last the church has learned some things from the orders. We now have homes for our children and our aged. All that our National Benevolent Association is doing is a definite recognition of an obligation of the church that was first brought to light by fraternal orders.

The church was for a time resentful and suspicious of the social settlements. That time is now far enough past to be forgotten by most people. The social settlement was regarded as "godless" on account of its failure to hold religious meetings. It became apparent, however, that the church could not afford longer to be unsympathetic toward a movement which is so helpful as is, for instance, Graham Taylor's Chicago Commons.

The church should rejoice that religion is so mighty a stream that it overflows its banks at times. It should make us rejoice that there are promises in our contemporary life that at last the spirit of religion shall fill all our institutions and all our life. The Disciples once found a man casting out evil spirits who did not follow with Jesus. Jesus laid down the principle, "Whosoever is not against me is for me." This principle defines the attitude of the church toward all the social movements of our time which may be detached from the church but which accomplish things in which modern Christianity should rejoice.

RELIGION AND SCHOOL POLITICS

IT IS a misfortune for the Chicago public schools to become involved in a religious controversy. The school board discharged sixty-eight teachers this year of which a considerable number were Catholics. The fight between the board and the Teachers' Federation, which is allied with union labor, doubtless was the determining factor in the discharge of most of these teachers. It is being openly charged, however, that the reason for the discharge of many of the teachers was their affiliation with the Roman Catholic church.

Over against this charge is the long standing protest of certain Protestant leaders in Chicago that the school system was being controlled in behalf of the Roman Catholic church and that that religious organization had more representatives in the schools than it was justly entitled to. There were charges that certain of the Catholic teachers unjustly used their position to inculcate Roman Catholic doctrine and Roman Catholic ideas.

Meanwhile the friends of education should see clearly that sectarian influences have no place in a public school system. The organization, Catholic or Protestant, that seeks to control teaching appointments, or to use the schools for party ends deserves the contempt of all true friends of learning. The Catholics least of all need to control the schools, for most of their children are already in the parish schools. The Protestant conception of a separation of church and state should certainly prevent them from intervening in contemptible school politics.

Some good spirits in both the Catholic and Protestant camps have hoped at least for mutual respect between the two great historic representative groups of the Christian world. This will never be possible when religion mixes in politics in a miserable job-hunting scramble.

KEEPING UP WITH MURDER TRIALS

FOR a long time the wholesale murder of the European war eclipsed the morbid interest of a section of our public in murder trials. Lately this kind of story has occupied enormous space in our newspapers to the exclusion of other more valuable news.

The theory of the editor is that the people are interested in murder trials. Do you join the murder fans by buying the "extra," full of the salacious details of some crime? If you do, you assure the editor, with one vote at least, that the public wants all the gruesome details of crime.

Christian people cannot escape the conviction that stories of crime are not proper reading matter for a home. The press will become much cleaner when the people who read show discrimination in selecting the daily newspaper for its moral and spiritual influence.

LLOYD GEORGE AND ENGLAND'S CRISES

THE appointment of Lloyd-George as war lord in the place of the great Kitchener brings him to the very front in one of the greatest crises of England's history. Had any one before the war suggested such a place for the Welshman he would have been regarded as foolish. Now all England turns to him as its deliverer in time of trouble. His genius for organization and his knowledge of British life from the bottom to the top stand him in great usefulness. Perhaps no one but the democrat that he is would be able to succeed at this time.

Lloyd-George has come to be one of the greatest figures in the world's life because of his loyalties. When he came into power, he forgot neither his religious principles nor his old friends. His legislative measures were designed to aid plain people.

The Disciples of Christ have always been interested in Lloyd-George in a peculiar way. They will rejoice at the new increment of power in his hands.

PRISON REFORM VINDICATED

THOMAS Mott Osborne of Sing Sing prison, New York, has been vindicated. His personal defeat would have meant the delay of prison reform throughout the country. Nowhere has the advance of civilization been more needed than in the administration of punishment in prisons.

A new theory of punishment had to come. Originally punishment was simple revenge which came to be regulated by the state. Justice seemed to be introduced into this by the lex talionis, an eye for an eye and a tooth for a tooth. Then came the theory of protecting society. The latest idea of punishment is the salvation of the criminal and his restoration to society. This idea is so Christian and so wise, that the church should be actively interested in its development.

Mr. Osborne has stood for the Golden Rule in prisons. Many a form of torture like solitary confinement has been abolished. He has restored social life to the men in prison. They have even been allowed to play baseball. If the meaning of punishment is revenge, then Mr. Osborne has been wrong, but if punishment means the salvation of souls, then he is right in believing that this salvation will be more surely effected by kindness and sympathy.

VACATION TIME AND THE BOY

THE boy has longed for vacation time, but now that it is at hand, it will soon begin to pall. Idleness does not bring the joy that the human heart fondly thinks it does.

The boy can no longer work beside his father in the great cities, for his father works at a factory behind locked doors. What shall we do with him in the summer time?

Some public schools are opening up for summer sessions. Many churches are conducting vacation Bible-schools. Other churches with plenty of funds will take the boys off to a summer camp.

Meanwhile, if nothing at all is done, the boy will be in the courts for some thoughtless prank. People interested in human problems from a religious viewpoint would do well this summer to take an interest in the boys of the community.

HOW DOES YOUR CHURCH LAWN LOOK?

THE Continent, a Presbyterian paper, offered a prize for the best improvement in the appearance of a church property. It was moved to do so by the slovenly appearance that many churches present on the outside. It is especially easy for them to be neglected in the summer.

We saw a church the other day that had its lawn neatly mowed. There were flower beds in the parkway. The structure was neatly painted. Everything about that building suggested that folks lived in it who cared. Nothing does more to make a house hard to sell or rent than an uncut lawn or an unpainted exterior. A church suffers in a similar way from neglect.

The Larger Christian World

A DEPARTMENT OF INTERDENOMINATIONAL ACQUAINTANCE :: By Orvis F. Jordan

British Methodism on the Decline.

Even before the war, the Wesleyan movement in Great Britain had ceased to grow. Last year the loss in membership in these churches was 2,369 and this year the loss is 4,817. Some years ago, Sir Robertson Nicoll, the editor of the British Weekly, insisted that the whole Free church movement was being weakened by its lack of attention to the children. The loss in junior membership of the Wesleyan churches last year was 5,332, which fact proves conclusively that the trouble in the Methodist program has been that it has undertaken to convert adults but failed to take care of its own children. It may be said that many communions besides the Methodists have been making this mistake.

Presidential Candidate Has Good Religious Record.

The Baptist Standard is well pleased with the religious standing of Justice Hughes, candidate for the presidency of the United States. It says: "When in New York City, Mr. Hughes organized during the pastorate of Dr. W. H. P. Faunce, the young men's Bible-class in the Fifth Avenue church, subsequently conducted by Mr. John D. Rockefeller, Jr. Upon going to Washington, Mr. Hughes became a member of the Calvary church, of which Dr. S. H. Green is pastor. For many years, Mr. Hughes has been a trustee of Brown University and has recently been elected a trustee of the University of Chicago. He was the first president of the Northern Baptist Convention."

War Sufferers are Remembered.

The appeal by the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America for a special contribution for the war sufferers of Europe has met with encouraging response. Rev. Robert Russell Wicks of the Second Congregational church, Holyoke, Mass., raised ten thousand dollars in a single week. From all over the country contributions have been coming. The total, however, is still far less than is needed.

Helen Keller Asks Help for the Blind.

Helen Keller tells how she "saw" a man made blind by the experiences of war. She is much aroused to the need of providing for the education of the war blind and has joined in the appeal in their behalf that has been issued by the Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America.

Friends of the Old Preacher Meet.

The secretaries of the boards of the various denominations that care for the aged preacher met in Atlantic City recently to confer on plans. An organization of these secretaries was effected with Dr. J. B. Hingeley (Methodist), of Chicago as president, and Dr. H. H. Sweets (Presbyterian), of Louisville, as secretary. Dr. Hingeley is authority for the statement that a total of twenty millions of dollars has been raised for endowment among the denominations and that campaigns are on in the various communions for thirty millions more. The meeting proved so interesting that the secretaries agreed to eliminate all social functions and stick to business during the entire session.

Episcopalians Raise Millions.

The campaign for the support of the aged clergy is on in the Protestant Episcopal denomination with a goal of five million dollars as the objective. A telegram in the current issue of the Episcopal papers announces that three of the five millions of dollars have been secured. The campaign will go right on through the summer until the full amount is provided. The money now being raised will be invested and the income will be distributed to the clergy on a pension system.

Bishop is Against the Saloon.

It was once charged that the Protestant Episcopal denomination was backward in its attitude toward the temperance reform, but there are many signs of a change. Among these is the recent utterance of Bishop Anderson in the Majestic Theatre in Chicago. The Bishop said: "It is probable that we will look back upon our tolerance of the liquor traffic as we now look back upon slavery as an institution. Every man and woman of the Episcopal church should take a leading part in this great movement."

Christian Scientist Gets Damage for Pain.

The newspapers have been much interested in the question whether a Christian Scientist suffers pain. A lady of that religious persuasion recently sued the street car company for damages on account of an accident in St. Louis. The company claimed she was not entitled to compensation for pain since she belonged to a faith where people didn't suffer pain. This argument did not satisfy the jury and the lady was awarded the damages.

Organization of Episcopal Socialists.

"An Episcopal Socialist" sounds like a mixed terminology, but there is a Church Socialist League in this country. Rev. A. L. Byron Curtiss has recently been appointed secretary of this organization and also editor of its organ, Social Preparation. He is spending his summer in the Adirondacks.

Missions in the Colleges.

Five hundred and ninety-one institutions of higher education in the United States and Canada sheltered 2,458 mission-study classes last year, with an enrollment of 37,542. And the students are not merely studying missions. During 1914, 278 of them sailed for the foreign field, and that number increased to 329 in 1915.

Changes in Baptist Leadership.

Baptist officialdom has been experiencing a number of changes during the year and among the more recent ones is the announcement of the resignation of Dr. A. J. Rowland, secretary of the American Baptist Publication Society. Dr. Guy C. Lamson has been chosen to fill out the unexpired term of Dr. Rowland. Dr. Rowland has spent twenty years in the position from which he has just resigned. Another change of importance is the resignation of Dr. J. K. Wilson, who has been editor of Zion's Advocate (Baptist), for the past twelve years. His fellow-craftsmen give him a good rating and he is now called to be an associate editor of the Watchman-Examiner, one of the leading Baptist papers. Zion's Advocate will have a new editor, Rev. W. A. Smith, until recently pastor of Second Baptist church, Suffield, Conn.

Methodists in the Trenches.

The war has made a great difference to Methodism in Europe. Word has been coming of the sufferings of the German Methodists. There are three hundred British Methodist preachers in the trenches, and of the three hundred candidates for the ministry in the seminaries there are not a dozen left today. The income taxes in England today amount to an eighth, and even in some instances to one-third of the total income of the taxpayer, yet the income of Wesleyan missions is greater than it was before the war. There are over three hundred of the sons of Methodist ministers in Canada in the trenches.

C. E. Jefferson Preaches to Students.

Preaching to the Radcliffe graduating class on a recent Sunday, the Rev. Charles E. Jefferson, of the Broadway Tabernacle, New York, said some plain words as to forgetfulness of God, declaring that "if a horrible disaster should come to this country, if the bubble of our material prosperity should be pricked, a greater wave of religious emotion would sweep over the United States than 1,000 "Billy" Sundays could inspire. . . . The greatest missionary is death."

Germans Shoot at Archbishop.

When the Germans decided to shell a certain section in the English line recently they were probably unaware that they were shooting at the primate of the English church. He had been allowed within the lines and it was not thought that the section where he was visiting was dangerous. His automobile came to pieces, the front wheels running away and the body sitting upright on the rear wheels. The Archbishop has had little to say about his adventures but for a half hour he had a taste of what it means to be shot at. This experience will doubtless color his future references to the war.

Charge Politics on Church Paper.

The corresponding section of the Living Church is lively reading these days. That vigorous high church advocate of the Episcopalians had made a very slighting reference to Col. Theodore Roosevelt recently and the readers of the paper who admire the former president have registered their protests in language both understandable and forcible.

Chinese Women as Bible-class Leaders.

The women of China, following in the steps of their American sisters, are training for leadership in the Adult Bible-class work of their country. During the past year, five Bible Training Conferences have been held in China as an outgrowth of the evangelistic forward movement inaugurated by Dr. Mott and Dr. Eddy. It is interesting to note that no women were in attendance at the first two of these conferences, which were held in Kuling and Moukden; while the last three, held in Swatow, Canton and Foochow, were all attended by women. Now, two Bible conferences, one in Kuling and one in North China, are being held especially for women. American methods of Sunday-school organization are taught in these conferences, as these methods are found to be especially adapted to the Chinese. The women, who are trained in these conferences, will, in their turn, organize classes which will be centers of service for other women.

Two Great Sunday-school Pleaders.

At the recent Methodist Conference at Saratoga, Bishop M. C. Harris, of Japan, and Bishop J. C. Hartzell, of Africa, retired from active service. Bishop Harris is to return to Japan to spend his years in promoting a cordial relationship between Japan and America founded upon a better understanding between these countries. Having been decorated by the Emperor because of his service as a religious leader, he will have the opportunity to develop a better understanding and appreciation of Christianity through his approach to the leadership of Japan. He plans to give a large portion of his time and influence to make the World's Sunday-school Convention, which will be held in Tokyo following the war, the most important world gathering ever held, because of its historical, strategical and uniting value following the greatest war in history. Bishop Hartzell, as Chairman of the Committee on Sunday-school Work among the Moslems, representing the World's Sunday-school Association is planning as soon as the way shall open, a visitation of Moslem centers to broaden out the Sunday-school work begun by the Moslem Sunday-school Committee in Cairo, and to arrange for its extension to such Moslem populations as are found in Java, India and the Philippines.

From Our Readers

EDITOR THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY:

In sending in my annual renewal to the "Century" I wish to add a word or two:

There is much in the "Century" that is very helpful to me. In fact, I have derived much benefit from a perusal of its columns. It is a real religious newspaper, up to date, of good tone and of fine spirit. In some respects, I get more out of it that makes me think and want to be a purer, better and a more efficient servant of the master, than any other paper I read.

Of course, I would not have you for one moment to believe I indorse all that appears editorially or otherwise. I think, my dear brother, some of your positions are wholly untenable. But I do greatly enjoy, and am spiritually benefited by far the greater part of what you and your contributors give us in your columns.

I further like the "Century" because of its Christian spirit; and because it has kept out of its columns, that mean, bitter spirit of controversy and commercialism which is disgracing some of our journalism.

"OUGHT WE TO BE OFFENDED?"

EDITOR THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY:

No. On the contrary, we should feel complimented. There is no better proof of our normality than is afforded by the fact that we have attained to our large proportions without attracting the attention of a morbidly curious world. Normal movements do not attract the most attention, but they are the movements that have in them the elements of endurance. In their day the Siamese Twins were far more widely known than the man upon whose shoulders rested the responsibilities of mighty empires, not because of their superiority, but because of their abnormality, physically.

If there are religious bodies that are smaller than we are, yet better known to the world, we must look for the explanation of the fact in the direction above suggested. The world has a more or less definite notion of what the Christian Church and the Christian religion are. To attract its attention there must be a deviation from this universal conception of what is normal. In nearly every one of these smaller bodies is found the required deviation. Unitarianism is widely known because, from the world's viewpoint, it presents a theological deformity. It denies the deity of Christ. The same thing is true of Christian Science. Its fame rests upon the fact that it is freakish. No religious body is more widely known than the Mormon Church? Why? Certainly not because they "offer a program that the public is vitally interested in." The Episcopal Church is better known than we are for the reason that it has been prominently present in the world for a period long enough for all the world to know about it. Mr. Jones and his family of three have lived in town for fifty years. Mr. Smith with his family of twelve have lived in town six months. Mr. Jones is much more widely known than Mr. Smith. Why?

The fact that we have attained to the large proportions we have without attracting the astonished attention of the world is proof that we present to it no appearance of abnormality. The fact that we have been able to win to our way of thinking, millions of thoughtful and substantial people, is proof conclusive that our obscurity is not due to any lack of spiritual virility, but rather to our close conformity to the world's conception of spiritual normality.

God Save the Man!

Ethel Allen Murphy in The Public.

OH, 'tis very fine and stirring when the joy bells ring,
And the last victorious army comes marching home in pride,
And all the simple people stand round about and sing,
"Praise God!" "Long live our country!" and "God save the King!"
'Tis very fine to talk of peace that's dearly bought from strife,
But what of all the many men, the millions that have died?
And what of thousands reft of love, and thousands maimed for life?

For who will bring home again
The man to the wife's side?
And who will bring home again
The lover to his bride?
And who will unite again
The sister and the brother?
And who will bring home again
The son to the mother?

Show me a king can do this thing,
And there's a king indeed!
A Christ-like king who lives to bring
His love of human need!

The maidens tossing roses to the soldiers marching by,
As crowns to deck the victors, and as wreaths for those who die—
'Tis very fine and stirring, but brothers tell me why Should the toiling world be all bereft of noble hearts and true,
When it comes so hard to bear them, and there is so much to do—
So many thousand greater things, than to trample poor folks' fields,
And to desolate mute hearthstones, and to waste life's dear-bought yields!

The roses, they may bloom again
Through all the countryside,
And the harvests, they may laugh again,
Where men have groaned and died;
But millions will not come again,
At morn or eventide,
And millions will not laugh again
As long as life shall bide!

'Tis very fine and stirring when the people stand and sing,
"Long live the Emperor!" and "God save the King!"
But 'tis time to sing a new song, and to try a nobler plan,
"Long live Humanity!" and "God save the Man!"

Disciples Table Talk

The First Week of Bethany Assembly at Bethany Park, Ind.

The Bethany Park management, under the leadership of W. E. M. Hackleman, deserve not only credit, but also patronage in consideration of the rare program they have provided for this year. The very first week's program indicates the fact that care has been taken to provide really vital and helpful features, not simply to afford entertainment. Practically the entire first week, beginning Thursday, July 27, will be given over to a Rural Life Conference. The program for this feature was arranged by O. E. Kelly, of Terre Haute, Ind., who is an expert in this line. For this week Purdue University will send the superintendent of its agricultural department, Prof. G. I. Christie, and three of his associates. Ministers of long experience in the rural field, will be present; among them A. L. Stamper, of Springport, Ind.; F. C. McCormick, Milton; Lee Tinsley, North Salem; Moody Edwards, New Salem; W. H. Newlin, Brownsburg; F. W. Sumner and G. I. Hoover, of Indianapolis. Prof. Perry D. Pointer, superintendent of schools at Advance, Ind., will speak; also Governor Ralston on the evening of August 1. His address will be on "The Fundamental Importance of Rural Life." On Sunday, July 30, President R. H. Crossfield, of Transylvania College, Lexington, Ky., will preach sermons at both morning and evening sessions. The Bible-school will be held at 9:30, the Communion service at 2 in the afternoon. On Wednesday, August 2, the Dixie Jubilee Singers, the most famous band of jubilee singers in the country, will give concerts in the afternoon and evening. Other features of the 1916 program will be mentioned in later issues.

Northwest Texas Camp Meeting.

The Nineteenth Annual Camp Meeting of the Disciples of Christ in Northwest Texas will be held at Aspermont, Texas, beginning August 4 at 8:15 a. m., and ending with sunrise prayer-meeting, August 21, 1916. J. L. Haddock, of Erick, Okla., and J. T. McKissick, of Harriman, Tenn., will do the preaching. W. L. Pollard, superintendent of the Bible-school of Bailey Avenue church, Chattanooga, Tenn., will be Superintendent of the Camp Meeting Bible-school. J. W. Boynton, of Anson, Texas, will be Choir Director, and Mrs. J. L. Haddock will be Director of Personal Work. O. J. Wood, of Throckmorton, Texas, First President of the Association, and J. E. Chase, of Lubbock, Texas, Second President, and H. G. Bedford, of Midland, Texas, pioneer preacher, will be in attendance. F. G. Jones, President of Midland College, will have charge of the Plan and Prayer Service. Tent accommodations and ample bedding will be furnished free to all visiting preachers. The meeting promises to be the best in point of attendance and interest of any in the history of the movement. Everybody is invited. Chas. E. Coombes, of Stamford, Texas, is President of the Assembly.

Edgar D. Jones Closes Ten Years With Bloomington, Ill., Church.

On Sunday, July 9, Edgar DeWitt Jones, pastor of First church, Bloomington, Ill., celebrated his tenth anniversary as pastor of that congregation. In the morning he preached his tenth anniversary sermon; and in the evening the Ministerial Association of the city held a Union Recognition Service in honor of Dr. Jones' ten years of service. Brief addresses were made by the pastors of Second Christian, Second Presbyterian and First Baptist churches, as well as Elder J. D. Holcomb, of First church. Music was furnished by the church quartet and a male quartet of the city. At the regular Christian Endeavor period a union service had been arranged for by the young people. Five minute talks were made by young people from the various young people's societies of the city, and readings and musical numbers were furnished by other young people. The Bloomington Pantograph speaks of the evening meeting in the following appreciative words: "The First Christian church was filled last night—main floors, the gallery and the Sunday-school room—with an audience of Bloomington citizens who gathered for the purpose of fittingly marking the anniversary of the ten years of efficient and profitable service of Dr. Edgar DeWitt Jones, the pastor. And the observer would have noted among the personnel of the people who attended the meeting the faces not only of those who are strong workers in other churches, but also the faces of people who are rarely ever seen at places of religious worship—and one and all knew and claimed Dr. Jones as a friend and sympathetic adviser whenever advice from that source is asked." Herewith is given a statistical summary of Dr. Jones' ten years of ministry with this congregation: Received into membership, 1,472. Amount raised and expended through annual church budget, $98,222.09. For missions, benevolences, through annual budget, $13,460.88. Gifts by members to Million Dollar campaign, $4,100.00. Gifts by members to Men and Millions Movement, $12,000.00. Total for missions, benevolences, education, $29,560.88. Sermons preached by Dr. Jones in First church, 840. Sermons, lectures, addresses, delivered in various parts of country, 372. Wedding ceremonies performed, 404. Funeral services conducted, 414.

Rev. Edgar D. Jones, who has completed two years of service at First church, Bloomington, Ill.

The New Chancellor of Transylvania College.

Homer W. Carpenter, recently appointed Chancellor of Transylvania College and the Bible, wil close his seven years' ministry at Shelbyville, Ky., on September 1, and enter upon his new work. Mr. Carpenter is particularly well fitted for the new task. In 1906 he received the A.B. from Transylvania, and later graduated in the classical course of the College of the Bible. Since then he has served as minister in Lima, O., and during the past three years has been President of the Kentucky Christian Endeavor Union. He is one of the most capable young ministers of the state, having built up the work at Shelbyville to a very high degree of efficiency and having identified himself particularly with the young people of Kentucky. As Chancellor of Transylvania and the College of the Bible his efforts will be directed primarily toward the enlistment of students. At the recent commencement, the slogan, "500 college students won by 1921," was announced, and it is for the purpose of realizing this goal that Mr. Carpenter has become associated with the college. Transylvania, which receives only college students, had an enrollment of 258 during the past session, the College of the Bible 155, and Hamilton College 165, making a total, less duplicates, of 488. The movement inaugurated at this looks toward the doubling of the college student body by 1921. Mr. Carpenter will visit the Kentucky churches and high schools in this interest, and will promote the observance of Education Day. Last year one hundred and twenty-five Kentucky churches observed the day, making an offering of $2,225. Mr. Carpenter will undertake to increase the number of co-operating churches to five hundred, and the amount given by them annually to $5,000. In addition he will assist President Crossfield in securing gifts for endowment and betterment, especial attention being paid to annuities and legacies.

The Alaska Equipment Fund Not Yet Complete.

Harry Munro sailed out of Seattle Harbor on board the good ship Admiral Watson, Tuesday, June 27, at 1:00 p. m. The delay in starting was due to the heavy traffic between the States and the new territory of Alaska. These extra fifty hours were quite welcome both to the missionary and to the Seattle friends, writes Secretary R. M. Hopkins. The churches kept him busy. Sunday night he spent in Tacoma. On Monday the preachers of Seattle and their wives entertained the Tacoma preachers and their wives with Harry Munro and the representatives of the American Society. Monday night was spent in the home of Dr. and Mrs. E. M. Carney, who have meant much to this enterprise. Mr. Hopkins writes further of the Alaska enterprise: "It has been a joy to see how the people have given to this cause everywhere. The Alaska Equipment Fund, of course, represents the most important of these gifts. This fund now has $848.71 in cash and pledges, over half being cash. We must at once make this $1,000; it will be needed. Hundreds of schools have written telling of their remembrance of Harry Munro in special prayer on the 28th. Prayer and sacrifice on our part will join the consecration and service on Munro's part and under the blessing of the Father the Alaska work will be done. It has taken ten bulletins to tell the story of the sending of our first missionary to Alaska, but our friends write that they have followed the work more intelligently because of them. The sending of a missionary to Alaska is the greatest single home missionary enterprise our Bible-schools have ever undertaken."

—The Christian News, of Des Moines, reports that the latest word from Emory Ross and his fellow-traveler in the heart of Africa tells of their being 725 miles north and east of Bolengi, in the Ubangi region, and just starting on their return trip. The entire trip will take them about four months. This letter was written March 22, so if all has gone well they have been back in Bolengi for several weeks. Emory Ross and Dr. Pearson expect to reach America in August or September. They will be here for the national convention, which meets in Des Moines in October.

—Since G. L. Lobdell came to the work at Eureka, Cal., about a year ago, the Bible-school has increased in attendance 96 per cent.

—The Atchison, Kan., Bible-school recently had as its guest Governor Capper, of Kansas.

—The Bible-school of South Side church, San Antonio, Tex., has doubled its attendance March 1. A. T. Fitts ministers at South Side.

—July 9 was a significant day at Lake Geneva, Wis. On that day was dedicated the new Hamill Memorial Educational Building, erected by the International Association in memory of H. M. Hamill, the pioneer of teacher-training and at his death president of the International association.

—Herbert Swanson and Miss Stella Saunders, recent graduates of Drake University, are planning to enter the University of Chicago in the autumn to fit themselves for the foreign mission field, both of them being under appointment by the Foreign Society.

—James Teeters, pastor at Kellerton, Ia., has resigned this work, and will give his entire time to the duties of his new task. Mr. Teeters has recently been appointed as Ministerial Student and Field Secretary of Drake University.

Rev. H. H. Peters, of Paris, Ill., who becomes Secretary of Illinois Discipledom.

—About $70,000 was reported raised in the first two weeks of the campaign of the Educational Movement of Texas, in behalf of the Disciples' Colleges of the state. The goal set is $200,000. During these two weeks 8,200 persons were solicited. A small church near Dallas gave $2,500 toward this worthy cause, and an individaul gift of $1,500 was reported as coming by telegraph to the leaders. S. J. McFarland is the chairman of the committee which has the campaign in charge.

—Dan Trundle has been engaged as district evangelist in the Texas district of which Galveston is the center. J. B. Holmes is doing a remarkable work in Galveston.

—The death is reported of Cornelius A. White, pastor at Cameron, Tex. Mr. Cameron had just closed a meeting conducted by home forces at Cameron, and contracted a throat trouble from preaching in the open air. This caused his death.

—A reception was given in San Diego, Cal., at the University Christian church in honor of the new pastor, T. S. Handsaker, and his wife. W. E. Crabtree, pastor at Central, gave an address of welcome to the new workers.

—T. J. Cannon, of Malaga, Wash., has been appointed Chaplain of the Washington State Penitentiary at Walla Walla, and has already taken up this work.

—A feature of the convention of West Washington Disciples, which met at First church, Tacoma, July 5-7, was a foreign mission symposium, participated in by W. L. Fisher, on Africa; Mrs. W. E. Rambo, of Chehalis, on India; Dr. A. E. Layton, of Tacoma, on China, and Ben L. Mitchell, of Vancouver, B. C., on Japan.

—Traverce Harrison, pastor at Bellefontaine, O., reports that the average attendance at the Bible-school there for the last three months has been 1,570. The Loyal Men's class, organized two years ago, has an average attendance of 324. The new building at Bellefontaine has thirty-two modern class rooms.

—J. Rex Cole, former assistant pastor of Central church, Des Moines, who has the past year taken work at the Chicago University left on July 10 for Japan where he will take up work for the Y. M. C. A. He goes under two-year contract, as a teacher in the Bible department.

—A reception was given to some of the out-going missionaries in the parlors of the University Place church, Des Moines, on the evening of June 26, especially in honor of Leland Parr and wife, who left Des Moines the following day. They go to Assiut, Egypt, where they will teach in the college, under interdenominational control, but which work has been fostered largely by the United Presyterians. Both are graduates of Drake. Ada Scott, daughter of Dr. E. C. Scott, of University Place, was also present. She goes out to Tokio this fall as kindergarten teacher under the F. C. M. S.

—The Ashland, Mo., church, in Howard county, will celebrate its one hundreth anniversary in November. It is one of the oldest churches in the state.

—F. Z. Burkette, pastor at Greensburg, Ind., made a record run in his auto recently. He was called to visit a dying woman, a member of Mr. Burkette's former congregation at Rochester, Ind., and left Indianapolis at five o'clock one morning, went to Rochester and remained at the hospital five hours, and returned to Greensburg in his machine at midnight. The entire trip covered 250 miles.

—George H. Combs, of Independance Boulevard, Kansas City, Mo., is spending his vacation on his farm near Independence. E. E. Violett is occupying his pulpit in his absence. The Billy Sunday meetings added 340 persons to the membership of this great church, making the present membership 3,100. This makes Independence Boulevard the largest Protestant congregation in Missouri, the largest being that of the Third Baptist church, St. Louis.

—Earle Wilfley, pastor at Vermont Avenue, Washington, D. C., gave a course of lectures during the past year for the Washington City Y. M. C. A. These were travel lectures covering Yellowstone National Park, France and Switzerland, Germany and Austria, England and Scotland and Italy. Another lecture pictured the Passion Play. Mr. Wilfley gives each year a Shakespeare Lecture-Sermon. The one this year was the sixth, and was on the theme, "Shakespeare, Master and Man." The lecturer gave readings from several of the Shakespeare plays.

—E. T. Williams, former Disciple missionary to China, and now of Washington, D. C., has an article in the July number of the Harvard Theological Review on "Confucianism and the New China."

—J. J. Tisdall, recently called to the Norwood church, Toledo, O., conducts the "Young People's Column" for the "Toledo Christian Commonwealth," which is published by the churches of all denominations of the city.

—A feature of the recent Illinois Christian Endeavor State convention held at Freeport, was a pageant, "The Story of Christian Endeavor," in which the accomplishments of the organization were vividly presented. Another interesting event of the convention was an evening open air meeting on the scene of the Lincoln-Douglas debate of August, 1858. General Secretary William Shaw, of Boston, was the chief speaker at this meeting. Leaders in the various sessions were Karl Lehman, secretary in the southern states; R. A. Walker, Indiana field secretary; Miss Mildred Haggard, national junior superintendent and A. G. Fegert and others of Chicago. Over four hundred delegates were present.

—J. E. Denton is preaching during the summer at Oakland, Cal., where Vaughn Dabney recently resigned the work. E. B. Lyman writes that it is expected that a regular pastor will be in this field soon, but that in the meantime the work is keeping up very well under the ministry of "supplies."

—New members of the Hiram College faculty are the following: John S. Kenyon, A. B. Hiram, Ph.D. Harvard, for the past ten years head of the department of English at Butler, has been appointed senior professor of English; Lee E. Cannon, a graduate of Eureka and a graduate student for one year in Germany and one year in Harvard, comes to the chair of German; T. B. Ford, a graduate of the University of Missouri, and for three years a graduate student in Harvard, has been elected professor of Psychology and Education. For five years past Professor Ford has served as Dean of Lincoln Memorial University at Harrogate, Tenn.

—W. B. Slater, who leads at Swope Park, Kansas City, Mo., writes that during the past nine weeks fifty-three persons have been received into the fellowship of that church. Eight of these came during the Sunday revival and the rest in a follow-up meeting held entirely by home forces. Mr. Slater reports that the Sunday revival has had and will continue to have a good effect upon the religious life of the city.

—W. J. Hudspeth, an evangelist of Berea, Ky., closed a meeting at Hinton, Harrison Co., Ky., on July 2. A member of the congregation, of which R. N. Cloyd is leader, reports an intense interest in the meeting not only on the part of the members, but also of other churches of the town. The services continued for about two weeks. Prof. John Greider had charge of the singing.

—Claris Yeuell, of New Cumberland, W Va., writes that "some people must be getting tired of the Lloyd-George church affiliation scrap," and proposes to put a finishing touch to it by adding: "The Welsh statesman is a Disciple of Christ; when he is away from home in London he attends a Welsh Baptist church, because his native tongue is used in the services—like all good Welshmen do under similar circumstances."

—Central church, Des Moines, will expend about $10,000 on improvements this year.

—On July 2 the Christian Endeavor Union of Des Moines, Ia, held its meeting at Camp Dodge. The service was enjoyed by a host of soldier boys, many of whom are Endeavorers in other parts of the state. Central church society, which is one of the strongest in the city, had a large delegation present.

Guy W. Sarvis Visits Nantungchow, China

The following letter has just come from Guy W. Sarvis, of the Foreign Society concerning the field of Nantungchow, in Central China. We have a hospital and four missionaries in this city, which is the center of a great district of five million people. Mr. and Mrs. Bowman, of Chicago, have pledged a large sum for the development of this work and other missionaries will soon be sent out. Mr. Sarvis, in writing, states the following facts:

"I have just returned from a short visit to Nantungchow. Every time I have visited this place I have come away with the most intense enthusiasm. I have seen no place like it in China. On this trip we visited the cotton mill, the flour mill, the oil mill, the iron works, the industrial school for the poor, the home for cripples, the school for the deaf and blind, and revisited the woman's normal school. Every one of these institutions was clean, orderly and prosperous—and only one who has lived in the Orient knows what that means. I saw two beggars on the street while I was there. They begged in a timid, half-hearted fashion. It is against the law to beg on the streets of Nantungchow. Able-bodied beggars are set to work on the roads, and the cripples are sent to the homes for cripples or to the hospital. In connection with the mills there is a beautiful public garden for the use of employees. There are about 320 day schools in deserted temples in the district. The higher schools are the best there are in China. Their great deficiency is English. We can make a school self-supporting if we offer good English courses.

"We were given an interview of over an hour with Chang Chien, whom some men call the greatest living Chinese. He and the leading Chinese are eager for our mission to come and help them, and they will give us a free hand. The opportunity is unparalleled.—Guy W. Sarvis."

No other board has any work in this whole district. These millions of people belong to the Disciples of Christ for evangelization. Surely this marvelous opportunity must be taken advantage of, and the work well equipped as it deserves.

—J. Boyd Jones, of Central church, Terre Haute, reports that although many of that city's churches are closed up for the summer, Central Christian has large audiences and a fine interest. Four persons were added to the church on a recent Sunday. Mr. Jones and wife are to spend August vacationing in Kentucky.

—The Christian Endeavor Society of the church at Lexington, Mo., has been the banner society of the district during the past year. The congregation of this church, led by R. W. Wallace, pastor, is taking an active part in a vigorous anti-saloon fight now going on in Lexington. Mr. Wallace reports a ball game between his Young Men's club and the Brotherhood Bible-class. The pastor, being a member of both these organization, had a difficult time maintaining absolute neutrality. Three persons were received into the fellowship of the Lexington church on July 2.

—H. H. Harmon, of First church, Lincoln, Neb., is filling some Chautauqua engagements in Illinois. He recently paid a visit to his friend, President Pritchard, of Eureka.

—The Kansas Messenger reports eighty-three changes in its ministerial list in six months, an average of three and one-half churches either losing their pastor or calling a new one each week.

—T. F. Rutledge-Beale and wife are reported to be new ministerial recruits at Drake. Mr. Rutledge-Beale is an Englishman, but came to Des Moines from Mayford, Canada.

—C. S. Medbury is doing Chautauqua work this summer in the eastern and central states. He spent some time in Pennsylvania.

—Laura D. Garst, of the College of Missions in Indianapolis, is reported to be in the Lutheran Hospital, in Des Moines, for treatment and a complete rest.

A Notable Success

The welcome that has been given by the leaders in the churches and Sunday schools to the little book just issued by the Disciples Publication Society:

"The Training of Church Members"

is evidence that this text has come to meet a very definite need in the churches.

The following are typical letters received from leaders concerning the book:

FROM REV. H. CLAY TRUSTY, Seventh Street Church, Indianapolis: "I have examined thoroughly the manual, "The Training of Church Members," and think it a very fine thing. We need to spend some time with young Christians on the fundamentals of our Christian religion and church life. This affords a splendid guide."

FROM REV. L. C. MOORE, Waterloo, Ia.: "This book is filling a long known need in our mid-week service. I am more than pleased with it. The attendance was doubled in four weeks by the use of the text."

FROM REV. IRVING BROWN, Sac City, Ia.: "I am much impressed with it. Shall introduce it either at the C. E. or mid-week prayer-meetings. We all need the training it supplies."

FROM REV. L. J. MARSHALL, Wabash Ave. Church, Kansas City, Mo.:

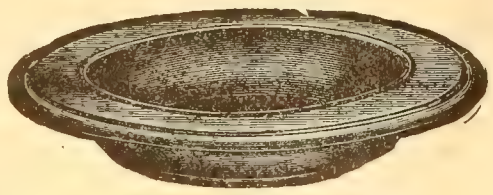
"This is a timely piece of work. Its clear and simple presentations of the lessons to be taught should make it popular among Christian workers."

How You May Use "The Training of Church Members in Your Work

(1) As a book of study in your mid-week or Endeavor prayer-meeting.

(2) As a text-book in your young people's Sunday school classes.

(3) As a text for study in a special "Pastor's class" organized for training of young Christians and meeting either through the week or on Sunday.



(4) As a teacher-training course.

Disciples Publication Society

The Disciples Publication Society is an organization through which churches of the Disciples of Christ seek to promote undenominational and constructive Christianity.

The relationship it sustains to the Disciples is intimate and organic, though not official. The Society is not a private institution. It has no capital stock. No individuals profit by its earnings.

The charter under which the Society exists determines that whatever profits are earned shall be applied to agencies which foster the cause of religious education, although it is clearly conceived that its main task is not to make profits but to produce literature for building up character and for advancing the cause of religion.

The Disciples Publication Society regards itself as a thoroughly undenominational institution. It is organized and constituted by individuals and churches who interpret the Disciples' religious reformation as ideally an unsectarian and unecclesiastical fraternity, whose common tie and original impulse are fundamentally the desire to practice Christian unity with all Christians.

The Society therefore claims fellowship with all who belong to the living Church of Christ, and desires to co-operate with the Christian people of all communions as well as with the congregations of Disciples, and to serve all.

The Christian Century, the chief publication of the Society, desires nothing so much as to be the worthy organ of the Disciples' movement. It has no ambition at all to be regarded as an organ of the Disciples' denomination. It is a free interpreter of the wider fellowship in religious faith and service which it believes every church of Disciples should embody. It strives to interpret all communions, as well as the Disciples, in such terms and with such sympathetic insight as may reveal to all their essential unity in spite of denominational isolation. The Christian Century, though published by the Disciples, is not published for the Disciples alone. It is published for the Christian world. It desires definitely to occupy a catholic point of view and it seeks readers in all communions.

The Bethany System of Sunday School Literature

Represents the highest point yet attained in the field of Bible-school literature. It is not of the flash-in-the pan, printed-in-a-hurry-to-sell sort of literature. The 120 texts of this series are prepared by the leading experts of the entire Bible-school world. They are substantial and meaty. They present a greater amount of material than any other series; teachers' texts have fully a third more material than other systems afford. Such leaders among the Disciples as Finis Idleman, Edgar D. Jones, L. O. Bricker, H. H. Harmon, John W. Alexander, Frank W. Allen, Irving S. Chenoweth, Howard T. Cree, T. E. Winter, P. J. Rice and hundreds of others, pronounce the Bethany System absolutely the best adapted to the purposes of genuine religious education.

A Suggestion: Send us on a postal card names and addresses of your superintendent and other Bible-school leaders who might wish to see samples of this fine body of literature.

Progress and Christian Union

IS GOD IN FAVOR OF CHRISTIAN UNION?

We live in a wonderful, changing world. We never look at the same river twice, for while we look the old stream has passed away. In the realm of human life, there is also this ceaseless change. The great Force that produces the big, significant changes in human life we call God.

In our changing world we can sometimes say with considerable confidence that God is at work producing some given result. If there is anything that is opposed to the will of God we may prophesy with certainty its failure. Often there are causes very dear to some little group of devotees that seem to us too small, too provincial, to fit the big significant changes in human life we call God.

There is a little sect that opposes the wearing of neckties. Progress does not seem to lie in that direction. Another little denomination makes its big testimony on the subject of citizens of the United States refusing to vote because the name of God is not in the constitution. Christian union is not like any of these puny interests. Christian union is of God.

Modern scholarship has moved us all forward in the direction of Christian union, in spite of our fears of further division. In the last fifty years the church has come into a scientific method in theology. Previously theology had worked by adopting a major premise that could not be questioned. Each sect had its own major premise which was a dogmatic and not a rational product. The doctrinal system was deduced from the major premise. Modern scholarship has made an induction of the facts of religion. Theology has systematized and interpreted these facts.

The big conceptions of religion are taught in Harvard, Yale, Union or Chicago in much the same way. Given the scientific method, we get substantial agreement in any science. The young men of all denominations work side by side in these schools of religion. A Congregationalist coming from such a school is not fundamentally different from a Baptist. Each goes back to his own denomination because of his friendships and his loyalty to his spiritual mother, but neither will ever feel it necessary to preach against the other. Theological polemic today practically never develops between men who have the scientific training.

The scientific method has given us a view of the Bible so rational, so adequate and withal so religious that the infidel no longer has a vocation preaching about the mistakes of Moses. There is a criticism more scientific, with greater understanding of all the facts that has given us a Bible which ultimately the whole Christian world will accept.

In the same way we might show how the doctrines of God, Christ, Salvation and of Future Things have also been brought into a new and more adequate statement. Progress in scholarship is not dividing the Christian world as some have feared it would. After the bushwhacking of obscurantists is over, there will remain a great and holy peace in the camp of the theologians.

Agreement in doctrine will never reunite the Christian world, however much it may aid toward that happy consummation. Our present denominational divisions have come to rest upon a social consciousness which is tribal in character. This tribal consciousness goes on even after all reason for the denominational division has disappeared. Northern and southern Presbyterians are no longer disagreed over slavery, but they continue to live apart.

Progress in our modern world clearly indicates a larger social consciousness. The noble utterance of President Wilson on loyalty to a big universal conception of humanity have been lampooned by small-minded editors, but his ideas have long been a commonplace among educated men. No man feels the grip of this biggest of all loyalties and still persists in defending our present tribal order in the Christian world. The church as well as the state must at last be bound together in fraternity the world over. We are about to have a new Catholic church, or perhaps we should say the first Catholic church the world has known since the apostolic age.

Our world war has given God the occasion for making still further progress in uniting the human race in religion. The tribal spirit has produced its inevitable result. There is being shot to pieces upon the battle field the ragged flag of an obsolete nationalism. The men in the trenches are reading the New Testament and giving their hearts to God. These religious soldiers are surely coming home to preach a bigger loyalty, the loyalty to God and to all Good Men.

So sure is the Christian world of this that great leaders in England are raising their voices for unity as never before. A proud and aloof state church has been willing to pray with non-conformists. Scattered sects are realizing that the doom of church competition is near at hand. The Free Church union of England is not the last word. An even better union is in sight there. If it comes, much of the change will have been occasioned by what men in the trenches have thought. Amid shot and shell God has spoken to men. Truly God makes the wrath of men to praise him!

The formal elements of the plans for Christian union are fading away. Vain are the hopes of any who would found unity upon some plan or organization either ancient or modern. Neither the sacrifice of the mass nor any other ceremony can stand as indispensable. Christian union is only the spirit of brotherhood at work among Christian people. Brotherhood has many kinds of bodies but only one soul.

In the great Church of the future there will be room for group fellowship. A long time ago within the crowd was the Seventy. Within the Seventy was the Twelve. Within the Twelve was the Three. Among the Three was that Disciple whom Jesus loved. There are degrees of intimacy in brotherhood. This is not disloyalty to the big unifying conception of humanity.

In the glorious days for which Christ prayed, we shall love the Church, the Blessed Community of Good Men, more than any clan. We shall allow none to usurp the place of the great Head of the Church. Ours will be a loyal and unifying fealty to the Spirit of Progress, the Father of all Men.

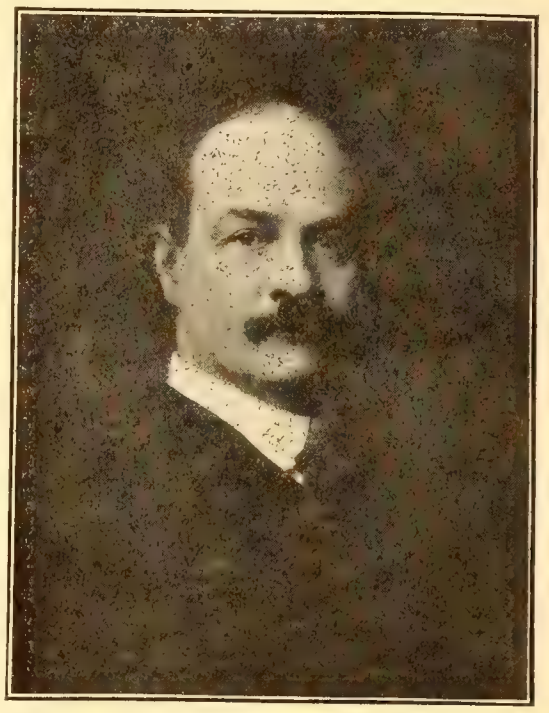
The Building of a Nation

A portion of an address delivered at th e Annual Luncheon of the Associated Press at the Waldorf-Astoria, New York.

BY NICHOLAS MURRAY BUTLER.

IN this presence of men of affairs, so closely in touch with the movement of opinion all over the world, accustomed to guide, to express, to formulate it, there is nothing that I can possibly say that you do not already know. But I remember that it is out of the reflections of individuals, and out of their reaction to the changing course of events that first public opinion and then history is made.

If any significance be attached to what I shall briefly say in your presence, it can only be because it represents the attempt of one American who feels keenly the responsibility of his country and of its entire citizenship at this moment when the world stands at a crossroads in its path of progress. If we stand at that crossroads irresolute, paralyzed of word and will, history will have one story to tell. If we turn to the right and take the path that leads upward to new achievement and to lasting honor, it will have a very different story to tell. If we should turn to the left and follow the winding and rocky road that leads down to a darkening gloom—we know not where—history will have yet another record to make of the American people and of their capacity to represent civilization.



LEADERS OF CIVILIZATION.

It is just about twenty years ago since George Meredith, writing to The London Daily News, said that since the benignant outcome of the greatest of civil wars he had come to look upon the American people as the leaders in civilization. That is a proud and ennobling judgment, and we may well search our minds and our hearts to ascertain whether it be true, and whether we are competent for the high honor that so distinguished an observer of his kind proffered to us as his personal judgment.

The question which I ask in your presence at this time is this: Have we an American nation? If so, is that nation conscious of a unity of purpose and of ideals? If so, what is to be the policy of that nation in the immediate future?

In the history of nations the story of our America has a place that is all its own. The American nation came into being in response to a clear and definite purpose. A theory of human life and of human government was conceived and put into execution on a remote and inaccessible part of the earth's surface. The moving cause of the American nation was the aspiration for civil and political liberty and for individual freedom which was already stirring in the minds of western Europe in the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries. This aspiration gained in force as the art of printing multiplied books and as the periodical press came into existence. The high-minded, the courageous, the venturesome were drawn across the wide ocean toward the west, carrying with them for the most part the liberal ideas and the advanced thought that were steadily increasing their hold upon the people of western Europe.

On this Atlantic shore distances were great and communication difficult. In addition there were social, economic and religious differences that kept the struggling colonists apart. The result was that there grew up here not a nation, but the material out of which a nation could be made. There is a sense, a deep and striking sense, in which the same remains absolutely true today. There is not yet a nation, but the rich and fine material out of which a true nation can be made by the architect with vision to plan and by the builder with skill adequate to execute.

When a common oppression forced the separate colonists together they still sadly lacked that devotion to a unity higher than any of its component parts which would have saved so much loss and so much suffering during the days of revolution and of the first steps toward a National Government. An enormous step forward was taken when the National Government was built.

AMERICA NOT YET A NATION.

In the adoption of the Constitution of the United States, the cornerstone was laid for one of the most splendid structures in all the history of nations. Then quickly followed sharp political divergence. There were those who would lay stress upon the new national unity. There were still more who thought it important to emphasize the separate elements out of which that unity had been composed. The judicial logic of Marshall and the convincing eloquence of Webster were the chief unifying and nation-building forces in the generation that followed. Meanwhile sharp differences of economic interest were manifesting themselves, and the fatal question of slavery pressed forward both as an economic and as a political issue.

The new nation, which had already made such progress upon the foundations laid by the fathers, fell apart, and only after one of the most terrible and destructive of civil wars were the ruins of the disaster cleared away and the ground prepared for the next step in construction. Here again mistakes were made so numerous and so severe that the unifying and nation-building process was checked and held back for many years.

Then two new sets of separating and disintegrating forces began to make themselves strongly felt. First, the economic differences which must of necessity manifest themselves over so large and so diverse a territory now revealed themselves with new force—in part as a result of the industrial revolution and in part as a result of purely American conditions,—as involving a class conflict between capital and labor. Soon there were signs that citizenship, with its compelling allegiance to the common weal, was to be subordinated in discouraging fashion, not once but often, to the immediate interests and policies of an economic class.

ECHO OF OLD WORLD FEUDS.

Second, the immigration from other countries, which had been for a long time substantially homogeneous became increasingly and rapidly heterogeneous. New nationalities, new languages, new racial affinities were drawn upon for the recruitment of the population of the United States. The hopes and the ambitions which 100 and 200 years before had been the peculiar property of the people of Western Europe had now spread far away to the East and to the South. With this heterogeneous immigration there came, in no inconsiderable measure, the echo of the Old World animosities and feuds and hates. These did not manifest themselves in any direct sense as anti-American, but they did manifest themselves with sufficient strength to deprive America of a unity of attitude, of feeling, and of policy in dealing with the international relations which every day grow in importance and in significance.

So it is that at this moment, with a world war raging about us and a Presidential campaign opening in front of us, with years full of fate stretched out for us to walk in, we are not sure of our national unity of thought and feeling and purpose because of the presence of disintegrating elements and forces which weaken our sense of unity at home and which deprive us of the influence abroad which attaches to unity at home.

The grave problem before the American people today is that of completing the process of nation-building. It is the problem of setting our house in order. It is the problem of integrating America. It is the problem of subordinating every personal ambition, every class interest and policy, every race attachment, to the one dominant idea of an America free, just, powerful, forward-facing, that shall stand out in the history of nations as the name of a people who conceive their mission and their true greatness to lie in service to mankind.

A THOUSAND YEARS FROM NOW.

We are the inheritors of a great tradition. What poets and philosophers have dreamed, that we are trying day by day to do. Our stumblings, our blunders, our shortcomings are many; but if we keep our hearts clean and our heads clear he who a thousand years from now writes the history of liberty and justice and happiness among men will be able to tell to those far-off generations a proud story of the rise and influence of the American nation.

We find here everything which is needed for a great nation. The task before us today is to make it. The task before the American people is nothing more nor less than a speedy continuation, and, if it be practicable, the completion of the process of nation-building. It is the problem of the integration of America about those great fundamental principles and purposes which the very name America itself brings to our minds and which this flag stirs to expression on every lip.

WE FEEL AMERICA IN OUR HEARTS.

We know in our hearts what America means. The problem is to teach it to our fellows; to share with them an understanding and an appreciation of it; to unite with them in an expression of it. We wish to build a nation fit to serve; a nation that does not find its end in its own aggrandizement, however great that be; a nation that cannot find its purpose complete in amassing all the wealth of Golconda, but that can only achieve its aim by carrying a message to mankind of what has been found possible on this continent. Saxon and Celt, Teuton and Slav, Latin and Hun, all are here not as aliens but as citizens; not as immigrants but as members of a body politic which is new in conception in human history, as it is new in its own thought of its high purpose. Can America integrate itself at this crisis; can it show that here is a nation which, out of various and varied ethnic elements, can be brought into a genuine unity by devotion to high principle and by moral purpose before the face of all mankind? Can we make an America that shall go down the corridors of time with a proud place on the pages of history?

We must remember that the greatest empires have fallen as well as risen. We must remember that the most powerful dynasties have passed away as well as come into existence. There is no reason to suppose that our America is going to escape the everlasting law of change. We know its history and its origin. We have seen its rise. We know its present state. Who can predict how many hundreds or thousands of years it will take before the forests will be felled and the streams will be dried, and this great fertile continent of ours, like the plains of ancient Iran where civilization began, will become a desert, fit only for the exploring parties of the archaeologist?

When that time comes, what do we want to have written on the pages of history of those who lived for hundreds or perhaps thousands of years on this continent? What do we want to have said about the way in which America met the greatest crisis of the world's so-called modern history in 1916? Do we wish a nation weak, broken to pieces, irresolute, filled with conflicting and discordant voices, or do we wish for a nation unified, strong, sympathetic, and ready to respond to the cause of a common purpose to serve all humanity, even though the rest of humanity be at war with itself?

OPPORTUNITY IS KNOCKING.

The year 1916 is but one member of an infinite series. Countless aeons have gone before it and countless aeons will come after it. The physical forces of nature will go their way through indefinite time, performing their allotted functions, obeying their peculiar laws and undergoing those manifold changes and transmutations which make up the heavens and the earth. Not so with the reputation and the influence of a nation.

Opportunity will not knock forever at any door. It is knocking now at the door of the American people. If they are able to rise to an appreciation of their own part in the world, of their own controlling principles and policies; if they are able to put aside every self-seeking, every distracting, every brutal appeal, then no one can tell what light may illumine the page on which the history of our nation will yet be written.

It is nearly sixty years since Abraham Lincoln in his debates with Senator Douglas made much use of the Scriptural saying that "a house divided against itself cannot stand;" and he added, "I do not expect the house will fall, but I do expect the house will cease to be divided." So I say today to this influential company of Americans, we do expect, every one of us, that our house will cease to be divided. We do expect that our America will come to full consciousness of its purpose; that the serene courage of Washington, the constructive genius of Hamilton, the keen human insight and sympathy of Jefferson, the patient wisdom of Lincoln, will not have been in vain in teaching us what our country is and may become.

Shall we catch sight of that something higher than selfishness, higher than material gain, higher than the triumph of brute force, which alone can lead a nation up to those high places that become sacred in history, and from which influence descends in a mighty torrent, to refresh, to vivify and to inspire all mankind?

It is as true today as it was in ancient times, that where there is no vision the people perish. We can make an America with a vision. We cannot make it without.

Who Won the Game?

By "Billy" Sunday

TWENTY-SIX years ago (1887) I walked down a street in Chicago in company with some ball players who were famous in this world—some of them are dead now—and we went into a saloon. It was Sunday-afternoon and we got tanked up, and then went and sat down on a corner. I never go by that place but I pray. It is Van Buren Street, Chicago.

As I said, we walked on down the street to the corner. It was a vacant lot at that time. We sat down on the curbing. Across the street a company of men and women were playing on instruments—horns, flutes and slide trombones—and the others were singing the Gospel hymns that I used to hear my mother sing back in the log cabin in Iowa, and back in the old church where I used to go to Sunday-school.

And God painted on the canvas of my memory a vivid picture of the scenes of other days and other faces. Many have long since turned to dust. I sobbed and sobbed and a young man stepped out, and said: "We are going down to the Pacific Garden Mission; won't you come down to the mission? I am sure you will enjoy it. You can hear drunkards tell how they have been saved and girls tell how they have been saved from the red light district."

I arose and said to the boys: "I'm through. We've come to the parting of the ways." And I turned my back on them. Some of them laughed and some of them mocked me; one of them gave me encouragement; others never said a word, either of reproach or encouragement.

Twenty-six years ago I turned and left that little group on the corner of State and Madison Streets, walked to the little mission, went on my knees and staggered out of sin and into the arms of the Savior.* * *

The next day I had to go out to the ball park and practice. Every morning at 10 o'clock we had to be out there and practice. I never slept that night. I was afraid of the horse-laugh that gang would give me because I had taken my stand for Jesus Christ.

I walked down to the old ball grounds. I will never forget it. I slipped my key into the wicket gate, and the first man to meet me after I got inside was Mike Kelley.

Up came Mike Kelley. He said: "Bill, I'm proud of you. Religion is not my long suit, but I'll help you all I can." Up came Anson, Pfeffer, Clarkson, Flint, Jimmy McCormick, Burns, Williamson and Dalrymple. There wasn't a fellow in that gang who knocked; every fellow had a word of encouragement for me.

That afternoon we played the old Detroit club. We were neck-and-neck for the championship. That club had Thompson, Richardson, Rowe, Dunlap, Hanlon and Bennett, and they could play ball.

I was playing right field and John G. Clarkson was pitching. He was as fine a pitcher as ever crawled into a uniform. There are some pitchers today—O'Toole, Bender, Wood, Mathewson, Johnson, Marquard—but do not believe any one of them stood in the class with Clarkson.

We had two men out and they had a man on second and one on third, and Bennett, their old catcher, was at the bat. Charley had three balls and two strikes on him. Charley couldn't hit a high ball—I don't mean a Scotch highball—but he could kill them when they went about his knee.

I hollored to Clarkson and said: "One more and we got 'em.''

You know every pitcher digs a hole in the ground where he puts his foot when his is pitching. John stuck his foot in the hole and he went clear to the ground. Oh, he could make them dance! He could throw overhanded and the ball would go down and up like that. He is the only man on earth I have seen do that. That ball would go by so fast that a thermometer would drop two degrees. John went clear down, and as he went to throw the ball his right foot slipped and the ball went low instead of high. I saw Charley swing hard and heard the bat hit the ball with a terrific blow. Bennett had smashed the ball on the nose. I saw the ball rise in the air and knew it was going clear over my head. I could judge within ten feet of where the ball would light. I turned my back to the ball and ran.

HOW TOM JOHNSON HELPED.

The field was crowded with people, and I yelled, ''Stand back!'' and the crowd opened like the Red Sea opened for the rod of Moses. I ran on, and as I ran I made a prayer; it wasn't theological, either, I tell you. I said: ''God, if you ever helped mortal man, help me get that ball, and you haven't very much time to make up your mind, either.'' I ran and jumped over the bench and stopped. I thought I was close enough to catch it. I looked back and saw it going over my head, and I jumped and shoved my left hand out and the ball hit it and stuck. At the rate I was going, the momentum carried me on and I fell under the feet of a team of horses. I jumped up with the ball in my hand. Up came Tom Johnson. He was afterwards mayor of Cleveland. ''Here is $10, Bill; buy yourself the best hat in Chicago. That catch won me $1,500. Tomorrow go and buy yourself the best suit of clothes you can find in Chicago.''

An old Methodist minister said to me a few years ago: ''Why, William, you didn't take the $10, did you?'' I said: ''You bet I did.''

Listen! Mike Kelley was sold to Boston for $10,000. He came up to me and showed me a check for $5,000. John L. Sullivan, the champion fighter, went around with a subscription paper and the boys raised over $12,000 to buy Mike a house. They gave Mike a deed to the house and they had $1,500 left and gave him a certificate of deposit for that. His salary for playing with Boston was $4,700 a year. At the end of that season Mike had spent the $5,000 purchase price and the $5,000 he received as salary and the $1,500 they gave him and had a mortgage on the house. And when he died in Pennsylvania they went around with a subscription to get money enough to put him in the ground. Mike sat there on the corner with me twenty-six years ago when I said: ''Good-bye, boys! I'm through.''

SOME MEN WHO WERE NOT ''TWICE BORN.''

A. G. Spalding signed up a team to go around the world. I was the first man he asked to sign a contract, and Captain Anson was the second. I was sliding to second base one day. I always slid head first and I hit a stone and cut a ligament loose in my knee. I got a doctor and had my leg fixed up, and he said to me: ''William, if you don't go on that trip I will give you a good leg.'' I obeyed and I have as good a leg today as I ever had. They offered to wait for me at Honolulu and Australia. Spalding said: ''Meet us in England and play with us through England, Scotland and Wales.'' I did not go.

Ed Williamson, our old shortstop, was a fellow weighing 225 pounds, and a more active man you never saw. He went with them, and while they were on the ship crossing the English Channel a storm arose. The captain thought the ship would go down. Then he dropped on his knees and promised God to be true, and God spoke and the waves were still. They came back to the United States, and Ed came back to Chicago and started a saloon on Dearborn Street. I would go there, giving tickets for the Y. M. C. A. meetings and would talk with him, and he would cry like a baby. I would get down and pray for him. When he died they put him on the table and cut him open and took out his liver. It was so big it would not go in a candy bucket. Ed Williamson sat there on the street corner with me twenty-six years ago when I said: ''Good-bye, boys; I'm through.''

Frank Flint, our old catcher, who caught for nineteen years, drew $3,200 a year on an average. He caught before they had chest protectors and masks and gloves. He caught bare-handed. Every bone in the ball of his hand was broken. You never saw a hand like Frank had. Every bone in his face was broken, and his nose and cheekbones, and the shoulder and ribs had all been broken.

I've seen old Frank Flint sleeping on a table in a stale beer joint and I've turned my pockets inside out and said: ''You're welcome to it, old pal.'' He drank on and on, and one day in winter he staggered out of a stale beer joint and stood on a corner and was seized with a fit of coughing. The blood streamed out of his nose, his mouth and his eyes. Down the street came a woman. She took one look and said: ''My God, is it you, Frank?'' And the old love came back.

She called two policemen and a cab and started with him to her boarding house. They broke all speed regulations. She called five of the best physicians and they listened to the beating of his heart—one, two, three, four, five, six, seven, eight, nine, ten, eleven, twelve, thirteen, fourteen—and the doctor said: ''He will be dead in about four hours.'' She said: ''Frank, the end is near.'' And he said: ''Send for Bill.''

THE BITTERNESS OF A GODLESS DEATH.

They telephoned me and I came. When I reached his bedside he said to me: ''There's nothing in the life of years ago I care for now. I can hear the grandstand hiss when I strike out. I can hear the bleachers cheer when I make a hit that wins the game; but this is nothing that can help me out now, and if the Umpire calls me out now, won't you say a few words over me, Bill?''

He struggled as he had years ago on the diamond when he tried to reach home—but the great Umpire of the Universe yelled: ''You're out.'' And the great gladiator of the diamond was no more. Frank Flint sat on the street corner, drunk, with me twenty-six years ago in Chicago, when I said: ''I'll bid you goodbye, boys; I'm going to Jesus.'' Say, men, did I win the game of life or did they?

The Visitor

A Day in Montevideo

IN the midst of our stay in Buenos Aires our deputation made a trip to Montevideo, the capital of Uruguay. That city contains a half-million people and might be called the Boston of South America. Probably education has been carried farther in Montevideo than in any other city. Its University is one of the leading institutions of the continent, and its municipal government is more democratic and progressive than that of any other city.

Uruguay is often called the Switzerland of South America. Politically it is in a sort of buffer position between Argentina and Brazil. It is the smallest of the South American republics, and seems to be quite outside of the international disputes and jealousies which affect the other countries. More progressive—perhaps I had better say radical—in its legislative policy than any other republic, it is also more radical in its departure from religious standards. The Roman church exercises very little actual influence in the political life of Uruguay. The party now in power is expressly committed to the complete severance of church and state whose connection has long since ceased to be anything but a formal tradition. Uruguay has by far the most homogeneous population of any of the South American countries. There are no aboriginal Indians. The people come nearer being of real Spanish stock than do other peoples we visited. The leading tribe of Indians which inhabited the country when the Spaniards came has been practically killed off, and other tribes have been pushed back or have gradually melted away, leaving the white man in possession, as did the Indians of North America.

It is difficult to say whether Montevideo lies on the north bank of the River Plate, as the River de La Plata is popularly called by English speaking residents, or on the shore of the Atlantic Ocean. It is probably better to say it is situated just where the river flows into the sea. The river is about twenty miles wide at the point where Buenos Aires is located, and Montevideo is about ninety miles east of Buenos Aires. Between the two cities two lines of palatial passenger steamers are plying constantly. We took a night boat, leaving at 10 o'clock, and when we wakened in the morning found ourselves at the Montevideo dock.

We were met by a committee of Y. M. C. A. and church people with automobiles, and spent the forenoon seeing the city. It is surely a charming place. There are many signs of wealth, not such vulgar signs as one sometimes sees in Buenos Aires and Rio de Janeiro, but the people are unmistakably prosperous. The contrasts of poverty and opulence are not so sharp here as in other cities of either South or North America. We visited the university, several great churches, the Y. M. C. A., a girls' school and a boys' school both operated by the Methodists, and several other institutions, and had tea at the home of Professor and

Mrs. Edwardo Monteverde, who had been with us all the way from Panama and had themselves anticipated our arrival in Montevideo by only a day or two.

We had been looking forward with much interest to the occasion when we would be the guests of the Monteverdes in their own home. Prof. Monteverde is probably the most influential evanvelical in South America. He is professor of Mathematics in the University of Montevideo and was made president of the Panama Congress. With Mrs. Monteverde he attended the Pan-American Scientific Congress in Washington a few weeks before the convening of the Panama gathering. Professor Monteverde has taken active leadership in the Y. M. C. A. in Montevideo and is the ablest man in the Methodist church in that city. But these facts about him seem to be outweighed by the fact that he and Mrs. Monteverde are the parents of a glorious family of eleven children! A New York newspaper gave a full page illustrated story in its Sunday edition to this very interesting family, at the time of the Scientific Congress. Of course, the affectionate attachment of our deputation group to Professor and Mrs. Monteverde lent peculiar interest to the two hours we spent in their home with all their charming children. A family of this size is no exception in South America; it is the rule. But it would be hard to find in either of our continents a household so full of health and happiness and Christian idealism as we found under the Monteverde roof tree.

That evening we went to the Methodist church, the most expensive and largest evangelical church building on the continent, where a platform meeting had been arranged. With Professor Monteverde presiding, addresses were made by Dr. A. W. Halsey, our deputation's chairman, Rev. Alvaro Reis, Presbyterian pastor at Rio de Janeiro, and the Visitor. The house was full of Uruguayan Christians—perhaps a thousand of them—interested to hear some word of interpretation of the Panama Congress and a message from North America. Our interpreter that evening was Rev. Paul Penzotti, the son of Rev. Francisco Penzotti, the South American agent of the Bible Societies who twenty-five years ago was released from jail at Callao, Peru, after six months' confinment, and then only after the good offices of the President of the United States and Queen Victoria had been enlisted in his behalf. The elder Penzotti is greatly beloved in all evangelical circles of South America. He was with us in our conference at Lima. His son, Rev. Paul Penzotti, is now pastor of the large Spanish-speaking Methodist church in Buenos Aires, whose property I referred to in a preceding article as having recently been sold for something like $200,000.

We returned to Buenos Aires that night and spent several days which were taken up with sight-seeing, informal conferences with mission workers, calls on United States Ambassador Stimson and several distinguished Argentine political leaders and educators, a reception to Secretary McAdoo, of President Wilson's Cabinet, and Mrs. McAdoo, and, for the Visitor, a fairly creditable portion of work on the official volume which is to tell the story of our regional conferences. When we left Buenos Aires our faces were turned homeward with but one more stop on our route, at Rio the capital of Brazil.

Some Recent Books

THE WEBB OF STEEL. By Cyrus Townsend Brady, father and son. The stories of Cyrus Townsend Brady, preacher and author, have always been spell-binders, but this co-operative product of Brady, Senior and Junior, contains a new element. It has to do with human beings, of course, but the central object of the story is a great steel bridge, the construction and destruction of which has to do mightily with the making of character of the man and woman of the story. (Revell, New York. $1.35.)

THE RESEARCH MAGNIFICENT. By H. G. Wells. An English story but one "with the whole world for a background." India, Africa, Russia and the Balkans are features of that background. In the foreground is a man with a soul in the making, a man with an ideal, to live the "noble life." This is one of the most modern and human stories of this very modern and human writer. (Macmillan, New York. $1.50.)

QUIET TALKS WITH THE FAMILY. By Charles E. Jefferson. Heart to heart conversation with fathers, mother, sons and daughters, boys and girls and the rest of the family on themes which touch home life most vitally. This book should be read aloud in the family circle of a million American homes. (T. Y. Crowell Co., New York. $1.00.)

HIGH TIDE: SONGS OF JOY AND VISION FROM PRESENT-DAY POETS. Edited by Mrs. Waldo Richards. Not long ago the publishers of this volume bought out a little book of verse which was interesting but which contained mostly poems of a melancholy sort. This book evidently is the other side of the shield, and contains lilting and happy verse from such poets as Robert W. Service, Josephine P. Peabody, Frank Dempster Sherman and a hundred others. (Houghton Mifflin Co., Boston. $1.25 net.)

BEHOLD THE WOMAN! By T. Everett Harre. This is a story of the period of final conflict between Paganism and Christianity, and depicts the struggles of a pure woman's soul against the tendencies of a vicious age. It is a novel of religious significance, and has a message for today, although dealing with the life of two thousand years ago. (J. B. Lippincott and Co., Philadelphia. $1.25 net.)

THE GIRL FROM THE BIG HORN COUNTRY. It's not an easy matter to become adjusted to Eastern ways after having spent one's whole life on a Wyoming ranch. But that is what Virginia Hunter did—and quite gracefully did she adapt herself to the change. This story has plenty of thrills. (The Page Company, Boston. $1.25 net.)

FISHERS OF BOYS. By William McCormick. A business man who teaches boys in a Reading, Pa., church, discusses the task. His contemptuous rejection of the results of modern study of religious education mar the value of the book greatly. He has many practical suggestions, however, which will be of value to boy teachers. The book is of the "rough and ready" style and exalts the "practical." (Geo. H. Doran Company. $1.00 net.)

HOME MISSIONS IN ACTION. By Edith H. Allen. The author is the secretary of the Woman's Board of Domestic Missions of the Reformed Church in America, and the book is published under the direction of the Council of Women for Home Missions. The book is different from most of the home mission books now in use. It deals but little in factual matter, relatively speaking. The effort is made to invest the whole subject with the religious fervor which characterizes much of the literature of foreign missions. The discussion of war is not definitely related to the problem of home missions and there is other extraneous material. The book will serve a useful purpose as a mission study text. (Fleming H. Revell Company, 50c net.)

Wanted—a Preacher

(At Hardscrabble Church; salary, $300 a year).

Our church wants a preacher, a preacher of fame,
Not too fond of sensation, nor too prosy and tame;
But one who has learning; devotion and skill,
And can live on a pittance, will just fill the bill.
We feel in our hearts we can justly expect
He shall not be too young to command our respect;
Nor yet do we want one decrepit and old,
But one who will add to the strength of the fold.

The pastor we're seeking and hoping to find
Must be active and earnest and helpful and kind;
Not too conservative—fond of the past—
Nor yet too progressive, too daring or fast.
The success of our church on the preacher depends,
So we trust he will know how to win hosts of friends.

He must not be frivolous, vapid or light,
Nor yet be so solemn our souls to affright.

There's one fault that all of our pastors have shown—
They expected that part of the time was their own,
But we have a right, for the money we pay,
To call for their service by night or by day.
In fact, we are waiting and hoping, some day,
An angelic pastor may wander this way,
Who can live, work and suffer, yet never complain
If sometimes he fails all his dues to obtain.

Quite humble and meek, not puffed up with pride,
Nor greedy, nor selfish, nor dissatisfied,
But thankful to take what the church may afford,
Knowing patience is always its own best reward.

THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY

RELIGION ON THE STREET CORNER

AT A certain corner on State Street in Chicago there congregate every evening several hundred people. They are divided into several groups and various brands of religion and economics are given to the people who stand about and listen. These crowds teach us that in modern life nothing will attract so much attention on the street as these two big fundamental interests.

The oratory is disappointing. In economics, one hears untempered denunciation and an evil suspicion of the motives of the leaders of the world. Every fact that may be distorted to the service of this evil suspicion is brought into play.

The religion of the street corner is not much better. Street preaching has not changed much since the days of the Wesleys. Consequently it is still expressing itself in the language of the eighteenth century when it ought to talk in the language of the twentieth century.

We can not help but wonder what would happen if a modern-minded man who had all the earnestness of a socialist and all the devotion of a Salvation Army woman, should mount the barrel in the street and expound the deep things of life and of God. It would be a brave man who would do this, for it would be an innovation, and new things are not welcomed.

Jesus was a street preacher. He never built a church and so far as we know never hired a hall. Only occasionally did he preach in a synagogue, for he was not a professional rabbi. He and his apostles started the new religion of the Divine Life in man by preaching it to passers-by. Why should not the church of today put forth to lost men and women its best ideas, and bring them the refreshing breezes of its deepest piety?

THE PROPHETS AND HUMAN VALUES

RELIGION passed from the ceremonial to the humanitarian stage in the work of the great prophets of Israel. Doubtless they seemed to many an Israelite as irreligious as the street corner socialist seems to a modern priest. They challenged the existing order of things and gave but little valuation to the ceremonial elements in the prevailing religion.

It is hard to find in the literature of any other religion in the world the same interest in the weak and down-trodden portion of society as is to be found in the writings of the prophets. The science of society occupied the attention of the Greek philosophers, but most of their work was in order to justify an aristocratic order. Many another religion occupied its attention with vain speculations on questions beyond the power of the human intellect to solve. The prophets of Israel gave the world a view of life which is only now beginning to work itself out in actual practice.

It is a curious oversight that an earlier generation found in the prophets nothing particularly of value except predictions of the coming of a Messiah. The prophets did have this blessed hope, but a collection of the true Messianic predictions indicates how little of their time was given to such prediction.

In the modern church, there has been but little study of the prophets by the rank and file. Our Sunday-school lessons in the past have been more occupied with the miracles of Elisha than with the epoch-making sermons of Isaiah. No better study could be given in many of our men's classes than the humanitarian teachings of the prophets. Here love of God and of mankind are united in a beautiful religious spirit which the world needs to possess in ever larger measure.

WHAT SHALL WE BUY WITH OUR MONEY?

THE wealth of the United States viewed from the standpoint of history is one of the most astonishing achievements of man. Mechanical invention applied to vast resources has brought into being enormous supplies of goods. The Yankee trader has completed the process of securing the lion's share of the gold of the world.

Gold has ruined as many nations as any one thing in human history. We need to find some way in this country to spend our wealth without at the same time spending our manhood and dissipating the elements of strength in our national life. How shall we invest our money?

After we have bought lavishly of automobiles, and spent billions on tobacco and liquor, what is left to do? Obviously, the increased efficiency of industry should be turned in the direction of improving the condition of the toilers of the world. Andrew Carnegie gave them libraries. Henry Ford is giving them cottages. Will some one give them time to read and get acquainted with their families? The right economic adjustment would give a chance for the higher life to every man, woman and child in this country. Humanity never had such a chance before. Do our Persian rugs and our toys for grown-up folks make us too poor to build minds and souls in our population?

NO CHURCH WITHOUT BISHOPS

THE World Conference on Faith and Order, which is being called by the Episcopalians and which will be participated in by Christian people of many denominations, will find an embarrassment to its work in the dogmatic attitude of certain promoters of this World Conference, which attitude is reflected in the dictum, "Where the bishop is, there is the church." Dr. W. T. Manning of New York has been much agitated, and continues to be exercised over the participation of some Episcopalians in the Panama Congress. At first one wonders, then, how he can promote so heartily the World Conference on Faith and Order; but this is no longer a mystery when one discovers that the World Conference is not a true conference but is a meeting entirely controlled by Episcopalians to which other Christians are invited as guests.

There will be no Christian union upon the basis of making the bishop the church. The New Testament makes the people the church. All sound scholarship now recognizes that the episcopal system of supervision is something which grew up subsequent to the apostolic age. The bishop and the elder are identical persons in the New Testament and district administration with the power of the keys in the hands of a bishop was to come after early Christianity began to lose its democracy.

The right government of the church, however, will not be settled in the long run by appeals to the past. The new testament church had most kinds of administration except our modern kinds. The government of the church has changed in every age with the changing conditions of life. The church is a living organism that must adapt itself to its environment or die.

The conception that the bishop is the church has neither the authority that comes from an appeal to the New Testament norm, nor has it the reinforcement of modern experience. The small Episcopal denomination which started in this country at the beginning of the colonial period, and now has but little more than half as many communicants as the Disciples of Christ, can hardly claim that the big pragmatic argument is in behalf of the Episcopal order.

Christian union is not chiefly a matter of government, though that question is involved and must be settled in a practical way. It is not chiefly a matter of doctrine, though we must have a set of ideas which are truly Christian and truly modern. Christian union is a social question. It involves the loss of tribal consciousness and the rise of the sense of world brotherhood. Christian union involves a deeper religious experience than we now have. Our fads and "isms" and prejudices in every communion must give way as we say, "Not my will, but thine, be done."

SPREADING MISSIONARY INFORMATION

THE missionary achievements of the Christian Woman's Board of Missions on the field are of great significance but it may be doubted whether even this achievement has done more for the cause of religion than has the work of the society in spreading missionary information.

Every form of activity of this organization tends to the production of an intelligent clientele. The monthly journal of the society, the Missionary Tidings, is the most widely circulated of all Disciple journals. The missionaries write books which are given generous use by the women. The monthly meetings of the society have for their function the serious pursuit of a well laid out program of missionary study.

This accumulation of missionary information has no doubt had a favorable effect upon the work of all the other societies operating among the Disciples. The women constitute about three-fifths of the membership of the churches and are contributors to all of the organized work. These women of the Woman's Board become the means by which men of large means and small missionary vision are brought into a larger appreciation of the modern missionary movement.

A SMASHING VICTORY FOR THE DRY CAUSE

THE city of Duluth has gone dry after one of the most sensational campaigns in the history of the advance of prohibition. The city of Superior near it had gone dry and the better elements of Duluth determined that they would not afford hospitality to the denizens of the underworld who would be leaving that city.

The significance of the victory is seen when one realizes that lumberjacks and sailors form an important part of the city's population at different times. There were big brewing interests that were supplying a considerable territory.

Another striking feature of the movement is to be seen in the fact that Bishop McGolrick of the Roman Catholic church was on the dry committee and his people aided materially in the victory. It demonstrates again how powerful are the friends of Jesus Christ when they unite for any good end.

The victory in Duluth means the spread of prohibition all over the northwest country. The wets have depended upon the immigrant population to keep their business alive, but a second generation is now coming on which is instructed in American ways and is convinced by both the moral and the intellectual reasons for driving the saloon curse from the land.

DELAYED RECOGNITION OF THE OLD PREACHER

UNTIL three years ago, the care of the old preacher in the various communions has been quite inadequate; thus has been revealed a shameful ingratitude on the part of the church. Since then, millions are being raised in the various communions for the proper endowment of pension funds. The Disciples of Christ alone seem to lag behind the procession in this great movement. There has been considerable gain in the receipts of our Board of Ministerial Relief, but the pension now provided to our old preachers is so pitifully inadequate as to discharge but a minimum of our obligation. The amount of it is a constant rebuke to the piety of our churches.

Great corporations are rapidly making provisions for their aged employes. The railroads take care of their men. If the time ever comes that the Disciple ministers alone of the great groups of men in this country are unprotected, there will be still greater difficulty in gathering recruits for this ministry. Young men will hesitate more than they now do to devote their lives to a group which has so little sense of social responsibility.

The Episcopalians with but little more than half our membership, have set out to raise an endowment fund of five millions of dollars. Three millions are already pledged and it is confidently asserted that the remainder will be in hand before next spring. An even larger fund would be necessary to care for our men, who probably need pensions more frequently than Episcopal rectors. When the time comes for the "big drive" among us in behalf of our aged ministers, the active support of every loyal Disciple should be pledged to the cause of our veteran expounders of gospel truth.

WHAT CHICAGO CHRISTIAN ENDEAVORERS ARE DOING

THE new year-book of the Chicago Union of Christian Endeavor is out. It gives one the impression that the movement in the metropolis of the middle west is not suffering from senility. An admirable organization is developing Christian activity of the most creditable sort among young people.

There is the work in the county institutions. Services have been held of an evangelistic order and many lonesome people who would otherwise receive no visitation have been cheered by the good word of the young enthusiasts. The floating Endeavor department is engaged in providing the sailors of Chicago with religious services. These young people go up and down the river on Sunday with a launch and gather groups of sailors together for worship.

Christian Endeavorers understand the art of publicity. One of their former leaders is now the religious editor of the Chicago Herald. Other leaders see that the great metropolitan dailies give proper interpretation of the movement. There are division organizations in Chicago covering the city and each of these has special activities that are adapted in a peculiar way to the needs of the section.

That the movement is growing in favor is seen by the fact that two leading Episcopalian churches organized societies last year, and these have proved so successful that a long delayed official endorsement may soon be given to the movement.

The Larger Christian World

A DEPARTMENT OF INTERDENOMINATIONAL ACQUAINTANCE :: By Orvis F. Jordan

Baptist Young People Meet in Chicago.

There were nearly seven thousand young people in attendance at the international convention of the Baptist Young People's Union in Chicago, July 6-9. The twenty-fifth anniversary of the founding of the organization was celebrated. The convention was regarded by many as the most successful that was ever held. At the close of the convention a call was made for young people to devote their lives to special Christian service and twenty-eight young men and women came forward and signed cards. H. B. Osgood, of Chicago, was elected president and Dr. James A. White was re-elected as general secretary. The movement has its headquarters in Chicago.

Social Activities Among Episcopalians.

The Social Service committee of the diocese of Pennsylvania has made a study of the parish activities of the Episcopalians and finds that over half the churches studied have provided gymnasium equipment for their young people. Twenty-six parishes have basketball; twenty-nine parishes have supervised dancing; four parishes have motion picture machines. Summer camps for the boys are in much favor this year. The various parishes are developing out-of-door activities for their young people.

Lord Kitchener a Good Churchman.

Lord Kitchener was held in special honor by the leaders of the Establishment in England. He was a member of the English Church Union and took a definite stand for religion. When he lived in Cairo, society was particularly frivolous, but he never neglected attendance at church. He was a member of the Guild of the Holy Standard. These facts have been given special emphasis at memorial gatherings. On June 13, a great memorial service was held in the National Cathedral.

Lord Mayor Offers Irenicon.

Sir Charles Wakefield, mayor of London, has been to the front and comes back full of zeal for a united church in which sectarianism would completely disappear in England. He is himself a member of one of the Free churches. He proposes that a meeting be held at the Mansion house of the leaders of all the sects at which an effort be made to agree on some simple fundamentals of Christianity which he suggests are Love of God and Love of our fellow men. His suggestion has been much ridiculed in some of the organs of the church who have pictured the Archbishop of Canterbury acceding to all the demands of General Booth. Other journals, however, have not treated his suggestion so cavalierly.

Try to Convert Armenians.

A form has been printed by which Armenians may be enrolled as Mohammedans and escape the terrible persecution which has been raging against them. A few have signed these enrolment blanks but for the most part Armenians have been remarkably faithful to their religion. It is said that the rank and file of Mohammedans have but little respect for the men who have changed faith to escape persecution.

Northfield Conference.

The Northfield Student Conference met this year, June 23-July 2. One of the outstanding features was the morning lecture by Dean Charles R. Brown, of Yale. The attendance at the conference this year was smaller than usual as some who would have otherwise been in attendance were off to the front at the Mexican border.

Rev. Chas. Stelzle in New Position.

Rev. Chas. Stelzle has been appointed special field secretary of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America. His career has been a noteworthy one as head of the Labor Temple in New York, leader in the Home Mission work of the Presybterians, and social service expert. He will still specialize in social study, but will be a general utility man for the Federated Council.

Ministers Approve Stonemen's Fellowship.

The men's organization which has developed such power in Pennsylvania and which is known as the Stonemen's Fellowship, has been approved by the ministers of the various denominations in Philadelphia. The meeting recommended the adoption of a ritual that would be acceptable to other than the Episcopal denomination and that no meetings be held to conflict with Sunday worship. There has been a change effected by which men may be baptized by their own pastors and join the church of their choice.

Well-Known Missionary Dies.

Dr. Samuel G. Wilson, veteran missionary of the American Presbyterian Board, is reported as dead, having passed away of typhoid fever at Tabriz. He is the author of two recent books, one on "Bahaism" and the other on "Modern Movements Among Mohammedans." He has helped recently in caring for refugees from the Turkish empire.

Union Churches

In order to break down the sense of isolation which exists among union churches, and to let workers in this field know of the progress of the movement toward unity in other communities, we are maintain ing this open forum. We wish to present plans of organization and work of united, federated and community churches, and to chronicle the progress of the movement as a whole. We ask any reader who knows of any union church that has not previously been reported in this current series to send us information concerning it. Address: Howard E. Jensen, care of "The Christian Century."

A COMPREHENSIVE UNION AT BLUE MOUND, KANS.

THE Federated Church at Blue Mound, Kansas, furnishes an excellent illustration of the way in which the religious life of a community may be revolutionized by co-operation under the proper leadership. Before the federation only one of the four churches of the village was under the leadership of a pastor. The three pastorless churches, and a number of Christian people belonging to denominations having no ecclesiastical organization in the locality offered undeveloped sources of spiritual power. Through the efforts of Dr. C. M. Lowe, editor of the local paper and a Congregational minister, a Committee of Twenty-one, representing the United Presbyterian, Disciple and Baptist churches drew up articles of federation which were ratified by the denominations upon the organization of the Federated church.

The results have been most gratifying. The federation was projected upon so comprehensive a scale that besides the members of the three denominations officially entering the federation, detached members of the Presbyterian, Congregational, Friends, United Brethren and Methodist Episcopal churches united with the Church at the outset. The Church welcomes into its fellowship all members in good standing in any evangelical denomination, and provides for their retention of membership in their own individual denomination, if they desire. New members are admitted upon their confession of faith according to the custom and practice of any evangelical denomination.

This church has developed a simple and beautiful form for the reception of members. After a declaration of the meaning of church fellowship by the minister to which the candidates for membership assent, there follows a response from the members of the church: "We welcome you into our fellowship. We promise to watch over you with Christian love. God grant that, loving and being loved, serving and being served, blessing and being blessed, we may be prepared, while we dwell together on earth, for the perfect communion of the saints in heaven."

Each denomination represented in the federation holds it own property in the usual way, but all such property is subject to the use of the Federated church at its need. The missionary offerings are at the discretion of each denominational board, but the budget of the united church is provided for by an Every Member Canvass of the church, regardless of denominational lines.

Dr. Lowe, who was primarily responsible for the federation, speaks in highest terms of the harmony which exists within the church. Although but in its initial stages, the movement has already gained the respect and confidence of the community. With a membership of 170, the attendance at services averages between two and three hundred. There has been a large increase in attendance at Sunday-school and an increased interest in the church on the part of the young people and the men of the community.

THE GRACE OF GIVING.

Lesson for August 13.

Golden Text: In all things I gave you an example, that so laboring ye ought to help the weak, and to remember the words of the Lord Jesus, that he himself said, It is more blessed to give than to receive. Acts 20:35.

Lesson 2 Corinthians 9. Memorize verses 10, 11.

(1) For as touching the ministering to the saints, it is superfluous for me to write to you: (2) for I know your readiness, of which I glory on your behalf to them of Macedonia, that Achaia hath been prepared for a year past; and your zeal hath stirred up very many of them. (3) But I have sent the brethren, that our glorying on your behalf may not be made void in this respect; that, even as I said, ye may be prepared: (4) lest by any means, if there come with me any of Macedonia and find you unprepared, we (that we say not, ye) should be put to shame in this confidence. (5) I thought it necessary therefore to entreat the brethren, that they would go before unto you, and make up beforehand your afore-promised bounty, that the same might be ready as a matter of bounty, and not of extortion.

(6) But this I say, He that soweth sparingly shall reap also sparingly; and he that soweth bountifully shall reap also bountifully. (7) Let each man do according as he hath purposed in his heart: not grudgingly, or of necessity: for God loveth a cheerful giver. (8) And God is able to make all grace abound unto you: that ye, having always all sufficiency in everything, may abound unto every good work: (9) as it is written,

He hath scattered abroad, he hath given to the poor;
His righteousness abideth for ever.

(10) And he that supplieth seed to the sower and bread for food, shall supply and multiply your seed for sowing, and increase the fruits of your righteousness: (11) ye being enriched in everything unto all liberality, which worketh through us thanksgiving to God. (12) For the ministration of this service not only filleth up the measure of the wants of the saints, but aboundeth also through thanksgivings unto God: (13) seeing that through proving of you by this ministration they glorify God for the obedience of your confession unto the gospel of Christ, and for the liberality of your contribution unto them and unto all; (14) while they themselves also, with supplication on your behalf, long after you by reason of the exceeding grace of God in you. (15) Thanks be to God for his unspeakable gift.

VERSE BY VERSE.

1. As touching the ministering of the saints. Paul was gathering money for the poor in Jerusalem, which is here referred to.—It is superfluius for me to write you. Paul had already written to them about the collection, see 1 Cor. 16:1-4. The collection should be considered a very important part of our worship.

2. Achaia hath been prepared for a year past. Paul is here speaking of the Corinthians of Achaia. They had fully purposed to give.—Your zeal. Your earnestness has stirred up the Macedonians. The power and contagion of example.—Very many. The Greek indicates "the greater part."

3. I have sent the brethren. Titus and two companions. That our glorying on your behalf. To the men and women of Macedonia Paul had been boasting and he did not want them to make him ashamed.—Void. Vain, unconfirmed. Don't disappoint me by your failure to give.

4. If there come with me any of Macedonia. Paul expected some one with him from Macedonia. It was the custom for some one to travel with him from one place to another.—We (that we say not, ye) should be put to shame. If they were not prepared at his coming, he would be greatly mortified before his companions. They would also share in this disgrace.

5. I thought it necessary therefore. To avoid being humiliated by your unpreparedness.—That they would go before unto you. The men who were to get in readiness all things for Paul's coming.—Make up beforehand your afore-promised bounty. Some people find it much more easy to subscribe than to pay. It seems that Paul felt that some of them lived in Corinth. Subscriptions taken in an enthusiastic meeting should be taken with care.—A matter of bounty, and not of extortion. If the offering could be made in Paul's absence it would be more of a blessing. It would not seem like extortion.

6. He that soweth bountifully shall reap also bountifully. This is a law that holds good all through nature. Some one has said, "What I gave I have; what I kept I lost." Deeds will yield a harvest just as surely as the seeds we sow in the ground.

7. According as he hath purposed in his heart. The gift decided upon. The free will gift. The gift prompted by the heart life.—Grudgingly. Literally, out of sorrow. Loth to part with it.—Of necessity. The urgency of Paul's pleading. Under the emotion of the occasion.—A cheerful giver. The Greek word means, "joyful, hilarious." We are to give with a joyful heart.

8. God is able to make all grace abound unto you. The word "grace" depends largely upon the context for its meaning and here seems to mean temporal goods, enabling them to give to every good cause.—That ye may abound unto every good work. Our blessings are not given for our own selfish use; but that they may be shared with others. The task was at that time to take care of the poor in Jerusalem.

9. As it is written. In Psalms 112:9.

10. Your seed. The thing you have which might be scattered to help some one in this world.—Shall supply and multiply your seed for sowing. Paul desires to make the Corinthians feel as he does that God will bless the liberal heart.—Increase the fruits of your righteousness. The same use of the word "righteous" as is found in verse 9.

11. Your being enriched. You will be enriched by giving of your means, for God will increase your ability to give.—Which worketh through us thanksgiving to God. Paul had inspired the Corinthians to liberality, hence it was through him that thanksgiving would be attained.

12. This service. The collection not only helped the poor at Jerusalem, but led them to give thanks to God.

13. The proving of you. The thing tested was the liberality of the western Christians and their ability to live up to their profession.

14. While they themselves also. The Judean Christians would be affectionately drawn toward them and pray for them.

15. His unspeakable gift. A gift beyond the powers of language to describe. It may mean the money; but more naturally it refers to Jesus.

Giving

The Lesson in Today's Life.

BY ASA McDANIEL.

LAST week we considered the greatest thing in the world—Love. Upon this depends the grace of our present lesson. God so LOVED that he GAVE. When our giving is regulated by this principle it will be all that God intends it to be, willing, regular and systematic.

Sad as is the deficiency of our giving, sadder still is its reluctance. Most of the money that comes into the Lord's treasury is not really given, it is raised. To get it requires canvassing, pleading and begging; appeals are made to vanity and pride more often than to conscience and love. The campaign of the hypnotic eloquence secures the subscription and tactful persistence gathers the collection. It is all a miserable pumping process from the beginning to the end.

System after system has been devised to correct this sort of giving. They have all been found wanting sooner or later because the true spirit of giving has not been stressed. It is simply amazing to note the fullness of Divine teaching on the use and abuse of riches. In Old Testament and New, in Prophets and Apostles, this note is constantly sounded. "For every text in the Bible that speaks of prayer, there can be shown three about giving," said a great missionary bishop, and it might be added that there are ten touching stewardship for every one on baptism. No other subject whatever receives anything like so copious or varied a treatment. From the Sermon on the Mount to the Parable of the Judgment, the teaching of Jesus abounds in comments and commands relating to property.

"It is more blessed to give than to receive." Giving is life's highest expression, richest privilege and finest luxury. We know the joy of receiving. From our infancy we have been the objects of boundless blessings. May we believe that God can make these abound yet more richly, if we follow Him into the great joy of giving? There is uplifting power in the fact that God has never done anything but give; there is terrifying alarm in the opposite fact that Satan's whole endeavor has been to get. Choose ye this day whom ye will serve! Decide once and for all whose your deeds shall declare you to be.

Josiah Strong once said: "For Christians to apprehend their true relations to money, and the relations of money to the Kingdom of Christ and its progress in this world is to find the key to many of the problems now pressing for solution. What is needed is not simply an increased giving, an enlarged estimate of the Lord's share, but a radically different conception of our relations to our possessions."

When we thus regard our stewardship in this world our giving will be "hilarious." Instead of trying to meet our divine obligations out of the remnant that is left over from our spending, let us consecrate a part of our substance to the Lord. Instead of talking about what we can spare or calculating how little will secure the respect of our friends, or silence the pastor and save our souls, we will give thoughtfully, and liberally to the Lord's treasury.

If we give as God has given to this world, our giving will be a fountain that will spontaneously pour forth a flood of silver and gold, laughing and singing and sparkling in the sunshine of God's great love.

"For the heart grows rich in giving,
All its wealth is living again;
Seeds which mildew in the garner,
Scattered, fill with gold the plain."

Disciples Table Talk

Editors of Christian Standard and Christian Century to Debate at Canton.

The editor of The Christian Century has accepted an invitation from the "Doctrinal Congress" to discuss with S. S. Lappin, the editor of the Christian Standard, the question of receiving unimmersed Christians into the fellowship of churches of the Disciples of Christ. The Congress meets at Canton, Ohio, August 3 to 9. The exact day of the debate has not yet been fixed, but it will be held somewhere in the middle part of the congress, likely on Friday or Saturday, August 4 or 5, or possibly on Monday, August 7. Two complete sessions will be set apart for it—an afternoon and evening session. Mr. Morrison assumes the affirmative and Mr. Lappin the negative of the following question: "Should the churches of the Disciples of Christ receive into their membership persons who bring credentials of membership in other evangelical churches, without demanding that such persons who have not been immersed in water shall be so immersed as a prerequisite to membership?"

Other Features of Bethany Assembly, 1916.

The Christian Woman's Board of Missions will hold forth at Bethany Assembly, Bethany Park, Ind., on August 3 and 4, under the direction of Mrs. O. H. Greist, the state president. At morning Sectional conferences the following women will lead: Mrs. H. M. Appleman, South Bend; Mrs. Yantis Wells, Delphi; Mrs. Wilbur Templeton, Elkhart; Mrs. D. P. Miller, Terre Haute; Miss Ada Snyder, Muncie; Mrs. W. S. Moffett, Indianapolis; Mrs. W. H. Reavis, Kokomo, and Mrs. J. D. Case, Rushville. Special addresses will be given by Miss Mary Lyons, State Secretary of Ohio; Mrs. J. M. Stearns, Indianapolis, and others. There will be a stereopticon address on the evening of August 3 by Prof. Demarchus C. Brown, State Librarian of Indiana, and two concerts are scheduled for the afternoon and evening of August 4, by the Olsen Concert Company—vocal, piano and impersonations. Saturday, August 5, will be Children's Day, with a "regular Junior convention." The churches and schools of Morgan county and adjoining counties will be enlisted, and a prize will be given to the school which has the largest per cent of its average enrollment present. This prize consists of a $10 Sunday-school library. The Indianapolis News Newsboys' Band will give a concert afternoon and evening. Sunday, August 6, will be Christian Missions Day, with Bible-school at 9:30, an address, "The World's Call," at 10:30, by R. A. Doan, of the Foreign Society; Communion service at 2:30; and an address on American missions by F. W. Burnham of the American Society, in the evening.

Dr. Medbury on the Problem of the Child.

Dr. C. S. Medbury made a profound impression with his Chautauqua lecture, "Forty Million Young Folks," at Pontiac Mich., this year. Dr. Medbury's talk was an appeal for the saving of the children from crimes of ignorance, bad habits, and other ills which, he said, are responsible for present-day conditions among children. He declared the future problem of the country is one dealing with child-life. "The greatest thing we can do in the world is to solve the problem of child-life," Dr. Medbury said. "There are three questions that should be asked of every child. Who are you? What are you doing? Where are you going? There are forty millions of children in the United States who are under 21 years of age. Of this number 24 million have American parents; 10 million have one or both parents born outside the United States; five million are black; and 1,700,000 are born outside of home life. Of this number, 27 million are between the school ages of six and 21. "There are in this country," he continued, "142,000 children 10 years of age who leave their homes early in the morning and go to shops, stores, factories, mines and quarries to labor all day long. There are 151,000 among the laboring ranks at 11 years; 221,000 at 12; 268,000 at 13; 400,000 at 14; and over 500,000 at the age of 15 years. There are 26,000 little children, most of them girls, who are working in the textile mills in the south and most of them are without an education. Thirteen thousand of them can neither read nor write. There are 9,000 little boys toiling in mines in America. It is our problem to get these children out of the factories and mines. We have juvenile laws in some states and our widows' pensions, but we must go farther. The people of America must make room for the children, no matter from what land they may come to our country."

Rev. Harry Foster Burns, former Disciple minister, now Congregational pastor at Oshkosh, Wis., who is preaching at Lincoln Center, Chicago this summer.

Kansas Offers Loving Cup for Bible-school Efficiency.

Kansas, the Front Rank State, through her enterprising State Superintendent, David H. Owen, has made a fine proposal, Kansas proposes to award through the Bible-school Department of the American Society a Loving Cup to the State or District making the best percentage showing in the Bible-schools as measured by the Standard of Efficiency. This cup will be awarded at Des Moines at the close of the present fiscal year, September 30, on the basis of reports from the schools for this year in the Bible-school office of the American Society approved by the State or District Bible-school superintendent. The cup is to be retained one year only on this award and any state or district receiving it three years in succession will hold it permanently. The cup will be awarded on the percentage basis rather than to the state with the largest number of Standard schools. Every school in the state on this plan that reaches even one point will have a part in bringing up the grade of the whole state. This plan puts all on an equal basis, except that a small state has perhaps a slight advantage. For contest purposes a district will combine states. For example the Rocky Mountain District composed of Colorado, Nevada, New Mexico and West Texas, Utah and Wyoming will enter as a district and not as separate states. These district lines are already fairly well known. Missouri has five districts within the state that will enter as districts—not the whole state as such. If there is any doubt about the placing of any state or school, a letter of inquiry to Robt. M. Hopkins, Bible-school Secretary of the American Society, Carew Bldg., Cincinnati, O., will bring the desired information.

Latin American Missions to be Stressed at the College of Missions.

The College of Missions, Indianapolis, Ind., will lay especial stress during the coming year on the preparation of missionaries for the Latin American field. President Paul, as is known by many, is a Spanish scholar, and has accumulated a fine library of books dealing with Latin American life. Professor Paul has secured the services of leading authorities on Latin American missions, who will deliver lectures on this subject during the college sessions of next year. Among the visiting lecturers during the year will be: Mrs. Charles J. Ewald, continental secretary of the Y. M. C. A. for South America, Montevideo; Dr. H C. Tucker, director for Brazil of the American Bible Society, Rio de Janeiro; and Rev. S. G. Inman, executive secretary of the Committee on Co-operation in Latin America, New York City. Regular instruction in this department will be given by President Paul, Sonorita Delia Esparza (Languages), Professor Albert R. Miles, Professor C. B. Coleman (History), and Professor J. G. McGavran (Religion.) The College of Missions is a residential, co-educational, post-graduate institution, devoting itself to the special education of missionaries for the principal fields of the world. Fifty of its graduates have gone to foreign lands since 1910. Students are received from all evangelical communions.

—Wm. B. Clemmer, of Central church, Rockford, Ill., will spend August at Pentwater, Mich., for vacation and rest. Six persons were added to the membership of Central on July 16. Mr. Clemmer reports a very successful religious day school being conducted in Rockford under the auspices of the City Sunday School Association.

—William O. Foster recently celebrated his fifth anniversary as pastor of West 2nd church, Atlanta, Georgia. In this time he preached five hundred and seventy-eight sermons, made three thousand and thirty-one calls and added two hundred and ninety to the church.

—Dr. Henry F. Cope, General Secretary of the Religious Education Association, will discuss at the University of Chicago, on four successive days, July 25-28 inclusive, the general subject of "Religious Education Through the Community." He will treat of the various phases of religious education through the public school, the church, through amusement and recreational agencies, and through the community council. Dr. Cope is the author of an important and successful book recently published by the University of Chicago Press under the title of "Religious Education in the Famly."

—M. H. Garrard, pastor at Battle Creek, Mich., has been elected president of the association of the Christian churches of Michigan for his eighth consecutive term. The 1916 convention of the Michigan Disciples has just closed at Lansing. The next years' meet will be held at Cadillac.

—It is not a bad record of work at Medford, Ore., where Harry E. Tucker ministers. Practically every Sunday since February of this year there have been persons added to the membership of the congregation—95 in all. Five were added the first two Sundays of July three by confession. During the summer union evening meetings are being held at Medford.

—Nebraska's State convention is being held this week at Bethany Park, Neb., the program committee consisting of J. L. Kohler, C. R. Neel and Roy Deadman. The most prominent feature of the convention is the series of addresses being delivered by Prof. E. E. Snoddy, Professor of Philosophy in Transylvania College. His topics are as follows: "The War of All for All," "Christ and Civilization," "The College and the World's Call," "The Disciples and the World's Task," "Building the Rural Community," and "The Rent Veil." Miss Cynthia P. Maus is the Bible-school specialist of the convention, and is scheduled for four talks.

—E. B. Bagby, for many years pastor of Ninth Street church, Washington, D. C., but for several years having led in one of the Arkansas churches and at Twenty-fifth Street church, Baltimore, Md., will now return to the capital city as pastor of the new Columbia Heights organization.

—Roy O. Youtz, assistant pastor at Fresno, Cal., preached at Oakland, Cal., on July 16, his theme being, "The Greatest Christian." E. B. Lyman, a leader in this congregation, reports the sermon "splendid."

—The class of Philadelphians, at Central church, Des Moines, Ia., recently presented an elegant banner to the Christian Endeavor organization of the church. The Christian Endeavorers of Central report one of the livest meetings in its history—a "leaderless meeting."

—The annual reunion of the famous "Jewett family," of which George A. Jewett, of Des Moines, is a member, was held this year, in Rowley, Mass., July 19-20.

—Since his graduation at Drake this year, W. John Gratton, pastor at Highland Park, Des Moines, is now in residence at Highland Park.

—The men's brotherhood of Park Avenue church, Des Moines, is holding its summer meetings on the lawns of the various members.

—Norman Brighton, one of the Des Moines pastors, is a candidate for the chaplaincy of the Third Regiment, Iowa.

—A feature of the meetings of the Endeavor societies of Central church, Terre Haute, Ind., is the exhibition of slides of the countries in which the Disciples are carrying on missionary work.

—The men's class at Frankfort, Ky., had an average attendance at its meetings during the past six months of 74, with a record attendance of 338 on May 7. The offerings averaged over $3. R. T. Nooe, the pastor at Frankfort, reports that the church has purchased property adjoining the building at a cost of $7,600. Plans for improvements are now being made. This church has a mission work at Thorn Hill, to which the assistant pastor, J. L. Anderson, ministers.

—Rev. E. D. Salkeld, pastor at Frankfort, Ind., is determined to be a soldier. He intended to go into camp at Ft. Harrison, in Indiana, but when the camp plan was broken into by the breaking out of the Mexican war scare, Mr. Salkeld decided to enter the Plattsburg, N. Y., camp which is said to be the largest military camp of its kind in the world. Mr. Salkeld, with his family, motored to Pittsburg, and while his family are visiting there he is taking instruction at Plattsburg.

—After a pastorate of three and one-half years at Queen Anne church, Seattle, Wash., William E. Adams has resigned the work. Mr. Adams writes that although during this period over a hundred persons have been added to the membership of the church, economic conditions have resulted in the removal of many members from the city. As a result of this fact, the salary of the pastor had to be reduced. As the present pastor is a man of family, he feels that he must leave the work at Queen Anne, but advises that some younger unmarried man take up the task; for he reports that the congregation of the church are a very loyal people. Contributions for local expenses last year averaged over $28 for the adult membership, and over $5 per capita for benevolences. Mr. Adams reports living high in Seattle.

—"Billy" Sunday preached for Walter M. White, pastor at First church, Cedar Rapids, Ia., on July 2. The great auditorium was "packed to suffocation." Mr. Sunday happened to be visiting friends in Cedar Rapids. Mr. White reports that First church had a Children's day offering this year of $65.

—The university preachers for July and August at the University of Chicago are announced as follows: On July 30, Dr. James A. MacDonald, editor of the Globe, Toronto, Canada. On August 6, Dean David Jones Evans of William Jewell College, Missouri, will speak; on August 13, Rev. Z. B. Phillips of St. Peter's Episcopal church, St. Louis; and on August 20, Professor Gerald Smith of the University of Chicago.

Missionaries Sail for New Fields

Between July 13 and September 23 fifteen missionaries of the Foreign Society will have sailed across the Pacific to their respective fields. Nine of these are new missionaries recently appointed and the other six are missionaries returning to their fields after having spent a year on furlough. The sailings are as follows: Mr. and Mrs. Karl Borders, July 13, "Empress of Asia," for the Philippine Islands; Mrs. Dr. C. C. Drummond, October 19, "Empress of Japan," for Harda, India; Misses Josepha and Stella Franklin, October 19, "Empress of Japan," for India; Mr. and Mrs. Frank E. Harnar, September 9, "Nippon Maru," for India; Mr. and Mrs. F. E. Lee, September 7, "Empress of Asia," for Tokyo, Japan; Miss Anna Louise Fillmore, August 26, "Tenyo Maru," for Nanking, China; Miss Edith Parker, August 26, "Tenyo Maru," for Tokyo, Japan; Mr. and Mrs. C. E. Robinson, September 23, "Shinyo Maru," for Japan; Miss Ada Scott, September 7, "Empress of Asia," for Tokyo, Japan; Miss Cammie Gray, September 7, "Empress of Asia," for China.

The workers on the fields will be cheered with the return of the old workers and the coming of the strong, new force. Since the beginning of the European war it has been necessary to use the Pacific steamers for missionaries of India as well as those for the nearer Eastern fields. The prayers of our people should follow these workers who go out to their great task. The older missionaries are going back refreshed with their stay and rest in the homeland and the new missionaries are going out enthusiastic and untried in their difficult task. The old missionaries will be able to adjust themselves at once to conditions on the field; for the new missionaries this will be more of a problem. They will need to study the language exclusively for a year or two before being able to do any work to speak of. They must also learn the people as well as the language.

Other News Notes.

The government of China has sent all of its Forestry and Agricultural students from Peking, China, to the University of Nanking. This is a great step of recognition and this Christian school will have a great influence upon these fine, young Chinese leaders. Many of them after their instruction will be in government service.

From Africa comes the word that while there has been no fighting near our missionaries and their work, many cargoes of supplies and arms, and many ship-loads of soldiers for the Allies have gone up the Congo to fight the Germans in East Africa. This condition of warfare in Africa makes things very unsettled in the Congo field, although the work has gone on encouragingly.

The Foreign Society has recently received three gifts on the Annuity Plan.

Secretary A. McLean has been making a tour of the northwest and western coast conventions. He reports excellent interest and good conventions all through the trip.

The Foreign Society will have twenty-eight missionaries home on a furlough this year. It is the plan to engage in a strong series of missionary rallies all the fall and winter. It is hoped these will be the strongest ever held and a number of missionaries will be with each team. Churches desiring these meetings should write in early.

S. J. Corey, Secy.

—A large number of people from West Boulevard school, Cleveland, O., journeyed in three special trolley cars to Chippewa Lake, on July 11, for their annual picnic. The outing was in charge of several committees and a wide variety of sports and entertainment was provided. The contests and races produced much merriment for the spectators. One of the cars used was the private car of the president of the Trolley Company, "The Alvesta." Music was provided by the church band.

—A church of the Disciples of Christ was organized at Upland, Grant Co., Ind., on June 29 by G. I. Hoover, state evangelist of the eastern district. A regular place of meeting was secured, regular services provided for, and an evangelistic meeting by A. L. Martin, state evangelist arranged. This work has been conducted as a mission since December. J. H. Mavity preaches regularly every two weeks at Upland.

—During a recent "follow up" meeting conducted by Pastor F. D. Ferralll and congregation at Burlington, Iowa, 50 persons were added to the working forces of the church—33 of this number by primary obedience. During his work, a year and ten months, 129 new names have been added to the roster of the church, 72 of these by confession and baptism. A new church edifice is badly needed and already a building fund has been started. Pastor Ferrall has led in the erection of three new church edifices during his seventeen years of labor in the state of Iowa. Burlington would make his fourth.

—L. F. Carter closed his fourth year with Borough Park church, Brooklyn, N. Y., on July 9. During his pastorate the church has paid an indebtedness of $18,000, besides making extensive repairs on the church. The membership of the church has been increased more than two and one-half times. The Sunday-school has been trebled. Eleven persons made the confession at a recent morning service. Mr. Carter is taking post graduate work in the School of Religion of Columbia University.

—The official board of Second church, Disciples of Christ, New York City, after hearing the following report, voted a six weeks' vacation to the pastor, O. L. Hull. The church has paid promptly two payments and interest on mortgage and doubled the ascession to the church over the previous year, taken care of a deficit of over $330 in current expense ending in June with money in the general fund. The foreign mission offering of both church and Bible-school has been increased more than 20 per cent. The Children's day program was the best ever given and was enjoyed by a very large audience. The pastor preached for the G. A. R. on Sunday preceding decoration day and took part in the program on the 4th of July on McKinley Square, along with the Borough President, a State Senator and a U. S. Congressman. An aggressive campaign is being planned for fall at Second church. Mr. Hull began this work last November.

—The mid-week prayer-meeting services at Central church, Terre Haute, Ind., are reported to be a success; one reason for this fact is that the young people are enlisted in the work. On a recent Wednesday evening the Loyal Men's Bible class had charge of the devotional exercises. J. Boyd Jones, pastor at Central, has called upon the men's class of the church to select some of his sermon subjects for him. The class recently called for a discourse on "Evidence of the Divinity of Christ."

—The Christian Endeavor Summer Conference at Mt. Hermon, Cal., will be held August 8-17.

—Among the speakers at the recent Federated School of Missions, held at Mount Hermon were Dr. H. O. Breeden, of Fresno; E. M. Humbert, of Eugene Bible University, and George W. Brewster.

—S. H. Zendt, of Second church, Bloomington, Ill., served as platform manager of the Chautauqua at Marion, Ill., this year.

—F. E. Jaynes and the congregation at Wabash, Ind., have cleared up the large part of a parsonage debt, and are now talking a new and modern building.

—First church, Marion, Ind., under the leadership of A. H. Jordan, has added 160 persons to its membership during the brief ministry of Mr. Jordan.

—Seymour, Ind., church will have a new building. A finely situated lot has been purchased, and the pastor, Franklin P. Smith, is enthusiastic over the prospect of rapid development in this field from now on.

—Traverce Harrison, leader at Bellefontaine, O., in a recent sermon named denominationalism as "the devil in Ohio's paradise—Bellefontaine."

—Roderick McCloud, who received the degree of Master of Arts at Butler this year, will go to Tibet as a missionary after a little further preparation. Perry Case, who also received an M.A., will teach in Atlantic Christian College. Another Master of Arts this year at Butler was Yu Meng Chen, who already held the A.B. degree from the University of Nanking.

—L. H. Graham, pastor at Sheridan, Ind., has accepted the invitation to become Southwestern District Evangelist of Indiana. He will begin his new work in September.

Ten Big Reasons Why——

BETHANY GRADED LESSONS

are being adopted by so many of the best schools among Disciples

1. There is more to them—at least a third more—than is contained in any other series.
2. They are rich, vital and full of suggestion to teacher and pupil.
3. They are free from the sectarian spirit.
4. They are soundly and fervently evangelical.
5. They are truly artistic in all their illustrations.
6. They are printed on better paper with better binding and in better taste than any other series.
7. Every lesson writer is an expert of interdenominational reputation.
8. They are a monument to the modern spirit of unity —several leading denominations have co-operated to produce them and are now using them.
9. The Disciples possess full editorial rights, through the editor, Charles Clayton Morrison.
10. Every Disciple school that uses them participates in and promotes a great Christian union enterprise.

PARIS, ILL., PASTORS APPRECIATE H. H. PETERS.

The Paris, Ill., Ministerial Association recently passed the following resolutions, in consideration of the loss of H. H. Peters from the Paris ministry.

Whereas, our brother and fellow minister of Christ, Rev. H. H. Peters, has been called from his pulpit to the secretaryship of the Illinois Christian Missionary Society of the Disciples of Christ, and

Whereas, for four years he has proved himself efficient and brotherly, leading in every good work in the community and giving his fellow-laborers in Christ's vineyard all courteous consideration, and

Whereas, the community specifically is indebted to him for the resurrection of the Chamber of Commerce, for the present Chautauqua organization, for great help in securing the new reservoir, for the movement now going forward for a local Young Men's Christian Association, and for much of the spirit of civic improvement now manifest among us, as well as for a faithful preaching of the gospel of Christ; now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That we, the Paris Ministerial Association, express our high appreciation of the work of our brother and of the kindly relation he has sustained with us; and be it further

Resolved, That we pray our Heavenly Father to guide our brother in all his ways and to give him success in his further efforts for God's great Kingdom; and be it again

Resolved, That these resolutions be spread upon our minutes and copies given to the local papers.

for your Adult or Young People's Class

The Life of Jesus

It is always in order for Sunday School classes to study the life of Jesus. Young people's and adult classes want the very best text that can be found. This is simply to remind them that there has never been offered to the Sunday School world a Life of Christ so practicable, so usable, sotrue to the best scholarship, so bristling with questions that wake up the pupils, so well proportioned, as Dr. Loa E. Scott's "LIFE OF JESUS" in Fifty two Lessons. This book is being widely used in Sunday Schools both of the Disciples and other religious bodies, and in Y. M. C. A. classes. This testifies to its popularity. You must have it in your school. It will create a new interest in Bible study among your young people and younger adults. Price of the book, 50c. DOES YOUR CHURCH NEED A NEW HYMNAL?

You can afford to postpone getting one until you have had opportunity to examine

The Disciples Hymnal

Edited by Charles Clayton Morrison and Herbert L. Willett

NOW NEARLY READY FOR PRESS, AFTER FIVE YEARS OF PREPARATION

It can truly be said that this book will mark the highest reach of hymn book construction among the Disciples of Christ, and the editors have endeavored to make it the best hymnal in the entire American Church. Neither labor nor expense is being spared to make a book that will satisfy and inspire every church that uses it. Three features are being especially emphasized:

Hymns of Christian Unity
Hymns of Social Service
Hymns of the Inner Life

The mechanical work on a hymnal of this high grade moves slowly, but it is confidently expected that the books will be ready for delivery in September. The manuscript is now in the typographer's hands. The publishers regard THE DISCIPLES HYMNAL as the most important single piece of service the Disciples Publication Society has ever rendered the Disciples and the general church.

We will be glad to receive from pastors or other responsible officers of churches requests for a returnable sample of the hymnal. Your name will be placed on file and a copy forwarded as soon as the first edition comes from the press. In writing please state the approximate number of books your congregation will need.

DISCIPLES PUBLICATION SOCIETY, PROPRIETORS, : 700 EAST 40th STREET, CHICAGO

Disciples Publication Society

The Disciples Publication Society is an organization through which churches of the Disciples of Christ seek to promote undenominational and constructive Christianity.

The relationship it sustains to the Disciples is intimate and organic, though not official. The Society is not a private institution. It has no capital stock. No individuals profit by its earnings.

The charter under which the Society exists determines that whatever profits are earned shall be applied to agencies which foster the cause of religious education, although it is clearly conceived that its main task is not to make profits but to produce literature for building up character and for advancing the cause of religion.

The Disciples Publication Society regards itself as a thoroughly undenominational institution. It is organized and constituted by individuals and churches who interpret the Disciples' religious reformation as ideally an unsectarian and unecclesiastical fraternity, whose common tie and original impulse are fundamentally the desire to practice Christian unity with all Christians.

The Society therefore claims fellowship with all who belong to the living Church of Christ, and desires to co-operate with the Christian people of all communions as well as with the congregations of Disciples, and to serve all.

* * *

The Christian Century, the chief publication of the Society, desires nothing so much as to be the worthy organ of the Disciples' movement. It has no ambition at all to be regarded as an organ of the Disciples' denomination. It is a free interpreter of the wider fellowship in religious faith and service which it believes every church of Disciples should embody. It strives to interpret all communions, as well as the Disciples, in such terms and with such sympathetic insight as may reveal to all their essential unity in spite of denominational isolation. The Christian Century, though published by the Disciples, is not published for the Disciples alone. It is published for the Christian world. It desires definitely to occupy a catholic point of view and it seeks readers in all communions.

The Bethany System of Sunday School Literature

Represents the highest point yet attained in the field of Bible-school literature. It is not of the flash-in-the pan, printed-in-a-hurry-to-sell sort of literature. The 120 texts of this series are prepared by the leading experts of the entire Bible-school world. They are substantial and meaty. They present a greater amount of material than any other series; teachers' texts have fully a third more material than other systems afford. Such leaders among the Disciples as Finis Idleman, Edgar D. Jones, L. O. Bricker, H. H. Harmon, John W. Alexander, Frank W. Allen, Irving S. Chenoweth, Howard T. Cree, T. E. Winter, P. J. Rice and hundreds of others, pronounce the Bethany System absolutely the best adapted to the purposes of genuine religious education.

A Suggestion: Send us on a postal card names and addresses of your superintendent and other Bible-school leaders who might wish to see samples of this fine body of literature.

What Kind of a Sermon Do You Like?

"HOW WAS THE SERMON?

This question is often asked in a household by the unfortunate person who could not go to church.

Sometimes we can come home all aglow and tell of our impressions of a wonderful discourse which was full of meat for our souls. We all know what a good sermon is when we hear it, but can we tell what it takes to make one?

Ask one of the old-time elders of the church and he will tell you to preach "the gospel." When you ask him what the gospel is, he may declare it is "faith, repentance and baptism." Some of them say that no sermon should ever be preached that does not have in it the "conditions of salvation."

Our Bible is too big for us to restrict ourselves to a part of a single book, so we ask somebody else what it takes to make a good sermon.

We meet the reformer and he tells us that a sermon which does not give the saloon a body blow is no sermon at all. How can we ever hope to clean up America of the drink curse if the pulpit is cowardly in the presence of the foe? We agree with him that the saloon must go, but we cannot quite agree that every sermon must be a temperance lecture.

The social service man happens along, and he, too, has positive views on what makes fit material for a sermon. He will tell you of sermons that were "practical" and of others that were "impractical." He would banish all abstractions from sermons. He wants a preacher who will fight poverty, and sickness and injustice in the world.

The missionary expert is full of a big plan to reach the whole world with the gospel in this generation. He has worked it all out in figures, and figures cannot lie. The responsibility has been divided and subdivided until a very definite proportion rests on our congregation. He judges all preachers by the financial reports in the yearbook. Good preaching will tell in the collections.

Our search for a standard of judgment about a good sermon is thus far not very encouraging. The people who know what they want in a sermon have not wanted the same thing. They have all been partly right, but in a large sense they have been fundamentally wrong. It takes more than a special interest to make a sermon. A sermon is different from an essay or an oration or an editorial.

Can you call an address a sermon if it lacks in religion? We think not. A sermon is a declaration of the will of God about human life. The prophets were the first preachers. They reinforced every address with a "Thus saith the Lord." This was not an appeal to a document, but a declaration of God's will for a situation not covered by a document.

Perhaps we could not do better than go to the preaching of the world's greatest preacher to find out what a good sermon is. Jesus was never ordained, but the crowds thronged him until he had to preach from a boat out at sea to find room to stand. The things he preached were remembered until they were written into the gospels. The truths he gave transformed a vacillating Simon into the Rock Apostle and made a Son of Thunder an apostle of love. We will find much to learn from such a preacher.

The sermons of Jesus had a wide variety of theme. The Sermon on the Mount contrasts the old and the new righteousnes. There is a great humanitarian quality to the Parable of the Good Samaritan. The Parable of the Sower and many other like stories tell of the coming kingdom in which a new social order shall embody the hopes and ideals of the Israel of the ages. But after all there was but one sermon in all the preaching of Jesus.

Isaiah had but one sermon, with four subdivisions. He preached it on every occasion but with such variety of presentation that he was always fresh and interesting. Phillips Brooks had but one sermon. It was about the Divine Life in man. Jesus had a single sermon and that was on Love. Deeper than anything in religion for him was love of God and love of fellow-men. His success was a result of the fact that he had an organizing view-point and a deep passion for the truth he had come to deliver.

The preacher who has no deep conviction, who "gets up" his sermon, will not be successful. The message never comes in such a way that he might say, "Thus saith the Lord." Better a Salvation Army sermon with a fiery hell than a university man's weary essay. Better "Billy" Sunday than some hireling manufacturer of discourses. Best of all is the great utterance of a Beecher or a Jowett, the word of a Christian who has used all the arts to make a real message carry with greater power to the hearts of the people.

The great sermon is never prepared for "just anybody." In most churches nowadays the people would rather hear the pastor than a brilliant visitor. The reason is that the pastor who is faithful brings to his people a sermon that is a message for them in particular. Sometimes on a quiet Sunday morning, with a church half filled, the pastor preaches his greatest sermon. His people gave it to him, and God helped him to see its bigness, and on that memorable day he spoke not the things that were of his own narrow range. His sermon was as big as the congregation and sometimes it found the greater depth of eternal truth.

By the foolishness of preaching the world is to be saved. The foolishness Paul speaks of is not any kind of foolishness. The cross when preached to Greeks was foolishnes. The devotion to a big, unpopular message and the presentation of it to a people until they receive it is the preacher's greatest victory. Savonarola led the people to make a bonfire of their vanities in the streets of Florence. Martin Luther unchained the Bible from the pulpit and made a nation love it. Paul released a force in the great cities of the empire which overturned all idols. These men knew how to preach. They were the embassadors of God. They sought no compliments. They took their salary in stones and death. It could be said of them that they were faithful witnesses of the will of God.

At End of Ten Years

BY PROF. ALBERT JONES, Normal, Illinois

A VERY unusual service was held in the First Christian church of Bloomington, Illinois, Sunday evening, July 9. It was unusual in point of merit and character. The Ministerial Association planned it as a testimonial to Dr. Edgar DeWitt Jones, dean of the association, who had just completed his tenth year as pastor of "old First Church." They happily styled it a "Recognition Service." Addresses were made by the leading ministers of the city and the elders of the First Christian church, to which Dr. Jones made a very fitting response. The earnest and eloquent words of praise and appreciation of Dr. Jones' work for First Christian church, for all the Christian churches of the community, for all the denominational churches, and for the community as a whole, showed how the life and influence of this great man has made itself felt in a large way in all circles of the community. They had the ring of truth and sincerity and visibly affected Dr. Jones.

"A Recognition Service" to the living is unique, indeed. The usual custom is to reserve the proclamation of one's virtues and worth until we stand beside his casket. How beautiful and refreshing it is, then, for all the religious bodies of a great community to join in a happy, felicitous "Recognition Service" to their acknowledged leader. In these days when there is so much striving for places of preferment, when so few have learned the wisdom and "Fine Art of Taking Second Place," when there are envyings and jealousies over the community honors, even among preachers of the Gospel, such a service as this is edifying, indeed, and a sign of a wholesome spirituality. The members of the Ministerial Association have manifested a truly magnanimous spirit. Perchance Dr. Jones will live longer and happier because his fellow-preachers have demonstrated that they love, honor, and appreciate him and his work.

AN EXCEPTIONAL CAREER.

A decade is a considerable stretch of time. Ten years of service is a goodly portion of the active working period of one's life. Allowing twenty-five years as a preparatory period, and reserving for a contemplative period what remains after one reaches the age of sixty years, it is more than one-fourth of the working period that comes between. But few of our ministers remain with one church a decade. It might be well if more of them could do so without injury or loss to the cause. The relation of pastor and people, or shepherd and flock, seems to imply pastorates of some length. However, scarcely more than a few preachers should remain with a single congregation so long as a decade. The work or cause should not suffer loss for the sake of a long pastorate. The genesis of all pastorates is marked by interest, enthusiasm, holy zeal, and harmony, on the part of the membership of the church. This is because they expect their preacher to be a leader. To maintain this condition for ten years the minister must be a leader, a really great man, an exceptional man.

In these days of great fortunes and opportunities in the commercial world, but few great and exceptional men find their way into the ministry. The limitations of the average minister are so apparent, so easily discovered, that his leadership cannot be maintained for more than a few years. It was Emerson who said, "We lose interest in a man as soon as we discover his limitations." He no longer has the power to attract us. The wane of a ministry begins with this discovery and with it the condition that marked the beginning becomes sadly missing. He is no longer able to arouse the interest, command the respect, hold the confidence, nor retain the friendship of his people. The handwriting has appeared on the wall. The pastorate must terminate or the cause of Christ in the community suffer.

THE EXCEPTIONAL MINISTER.

But the exceptional minister can maintain his leadership. He can sound depths of thought, of knowledge, and of spiritual life unattainable by his people. It it true of him as it was of Jesus when he said to his disciples at the well, "I have meat to eat that ye know not of." The wholesome condition attending the beginning of his ministry becomes more wholesome. The circle of his leadership becomes larger until it includes other circles of community life, if not the entire community life. His pre-eminence becomes established. The power and influence of his life are felt and recognized throughout the community.

Dr. Jones is that exceptional preacher. He is an exceptional man that God has called, one of the really few such.. I believe Dr. Jones would have made an eminent judge or statesman had he chosen law. Even though he has been in the ministry fifteen years, I have a vision of him as a college president and a man of letters. His friends cannot fail to note the remarkable degree in which he possesses the outstanding qualities that would win renown in either of the professions I have mentioned as they have in the ministry, for they are the elements of greatness. I am permitted to mention but a few of these qualities.

The first I will name is his intellectual independence, and initiative. He thinks for himself. He blazes his own path. This quality of mind is shown in his sermons. They are the kind that are different, the exceptional kind, remarkable alike for force and suggestiveness. They do not seem identified with any particular school of theology, but rather partake of the full liberty of the Gospel. His sermons ring true to the truth whether new or old, and show that he is not afraid of a doctrine because it is new, nor ashamed of a doctrine because it is old. This intellectual independence and initiative are well illustrated in his two volumes of sermons. "The Inner Circle" and "The Wisdom of God's Fools."

ELEMENTS OF GREATNESS.

Most all the sermonic literature given us by our great preachers is controversial in character, but Dr. Jones has not followed their lead, but has shown his intellectual independence and initiative by blazing a new path. In these two volumes Dr. Jones has dealt with the highest spiritual values. Let me mention a few titles: "The Soul's Need of Silence," "Rizpah of the Mother Heart," "Faith and Fortitude," "The Lure of the Lord's Day," "The Fine Art of Taking Second Place." These titles of sermons taken at random from these two volumes are indicative of the rich spiritual character of the addresses. Sermonic literature of this character is an innovation among the Disciples and their preparation and publication ilustrate this quality of mind.

THE BASIS OF SOUND JUDGMENT.

Sound judgment, the ability to forecast the results of actions, is another outstanding quality of Dr. Jones' mental make-up. His power to intelligently assimilate and differentiate are most notable. His series of sermons and lectures in book studies aptly illustrate his power of assimilation and differentiation, the basis of sound judgment. During his decade of service here he has by a series of sermons given a study of the Book of Acts; by another series, a study of the Gospel according to Mark; and by a series of sermon-lectures he has given a review of the best of modern fiction under the title, "The Ancient Gospel in Modern Fiction." These studies and sermon-lectures were of exceptional value because they were exceptional in character, and were appreciated by the entire community.

Dr. Jones is a man of very large sympathies. He has the capacity for entering into the thought of others and of evoking their feelings by showing he can share them. I have heard him say he has never knowingly neglected to call on the sick. But I must hasten; for there is one more characteristic of his mind that I must mention, and that is imagination, the constructive faculty that gives him visions. He is a forward-looking man; one who anticipates the future. In a politician it is called statesmanship. It is exemplified in his ministry by his contribution to and interest in religious education. He is one of a few of our really great preachers who have enough statesmanship to see far enough into the future to realize that the hope for the future glory and triumph of the church rests on Christian education. For six years, on every Monday night, Dr. Jones gave an exposition of the International Sunday-school lessons to the Bible-school workers and members of all the churches of the community. They were largely attended and highly commended by all. Then each year for the past two years he has organized a great training school for the Bible-school workers and church members of the entire city. On the faculty he has had the best talent procurable. The work done in these schools will tell in the future Bible-school workers, who are now receiving the benefit of better instruction at a time in their lives when it counts for most.

A VISION OF PROGRESS.

Then, too, Dr. Jones has a vision of a modern church edifice that will adequately meet the needs of the growing Bible-school. He is looking forward to the time when this great school will have twelve or fifteen hundred scholars. This vision has at different times in the past two years been thrown upon the screen until the signs are that old First Church will make this vision a reality.

Intellectual independence and initiative, sound judgment and sympathy, and vision and persistency, comprise the principal elements of leadership in either of the professions I have mentioned, as well as in the ministry. His leadership in the community he now serves is well established and recognized, as the "Recognition Service" shows. His decade of service is well justified. His limitations are not apparent nor discovered. The wholesome condition attending the genesis of his ministry is growing more wholesome. His audiences are always large. So far as the interests of the First Christian church are concerned, Dr. Jones can remain with it several times ten years because his pre-eminence is so marked, and he is still growing. But Dr. Jones is conscious that scores of fields need such leadership and no one who knows him doubts that it is his desire to invest the next twenty-five years of his life where it will count for most to the Master. May I indulge the hope that old First church will make it very plain to Dr. Jones very soon that Bloomington is the place for him to make that investment?

A GROWING PREACHER.

Sitting in the pew on Lord's Day morning when Dr. Jones comes to the pulpit, one is reminded of the description of Saul when Israel was looking for her first king: "There was not among the children of Israel a goodlier person than he; from his shoulders and upward he was higher than any of the people." There is a grandeur in his deportment that thrills. His bearing is regal and his countenance is lighted up with apostolic zeal. The pulpit seems a throne and the preacher at once a prophet, priest, and king, thrilled by the witchery of glory that accomplishes his high office. Perchance it seems a spiritual romance to him for the time being, that brings the usual flutter of the heart. But what a divine spell seems to seize preacher and people. The thirty minute sermon is ended all too quickly.

THE DIVINE PRESENCE.

While the endowments Dr. Jones has received from nature, and the contribution education and culture have made, are great, these are not all, for that the divine Presence makes a generous contribution is apparent. Yet in no saved man's character is it possible to nicely separate what is due to nature and education, and what is due to the Holy Spirit, for they blend in the redeemed life. In Dr. Jones, as he stands in the pulpit full of holy zeal according to knowledge, proclaiming the Gospel as the power of God unto salvation, one is wonderfully impressed at the liberality of the contribution from each of these three sources.

In listening to Dr. Jones' sermons, one is deeply impressed by their wonderful simplicity. They seem so constructed that every auditor can get a comprehensive grasp of the theme. They are characterized by marvelous clearness, force, elegance of expression, and purity of language. They have charm and fascination. Audiences that tax the capacity of the auditorium on every occasion give eloquent testimony in regard to this point. Often, indeed, his ideas by virtue of their strength and beauty, run into forms of exquisite language, or there is in them such a sustained throb of emotion that they shape themselves spontaneously into sentences of noble eloquence. His ideas seem to fuse into mutual coherence. Every sermon is marked by orderly arrangement of ideas and perfect expression. Well has a local editor styled him "Our Poet Preacher." But the power and fascination of Dr. Jones' sermons does not all come from their simplicity, orderly arrangement, perfection of rhetoric, mastery of the art of public speaking, nor the power and beauty of the thoughts and ideas they set forth. Dr. Jones puts his heart into them. They seem the product of the heart of the man and his yearning for the spiritual welfare of the congregation calls them forth. The truths he reveals in his sermons seem embodied in the man. They emanate from the life within. That is one quality that gives them character and makes them appealing. The strength and beauty of his character inspire confidence and the ardor of his eloquence arouses enthusiasm.

A GOOD WORKMAN.

Some sermons are greater than the preacher who delivered them, and only those who do not know it, or who are able to think the sermon through disassociated from the preacher, derive any benefit from them. Some preachers are greater than their sermons and the chief benefit the auditors get in such a case is an inspiring glimpse of a great and sanctified personality, but in hearing Dr. Jones we have the double blessing that comes from a happy combination of a great and sanctified personality and a great sermon, too. He is, indeed, "a workman that needeth not to be ashamed."

Fishing For Men

BY HUGH McLELLAN.

WHEN the Lord called Simon he called him away from fish and nets and boats and all the paraphernalia of the fishing craft. It was a call from an interest in low things to an interest in high things. It was a call from fishing to preaching—a call from fish to men.

Simon was fitted by nature and destiny for great things. He did not know that. He was wasting his powers and gifts upon fish and boats. Fishing was the only thing he knew. It was not an unlovely life. It was out of doors and under the skies. It was free and independent. The storm called upon courage, and a comman danger developed unselfishness. There were touches of romance and beauty in it, too, when under the stars and out of the darker starlit deep, the fisher drew in his net meshing the glittering life.

And so, Simon would have lived and died a nameless fisherman of Galilee had there not come the call, "Follow me and I will make you a fisher of men." It was to be fishing still; but how different the interest and results. The little sea of Capernaum with its dumb spoil was to vanish in the larger vision of life's unresting sea and the solemn cast and draw of the gospel net bringing souls out of deep darkness into the light. It is doubtful if the larger vision came to Simon then. It came later. All he knew was to leave fish and net and seek men. It was a call from things to men.

FISHING AMONG DEAD THINGS.

There are various planes of life interest. A man's life and work may be among the rocks. There is the quarrying and shaping and building in of them. It is a good, honest craft. But the rock is a dead thing. The feelingless flint has no response. Outside of form and weight, color and hardness, it makes no appeal. But suppose a man work among plants. He here steps up to a plane of higher interest. He is working now among things that grow. He enters the realm of life. Here is development and infinite change. Here is a mild companionship, for life and death are here. iThere is remote affinity. In this sense it is better to be a Burbank and raise life to higher powers than to be a stonemason and change rough rock into carved stones.

But again, suppose one work among children. He is, we will say, a teacher. It may be a mere country school. This is a new step upward. The work now is not on rock or plant, but upon the human heart and mind. The thing worked upon dignifies the work. The trailing cloud of glory rests upon it. The wages of such work are not weighed and can not be counted. The work ceases to be mere work—it becomes largely a privilege. So when Jesus called Peter from fish to men he called him from drudgery to service, from duty to privilege, from things to men.

THE HUMAN ELEMENT.

This incident at the lakeside makes the human interest paramount. It is ever paramount. The Romans said that their superiority over the Greeks was seen in that, while the Greeks busied themselves with making lutes and statues, working on dead matter, the Roman genius was exercised in government, colonization and law. The Greek worked with things; the Roman worked with people.

We miss the mark when we miss the human element. Take the matter of travel, for example. One may travel the world over and have an eye for things only. One may go to Italy and see only the towers, and arches, and fountains, and pictures. They have an interest. But after all, the Italian is the chief interest in Italy. The children playing around the fountain are more worth notice than the fountain. The gondolier is more interesting than the gondola. The congregation in St. Peter's is a higher interest than the pictures of the Vatican. In travel one should fish for men—not things.

WHY IS CHRISTIANITY SUPERIOR?

The principle holds good in literature. There is a literature of things and a literature of humanity. The "Ode to a Grecian Urn" is a classic thing consummate in literary art; it is still as cold as the marble urn. The "Old Curiosity Shop" of Dickens is a crude story, but the old eyes dim and the young eyes weep over the sorrows of its people. The genius of Shakespeare was true. His drama is the life of the people. He played upon the thousand-stringed harp of human feeling and passion. His genius fished for men.

In religion the superiority of Christianity over Judaism is seen in its emphasis on the human element. The old dispensation was largely ritualistic and concerned with things. The legalism of times and places and things bulked large in the religious scheme. It was a matter of forms. The robes and altars, the courts and officials, the feasts and holy days were apparent, and the life which was the chief thing was obscured.

It was the glory of Jesus that he revealed to men that all these things are made for man and not man for things. It was a revelation when he said that the place where men worshiped was nothing, but that true worship was anywhere where there were spirit and truth. At the words of Jesus the ancient dynasty of things sinks into shadow and the empire of man rises into the light. Judaism had the beautiful art of religion. Christianity has the spiritual heart of religion.

Modern Christianity needs to hear the call of Jesus again, "Follow me and I will make you fishers of men." There is always a temptation besetting the Church to draw its eyes away from its human mission and fix them on things. took scrupulous tithes of mint, anise The thing may be a theology, or a system or a machine or an institution. It is not system that lies at the heart of Christianity—it is sympathy. Christianity is not an inn-builder, it is the Samaritan who finds the man who needs the inn. There are more inns than Samaritans. Christianity is fishing for men.

SEEKING LOST MEN.

The whole large idea back of the cross is nothing but the Son of Man seeking lost men. The following of Jesus is simply going out in his spirit to find and save men. The old Phariseeism which Jesus denounced was a system which and cummin, but which had no love for people.

It is safe to say that as the Church loses the vision of the multitude, it loses the vision of the Christ. It is hard to think of him from the cradle to the cross, apart from the encircling crowd. It follows then that as we fish for men we are apt to find the Christ. His cot is in the crowded ward. His tent is "somewhere in France." His feet are in the thoroughfare. He is not among the altars, nor behind the candlesticks. Where men go in schools and the waters of life are ruffled by their passing, if you fish there you will find him.

Religion Inward and Outward

BY H. K. PENDLETON.

ALL life expresses itself in forms, ing the two grand divisions, and plant life and animal life form-each division having within its realm a great multitude of varieties, but each life following faithfully its own form. The maple, the oak, the sycamore always producing their respective kinds.

In all the lower forms of life, the life and the expression of it agree; there is no deceit, no pretense, no hypocrisy, but always the outward form truly represents the internal forces from which it sprang. With the human race, however, this is not true, except in certain fundamental animal relations. Man's body may truly represent the life that produced it, but man's conduct may not truly represent the life that produces it. In the case of Judas, a kiss, the social form which most perfectly represented esteem and affection, was produced by the spirit of treachery and murder.

Therefore Paul states a profound law of life when he says: "He is not a Jew which is one outwardly. But he is a Jew which is one inwardly."

The inner life is the determining factor and not the outward form. There is no form of conduct or of service, however holy it may appear which can not be defiled by an unclean or sinister motive having prompted it.

He is not a friend which is one outwardly. He is not a patriot which one outwardly. The inner life is the true measure. The heart can not be cleansed by the observance of outward forms.

Mr. Spurgeon tells of a man who stabbed a neighbor on Friday and some of the blood of the murdered man fell on his lips and he was in deep spiritual trouble because he had tasted meat on Friday. Outwardly he was a Catholic but not inwardly and the outward religion had failed to purify his heart.

OUTWARD FORM MAY OUTLAST RELIGION.

A man whose religion is dead will sometimes go on producing the outward forms of years. Richard Knell was a missionary in India; he owned an old horse which he drove regularly on his daily visits to his seven schools. He lent the horse to a military officer one day, who drove him over the road on which the schools were situated, and every time he came to one of his regular stopping places he halted with a suddenness which nearly threw the driver out of the vehicle. So some people acquire a religious habit and continue to go through the motions when the inner life of love and faith has failed.

With all sincere men the outward form is a true expression of the inner life. When Vespasian told one of the Roman senators that he might go to the senate house, but he must not speak, he replied: "I, being a senator, feel impelled to go into the senate house, and being in the senate, it is the part of a senator to speak what his conscience dictates." "Then," said the emperor, "if you speak you will die." "Be it known to thee, oh, emperor," said he, "that I never hoped to be immortal, nor did I ever wish to live when I might not speak my mind."

It is not only necessary to express the best there is in us, but it is also necessary to cultivate the best in ourselves that we may have something worthy to express.

HEART IS LIKE A MILL.

Anselm says: "Our heart is like a mill which a certain lord gave in charge to his servant, enjoining that he should only grind in it his matser's grain, whether wheat, barley or oats, and telling him that he must subsist on the produce. But that servant has an enemy who is always playing tricks on the mill. If at any moment he finds it unwatched, he throws in gravel to keep the stones from acting or pitch to clog them, or dirt and chaff to mix with the grain.

"If the servant is careful in tending his mill there flows forth beautiful flour, which is at once a service to his master and subsistence to himself; but if he plays truant the bad products tell the tale, his lord is angry and he is starved. The mill, ever grinding, is the heart; God's truth and love are the grain; the devil is the enemy, who throws in falsehood and selfishness."

We must feed our inner life if we would become what we ought to be, what God wants us to be.

Man owes it to himself to make of his inner self the best possible and then he should have the grace and the courage to express this inner self in the most forcible way. A bad man dares not do this; his life is that of a sneak and hypocrite by necessity, for society would not tolerate him if he gave full and forcible expression to his badness.

The Visitor

Our Stay in Rio

THE city of Rio de Janeiro was the last of the capital cities of South America that we visited. We left Buenos Aires on a British steamer carrying, the captain told us, a million and a half dollars' worth of meat for the Allies. Hardly had we gotten out of the harbor when we were made aware of the complete stopping of the vessel. At first we imagined that we had run aground in what seemed like the shallow waters of the River de La Plata. But on going around to the other side of the deck we discovered that there was alongside us a scow from whose hold we were taking on huge cases of some apparently very heavy cargo. We thought nothing of it for a few minutes, but when the contents of these cases were revealed we were all curious. Each case contained several shells weighing, we learned, 100 pounds apiece. Great big fellows they were, and they were put into individual cloth cases with rope handles by which the deck hands carried them to the stern of the boat. Following the deck hands we found that ours was an armed vessel,—we had a formidable looking six-inch cannon capable, we were assured, of firing these shells a distance of eight miles. A few of us got a good look at the gun before the captain realized that any of the passengers had gained access to that part of the ship and shooed us all away. He told us that he had ten trained gunners on board and that the boat was armed against a possible German submarine in these western waters, but more seriously against such a possibility in their approach to Liverpool, toward which port they would steam from Rio.

There were only thirty-nine first-class passengers on our boat, twenty of whom were members of our deputation party.

Of the remainder there would be probably six or eight who would go on to Europe, the rest intending to disembark at Rio. Yet the boat had accommodation for at least 150 first-class passengers. That evening was somewhat depressing to most of the passengers. At lamplighting time the shutters of the solons were closed, every port window was found to be painted black and we had strict instructions not to turn on the electric light in our cabins until we made sure that our port holes were closed. None of the deck lights was turned on during our entire five-day voyage to Rio. We were advised that our boat was not following the regular track, but was going a longer way around.

All these evidences of caution made us conscious for the first time of the fact that traveling on the high seas on the Atlantic side of the Continent brought us into the margin, at least, of the zone of war, especially when we were traveling in a vessel of one of the belligerent nationalities. But we soon became accustomed to this sombreness of the evening hours, and gave no further thought to the dangers which such precautionary measures at first suggested as quite possible.

Entering the harbor at Rio is a thrilling experience. Where else in the world is there such a harbor? Travelers of much wider experience than mine declared that it is not matched anywhere in the world for picturesqueness. The mountains come down to the sea at Rio, and the city is built at the feet of these great hills and part way up the sides of some of them. Others of them are simply huge rocks that rise sheer out of the water, like famous Sugar Loaf and the Corcovado. Unlike most cities the better section lies on the water front. For miles and miles along the shore the residences of the well-to-do are seen, and when we disembark we find ourselves standing at the foot of the Avenida Central, the city's great wide business street which we can see is lined with massive and most attractive business buildings. The first impression of Rio is one of rich and brilliant color. They use varicolored tiling in their buildings—tans, chocolates, pinks and greens. The second impression is that of the pervasive odor of coffee. But when you've been in the city an hour you are conscious of the remarkable cleanliness of the place, and you recall the days when Rio was one of the filthiest and most disease-ridden cities in the world. Only eleven years ago it was that the government set to work to do what Havana did in reconstructing its drainage system, in tearing down vile old buildings, in removing every possible breeding place for mosquitoes and in opening up the narrow streets to admit air and light and traffic. Close to $20,000,000 was spent on this reconstruction program and we have today a new Rio, modern, active, healthy, and just about as attractive in its material aspect as any city in the whole world. The population of Rio is about 1,000,000. It is growing rapidly, though it is meeting competition in the remarkable city of Sao Paulo in southern Brazil, the most progressive and the wealthiest section of the republic, whose population now reaches 600,000 and is increasing very fast.

Our regional conference for Brazil was held in the leading Presbyterian church of Rio, of which the companion of our journeyings, Rev. Alvaro Reis, is the pastor. The church is said to have a membership of one thousand, owns a good building and has begun to do some mission work on its own account. In the whole of Brazil there are about 50,000 Protestants. The strongest denominations represented here are the Presbyterians, the Southern Baptists and the Southern Methodists. One of the most admirable missions on this entire continent is that of the Episcopalians, established twenty-seven years ago by Rev. Lucian L. Kinsolving, now the Bishop of Southern Brazil. The character of Bishop Kinsolving's work impressed us all as, indeed, it impresses the mission workers of all denominations. It is pitched on a high level. It seems content to work through the slower processes of growth and education, and imperceptibly it has come to a place of unique and substantial influence in the national life as well as in the fellowship of mission workers of all denominations. Bishop Kinsolving was a member of our deputation and with Mrs. Kinsolving accompanied us in our visits to all the centers. He is broad, democratic, and independent. He keeps his work fitted up close to the work of all the evangelical communions in Brazil and cultivates the spirit of Christian unity in the policies of his mission. I preached for his leading congregation, the Church of the Redeemer, on Sunday night and surprised myself at my ability to get through a prayer book service printed in the Portuguese tongue. My sermon was translated by the rector, Rev. Mr. Meem, a man of evident culture and piety. On the morning of that day Bishop Kinsolving had confirmed a class of over thirty persons.

At the morning hour on Sunday I preached for the Central Institute, a unique institution organized very recently, of which Rev. H. C. Tucker and Mrs. Tucker have been the guiding and inspiring spirits. It is a combination social settlement, institutional church, neighborhood school, free dispensary, children's playground and a number of other things. It is the first attempt made in Rio, after a half century of mission work there, to apply the gospel helpfully in an organized way to the actual human needs of the community. Dr. Tucker has enlisted the beginnings of an adequate support of a great Christian social center, whose influence is already being felt for good in commending the Christian gospel to the people of this needy city.

Our conference at Rio met and wrestled with a problem that occupied the Business Committee at the Panama Congress during all the ten days of its session and was solved only on the last days of that notable gathering. It grew out of the request presented by the delegation from Brazil, that the Panama Congress make some formal and detailed pronouncement of its attitude toward the Roman Catholic Church in Latin America. A paper prepared by Rev. Eduardo Perriera, one of the most brilliant and persuasive leaders of the Brazilian churches, set forth such a pronouncement and it was asked that this paper be adopted by the Congress. Yielding, at the last, their demand for such action at Panama, the Brazilian brethren evidently determined to carry their cause back to Rio and ask the regional conference to do what they were finally persuaded was inexpedient for the Panama Congress to do. On the opening day the paper that had been carried to Panama was presented at Rio with a motion that it be adopted as expressing the conviction and attitude of the churches represented in the conference. In addition another resolution was presented calling for a constructive statement of the doctrinal position of the evangelical movement in Brazil, a statement that could be quoted as "authoritative." For days and nights these two proposals were wrestled with in the business committee, and at last, the committee being unable to reach unanimity the whole matter was allowed to go to the floor of the Conference for consideration. The first paper—that dealing with our attitude toward the Roman Church—was finally disposed of by a motion to "receive it and send it to the churches" for their consideration. This was quite satisfactory. It was over the proposal to draw up what would be in effect a creed of the evangelical movement that the most tension developed. All the members of our deputation were of one mind on the point that our conference had been called not to legislate, nor to draw up statements of doctrine, but to consider and to initiate practical plans for the furthering of the practical work of the Kingdom of God in Brazil. After considerable debate the Baptist delegates were convinced that the proposed statement of faith was not in harmony with the Baptist principle of the all-sufficiency of the New Testament as a standard of faith and Christian purpose. They would have joined with Episcopalians and the members of our deputation to make a majority against the proposal had not the mover of the resolution withdrawn it. I never get into a situation where somebody proposes to make a creed, but that I am thankful that my Disciple point of view enables me to know exactly what to do. It was not difficult to show these dear brethren on the mission field that the way of creed making was not the way of unity, but of division.

Our voyage home from Rio to New York took seventeen days, days which I spent in complete rest, save for a sermon on Easter Sunday, and in intimate and leisurely communion with the rare spirits who made up our deputation. In remarkable fashion our minds had come to see the mission problems of South America in perfect accord, so that when we foregathered a month later at Indianapolis to formulate our findings our task was simply one of finding the best words in which to express our common conviction.

It was good to be at home again, at my desk, and looking at my more intimate and immediate duties with the widened vision and sympathy which results from taking a whole new continent into one's heart. Henceforth South America can not be to me a mere map; it is a real country, with real people who have deep needs, urgent problems and whose hope is in nothing else than the redemptive power of the gospel of Christ..

THE LIFE THAT HAS NO MORNING

By J. H. Jowett.

If a man build not according to the plumb-line there cannot dawn upon him the glory of a finished pile. If a man despise the plumb-line his work will not issue in a shining temple but in a dismal rubbish-heap. Even in architecture there is no morning for the disobedient: there is only the darkness of futility and disorder. The rebellious builder, who builds as he pleases, is assuredly moving toward chaos and night. And if a man build not his life according to the divine word there will be for him no morning of bright and finished achievement. The trend of his day is toward a miserable sunset, and not toward the morning star and the things of the perfect day.

THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY

EDITORIAL

CRITICISM LESSENING

THE criticism which used to be dealt out to the church in such wholesale portions seems to be decreasing. Once it was popular for almost any kind of a speaker to take a fling at the church. It was supposed to be full of hypocrites. It was alleged to be very narrow and dogmatic and impractical. It was said to lack the spirit of the Good Samaritan and to be selfishly seeking its own things.

We are not ready to insist that no church any longer has any of these faults, but it is now clear that the church ranks very well with any other kind of human association. It may be confidently asserted that the best people of the world are for the most part inside the church.

There remains still the cheap vaudeville performances of certain popular evangelists who draw a crowd at the beginning of their series of meetings by lampooning the church. The churches which invite and tolerate such treatment have only themselves to thank if they find afterwards a lessened respect in the community for the church.

There is setting in a new tendency to exalt the church. In Royce's "The Problem of Christianity" the Christian community is made the central fact of the whole system. Catholics and Episcopalians agree in making the church the foundation fact of our Christianity. Those who are interested in social Christianity can never be uninterested in the holy catholic church and the communion of the saints.

The church has a great advantage over any proposed substitute. It has the authority of history. A glorious galaxy of names gives dignity to its fellowship. No ethical culture society or social uplift organization will ever have the grip on the soul which belongs to the church when she uses in half measure the opportunities that come to her as the mother of the souls of men.

MAKING THE CHURCH COMFORTABLE

A COMFORTABLE church auditorium is a great asset in the heated days of the summer. The big stone edifices look good to the stranger as he roams around seeking a place to worship. One church which was less fortunate in its building installed some electric fans which were operated on warm days. It is a poor church indeed that cannot provide palm leaf fans. The theater has long since provided itself with every kind of device to make itself habitable in the summer time. The church should not be less progressive.

IS C. E. STILL USEFUL?

THE Christian Endeavor society in any church appeals to a group that has rather a narrow age limit. Often The young "set" of a church grow up, marry, have children, and the old society is gone. If it is to go on, it must expect that there will be tidal waves of success and failure. This lack of continuity in Christian Endeavor work has led some to question its strength and usefulness under present day conditions.

The Christian Endeavor society cultivates social activities for the young people of the whole church. Group organizations have the danger of becoming cliques. There is value in an organization which provides social activity without imposing artificial limits to this activity.

The Christian Endeavor movement gives young people more opportunity for the expression of religious interest than the organized class. There is more development of a devotional life.

The deep religious spirit of the Christian Endeavor movement will make it live, if this spirit continues to be expressed in new helpful ways.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL IN SUMMER

IN MOST cities of any size, the families go away on vacations for at least two or three weeks every summer. Even the operatives of factories are developing the vacation habit and it will become eventually the common practice of the entire suburban population.

The summer-time thus becomes a time of disturbance in the Sunday-school curriculum. The course of study assumes that the pupil will go to Sunday-school fifty-two Sundays in the year. This actually happens with less than five percent of the student body of the average school.

The Sunday-school needs a course of study that will parallel the courses given in the public school. The course should cover only nine months in the year and for the summer special courses should be given of an optional character which will enrich the life of the pupil, but which may be subjected to the interruptions which are inevitable in the summer-time.

LABOR SUNDAY IS APPROACHING

IT WILL not be long until labor Sunday is here again. It would be hard to compute the beneficent effects which have arisen from the observance of this day by the churches. We once heard a great deal of the lack of sympathy between labor and the church. We certainly hear less of this kind of talk now.

In some communities, the pastor might well send out an invitation to all the labor unions in town to attend church in a body. This invitation would be sure of a respectful hearing since labor Sunday has the hearty endorsement of Samuel Gompers, of the American Federation of Labor.

The day will furnish occasion to insist upon the church accepting the social creed which is proposed by the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ. Any pastor who learns the articles in this creed will find plenty of things to talk about.

THE DEATH OF METCHNIKOFF

THE death of Metchnikoff, the scientist, removes an interesting figure from the world. His theories about old age have made him known everywhere. In reality his was a more careful scientific mind than these theories might lead one to believe.

He was a Russian by nationality, a Jew by race and an atheist by religion. For these and other reasons, he decided to spend his life in Paris instead of in his native land.

He would probably resent the suggestion that he had worked at religious problems from the view-point of an atheist. He said the two great enemies of man are pain and fear. Pain he would overcome by developing the medical profession and fear he would remove by removing the cause.

The biggest of all fears he regarded as "the fear of the gods" whatever that is, and he wiped it all out at one stroke by removing a belief in deity altogether.

His theories about old age were more significant than this. He decided that senility was a contagious disease induced by germs in the colon. He published a study of the various aged people of the world, expressing a belief that some had lived to be a hundred and fifty years old.

He would remove the fear of death by stretching out the span of human life to a hundred and fifty years, after which he argued any person would have enough of life and be quite ready to lay it down.

Whatever valuation his scientific ideas may have, his views on topics that are properly religious help us to see how gloomy and comfortless is the creed of a man who holds to a material or mechanistic view of the universe. Humanity wants some better solution of the problem of life and destiny than the rather uncertain promise of a hundred and fifty years of life. on this planet.

HUMAN PROBLEMS ARISING FROM MEXICAN DISORDER

THE human problems which are arising from the Mexican trouble are of a very serious character. It has not been generally known that large numbers of Mexicans have been crossing the border and becoming residents of the United States. There were 65,000 people crossing the bridge from El Paso into the United States last year. This is but a small proportion of the total, since the Rio Grande is not a difficult river to cross and many prefer not to face the immigration officials.

There is employment waiting for all of these people, but in many cases they are not fit to accept it. They often have to be fed up in the railroad construction camps before they are ready to be set at work.

The problem in El Paso is a specially serious one. Many of the immigrants fleeing from the horrors of civil war have not been able to get any farther and have squatted in a squalid section of the city called Chihuahuita, which is literally "little Chihuahua."

In Chihuahuita, greedy landlords have constructed cheap adobe huts without a single window, in which there is an ideal place for typhus to develop. The board of health has put the ax to many of these and destroyed them.

These visiting Mexicans who seek only a chance to earn their daily bread in peace, come to us at a time when they are sorely needed, for the stopping of immigration has made common labor very scarce and expensive. The government has a duty to help in the distribution of this labor. The church, also, should show hospitality to the new-comers and be assured that the human conditions under which they live is a real improvement over the sorry plight of those who are left behind in the unhappy republic to the south. These Mexicans are a unique challenge to home mission boards.

PREACHING OUT OF DOORS

PREACHING in the open has long been considered dignified in England, but in this country even the most evangelistic denominations shrink from this method. It is interesting to read in the press reports that the Unitarians are holding outdoor meetings in the east this summer.

There has been much levity over the "collapsible pulpits" which are used by these Unitarians; this is thought by some to be significant, but if this denomination persists in its interest in folks all the year round as it is doing right now, there will come a wholesome respect in place of levity.

The tradition of slackened interest in religion in the summertime is not a necessary or a wholesome one. Religious activity will necessarily take on new forms and will have to follow the crowd to the street, the park and the summer resort. A zeal of the apostolic order will not allow the interests of Jesus Christ to be neglected at any season of the year.

A RELIGION OF GOOD CHEER

A RELIGION that made life harder and the future more difficult to face would be but a poor religion, and doubtless would not survive long. There have been religions which have lived by the creation of terrible fears, but these religions fade away before the glorious "good news" of the gospel of Jesus. In the face of death, Jesus bade his disciples to rejoice. A long-faced Christian is odd. Good cheer is of the essence of the religion of Jesus.

UNION EFFORTS IN PUBLICITY

SEVERAL large cities have seen the churches come together in a union publicity campaign in behalf of religion. Probably no more effective campaign has ever been conducted than the one in Baltimore two years ago. Milwaukee churches during the past year put on such a campaign.

In addition to display advertising giving the date concerning individual congregations, a weekly article set in display type is exhibited in a conspicuous place; this offers a defense of religion and expounds its place in life. There are many prejudices in the minds of people who never go to church which can be reduced or eliminated by such means. The cost to the individual church is far less than many another union campaign, as for instance the average evangelistic meeting.

Great corporations are carrying their case to the public through publicity. The familiar telephone advertisement might seem to the uninstructed to represent just so much wasted money. Instead, it is one of the wisest investments made by the company. If corporations which exist for profit find that they get returns from publicity, the church may even more be assured that her public statements in the press will be received with respectful attention.

AVOIDING LAPSES

THE insurance agent dreads for anyone in his community to permit his policy to lapse. It is not that he will miss his small fee for the collection of the premium, but he figures that every "lapser" will also become a "knocker." Secret orders, too, have frequent campaigns to reclaim those suspended for non-payment of dues.

The church also has her lapsers. Some have fallen away from the faith in such wise that there awaits them only the judgment upon the spiritually blind. But many of them still have a spiritual interest which can be fanned into a flame. It is just as much a work of grace to reclaim these as to enlist other kinds of sinners.

The Larger Christian World

A DEPARTMENT OF INTERDENOMINATIONAL ACQUAINTANCE :: By Orvis F. Jordan

Armenian Situation Improving.

The whole Christian world has been exercised over the unparalleled misfortunes of the Armenians. While the newspapers have in some instances exaggerated the situation, the well authenticated facts make a story of persecution that has seldom been equaled in the world's history. About 300,000 Armenians are in the Russian Caucasus, 50,000 are in Persia and 800,000 are in Turkey concentrated in the Aleppo district. The advance of the Russian Army now allows these people to return to their homes. The need for abundant relief funds still continues.

Sunday Rest and Efficiency.

The relation of Sunday rest to efficiency among workers has recently been given a very interesting test in England. Lloyd-George's efficiency experts have been experimenting among the munition workers to see whether men would do more work in six days or in seven. It was decided that the government could not afford to allow men to work seven days a week since it reduced the output. Thus in a most critical period in England's history, the Christian rest day has proven its value for the toilers.

Methodists Would Reduce Organizations.

The General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal church has authorized the creation of a commission which will study the multiplication of societies in the local churches of Methodism. There are not only the regular Methodist societies but many interdenominational societies which have grown so numerous as to be burdensome. The instructions to the commission are to correlate these agencies from the point of view of religious education. It has been erroneously asserted that the commission was preparing for the death of the Epworth League, the latter organization to find its place taken by the organized Sunday-school class in the church.

Gideons Make Large Bible Gifts.

The Gideons have become well known through their gifts of Bibles for hotels. They have recently made the largest gift of their history in providing all the rooms of the new Y. M. C. A. hotel in Chicago with Bibles. It required about 1,800 books for this purpose. There was a meeting held in the new hotel in which the Bibles were tendered by the Gideons and accepted by the Y. M. C. A. authorities.

Many New Members in Chicago Churches.

Last spring the Federation Council of Churches in Chicago arranged for a simultaneous revival, each church using the plans that appealed to it most. Reports from this movement are completed at last and it has been discovered that there were 15,000 new members received. The results have been so significant that it is probable that the simultaneous campaign will become an annual feature of the work of the local churches.

Quakers are Given Credit.

The first denomination to have a conscience on the abuses in jail and prisons was the Quakers. A recent article in the Survey magazine gives them credit for the establishment in Indiana of the Boys' Reformatory, the Woman's Prison and the Girls' Reformatory. Many other changes in the institutions of the state are also attributed to their influence.

An International Church.

Few churches in this country have a more cosmopolitan membership than the American International Presbyterian church in New York which meets in the Labor Temple. The elders and deacons are chosen from the various nationalities and at present these officials are Italian, Russian, Ruthenian and Hungarian. Last year 210 were received into this church on profession of faith. It is with this church that Rev. Chas. Stelzle labored for a long time.

Church Union Progressing in Canada.

The task of merging the three denominations of Presbyterians, Methodists and Congregationalists in Canada is proceeding rapidly. The plans call for a complete unification of all the missionary work. The government of the united organization will be a combination of certain features of the three denominations. The local churches will be united into presbyteries and these into conferences. The national body will be called a General Council as in the Congregational terminology.

Must be Baptized to be Married.

The Bishop of Oxford has issued instructions that no marriage licenses will be issued in the diocese to people who are unbaptized. Those seeking the blessing of the church of England upon their union must first be made Christians, according to the church view. This has also become the common practice in certain high church parishes in America.

Dissenters are Made Priests.

There are a number of dissenting ministers seeking haven in the Established church of England these days. Rev. R. J. Campbell of New Theology fame was ordained a priest recently and at the same time four other dissenters were received into the priesthood. Among these is Rev. A. E. Dearden, whose social work has been noteworthy. He is the third of four friends who went through college together and who are now entering the Episcopal church.

Dr. Clark Returns Ill.

Dr. F. E. Clark has returned from his trip around the world ill. He had pneumonia while he was gone, an aftermath of the typhoid which he had last year. He will remain quietly at home and do no public work except that which is done with his pen, until he is restored to strength again.

Changes in Baptist Leadership.

The Baptist Standard of Chicago is having some changes of leadership. Rev. E. L. Killam of Grand Rapids has been elected field editor. He has been state secretary of Michigan and manager of the state paper, the Bulletin. Dr. James Spencer Dickerson will retire from connection with the paper after more than forty years of service. Rev. Clifton D. Gray remains as editor.

Malaria, Quinine and Missions

How the Christian Medicine Man Promotes the Spread of the Gospel.

BY. DR. E. I. OSGOOD, of Nanking, China.

One of the richest men in this city of poverty called me in to see his wife. They have long been our closest friends in this city where we now number many friends.

The family had been down to Nanking to the home of the wife's parents. She and her two children had contracted measles while there and she had had a very severe attack. We found her convalescing and gave her a tonic with instructions as to proper food.

A little later he called us in again. The summer had pulled her down and she was having fainting spells. Upon examination we found that she would go into comatose spells for some hours at a time. She could not bear light and her room was screened as at night. There were pains in the region of her heart and she was filled with feelings of impending disaster. She was eating nothing and growing daily weaker. Her comatose spells were increasing in length until she would go through an entire day unconscious.

"I have no faith in our Chinese doctors," he told me, and I allowed no medicine to be given her."

I told him the case looked very hopeless. She had had such fainting spells in past years. They had disappeared until this attack, but were now increasing in length to an alarming degree. It looked like brain trouble. We could promise nothing except to do our best with the case.

He accepted our services just the same and stood by us even though the case grew worse and hope was about gone. There was no fever, only those distressing symptoms. Finally the regularity of the attacks made us wonder if malaria could be at the bottom of it all. She had had no sweats, no fever, no chills. Yet we decided to give her quinine. Wonder of wonders, the comatose spells at once ceased and within two weeks the other symptoms had largely disappeared.

"Marvel of marvels," said the man. Who would have ever dreamed that malaria was at the bottom of it all!"

This man is reading all the Christian literature we place in his hands, including the Scriptures, and is a warm supporter of all our Christian work. He does not yet fully believe in the miraculous power of Christ as shown in the Scriptures, but some day he will and we believe we will get him as an active follower of Christ.

THE RIOT AT EPHESUS.

Lesson for August 20.

Golden Text: The love of money is a root of all kinds of evil. 1 Timothy 6:10.

Lesson Acts 19:23-41; verses 29-41 printed. Memorize verses 29, 30.

(29) And the city was filled with the confusion: and they rushed with one accord into the theater, having seized Gaius and Aristarchus, men of Macedonia, Paul's companions in travel. (30) And when Paul was minded to enter in unto the people, the disciples suffered him not. (31) And certain also of the Asiarchs, being his friends, sent unto him and besought him not to adventure himself into the theater. (32) Some therefore cried one thing, and some another: for the assembly was in confusion; and the more part knew not wherefore they were come together. (33) And they brought Alexander out of the multitude, the Jews putting him forward. And Alexander beckoned with the hand, and would have made a defence unto the people. (34) But when they perceived that he was a Jew, all with one voice about the space of two hours cried out, Great is Diana of the Ephesians. (35) And when the townclerk had quieted the multitude he saith, Ye men of Ephesus, what man is there who knoweth not that the city of the Ephesians is temple-keeper of the great Diana, and of the image which fell down from Jupiter? (36) Seeing then that these things cannot be gainsaid, ye ought to be quiet, and to do nothing rash. (37) For ye have brought hither these men, who are neither robbers of temples nor blasphemers of our goddess. (38) If, therefore, Demetrius, and the craftsmen that are with him, have a matter against any man, the courts are open, and there are proconsuls: let them accuse one another. (39) But if ye seek anything about other matters, it shall be settled in the regular assembly. (40) For indeed we are in danger to be accused concerning this day's riot, there being no cause for it: and as touching it we shall not be able to give account of this concourse. (41) And when he had thus spoken, he dismissed the assembly.

VERSE BY VERSE.

29. The city was filled with confusion. The confusion is explained in verses 23-28.—They rushed into the theater. In the Greek cities the theater was the place for popular assemblies.—Gaius. This is a common Roman name, and there is nothing more known about him.—Aristarchus. He is mentioned several times in the Book of Acts. He was a close companion of Paul.

30. Paul was minded. When Paul intended.—The disciples suffered him not. The disciples warned him of the danger.

31. The Asiarchs. Officers of the Province of Asia. It was a position much sought by the wealthy. Paul's standing in Ephesus is indicated by his association with these men.

30. Assembly was in confusion. A good description of a mob. The mind of a mob is confusion, until focused by some leader in action.

33. Alexander. Some think he was "Alexander the coppersmith" who afterwards did much harm to Paul's work.—Would have made a defence. He may have desired to disclaim any part in the matter for himself and fellow Jews.

34. When they percieved that he was a Jew. When they saw he was a Jew they refused to hear him.—Diana of the Ephesians. This was a great temple erected to the goddess Diana. This goddess was worshiped by Greeks and Romans. She was worshiped as both a destroying and a preserving goddess.

35. The town clerk. The town clerk had the practical authority in his own hands, although Ephesus at this time was a free city.—The city of the Ephesians is temple-keeper of the great Diana. The word usually meant temple sweeper or keeper, but soon became an honorary title and was conferred upon persons and cities.

36. Cannot be gainsaid. They could not deny the fact. Could not be disproved.—To be quiet. The verb means to let down or lower, hence is applied metaphorically, to the keeping ones self in check.

37. Robbers of temples. Paul had not committed the wrong for which he was charged. Paul simply preached the gospel.

38. Demetrius and the craftsmen that are with him. Great throngs of worshipers gathered at the temple, and the works in the objects and helps to their devotion did a thriving business.—The courts are open. There are days and ways by which to settle matters of this sort.—There are proconsuls. There was just one proconsul in Asia. The plural in this place is colloquial.

39. In the regular assembly. The imperial government was very jealous of its rights and hence would not be likely to grant any more to assemble than they had agreed upon.

40. We are in danger to be accused concerning this day's riot. The town authorities are held responsible for this offense and are held subject to dismissal by the Roman government.

41. He dismissed the assembly. He formally dismissed them after quieting them.

SAFE IN THY LOVE.

Hear me, O Lord,
As in silence I bend;
Open Thy heart,
As my words slowly wend;
Talk with me now,
As I earnestly kneel,
Teach me, O Lord,
The dear Presence to feel.

Here Lord, I come,
In the calm of this hour:
Gird me about
With Thy wonderful Pow'r;
Op'ning my heart,
To a Father divine,
Know full well
All its secrets are Thine.

So may I tell
Of my troubles to Thee:
Father, I know
Of my need Thou wilt see;
Tell me of faults,
That I try to atone:
Father, forgive,
And of frailties condone.

Father, I know
I am talking with Thee:
My hand in Thine,
As it ever should be;
Though days are dark,
With the clouds from above,
Father, I know
I am safe in Thy love.

Paul at Ephesus

The Lesson in Today's Life.

BY ASA McDANIEL.

IN CITY after city Paul met opposition. In some cases it was religious interference and in others it was vested interest. The former came from the Jews and the latter came from the Gentiles. It was the master of the maid having a spirit of divination who stirred up the trouble at Philippi because he saw the hope of his gain passing. Demetrius seems to have had to do with the riots at Ephesus. He saw that if Paul's message in the city continued the source of his wealth would be seriously interfered with in the future.

We are not at all free from the spirit of these men today. For we hear protests against enforcing the law relating to corporations and tending to prevent evil of any sort. If it were not for the vested interests in vice it would not be so hard to get rid of it in our cities. The liquor business is with us today because of these vested interests. Gamblers and lawless liquor-sellers do not object to those who enforce the law on the ground that their lawlessness is being attacked; they always find some other subterfuge. They will say, "The liberty of the people is being taken away." Or they complain because prosperity is being interfered with. No legitimate business can be hurt by eliminating the evil that may be in it. All the great corporations are in a better position today than they would have been had they not gone through the cleansing process.

The spirit of money making that is wrong, is not money itself, nor even the desire to acquire money in abundance, but the improper use of it. Money is a force like fire or water which can be put to ill or to good uses. It is good to have money, and to make it serve yourself, and others and God. It is evil to love money as a miser does, to hoard it for no purpose, to spend it for evil things, to let it blind your eyes to the things more valuable than money, things that money cannot buy. Wealth is a blessing worth the best energies of the best minds when it falls into the hands that are consecrated to ideals; when it is entrusted to consciences that feel the commanding power of the Spirit. The value of money to the world depends upon the soul that possesses it.

In the days of Paul the people of Ephesus cried, "Great is Diana of the Ephesians!" These worshipers have passed. There are new ways of worshiping today but little, if any, better. There are men and women who cry, "Great is the god of Success." It does not require much foresight nor a highly developed spirit of prophecy, to realize that they who thus cry will become like the god they worship. They must fail for there is just one permanent element in the universe and that is God.

We may differ in our opinions as to what things are idols, but all must admit that there are idols enough now for bonfires everywhere. "What a man loves, that is his God," said Luther.

Disciples Table Talk

A Remarkable Union Effort in the Southland.

John H. Wood, pastor at Winders, Ga., writes that a movement is on foot among the leading citizens of Winders, irrespective of denomination, to call Herbert Yeuell for an out-and-out union meeting next summer and erect for him a large tabernacle. Mr. Yeuell has just closed what Mr. Wood calls "the most remarkable meeting in the history of the state," inasmuch as it started as a one-church meeting, amid a strong hereditary prejudice against the Disciples' movement and closed with every minister and church uniting enthusiasticially in the campaign. Stores closed for the day services and every church closed all services after the first two weeks of the meeting. The tent in which the meetings were held continually overflowed. Mr. Wood writes that there was at first no thought of promoting a union meeitng, but when the community demanded that the change of plan be made, it was considered best to accede to the general desire. The success of the meetings is attributed largely by the Winders' pastor to the sweet spirit in which Mr. Yeuell presented the teachings of the church. Although doctrines which are known in the Southland as typically Disciple were emphasized, Mr. Yeuell entirely disarmed all possible opposition by his wisdom and tact. The meetings ran for six weeks, and a hundred persons were added to the churches. Mr. Wood intimates that Mr. Yeuell may consider entering the union field exclusively.

Indianapolis Church Will Provide Free Dental Work for Children.

Seventh church, Indianapolis, of which H. Clay Trusty is pastor, has announced that it will provide dental work absolutely free to children under the age of fifteen years. This is a part of the development of a plan to make Seventh church a servant of its community in every way. Those who avail themselves of this opportunity to have their children's teeth examined and treated in case they need treatment are assured of every courtesy. Everyone, regardless of church affiliation or creed, is invited to come. Advice regarding the care of the teeth will be freely given by Dr. O. E. Yater. Dr. Yater has been for the last eighteen months in the employ of the government doing dental work for children in the schools. He graduated from the Indiana Dental College in 1912.

Half of Educational Fund for Texas Schools in Hand.

Team leaders representing the educational campaign of the Disciples of Christ in Texas, have announced that approximately $100,000 has been raised during the first thirty days of the campaign. This is half of the amount wanted by the workers. The campaign was inaugurated on June 18. The leaders of the campaign said they are well pleased with the work thus far, especially in view of the fact that the amount already raised is from less than 100 churches, leaving several hundred churches yet to be visited. S. J. McFarland, of Dallas, Texas, chairman of the ways and means committee, emphasized that, although the goal $200,000 is half reached, the campaign is just beginning in a real way. There will be no let-up of energy and enthusiasm among the workers. It is believed that the remaining $100,000 can easily be secured during the five months which the campaign has yet to run. In addition to the amount of money secured on the $200,000 campaign, it is announced that endowments aggregateing $245,000 are in sight that will be available upon the raising of the $200,000 fund. Recommendations have been made to the executive committee relative to continuing the plan of campaign during the remaining five months. Three teams will continue to work among the churches, visiting two and three churches a week. A popular subscription plan also was announced, with the slogan, "Ten Thousand Gifts From Ten Thousand People." This campaign will be carried on through the official organ of the Christian church in Texas, by which it is expected to reach many of the smaller churches which can not easily be reached by any of the teams. While the primary purpose of the campaign is to raise the $200,000, the team leaders feel also that the educational influence of this campaign is of great value, giving as an indication of this the fact that there are more applications on file for enrollment in Texas Christian University at this time than there were at the opening of that university last year.

Professor Athearn to Go to Boston University.

Prof. W.S. Athearn for several years head of the religious education department at Drake university has accepted the chair of religious pedagogy in Boston university, one of the largest theological schools in the country. It was thought for a time that he would accept the offer of the interdenominational seminary at Berkeley, Cal., but the eastern proposition was more tempting from several standpoints. The officials of the Boston school will spend $1,000,000 in making their religious education department the peer of any in existence. They will build a model Sunday-school building for Professor Athearn and will allow him to name all of his assistants. The pay roll of his department will run close to $25,000 a year.

Abbott Book Goes to the David C. Cook Company.

Abbott Book, director of religious education of First church, Cedar Rapids, Ia., for the last two and a half years, has tendered his resignation and will move to Elgin, Ill., September 1, to take the superintendency of the David C. Cook Sunday-school. Mr. Cook is the owner of the largest Sunday-school publishing house in America. More than two and a half million periodicals are mailed out from there each month. The Sunday-school in Elgin is the largest in the city, and just now the company is erecting a large institutional plant for this growing work. Many of the teachers in the school are members of the publishing house editorial staff. A paid physical director will be employed as well as other workers. Among the new plans to be tried out will be the moving picture proposition in the church. More than four weeks ago, Mr. Book returned to Cedar Rapids from Elgin, where he was called to confer with Mr. Cook, and the new position was offered him, but he turned the proposition down to remain with First church. Letters and telegrams were followed by a representative to convince Mr. Book that he should move to Elgin. Mr. Book made a second trip to Chicago to meet Mr. Cook, and finally decided to accept the offer. The religious director closes his work with the Iowa church August 31, and will take his family to Columbus, Ind., the home of Mr. Book's father, W. H. Book, for two weeks. He will be in Elgin to take up the work September 15. Mr. Book has done a remarkabe piece of work in building up First Christian Sunday-school at Cedar Rapids.

Temperance and Evangelism at Bethany Park, Ind.

Monday, August 7, is Temperance Day at Bethany Park, Ind., this year. There will be a Prohibition Song Service at 10 o'clock, and addresses will follow by David H. Shields, of Kokomo, Ind., national president of the National Temperance Board, and chairman of the day; by L. E. Sellers, national secretary of the Board; and by P. A. Baker, of Westerville, O., national superintendent of the Anti-Saloon League of America. Afternoon addresses will be given by E. S. Shumaker, state superintendent Indiana Anti-Saloon League; by Oliver W. Stewart, of Chicago; and by Mrs. Florence Richard, of Columbus, O., state president of the Ohio W. C. T. U. In the evening will be given a Grand Diamond Medal Contest, under the direction of the Indiana W. C. T. U. A diamond medal will be awarded the winner in this contest of winners in smaller contests. The National Evangelistic Missionary Association will have charge of the meetings of August 8-10. Participants on the program announced for August 8 are: R. F. Whiston, Bethany, Neb.; S. M. Martin, Seattle, Wash.; E. E. Violett, Kansas City, Mo.; J. L. Wilkinson, Flora, Ill.; R. H. Fife, Plymouth, Ind.; T. J. Brock, Peru, Ind.; M. B. Ingle, Indianapolis; W. T. Brooks, Ladoga, Indiana, and A. M. Hootman, Greencastle, Ind. A. W. Taylor, of Columbia, Mo., will close the day with a stereopticon lecture. Speakers on August 9 will be: A. K. Clarke, Brooklyn, Ind.; G. L. Snively, Lewiston, Ill.; C. R. Scoville, Chicago; T. J. Legg, Indianapolis; Crayton S. Brooks, Ladoga, Ind.; J. H. Jones, Ladoga; J. N. Crutcher, Kansas, City, Mo.; W. H. Book, Columbus, Ind.; C. R. L. Vawter, Kansas City, Mo.; Herbert Yeuell, Chicago; Lawson Campbell, Pittsburg, Pa.; with features by the Totten company in the late afternoon and evening. The last day of the evangelistic sessions will have for speakers: Fred R. Davies, Charleston, Ind.; O. E. Hamilton, Mountain Grove, Mo.; Clyde L. Fife, Plymouth, Ind.; J. V. Coombs, Danville, Ind.; C. S. Brooks; W. F. Shearer, Angola, Ind.; W. J. Minges, Des Moines, Ia.; Rochester Irwin, Vincennes, Ind.; W. L. Harris, Kansas City, Mo.; and in the evening a big feature will be a concert by the Fife Brothers' Concert Company.

Arcola, Ill., Pastor Preaches Sermon Series on "The Ideal Life."

B. H. Bruner, pastor at Arcola, Ill., does not believe in letting down in his efforts during the summer. Beginning Sunday, July 23, he began a series of special sermons on the Sermon on the Mount. Mr. Bruner writes that the outline for the series is based upon the outlines of Professor Votaw quoted by King in his "Ethics of Jesus." The following are the sermon titles of the series: "The Sermon on The Mount: or The Spiritual Discoveries of Jesus"—Matt. 5th, 6th and 7th Chapters. "The Ideal Life: Its Characteristics."—Matt. 5:1-12. "The Ideal Life: Its Mission."—Matt. 5:13-16. "The Ideal Life Contrasted with the Hebrew Ideal."—Matt. 5:17-20. "The Ideal Life in Deeds and Motives."—Matt. 5:21-48. "The Ideal Life in Real Religious Worship."—Matt. 6:1-18. "The Ideal Life in Trust and Self-Devotion."—Matt. 6:19-34. "The Ideal Life in Treatment of Others."—Matt. 7:1-12.

"The Duty of Living The Ideal Life."—Matt. 7:18-27. "The Jesus of The Sermon on The Mount."—Matt. 7-28-29.

Frank L. Bowen Celebrates Anniversary as Kansas City Evangelist.

There is probably no city in the country where the work of the Disciples is more efficiently and effectively carried on than in Kansas City, Mo. There are great churches there, and multitudes of Disciples, which facts account in large measure for the success of this city's activities. But all who are acquainted with the field would give Frank L. Bowen, City Evangelist, much credit for these results. Mr. Bowen has just begun his twentieth year in this important service. All of Greater Kansas City is included in his territory. July 16 was celebration Sunday, with every field where Mr. Bowen has labored represented. The evangelist writes that he believes the year 1916 will be the banner year, and rightly states that city missions has become a vital part of Kansas City church life.

A Record Ministry of Three Pastorates.

Thomas J. Clark has just been elected for another year at Albion, Ill. This begins Mr. Clark's ninth year in this field, which is his third charge. For twenty-two years he served the church at Vincennes, Ind., during this period growing a congregation of 700 members from a small group of fifty early members. In 1894 Mr. Clark was called to the Kirkwood Avenue church at Bloomington, Ind., the seat of the State University, and when he left this field in 1908 there was a membership of over a thousand. Since his call to the work at Albion he has led in the building of a fine $15,000 church home. The work at Albion is in excellent condition. The pastor and his wife recently spent a week in Bloomington, Ind., where he had the pleasure of seeing the last one of his children graduate from the Indiana State University. There are now ten Indiana graduates in the family, including sons-in-law.

—The C. E. Society at Iowa Falls, Iowa, has assumed the support of Pusua, No. 720, one of the boys in the orphanage at Damoh, India, writes the Foreign Society.

—The Endeavorers at Sheridan, Wyo., join the list of societies supporting boys in the Damoh, India Orphanage by assuming the support of Martin No. 730.

—Walter S. Athearn, who is now giving a course of lecturs on religious education in Columbia University, preached at Central church, New York, last Sunday. Professor Athearn has been for a number of years head of the department of religious education in Drake University, Des Moines, Iowa, and has recently been called to the new school of religion of Boston University. He is the secretary of teacher training for the International Sunday-school Association and is widely known as a leader in new educational ideas as applied to religious problems. He gave Central congregation a message both stimulating and interesting, outlining some new developments along the lines of religious education.

—Herbert Yeuell, evangelist, reports an interesting situation at Nettleton, Miss., where he has been holding a union meeting. Eight years ago five churches of the town entered into a compact to hold a union campaign each year for eight years. The results have pleased the churches so well that they have now renewed the compact. There is a remarkable spirit of harmony and unity in the community, Mr. Yeuell reports, as was evidenced throughout the recent series of services, at which crowded buildings were the rule in spite of frightful floods. Mr. Yeuell will be at his home, 534 Blackstone Avenue, Chicago, during August.

—The Christian churches of California, in their recent convention at Santa Cruz, pledged approximately $8,500 for the work of state missions for this year. It is expected that final reports will bring the amount up to $10,000.

—L. E. Sellers, national secretary of the Temperance Board of the Disciples, made the statement in an address at First church, Grand Rapids, Mich., that "the interest taken in the temperance movement by men of business and finance and by the daily press is often greater than that shown by the members of the church."

—J. G. Engle, who has led the church at Belleville, Kan., for the last year and a half, has gone to Dexter, Mo., from which point he will serve as district evangelist.

—C. M. Yocum, pastor at Rushville, Ind., who has recently undergone an operation for appendicitis, has been given by his congregation an extended leave of absence until he shall have fully recovered his strength.

—At last report the leaders in the Texas Educational Movement had secured about $100,000 of the required $200,000. It is probable that the remainder of the soliciting will be carried over to the autumn.

—A new $17,000 church building is going up at Fourney, Tex., in which field Prof. E. R. Cockrell serves as pastor. Professor Cockrell is the head of the Law department of Texas Christian University. The entire amount required for the new home has already been raised. This is accounted for by the fact that the men of the church have developed the custom of meeting at luncheon with their pastor regularly each month. At these meetings plans have been continuously proposed and carried through which have resulted in easy-going finances.

—An interesting meeting was held on the evening of July 19 by the Century Men's Club of the church at Warren, O. The address of the evening was given by the pastor, E. A. Hibler, and this was followed by a "watermelon supper." This was an open meeting of the club to which the ladies and the young people were invited. Mr. Hibler spoke upon the subject "The Yellowstone Park."

—Early in August is the date set for the laying of the cornerstone of the new church building at Peru, Ind.

—C. R. Stauffer, pastor at Norwood, O., has been granted a six weeks' leave of absence to take some special work at the University of Chicago.

—Chas. H. Forster, of Vacaville, Cal., is spending the summer at Montara by the Sea.

Ten Big Reasons Why——

BETHANY GRADED LESSONS

are being adopted by so many of the best schools among Disciples

1. There is more to them—at least a third more—than is contained in any other series.
2. They are rich, vital and full of suggestion to teacher and pupil.
3. They are free from the sectarian spirit.
4. They are soundly and fervently evangelical.
5. They are truly artistic in all their illustrations.
6. They are printed on better paper with better binding and in better taste than any other series.
7. Every lesson writer is an expert of interdenominational reputation.
8. They are a monument to the modern spirit of unity —several leading denominations have co-operated to produce them and are now using them.
9. The Disciples possess full editorial rights, through the editor, Charles Clayton Morrison.
10. Every Disciple school that uses them participates in and promotes a great Christian union enterprise.

THE EMPIRE STATE CONVENTION.

The New York State Convention, which was held this year at Wellsville, July 5-9, was notable out of proportion to the number in attendance and the constituency represented. The program measured up to the careful and laborious efforts put forth by the committee, of which J. P. Sala, minister at Richmond Ave., Buffalo, was chairman. The national interests were represented in addresses by F. D. Butchart, of Cleveland, for the A. C. M. S., Secretary J. H. Mohorter, of the N. B. A., Field Secretary C. O. Reynard, of Hiram College, for Education, and Mrs. Ellie K. Payne, for the C. W. B M., whose addresses were all of a high order.

A constituency as compact as that of New York has the opportunity in its conventions to hear directly from all those doing missionary work of any sort under agencies recognized in the convention. So one feature of this convention consisted of reports from each of the sixteen mission points in the state. Another advantage of the relatively smaller size of the group assembled was the opportunity for discussing specific problems of local church work peculiar to New York, provision for which was made in conferences and otherwise.

The convention of last year accepted the resignation of several members of the State Board who had served long and honorably, but who felt that the time had come for a change. The chief departure made by the convention was in the election of M. M. Amunson, of Brooklyn, President of the Board. Under his leadership, notwithstanding disturbing prospects, the new Board entered upon a forward looking policy. The results appeared already in the convention of this year. Secretary Brady characterized his report as the best he had ever presented in seventeen years of secretarial experience, twelve of which had been spent in Pennsylvania and five in New York. A current expense debt of approximately $2,000 a year ago was practically wiped out, and the treasurer's report showed all bills paid and a balance on hand, with receipts from all sources totaling more than $7,000. This, together with the fact that three of the missions anticipate attaining self-support within the current year, and at least one other expects to follow them at an early date, makes possible the starting of a new mission point for the first time in eleven years. The program is to enter the city of Schnectady, and to do it on scale the encouragement and enthusiasm of felture.

Another achievement of the new board was probably essential to the undertaking of this movement, namely the unification, or co-ordination of the agencies at work in the state. A plan is in process of being worked out now whereby the Disciples Missionary Union, in New York City, and the Niagara Frontier Association, at Buffalo and its vicinity, will, without surrendering local authority, work in conjunction with the State Society in such a way as to avoid diffusion of energies and interest, and add lowship in the larger work of the whole state.

These are some of the things that have given the Empire State Convention a new tone, and which are making the Disciples here conscious of a vitalizing force at work, the effects of which will be far reaching

for your Adult or Young People's Class
The Life of Jesus

It is always in order for Sunday School classes to study the life of Jesus. Young people's and adult classes want the very best text that can be found. This is simply to remind them that there has never been offered to the Sunday School world a Life of Christ so practicable, so usable, sotrue to the best scholarship, so bristling with questions that wake up the pupils, so well proportioned, as Dr. Loa E. Scott's "LIFE OF JESUS" in Fifty two Lessons. This book is being widely used in Sunday Schools both of the Disciples and other religious bodies, and in Y. M. C. A. classes. This testifies to its popularity. You must have it in your school. It will create a new interest in Bible study among your young people and younger adults. Price of the book, 50c. The Disciples Hymnal

Edited by Charles Clayton Morrison and Herbert L. Willett

NOW NEARLY READY FOR PRESS, AFTER FIVE YEARS OF PREPARATION

It can truly be said that this book will mark the highest reach of hymn book construction among the Disciples of Christ, and the editors have endeavored to make it the best hymnal in the entire American Church. Neither labor nor expense is being spared to make a book that will satisfy and inspire every church that uses it. Three features are being especially emphasized:

Hymns of Christian Unity
Hymns of Social Service
Hymns of the Inner Life

The mechanical work on a hymnal of this high grade moves slowly, but it is confidently expected that the books will be ready for delivery in September. The manuscript is now in the typographer's hands. The publishers regard THE DISCIPLES HYMNAL as the most important single piece of service the Disciples Publication Society has ever rendered the Disciples and the general church.

We will be glad to receive from pastors or other responsible officers of churches requests for a returnable sample of the hymnal. Your name will be placed on file and a copy forwarded as soon as the first edition comes from the press. In writing please state the approximate number of books your congregation will need.

DISCIPLES PUBLICATION SOCIETY, PROPRIETORS, : 700 EAST 40th STREET, CHICAGO

Disciples Publication Society

The Disciples Publication Society is an organization through which churches of the Disciples of Christ seek to promote undenominational and constructive Christianity.

The relationship it sustains to the Disciples is intimate and organic, though not official. The Society is not a private institution. It has no capital stock. No individuals profit by its earnings.

The charter under which the Society exists determines that whatever profits are earned shall be applied to agencies which foster the cause of religious education, although it is clearly conceived that its main task is not to make profits but to produce literature for building up character and for advancing the cause of religion.

The Disciples Publication Society regards itself as a thoroughly undenominational institution. It is organized and constituted by individuals and churches who interpret the Disciples' religious reformation as ideally an unsectarian and unecclesiastical fraternity, whose common tie and original impulse are fundamentally the desire to practice Christian unity with all Christians.

The Society therefore claims fellowship with all who belong to the living Church of Christ, and desires to co-operate with the Christian people of all communions as well as with the congregations of Disciples, and to serve all.

The Christian Century, the chief publication of the Society, desires nothing so much as to be the worthy organ of the Disciples' movement. It has no ambition at all to be regarded as an organ of the Disciples' denomination. It is a free interpreter of the wider fellowship in religious faith and service which it believes every church of Disciples should embody. It strives to interpret all communions, as well as the Disciples, in such terms and with such sympathetic insight as may reveal to all their essential unity in spite of denominational isolation. The Christian Century, though published by the Disciples, is not published for the Disciples alone. It is published for the Christian world. It desires definitely to occupy a catholic point of view and it seeks readers in all communions.

A Good Religious Place To Go to School

WHERE?

The Bible College of Missouri in conjunction with the University of Missouri or vice versa.

The state university offers the most and best academic instruction to be found in the state.

The BIBLE COLLEGE offers training for the Christian ministry, for the mission field, for social service, for Sunday School work, Christian Endeavor work, church leadership and for other forms of religious service. Young men from a number of religious bodies are preparing for the ministry. Nearly two dozen are preparing for the mission field.

Studies in the Bible College are credited towards degrees in the University, and University work is credited in the Bible College.

The community influences are of the best. There is a flourishing Y. M. C. A. of over 800 members, and a Y. W. C. A. of 300 members. Above 70 per cent of the University student body and practically all of the Bible College student body are members of some church. All of the Bible College faculty and more than three-fourths of the University faculty are members of some church. Some of the church boards of the town are more than one-half from the University faculty. The churches themselves are aggressive and are ministered to by well trained preachers.

You cannot do better than come here to school. Write for catalogue..

Volume XXXIII AUG. 10, 1916 Number 32

The Church College

DOES EDUCATION BELONG TO THE CHURCH OR THE STATE?

In the days of the fathers of our movement, education was largely in the hands of the church. Free schools had not as yet arisen. Both Thomas and Alexander Campbell were village school teachers early in life.

Most of the pioneer Disciples were men who had been to the best Scottish universities and were imbued with the educational ideal. Thomas Campbell spent more time in the new world teaching than in preaching. Alexander Campbell assembled in the wilderness a remarkable library for his time. At the earliest opportunity he founded Bethany College, and to the end of his life it was one of his dearest projects.

In our own day, the educational situation is far different. Great universities supported by the state have arisen. At first confined to technical instruction to a large extent, these great institutions are now teaching all the disciplines. This has made some people question the right or at least the obligation of the Church to maintain colleges.

The true educator will favor the school where learning is free from the trammels of popular opinion. At first we thought this place was the state university. When it was seen, however, that courses in religion could be given in but few of these state schools, it was at once seen that there yet remains a place for the church in education. The study of the history and meaning of religion is too fundamental to human life to be left out of the educational program of a democratic society.

Furthermore, there is growing evidence of the interference of politicians with the liberty of learning in state universities. The case of Prof. Scott Nearing, in Pennsylvania is in point. The continual disturbances in recent years in Wisconsin, the embarrassments of that inspiring teacher, Professor Ross, show us that the unhindered study of economics may have to take itself to the institutions that are protected by the Church. The church schools are about through with heresy trials, and in the two disciplines which are most oppressed by prejudice, the church school is today on the whole more free than the state university.

Unless we are to have a state church again, it would be absurd to turn over the training of the minister to the state university. There is an occasional man in our ministry who has come up through the state university, but most of our ministerial students come by the way of the church college, though more Disciples are in attendance at state universities than at the church schools. The church college brings the young minister into a specialized group as at University Place, Des Moines, or at Eureka, where the Christian viewpoint is not only formally developed but where religion saturates the whole social group. Such an atmosphere is the place to make men loyal to Christian ideals, while free in their thinking.

The genius of the Disciples of Christ has been rationalistic in its temper. We have ever delighted in the intellectual aspects of religion. But, strange to say, we have been poor promoters of college enterprises. The searching article by [illegible]ton found on another page is almost sensational in the courage of its utterances, but it is highly important to face the facts as they are. In the great evangelical group of which we are a part, we are not in the vanguard educationally, as might have been expected from the original impulse that was given the movement. The reasons are obvious. For a long time there was a reckless duplication of institutions. The story of the dead colleges during our history would astonish some of our best informed men. We drop the curtain on this scandal of our history.

The neglect in furnishing endowment in days gone by has long since lost its excuse. The college authorities of the country have set a standard of proper endowment for schools and colleges. The Disciples are too far below this standard for us to quote the figures. Our schools are all perfectly aware that the immediate and pressing need of our time is the rapid collection of funds to make the institutions able to furnish the training modern youth should have.

Disciple schools have been subject in recent years to the unedifying spectacle of reactionary journalism demanding certain doctrinal guarantees. This encroachment of the freedom of learning has been resisted to the finish by most of our educators. We believe the end of this epoch in our history has come, and it is significant that we are able to say at this very hour that the schools which have been freest are now most prosperous. The pragmatic argument, fortunately, is with the college that has never bowed the knee to Baal educationally.

Clearly, if our schools serve all the Church by furnishing ministers, and if these schools aid continually in interpreting our religion in intellectual circles, every member of our religious group owes to our universities and colleges a great debt.

We owe our schools the good word which will make Hiram as well known as Amherst, and Butler as Oberlin. If we are truly an intellectual people, we should rejoice in our colleges and proclaim their merits to the world.

Our professors should be better known men. Probably the teachers in Disciples' colleges have suffered more in behalf of the faith in the past than our missionaries have, without making an invidious comparison. Cultured men have accepted insignificant salaries and then found them but half paid. We should know our teachers by name and honor their scholarly work. They are still poorly paid, and ill requited by the brotherhood which should know and appreciate them more.

The educational emergency at this present time demands not only the loyal contributions of all the churches to our colleges, but it should touch the hearts of men of large means to endow and equip our schools in such a way that we shall have cause for just pride in them.

The percentage of educated people in our country is far too low to meet the needs of democracy. Young people everywhere are missing their chance because of the low educational ideals of their home or their community. The Disciple college is our answer to this situation. It is our contribution to the intellectual life of America.

An Educational Conscience

By Frederick O. Norton

CONSCIENCE, according to Webster, is "a sense or consciousness of the moral goodness or blameworthiness of one's own conduct, intentions, or character, together with a feeling of obligation to do or to be that which is recognized as good—often with special reference to feelings of guilt or remorse or ill-doing." To have a conscience on education is to be sensible of a right or wrong attitude in regard to it, especially of converting this attitude into action, and a feeling of obligation to have the right attitude and to do the right action. If we ignore a subject or think it of too little importance to occupy our attention, we may be said to have no conscience with regard to it. By our educational conscience we mean the attitude, religious or irreligious, which we Disciples of Christ take toward education, and especially toward the education of our own ministers; the sense or consciousness of right or wrong in our intention and action, and the recognition of our obligation to do what is right in this regard.

I.

Have we an educational conscience?

Are we doing what we should do in regard to education; do we have a feeling of guilt and remorse for not doing our duty, or have we no feeling or conscience whatever on the matter?

We have a decided conscience, or religious attitude, on other matters. We have a very strong "doctrinal" conscience, so strong that one of our leading religious journals has for months given a large part of its most prominent space to the promotion of what it calls a "Doctrinal Revival," and recently has given much valuable advertising space for the promotion of a "Doctrinal Congress." Do we hear of an "Educational Revival?" Are any of our religious papers promoting an "Educational Congress?" I think it only fair to say in this connection, that the pulse of a people, whether religious or otherwise, may be felt through its representative press, as the business managers of the various publications must be trained experts in feeling the pulse of the people, in order to give them what they want. So we may judge what is popular among the people by what is emphasized by the press. We are very strong in our attitude toward Baptism, Confession, the Lord's Supper, Faith, Repentance. If one of our leaders is regarded as unsound on any of these, especially the first, he is branded and read out of the Brotherhood as a heretic, an infidel, or a Unitarian. Does this occur if one does not make adequate preparation for the ministry, or if a religious leader does not support our educational institutions with no uncertain sound?

NEGATIVE ATTITUDE TOWARD EDUCATION.

We, as a people, have no educational conscience—or practically none. Notice that I say, "we, as a people." There are, of course, many individual exceptions, but our rank and file, and whatever we have of official representation, give it practically no recognition, or assume toward it a hostile attitude. One of our leading journals, in commenting upon our educational institutions recently, remarked that a few of them had a "craze for standardization." Now standardization means nothing more or less than an orthodox recognition of the scripture, which exhorts us to be "of good report of them that are without," and to give what we promise in our catalogues. We have some institutions that advertise that they will give an A.B. degree, and what they really give is recognized by "them that are without" (e. g., the United States Bureau of Education, the Association of American Universities, and such universities as Harvard, Columbia, Michigan and Wisconsin) as only one-half or one-fourth of an A.B. The attitude of our ordinary individual church members is illustrated by an answer which I have frequently elicited from church men, when I have asked them to support Drake University: "Nobody ever gave me an education, why should I give anything to a young man who should work for himself?"

Such people do not realize that if our young men are to be trained for the ministry, the church must provide the college, as no provision whatever is made by the State. The State provides educational advantages for every other calling except the ministry. The knowledge which our ordinary church members have of the needs of our educational work is well illustrated by the remark of a well-to-do farmer near Des Moines, who, when solicited for help for Drake University in the time of dire need, said: "Well, if I'd ever give anything, I'd give it to some poor institution, and not to a rich college like Drake University."

WHY NOT EDUCATIONAL CONGRESSES?

We have no educational revivals because we have nothing educational to revive. Our religious press does not promote educational congresses or conventions, and we have had the scantiest, back-door, on-the-side, out-of-the-way, in-the-corner, apologetic recognition on our missionary programs. We have spasmodic, but pitifully inadequate recognition from the press, and in general from the pulpit. We have no active educational organization or propaganda. Note that I say active. We have recently made a paper organization, and it is good as far as it goes, but it is composed of men who have no time to give to it, and, while I have nothing to say against the organization, but rather do I commend it as a step in the right direction, the fact that it is not generally known that we have such an organization is proof of its inadequacy.

It is generally agreed that one's contribution toward a cause is a good index of his conscience in regard to it. Our 1915 Year Book records the distribution of our church offering as follows: American Christian Missionary Society, State Missions, Foreign Christian Missionary Society, Church Extension, Ministerial Relief, Christian Women's Board of Missions, National Benevolent Association, and of Bible-school offerings: American Christian Missionary Society, Foreign Christian Missionary Society, State Missions. Our educational interests were not recognized in the official record of the distribution of offerings until the present year. The Methodist churches in one of the four conferences in Iowa gave over $25,000 to education; all the churches of Disciples in Iowa, according to the 1916 Year Book, gave only $510.94.

II.

Why do we not have an educational conscience?

Because all our attention and emphasis has so far been given to direct evangelism, sometimes to blatant evangelism, if I may be permitted to use such a term. We are just getting through the fighting-for-existence stage, and have not yet recognized the fact that we are through. I mean most of us have not, and if any one lets up on this kind of a program, it is considered that there is something the matter with him, and he is at once assailed with those epithets of traitor, heretic, Unitarian, etc.

Because of our peculiar teaching that Scripture is easy, and requires no interpretation, and the consequent result that one man's guess is as good as another's. Why, then, go to the college at all? And why have colleges? One can go from the plow, or the barber shop, directly into the pulpit, and he is more likely to be "sound" (loud) than after he goes to college, especially if he goes to a standard college. "If the books agree with the Koran," said Caliph Omar, as he set the match to the great Alexandrian Library, "they are useless; if they do not agree, they are pernicious; in any case, they should be destroyed." A modern version might read as follows: "If our colleges teach what is in the Bible, they are useless; for any grammar school boy or girl can find that out for himself. If they teach anything that is not in the Bible, they are pernicious." The conclusion is inevitable.

HIGHER EDUCATION SCORNED.

Because of our literalism and legalism. For every action, and every attitude, and every movement, we have a plain "Thus saith the Lord." Do this, and you will be saved; don't do it, and you will be damned. Consequently you are less likely to be "saved" if you have anything to do with education, especially with "Higher Education," which is popularly synonymous with "Higher Criticism," which, in its turn, popularly means "Infidelity."

If it is all down in plain black and white, which he who runs may read, why not leave well enough alone? Safety first!

Because of our inordinate conceit, and cocksure dogmatism. We are absolutely right. All others are inevitably wrong. They are educated. We are not. Why educate?

Because we have no educational propaganda. I mean of course no effective propaganda, as in the case of Missions, Benevolence, Church Extension, et al. This is natural. Why should we have, with an attitude such as I have described?

III.

What will give us an educational conscience?

First, genuine scriptural teaching, with emphasis on the need of Christian education, following the example of Jesus and Paul. Jesus gave most of his short life to training twelve men. Surely we will make no mistake if we give our time, and millions, if we have them, to educate our religious leaders. Paul, the greatest of all preachers and evangelists, had the best education his country could afford—an education corresponding to that for which the highest academic degree is conferred at the present time.

Secondly, the establishment of a propaganda for religious education similar to that which we have long had for Foreign Missions—a scientifically organized Board of Education, with the best educational leader who can be secured as Secretary, a man whose consecrated scholarship and ability will compel the attention of the brotherhood and the respect and loyalty of our educational institutions; a man of the most thorough equipment and experience, who will devote all his time, energy and talents to our educational interests.

The object of this educational propaganda should be: to educate our religious leadership; to create, arouse, or develop a sentiment in favor of education among the Disciples—an educational conscience, so to speak, as we have been developing a missionary conscience. The first step to be taken by this Board through its Secretary should be to make a thorough investigation and classification of all our educational institutions and enterprises, and to publish the results of this investigation without fear or favor, for the information of our church people. If we have schools that are second, third, or fourth class, our people, and especially our young people, should know it, and the public has a right to the most exacting knowledge of the institution it is called upon to support. This investigation should be followed by enlightening articles on our educational conditions and problems, in our religious papers, published by the Secretary by the authority of the Board. Our religious leaders, whether ministers, business men or professional men, should be individually interviewed and won to a sympathetic understanding and co-operation in our educational work. Addresses should be given at our principal conventions and in our leading churches. A monthly or quarterly bulletin should be published, keeping the interests of our colleges before the people. Discriminating literature should be sent to the churches. Educational Day should be as generally observed as Foreign Missionary Day is now, and proper literature should be provided for this purpose.

The Board through its Secretary should thoroughly standardize and co-ordinate the work of our colleges. This, of course, should be approached in a judicious manner by personal visitation and conferences with the executives.

The Board should advise and assist in the management of financial campaigns, for individual institutions, but greater emphasis should be placed upon the financial returns, through the proper adjustment of the church budget to the headquarters of the Board, creating a large fund for distribution according to needs. If the educational conscience is fully developed, the money for the work will follow.

OUR CRYING SIN.

The crying sin of the Disciples today is the neglect of our church colleges. The Men and Millions Movement is the first real recognition of the proper place of our educational work. One of its aims was stated to be to raise the salaries of instructors to a living standard. How many of our people know that a majority of our so-called professors are not paid as well as plumbers or carpenters? Do not let us deceive ourselves. The law of compensation works here as well as anywhere else. Whatever may be said about "loyalty," it is impossible to secure or hold the best equipped instructors without adequate salary, consequently it is a fact that in the recent classification of the U. S. Government, only one of our educational institutions was ranked in group I.

The productive endowment of the "richest" educational institution among us, is less than a million dollars, while two to five millions is the endowment of the ordinary first class small college; for example, Amherst, with about 400 students, has five million and in round numbers the endowments of the best standard colleges and universities amount to from one-half million to one million for every one hundred students. We have about three and a half million dollars endowment for twenty-three colleges, with about 6,500 students, or about one million for every 2,000 students, or only from five to ten per cent of the endowment of schools that are supported by "them that are without."

"QUIT PLAYING AT EDUCATION."

A number of our institutions are called "Universities," with such pitiful endowments as $44,880, $57,680, and $65,000; some "colleges' with "no endowment" and one with $222!

We often hear the complaint that many of our best young men who wish to prepare for the ministry go to Harvard, Yale, Union, etc., and there imbibe strange doctrines inimical to the faith once for all delivered to the saints. But what can we expect when at these schools they may have free tuition, and at ours, they pay from $50 to$110 a year: when not one of our institutions is adequately equipped for research, and when it is an indisputable fact that no one can get a position in one of our best colleges without a degree from one of these great universities. It seems to me that it is time for us to quit playing at education. But this we will not do until we develop an educational Conscience.

The Pagan at the Gate

By Charles H. Forster

WAR cannot be conducted according to rules which are born of the ideals of Jesus Christ. To think of such a thing is to think in contradictions. The dead religions of antiquity are better suited to modern Europe, with its militarism, than Christianity. Christianity or Militarism, one or the other, must survive; they cannot both survive.

The pagan is at the gate of our civilization, ready to come in and take possession. Like a lurking menace we see him, on all sides, in every department of human life, seeking to capture our world, seeking to overthrow the ideals which have been most precious to us.

THE HIGH PRIEST OF THE NEW PAGANISM.

Many foes within our gates are allied with the pagan without. These foes weaken us in our stand against the pagan by getting us to distrust our weapons: The Word of God, the ideals of Jesus, the message of Christianity, and the moral standards of our modern civilization. Only by holding to these can we stand against the subtle advance of The New Paganism.

Friedrich Nietzsche, the philosopher, can rightly be called the great high priest of the The New Paganism, and his teachings, which will be described in this article, prepared the way for The War in two ways: by undermining the teachings of Christ, and by exalting the ideals of classic paganism. The legions of living pagans who are now horrifying and terrorizing Europe are acting out the philosophy of Nietzsche to the letter. A writer conversant with German life and the philosophical teachings in German universities recently wrote concerning Friedrich Nietzsche: "It is very interesting to watch the unreasonable and bloody antics of the real pagans who are now making Europe a living example of the philosopher's theories."

THE PAGAN PHILOSOPHY IN REAL LIFE.

The philosophy of paganism has ceased to become a mere exercise of the intellect. It has embodied itself in real life. It had everything ready. It had an incredibly terrible and monstrous machinery at its command. Like some great Juggernaut Militarism lunged forward, and men, women, children, ideals, religion, literature, government were driven before it in just one bloody direction. Nothing can get to the rear and escape. All must go in the direction they are driven or be crushed to death. Militarism has now the upper hand.

CHRISTIANITY THE ONLY HOPE.

Christianity is the only force that could have destroyed this Juggernaut. It is its natural enemy. The paganism of Europe could not have been regenerated if Christianity had been fully alive. Christianity must be undermined if a militaristic civilization is to be erected. Now the intellectual attempt of paganism to undermine Christianity found its voice in the teachings of Nietzsche and his followers.

He brands the doctrines and the dogmas of the Church as a lot of empty notions—the last fumes of evaporating reality. He calls the Christian conception of God the thinnest that ever existed in the mind of man—nothing more than the delirium of a set of sick cobweb sinners. Nietzsche is not altogether incorrect in these seemingly blasphemous utterances, for Christian scholarship has spent much valuable time spinning metaphysical and theological cobwebs. The great danger lies, not in the cobwebs themselves, but in the fact that we have forsaken the realities of the religion of Jesus Christ and taken for the fundamentals of our religion these flimsy vagaries of the intellect.

NIETZSCHE'S OPINION OF CHRISTIANS.

Nietzsche makes the common error of mistaking these vagaries for real Christianity. In his opinion there is no more self-convinced, more inflated idol in existence than the God the Christians worship. In the following language he describes his opinion of the Christian's God: "A god of the sick. . . . One of the most corrupt concepts of God that ever arrived on earth. It represents the low water-mark of declining developments of the god-type. . . . In this god we find hostility to life, to nature, to the power of real living. . . . That the strong nations of Europe have not thrust from themselves the Christian's god is verily no honor to their religious talent, not to speak of their taste. They ought to have got the better of this sickly, decrepit product of decadence.. . . They have incorporated sickness, old age and contradiction into all their instincts. . . . Two millenniums and not a single new god! But still continuing, as if persisting by right, this pitiable god of Christian monotheism. This hybrid image of ruin derived from nullity and contradiction, in which all decadent instincts and lassitudes of soul have their sanction."

THE GREAT WAR TERROR.

What a blasphemous challenge! It is high time we examined our concept of God to see if there is any misleading weakness in it. Is the God which Nietzsche blasphemes the Christian God or an invention of scholastic theology? We have woven around the God of Christ a bewildering maze of metaphysical and theological cobwebs! The trouble with Europe at this present awful hour is that the living essence of Christianity has been made the plaything of the intellect and not an instrument with which to build The City of God. Upon foundations made of these theological vagaries, the great ecclesiastical systems of Europe have been built, with their monuments of masonry around which now the bullets and shells of paganism shriek and laugh and destroy in hideous, devil-like scorn.

While Christianity grew in these ecclesiastical systems Europe remained pagan at heart. Paganism slumbered beneath the thin crust of a formal Christianity although it made its presence known in various ways Europe lived upon the surface of the crust and felt secure, but the pagan writhed beneath, until, at last, in the autumn of nineteen hundred and fourteen, the world shook with terror and agony. Paganism had awaited its day, and with a thousand deadly implements of death of its own preparing, it penetrated every nook and corner in Europe. Wives and mothers wept, and their half-starved children knew not the meaning of the tears. The rotting bodies of the men the women loved, and upon whom the children depended, merely furnished a stench upon the battlefield to make the believers in Christian civilization feel faint.

Is it too late to build into life the ideals of the Man of Nazareth?

THE CHURCH A FRIEND OF MILITARISM?

European Christianity has been too much like a Bird of Paradise in the midst of a beautiful jungle. It should have acted the part of sturdy pioneer, clearing away the wild beauty, the wild beasts and the wild inhabitants to make room for a splendid, well-ordered and secure Christian civilization, but it sang its song and lived so harmlessly in the midst of the jungle that it became a harmonious part of existing conditions It advocated a form of religion but denied the power thereof. Militarism and the Church dwelt side by side in peace. The wolf dwelt with the lamb, the leopard lay down with the kid, the cow and the bear fed together, but when the bigger beasts began to quarrel the lesser creatures found themselves quite unable to keep the peace of the jungle. The Church has made itself a harmless, lesser creature, and against the basic instincts of life which are now ruling in blood and horror it stands helpless. It has sold its birthright for a mess of dogmas. It is trembling in its weakness and the big beasts are crunching each other and the jungle flows with blood. All its baubles, its temples, its creeds and its liturgies seem like mocking effigies of its weakness as it now stands amidst the noise and scourge of the legions.

Instead of regarding Militarism as an out-and-out enemy the Church has assumed a friendly attitude, merely suggesting that it might pull out a few of its claws and cloak its paganism in a set of nice, humanitarian rules. A few loyal sons of the Church, seeing the fallacy and futility of all this, have prayed and held peace conventions. Speeches have been made and books have been written. We have talked confidently and have been filled to the crown of the head with sentiment, but militarism regarded us with an indifference which amounted to scorn.

Above the prayers of the Church, and more powerful than they, sounded the cry of the New Paganism. Nietzsche, its prophet, called for a new religion, a new conscience and new moral values as Europe's great need. Something new to resist the decaying society and deteriorating life of Christian civilization. Something to take the place of the cowardice, the pitiableness, the old woman's morality which two millenniums of Christianity have incorporated into the race. Nietzsche finds this something in the law of the jungle and the revival of the rule of the basic instincts of life. Europe must open the windows and let the fresh air blow in from the expanses of the jungle and drive out the poisonous atmosphere of Christianity. It must develop the manly instincts which sing in battle and shout when the blood spouts from the wound of an enemy. It must tread under foot that contemptible species of well-being dreamt of by "shopkeepers, Christians, cows, women, Englishmen, and other democrats."

THE WAY TO ENDURING HEALTH.

Here is the voice of philosophy giving the call of the wild. Nietzsche penetrated to the pagan passions which smoldered beneath the thin crust of Christianity which covered Europe. He helped to strike the match which changed these smoldering passions into a living flame. We have been living on the top of a volcano and we should not show surprise now that the basic passions have burst forth into roaring, flaming, lurid life. Our part is to be ready with a new and forceful message when these passions have burned themselves out, when the hour of war lust is over, when the inevitable hour of weakness after passionate indulgence prostrates the world. In that hour we can point the way to an enduring health.

A Moral Equivalent for Universal Military Service

RANDOLPH BOURNE, in The New Republic.

THE current agitation for preparedness has set hosts of Americans to thinking out for the first time what a real national strength and readiness would mean. We suddenly realize that if we are to defeat that militaristic trend which we loathe we shall have to offer some kind of action more stirring and more creative. The call now upon every citizen is to be not nebulously patriotic, but clear and lucid as to America's aims, so that our national energy shall not be squandered and misused. There looms up as a crucial need that "moral equivalent for war" with which William James first roused our imaginations. It seems no longer so academic a proposal. Confronted with the crisis, we see that he analyzed the situation rightly.

All around us we feel a very genuine craving for unity of sentiment, for service, for some new national lift and broadening which shall keep us out of the uneasy pettiness into which the American conscience has threatened to fall. In our hearts we know that to crystallize this desire into a meaningless sentiment, or into a piling-up of armaments or a proscribing of alien cultures, would not satisfy us. We want action, but we do not want military action. Even the wildest patriots know that America would have to go through the most pernicious and revolutionary changes to accept the universal military service which they advocate. We wish to advance from where we stand. We begin to suspect that military service, flag-reverence, patriotic swagger, are too much the weary old deep-dug channels into which national feeling always runs and is lost. The flooding river fills again its archaic and forsaken paths. Our present confusion expresses the dilemma we find ourselves in, when our instincts impel us into courses that our intelligence tells us we ought not to follow.

"AMERICANISM."

Our American danger is not so much that we become militarists as that we grope along, fretting and harrying each other into a unity which is delusive, and expressing our "Americanism" in activities that are not creative. The best come through James's conception of a productive army of youth, warring against nature and not against men, finding in drudgery and toil and danger the values that war and preparation for war had given. Ten years ago such an army seemed Utopian. We had neither the desire nor the technique. It seemed a project not to be realized without making a reorganization of our life so radical as to make the army itself unnecessary. Today, however, a host of new attitudes seem to give us the raw material out of which such a national service could be created. We hear much of universal military service as "education." The Plattsburgs are sugar-coated as "civic training camps," "schools for citizenship." Universal service no longer stands on its old ground of mere preparation for war. It is frankly trying to get itself recognized as an indispensable mode of education. The next pertinent step is evidently to ask why, if universal service is valuable because it is educational, it should not be constructed on a strict educational foundation.

COLOSSAL ORGANIZATION NOT NEEDED.

James's proposal sounded Utopian because it would require an entirely new and colossal national organization to put it into action. Universal military service in this country would certainly mean such a task. But if our national service is to be educational, we already have the organization in existence. The rapidly consolidating public school systems in the states provide the machinery for such an organization. As the public schools become better places for children to spend their time in, we are growing less tolerant of the forms of schooling outside of the public system. The tendency is towards the inclusion of all children in the public school. And the progressive states are requiring schooling up to the full age of sixteen years. We are rapidly creating a public school system, effectively administered by the states, which gives us the one universally national, compulsory service which we possess or are ever likely to consent to.

Education is the only form of "conscription" to which Americans have ever given consent. Compulsory military service would require decades of Napoleonic political evangelism to introduce. Compulsory education is universally accepted. For a national service which shall be educational you would have to convert nobody. The field is sown. No one denies the right of the state to conscript the child for education. But coupled with this assent is the insistence that the education shall be the freest, fullest and most stimulating that we know how to give. The current educational interest arises largely from the indignant demand that a state which takes all the children must meet the needs of every child. The very recent enthusiasm for "vocational education" means that we want a schooling that shall issue in capacity for fruitful occupation. A national educational service could give training for work at the same time that it gave opportunity for service.

MILITARY SERVICE A SHAM.

It is only a national service of this kind that would really be universal. Military service is a sham universality. It omits the feminine half of the nation's youth. And of the masculine half it uses only the physically best. France is the only country where the actual levy on men for military service has approximated the number liable. But worst of all, military service irons out all differences of talent and ability. It does not even tap the resources it enlists. It makes out of an infinitely varied group a mere machine of uniform, obeying units. The personal qualities, the individual powers of the youth it trains, are of no relevance whatever. Men are valuable exactly to the degree that they crush out these differences.

A national service for education would not be a sham. It would actually enlist the co-operation of every youth and girl. It would aim at stimulation, not obedience. It would call out capacity and not submerge it. It would organize varied tasks adapted to the capacities and strengths of its young citizenry. It would be universal, but it would be compulsory only in the sense that it called every one to the service. The tasks would not be enforced drudgery, but work that enlisted the will and toned up the aspirations.

RELATION TO THE PUBLIC SCHOOLS.

Such a national service would be the logical outgrowth of our public school system. Suppose the state said: All children shall remain in school till the age of sixteen years. Between the ages of sixteen and twenty-one they shall spend two years in national service. This service shall be organized and administered by the state educational administrations, but supervized and subsidized by the national government. The service would be performed as national service, but its work would be constructive and communal in its purposes and not military. Special military training could be given as a branch of this service to those who were best fitted for it. But defense would be but an incident in our constructive life, and not the sinew of our effort.

The tasks for such a national service would evidently be different from those contemplated by James. He thought of turning his army of youth into the drudgery of the world, where they might win in heroic toil and self-sacrifice the moral rewards which war had formerly given. But if our service is to be universal, it cannot be mere unskilled labor in mines and farms and forests. A large proportion of our youth would be disqualified. Furthermore, a service which made such frontal attack on industry would be bitterly resisted by those with whom its work competed. We are not prepared for a service which clashes too suddenly and harshly with the industrial system. What we need is a service which shall not so much do the old work of the world as create new demands and satisfy them. This national service could do things which need to be done, but which are not now being done. It could have for its aim the improvement of the quality of our living. Our appalling slovenliness, the ignorance of great masses in city and country as to the elementary technique of daily life—this should be the enemy of the army of youth. I have a picture of a host of eager young missionaries swarming over the land, spreading the health knowledge, the knowledge of domestic science, of gardening, of tastefulness, that they have learned in school.

SOME ADVANTAGES FOR COMMUNITY SERVICE.

Such a service would provide apprentices for communal services in town and country, as many schools and colleges are already actually providing. Food inspection, organized relief, the care of dependents, playground service, nursing in hospitals—all this would be a field for such an educational service. On a larger scale, tree-planting, the care and repair of roads, work on conservation projects, the care of model farms, would be tasks for this army. As I was burning caterpillars' nests the other day in New Jersey and saw the trees sinister with grey webs, I thought of the destroying army of youth that should be invading the land clearing it of all insect pests. We might even come to the forcible rebuilding of the slovenly fences and outhouses which strew our landscape, and to an imposition of cleanness upon our American countryside. With an army of youth we could perform all those services of neatness and mercy and intelligence which our communities now know how to perform and mean to perform, but have not the weapons to wield.

"FLYING SQUADRONS."

The army could be organized in flying squadrons, so that its youth could travel widely and see and serve all kinds of men and communities. For its direction we would need that new type of teacher-engineer-community worker that our best school systems are already producing. Scientific schools, schools of philanthropy, are turning out men and women who could step into their places as non-commissioned officers for such an army. The service could be entirely flexible. Boys and girls could learn the rudiments of their trade or profession in actual service with the army. Book studies could be carried on, and college learning could come to its own as the intellectual fertilizer of a wholesome and stimulating life. Athletics and sports would be an integral part of the two years' service. There would be long periods of camping in the national parks or upon ocean beaches. The Boy Scouts and Camp-Fire Girls already give the clue to such an enterprise.

If objection is made that this national educational service would fail to bring out the sterner qualities of heroism and self-sacrifice, and would not be a genuine moral equivalent for war, the answer is that the best kind of a moral equivalent is a moral sublimation. We want to turn the energies of youth away from their squandering in mere defense or mere drudgery. Our need is to learn how to live rather than die; to be teachers and creators, not engines of destruction; to be inventors and pioneers, not mere defenders. Our cities and isolated farms alike are mute witnesses that Americans have never learned how to live. Suppose we had a national service which was making a determined assault for the enhancement of living. Would its standards be less rigorous? Rather would the ingenuity and imagination have to be of the finest.

NATIONAL UNION AND VIGOR SECURED.

Some such conception of national service is the only one which will give us that thrill of unity and vigor which we seek. An educational service built on the public school system puts the opportunity in our hands. The raw material in attitudes and desires is here. Every task that an army of youth might perform is already being done in some school or college or communal service. All we need to do is to co-ordinate and make universal what is now haphazard and isolated. An army of youth which focused school work would provide just that purpose that educators seek. The advocates of "preparedness" are willing to spend billions on a universal military service which is neither universal nor educational nor productive. Cannot we begin to organize a true national service which will let all serve creatively towards the toning up of American life?

A Call to Young College Men and Women

The Christian Woman's Board Appeals for Seventy-five New Foreign Missionaries.

BY CHARLES T. PAUL.

AT A recent executive meeting the Christian Woman's Board of Missions, after much prayer and careful consideration, felt itself compelled to one of the greatest decisions in its history. No member of the Board could foresee how the decision would be realized; but there it was, voted without a dissenting voice,—a veritable act of faith to which the Board seemed divinely driven—the inevitable answer of a great missionary society seeking to respond in a statesmanlike manner to the cumulative appeals and demands which, for the past two years, have been coming from its foreign fields.

SPECIFIC NEEDS.

To be specific, the Christian Woman's Board of Missions hereby issues an appeal for seventy-five new foreign missionaries. In the present article the College of Missions is asked to present to the Board's auxiliary constituency, and to the entire brotherhood of the Disciples, a brief preliminary statement of the appeal. These reinforcements must be discovered and enlisted, must complete special missionary training in addition to a college education, and must actually be placed on the fields within a period of five years. It is desired that this announcement be regarded as a direct call to young college men and women whose hearts are now turned toward, or who might be willing to consider, foreign missionary service, and who can meet the physical, educational and spiritual requirements of such service. No less direct if not more importunate is the challenge to young pastors and to teachers who have had successful experience since their graduation, and are now occupying positions from which it would not be easy to turn away. This is the call of the Cross to tested lives which the churches in America will send "far hence" only by the unselfish "Spirit of Missions." It is also a call to ministers, college presidents and professors, to state secretaries and missionary leaders, to parents of young men and women about to choose their life work—all of whom are asked to cooperate with the Board in the quest and enlistment of the new candidates.

The geographical distribution of the need for whose supply the seventy-five additional workers are so urgently desired is briefly indicated as follows:

JAMAICA.

The opportunity was never greater in this "paradise of the Caribbean," the Board's oldest foreign field, among a people whom Sir H. H. Johnston characterizes as the most enterprising and hopeful of all the negro races of the New World. A man and wife are needed in Jamaica for general evangelistic work. The Board is urged also to establish at Kingston, the capital, an industrial institute after the model of Hampton or Tuskegee. For this enterprise, the first of the kind to be contemplated for the island, another married couple of special industrial training and more than ordinary resourcefulness will be required.

MEXICO.

For our storm-tossed neighbor republic, territorial apportionment and a distribution of forces, looking to adequate occupation of the entire country by evangelical agencies, was agreed upon at the Cincinnati Conference held two years ago. The mission boards are preparing for a united and co-ordinated Christian advance as soon as the present disturbances subside. Mexico's problems will never be solved without the Gospel. To strengthen our missions already established and to occupy the territory for which the Woman's Board is responsible (i. e. the entire State of Coahuila with portions of the contiguous State of Nuevo Leon and possibly of Tamaulipas) demands an increase of twenty-one missionaries, seven married couples for evangelistic and institutional work, and seven single women to serve as teachers and home workers.

SOUTH AMERICA.

Since 1905 the Board has had its South American base at Buenos Aires, the great cosmopolitan capital of Argentina. The reports and deliberations of the Panama Congress, with their startling revelations of the spiritual destitution of Latin America, culminated in an appeal to all boards working in the southern republic to attempt heroic enlargements of their present operations. The Panama challenge was made more specific and practically irresistible by the supplementary reports of the deputation which conducted the Regional Conferences in the South American capitals, and which met at the College of Missions in June to formulate its findings. In view of the vast regions disclosed in these reports as being practically untouched by any evangelical activities, the Christian Woman's Board, on behalf of the Disciples of Christ, has undertaken to occupy a big reach of new territory extending northward from Buenos Aires. It comprises the three Argentine provinces of Entre Rios, Corrientes and Misiones, situated between the rivers Uruguay and Parana, and also the entire Republic of Paraguay. From the missionary viewpoint there is not a more strategic piece of country in all Latin America. Nor do the annals of modern missionary administration record a finer example of daring and prescient Christian statesmanship than the prompt and prayerful action of the Christian Woman's Board of Missions in being the first of all the boards to request the assignment of a part of South America's vast unoccupied regions. This immense new parish as large as Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Michigan and Wisconsin, with a population of 61,000,000, is the very heart of the future development of the southern continent. To enlarge the mission in Buenos Aires, and to move out for pioneer work into the regions described, calls for the immediate though only initial investment of twenty new missionaries,—ten men and ten women, prepared for all types of service, from educational ministry among the students and cultured classes of Buenos Aires and Asuncion, to evangelistic, industrial and social work among the Indians of the Paraguayan Chaco.

INDIA.

Such great harvests and new openings wait upon the Disciples in Central India that our Indian mission has asked the two Boards, the Foreign Christian Missionary Society, and the Christian Woman's Board of Missions, to augment the staff by sixty additional workers during the next five years—twenty married couples and twenty single women. Of these the Christian Woman's Board seeks to provide its reasonable quota, ten married couples and ten single women, thirty in all. They are needed as physicians, nurses, zenana workers, teachers, industrial superintendents, and orphanage mothers. Bilaspur, Jhansi, Bina, each familiar station has its crying need. Hospitals, schools, orphanages, village districts, mass movements, unentered territory are hungry for new hands, new faces, new hearts,—more leaders and shepherds of souls.

This, then, is the sum of the matter. The fields are white unto harvests too great for present reapers to cope with. An increase of seventy-five new missionaries is asked for. Here let the appeal stand out in tabular form:

Four for Jamaica,
Twenty-one for Mexico,
Twenty for South America,
Thirty for India.

It is the Board's desire and purpose to secure as large a proportion as possible of the seventy-five during the current summer months, so that this present year they may begin their special preparation at the College of Missions, whose next session opens September the thirteenth.

Most earnestly is the whole brotherhood urged to join with the Board in prayer that these missionaries may be raised up and thrust out by the Lord Himself through the devotion and collaboration of His people.

At the summons of European emperors and kings millions of the best and bravest of men, the flower of the old-world nations, have rushed to the defence and advancement of their country's cause. Multitudes have laid down their lives. When America seemed menaced on her southern border, mighty battalions were soon mustered on the Rio Grande, with hundreds of thousands more ready and eager in "the glad ardor of sacrifice" to volunteer for service if Washington should but speak.

What should be the response of a million and a half Disciples to this peaceful call of the kingdom of Christ?

Correspondence is at once invited from young men and women who desire to present themselves to the Board as candidates, and from other persons concerning possible candidates of their acquaintance, interest and prayer. Address Mrs. Anna R. Atwater, President Christian Woman's Board of Missions, College of Missions Building, The College of Missions, Indianapolis, Ind.

The Visitor

At Old Chautauqua

WHEN the first French voyagers made their way across the portage from Lake Erie to the water that stretches from Mayville to Jamestown, N. Y., and gave it a name which later was modified to Chautauqua, they little realized that they were providing the English language with a word which as a noun and adjective was to prove one of the most useful terms in the common speech. No one knows what the word means. There are a half dozen conjectures regarding its origin. It may be Indian, and it may be a corruption of some French phrase. But today it is good English, and very popular American.

On the shore of that lake nearly a half century ago two prominent Christian workers, both Methodist, one a noted minister and the other a successful man of business, located a session of the American Sunday School Association. In that work Dr. John H. Vincent, of Buffalo, was deeply interested, and Mr. Lewis H. Miller, of Akron, was active. It was no part of their purpose to make permanent the gathering by the lake, but merely to use the admirable spot as one of the places which might be utilized, after the manner of a camp meeting, for religious gatherings. But it was so well adapted to the purpose, and the time was so ripe for the birth of the summer school idea, that almost without premeditation the Chautauqua plan was born,—combining the instruction of the classroom, the inspiration of the platform and the recreation of the camp.

Today Chautauqua,—the mother of hundreds of less ambitious assemblies,—is a summer city of ten thousand inhabitants, with a complete college equipment, schools of music, public speaking and physical culture, arts and crafts, a school of religion, embracing studies in biblical literature and religious education, and a lecture and concert program covering almost every hour of the day during ten weeks each summer. Here come teachers, preachers, missionaries, students, parents and children, and people of every profession and no profession, to rest and study. And so full of activity is the place that those who come only for rest find it hard to escape the universal contagion of industry. One wakens in the morning with the resolute determination that he will not do a thing but rest all day. Then comes the haunting fear that something of special interest may occur, so it will be safer to consult the daily program. But a glance at that array, and one is lost. Before he is aware, he is out and hurrying to one feature after another, till the day is as full as all days are in this fascinating place.

Chautauqua has a way of laying hands on representative men from all the denominations, schools and vocations. The Sunday programs are very rich. From the Bible Study hour at nine in the amphitheatre, through the great preaching service at eleven, at which eight thousand people crowd into the huge auditorium, on through afternoon hours of devotion and instruction, to the Vesper Service in the Hall of Philosophy at five, the informal lakeside devotions at seven, and the sacred concert at eight, the day is full of inspiration.

Most of the Protestant bodies have headquarters at Chautauqua. The Disciples secured such a house some years ago through the efforts of Mr. and Mrs. Ford, whose services to Eureka College made them well and favorably known. At present the headquarters are in the capable hands of Mrs. J. C. B. Stivers of Cleveland. There is a sizable group of Disciples on the grounds, some of whom remain through the entire season. At each of the denominational houses Sunday worship is held at ten o'clock, and at that time the Disciples during the past two or three weeks observed the communion, under the leadership of such men as F. M. Rains, J. J. Castleberry, J. C. B. Stivers and E. H. Long. On Wednesday evening at seven there is a social hour, and on Thursday afternoons receptions are held in honor of any guests who may be on the grounds.

It has been several years since the Visitor had the privilege of spending any considerable period of time at Chautauqua. Every year or two he has been there for a Sunday. But this year it was possible to remain three weeks, at work in the school of religion and in various other duties connected with the program. Every day a devotional service is held at ten o'clock, conducted by the preacher of the previous Sunday. And every morning at eight and nine classes were held in the Hall of the Christ, in the study of the Prophets and the life of Christ. The pleasure and profit of his work are very great. People who cannot attend University classes, or who prefer the more unconventional life of the Assembly, come in large numbers to participate in these studies. They are people of many denominational and theological view-points, but their interest in the great themes of religion is profound and constant.

But it is the lecture hours of eleven and half-past two that attract the crowds. At these times the great subjects of national and social interest are discussed. During one week we heard Professor Steiner daily, in a treatment of the problems of our new citizenship, the results of immigration, which searched the consciences and the hearts of all who listened. Another week was given to "Preparedness," with addresses twice daily by advocates of armament and pacification, respectively, who alternated in their presentation of the various phases of the question, and left most people in hopeless confusion as to what was meant by 'preparedness' after all. One speaker proclaimed himself a pacifist and with amazing audacity demanded the largest navy in the world! Another insisted that he was a militarist, but dissented from any program of army increase beyond the size required for police duty. On the whole one gathered that the sentiment of the audiences was quite averse to the proposals made in the interest of preparedness, and that but for its political value just now the whole program would fall of its own weight, and under the sober second thought of the nation.

Another week was given to lectures on various phases of archaeology, coincident with the sessions of the American Institute of Archaeology. During that week the speakers dealt with such fields as Primitive European Life, the testimony of Egypt to the early history of the race, and the story of Athens in the age of Pericles.

Interspersed with these more serious subjects were recreational features in the form of concerts, moving pictures, baseball games, receptions, and ghost parades, while golf, swimming, fishing and canoeing all had their devotees.

There are many familiar faces one expects to see at Chautauqua. At some time or another during the season one is quite sure to meet Bishop Vincent, his son, President Geo. E. Vincent, Dean Shailer Mathews, Dr. E. H. Hurlbut, Prof. S. H. Clark, Dean Percy H. Boynton, and various denominational leaders whose names are familiar. The Presbyterian House is a headquarters for the missionaries of that church, who are on leave of absence from their fields, and are provided with almost free entertainment during their stay here. What an admirable thing it would be for our own missionaries to have such a place of recreation. The funds for this purpose would have to be contributed by people who believe in such a place. But it ought not to be difficult to finance such a proposal. The Disciples' Headquarters could not undertake it without generous help. In fact, the resources derived from rentals hardly suffice to pay the expenses of the place. So it is the custom of those Disciples who visit Chautauqua and enjoy the privileges of the house to contribute as they are able to the extension of its influence. We ought to have a larger body of our people there. We shall have when they appreciate the value of a period of residence in this mother Chautauqua.

HUMOR IN RELIGION

OUR Puritan forefathers would have been shocked at the suggestion that humor had its place in religion. For them only a long-faced seriousness could be considered as a truly religious attitude. Humor is to be differentiated from wit, which is often irreverent and which does not see the deeper meanings of things. Certainly humor is to be differentiated from the absurd tales which Americans call jokes. Some sympathy may be expressed for the Englishman who listened to an American joke and said, "Why, that is only a big lie!"

Humor has the gift of seeing the deep and underlying absurdity which belongs to a lie or a sin. It routs an ancient error with a laugh. It is a two-edged sword, and the one who wields it must ever beware lest he cut himself with his own weapon.

The Bible is full of humor. Because we have felt that when reading the Bible we had to adopt a certain attitude called "devotional" instead of being just plain human folks, we have missed many of its delicate thrusts. Jonah is angry because God will not destroy Nineveh but when the little gourd that grows up over him is killed, he waxes indignant. There is hardly needed the voice of the deity to show Jonah how absurd it is to want a whole city killed and yet mourn over the death of a gourd! A smile must have gone through the audience when Jesus spoke of those who strained at a gnat and swallowed a camel.

It is a sound principle of preaching that humor is never to be associated with the thing we would promote, but always with the thing we would destroy. Great preachers like Beecher have known how to employ humor in their pulpits. It is not irreverent for a church to smile at the absurdities and meanness of sin and error. It is tragedy for them ever to laugh over the deep convictions of religion.

"PUNCH" IN THE SERMON

NEWSPAPER men judge a story by its "punch." This slang word suggests an element of interest and surprise which keeps the readers' attention to the close.

How many sermons lack "punch" we are well aware. It is often because of long and utterly useless introductions. Some preachers, if they were called upon to write up a base ball game for a newspaper, would begin by giving the history of baseball, tracing it back to practices in primitive life. The newspaper man would tell his story in the first sentence. After that he would give the details in such measure as would prove interesting. A newspaper article is unlike some sermons in that the conclusion comes first.

Sermons suffer much from extraneous matter which is dragged in as illustration. Many illustrations are in reality obscuration. Just because a story is clever and interesting may be just the reason for not using it, if its interest would divert the mind of the hearer from the central theme. Once diverted from the course of the sermon, the hearer is lost when the illustration is complete.

Some preachers try to give their sermons "punch" by the use of shocking statement. Literary artists regard this as the last resort of a defeated man. The story that screams and raves in the last chapter has simply confessed its impotency to arouse wholesome interest.

Others try to arouse interest by vocal tricks. One preacher was asked by his son, "Father, why did you pound the pulpit so today?" "Because I had nothing to say," he replied.

Interest in a sermon depends upon the choice of a truly great theme that takes root in universal experience. Its treatment must follow valid literary method. Fundamentally it must proceed out of the soul of a man who is himself interested.

ILLICIT PRAYER

IN THESE days many books are being written on the subject of prayer, many of them seeking only to varnish over our religious situation with a coating of rather thin piety. Some of them are truly great efforts to give our world a satisfactory interpretation of this great subject.

Christian people have been warned of praying too little. They need also to be warned of praying too much, of a certain kind. There is too much of irreverent stage praying. A certain evangelist walks to the side of the stage, goes through the motion of ringing an old-fashioned telephone, and then says, "Hello, God, I am here." This is his introduction to his prayer. It throws into relief the brutal and irreligious use of prayer for public show. Of the same sort was the prayer of the Pharisee on the street corner that he might be seen of men.

Evangelicals know chiefly the prayer of petition. The prayer of communion of the great mystics, the prayer of thanksgiving, the prayer of submission to the divine will, they know much less. A girl of evangelical faith put God to the prayer test some years ago. She asked for something every day and she believed she asked in faith. She was disappointed and for two years never opened her Bible nor attended worship. Only a deeper view of prayer from her pastor saved her to religion. A business man we know prays for the success of his investments on the board of trade. In Italy, burglars pray to the saints for success.

Prayer is no divine magic which places the Almighty under obligation. If it were, our world would soon be in chaos. We shall not say that prayer never changes the divine mind, but we shall say it is far more common for it to be the means by which the divine mind may overcome our stubborn wills. Jesus went into the garden to pray, Let this cup pass. He learned to say, "Not my will, but thine be done.

MORALITY AND THE END OF THE WORLD

INTEREST in last things, and in the life here and now, stand side by side in the New Testament. There is a school that would interpret the whole New Testament as a Messianic document finding its chief meaning in a belief in the speedy ending of the world. This leaves Jesus as the preacher of an "interim ethics" and the whole early Christian movement stands upon a mistake.

In our own day there is still found in many quarters the same effort at peering into the future. Alexander Campbell must have had some of this interest when he named his journal "The Millennial Harbinger." His hard-headed practicality rescued him from the vagaries which some of his followers have committed in putting forth various kinds of interpretations of Daniel and Revelation unsupported by any scholarly principles whatever.

The deepest meaning of Christianity for the world is to be found in no geography of heaven and hell such as furnished by Dante and Milton. Our world wants a religion that gets its meaning out of its every-day value to the race. It is the religion of Jesus Christ as a mode of life that now commends it to thoughtful people.

As Professor Ross has pointed out, we are confronted by new sins every day which are not in the decalogue. The social consciousness is making a new decalogue, not to abrogate the old but to amplify it. It is a time of great moral confusion. Many people are becoming discouraged in their search for what is right. In such a time, Jesus' religion with its Golden Rule comes to us with an attitude of consideration for the value of human life which furnishes the point of view that will write the new commandments for the modern world.

It is the business of the church to develop conscience to support our new visions of duty. It is one thing to see the right intellectually, but it is another to feel a great enthusiasm for it

IS THE CHURCH DIFFERENT?

NO DEEPER difference divides modern free evangelicals from the older church groups than their attitude toward the Church itself. To meet the charge of schism and disloyalty to the mother Church, the evangelical learned to say that it was religion that counted and not the Church.

The story of the different doctrines of the Church is a long one to tell. In the Roman Catholic doctrine, there could be no Church without a pope, and they have a list of supposed popes running back to the Apostle Peter who was given the power of the keys, whatever that meant. The Episcopalian says, "Where the bishop is, there is the Church." The Presbyterian had a doctrine of a Church visible and of a Church invisible. The Congregationalist insisted we should say "the churches" instead of "the Church." Disciples have often emphasized a kind of apostolic succession by undertaking to restore the form and organization of a New Testament Church.

This confusion of testimony in the Christian world has tended to degrade the Church in the eyes of the world. There are undoubtedly a good many people who regard the Church in no different light than they regard a lodge, a club or a college fraternity. The fiction writers have often made their heroes come out for an abolition of the Church entirely.

It is cheering to find a great thinker like Professor Royce coming to a defence of the conception of the Church. It is needless to say he is interested in no mediaeval doctrine of apostolic succession, but on the other hand he cannot accept the low view of the Church held by evangelicals. The Church, the Beloved Community, is set in the very center of his conception of Christianity. Perhaps his definitions will not satisfy all students. He has, however, turned the attention of Christians to a new kind of thinking about the Church that is wholesome.

LESSONS FROM A FAILURE

A FEW years ago there was inaugurated with a blare of trumpets a new educational institution in the state of Ohio called the Phillips Bible Institute. It was an effort to utilize in a northern city the unique methods of Ashley S. Johnson, in Tennessee. Though Ohio already had a high-grade Disciple college and Bethany College was not far away, it was thought that the need of a simon-pure gospel was so great that a new institution was demanded. Press reports soon announced that the school had a larger attendance than Hiram college.

We now hear that the school has disbanded and the remains of it are being offered to various institutions. First we heard it would go to Valparaiso, Ind., and later rumors came that the remnants were to go to Bethany. In any case the institution has finished. We cannot but regret the loss of a large sum of money given to its promotion. It is reported that about one hundred thousand dollars was sunk in the experiment. This would have endowed several chairs in a good college for all time.

The failure teaches us that the time is past to promote low grade educational ventures like Phillips Institute. Colleges are being standardized, and even our best institutions feel the times demanding ever better training.

Furthermore, the institution undertook to put a fictitious "doctrinal soundness" over against educational efficiency. If there ever was any friend of education among us who felt that we might sacrifice our educational ideals for the sake of carrying a doctrinal point among the Disciples, let the gravestone of Phillips Institute teach him day by day that no school from henceforth may hope for any abiding success which does not maintain high educational ideals and freedom of learning.

CITIZENSHIP A DUTY

THE Anti-saloon League has collected a most significant group of figures showing the failure of the decent and Christian element in Chicago to go to the polls and vote. At a time when the women have been seeking a full ballot in vain, the men must be dragged to the polls, and the most painstaking effort fails to shake many of them out of their lethargy.

Some of this failure to participate in the government of the nation proceeds from a kind of pessimism which insists that one man's vote never changes the result and that "the politicians have it all fixed up anyway." This pessimism has some ground in fact, but there are recent evidences in many cities that the plans of the professional politician have gone a glimmering in the face of an enlightened public opinion.

A deeper reason for the failure to participate in government is found in the selfishness and individualism of many business men. It takes perhaps an hour or two hours to vote in some instances. The business man has a feelin that he cannot afford this hour. Being terribly "busy" a state of mind with some amateur business men.

In many states primaries will soon be held at wh various candidates for office will be nominated. In Illi a primary election is by all odds more important than election, as it is in the southern states. The nation h right to expect that the Christian voters will not be intelligent and less alert in the defence of their prin than are the representatives of the liqu traffic and p corruption.

A DEPARTMENT OF INTERDENOMINATIONAL ACQUAINTANCE :: By Orvis F. Jordan

Old Catholic Bishops Die.

There passed away recently two "Old Catholic" bishops in Europe, one in Holland and one in Spain. "Old Catholics" are those who have been unwilling to acknowledge the infallibility of the pope and who disconnected themselves from Rome after the Council of Trent. The Rt. Rev. Dr. Prins of Haarlem, Holland, was known for his labors in behalf of the union of those whe believed in the historic episcopate. Bishop Cabrera of Spain was ordained by the Irish Episcopal church but was never recognized by other branches of the Episcopal church. He has been denounced in Spain as a traitor to his country. His gifts however, have won for him an involuntary respect and he has been consulted by Prime Ministers upon the subject of giving evangelicals in Spain their rights. He is a poet whose work has been received favorably by the critics. Throughout his life he has lived in poverty.

Moderator is Leading Scholar.

The United Free Church Assembly this year chose as their moderator Principal George Adam Smith, head of Aberdeen University, who is regarded by many as the most eminent living Old Testament scholar. He was made a knight some time ago by King George. Principal Smith dealt in his inaugural address with the "conscientious objectors" who have not been able to sympathize with the present war. He took a bold position saying, "The doctrines of non-resistance and of political peace at any price find no sanction in the gospels."

Archbishop Answers Peace Appeals Curtly.

The Archbishop of Canterbury has been receiving a number of appeals that he use his office to urge peace. He has broken silence on this matter at last and has stated his attitude. He regards it as flimsy sentimentalism to seek an end to the war until its purpose has been accomplished.

Kitchener Honored in Boston.

Lord Kitchener was honored in Boston recently in a service held in the cathedral of the Protestant Episcopal church. A number of British organizations were present in a body and the building was full to overflowing.

Feast of Anne Celebrated.

Roman Catholicism is rapidly taking on a modern quality but a remnant of the medieval tradition may be seen in the celebration of the Feast of St. Anne in Chicago each year. The celebration this year was on July 26 and pilgrims came great distance. The relics of the saint supposed to possess curative power all the phenomena that go with wieism and Christian Science attend veneration of the saint.

'ends Colonial rches.

e colonial churches have been inter- d to most Americans as narrow in Dr. Howard Duffield, of Old First , of New Yor (Presbyterian), has put forth amphlet showing e charges h ot been founded in fact. Even the banishment of Roger Williams is shown to have aroused great opposition among the people and for the most part the early settlers had more of the tolerant spirit than usually pervaded that period. Dr. Peters charges that a Tory renegade, Rev. Samuel Peters, became the author of vicious calumnies against the colonies which in many people's minds have been mistaken for genuine historical data.

Presbyterians Send Out New Missionaries.

There have been assembled at New York City recently a hundred new and old missionaries of the Presbyterian church to receive their final instructions. The war has not abated the interest of these men and women in any measure, none asking to be relieved from service. The missionaries were largely recruited from the middle west.

Death of Harry Monroe.

The death of Harry Monroe removes the head of the well known Pacific Garden mission in Chicago. He was himself a criminal at one time and in the days of Col. Clark, he staggered up to the altar one night so drunk that he fell down. He promised that he would never leave the mission and he never has. Great numbers of derelicts have passed through his hands, some to relapse to the old ways, others to be reclaimed permanently. Among the well-known converts in the Pacific Garden mission were Mel Trotter of Grand Rapids and Billy Sunday. In the note which Mr. Monroe left as his last message to the world, he appeals to the preachers of Chicago and particularly to Billy Sunday to see that the Pacific Garden mission is never allowed to go down.

The Boy and Religion.

After we have had a Men and Religion movement in the United States, the theme of the Boy and Religion is coming to the fore. A unique conference will be held in Winona, Ind., at the assembly on August 19-22. A number of Chicago men will appear on the program. Among them will be E. R. Colby, who has been connected with the Juvenile court work. He will speak on "The Difficult Boy of the Court." Others will be William A. Peterson, business man and Sunday-school worker, who gives an address on "The Sunday School Boy"; R. L. Hazlett of the Chicago Boy Scouts on "The Boy Scout Boy"; and O. B. Ransopher, supervisor of one of the branches of the Boys' club, on "The Boys' Club Boy." Other speakers will be E. G. Jenkins, Honesdale, Pa.; Roland W. Baggott, judge of the juvenile court at Dayton, O.; the Rev. M. H. Trause, Gary, Ind., and Dr. A. Christy Brown, Winona Lake, Ind. If the conference proves a success it is expected that it will become an established annual institution.

Pope Against Italian Democracy.

Pope Benedict XV has made a pronouncement with regard to the various organizations of Catholics in Italy having political aim. He takes a reactionary attitude toward democracy and says "the capital reason for all the wrongs in human society today is the heretical doctrine that recognizes as source of authority the will of the people." The conception of a Christian democracy which made headway in Italy some years ago has been definitely frowned upon by the pope.

Japanese Church Organized.

Though the Japanese are not numerous in this country, they are organizing Christian churches for their people. Recently at Santa Barbara, Cal., a Congregational church was organized and recognized. They have about thirty members and property valued at $1,600.

A Spiritual Pilgrimage.

Announcement is made of a new book by the Rev. R. J. Campbell called "A Spiritual Pilgrimage." The book will detail the reasons for the change of fellowship on the part of the well-known City Temple pastor. It will be the first pronouncement of the kind which he has made since he went into the Episcopal ministry.

Stiffness of English Church.

Devotion to the church year is carried too far, declares the Guardian, an English paper. The Sunday following the death of Lord Kitchener was Whitsunday, a very important day in the English ecclesiastical calendar. For this reason, English established churches waited another week for any memorial of the great war-lord. The English paper chides the English leaders for this, and sets over against their attitude, the greater responsiveness of the Russian church to popular moods and interests. He might also have contrasted it with the nonconformist sensitiveness to national interest.

Decided Not to Go to Atlanta.

Dr. Len G. Broughton, pastor of First Baptist church, Knoxville, Tenn., has decided not to accept a call to his old church at Atlanta, Ga., where they sought his services to raise a debt incurred during his previous pastorate. Dr. Broughton has recently written a book on the war situation which has been published by Hodder and Stoughton.

Social Ideals in Pittsburgh Churches.

The Christian Social Service Union of Pittsburgh, has begun making a survey of what is known as "the Strip," which is near the Monongahela river. Previous to this another survey had been made by certain social workers of a strip along the Allegheny river and results printed in a booklet which was sent to every Pittsburgh pastor. All the pastors have recently received a copy of Wallis' "Struggle for Justice" through the generosity of a Pittsburgh layman.

Preacher Opposes Representative Mann.

Representative Mann is from the district in Chicago where the militant Rev. M. P. Boynton lives. The congressman acted in various ways well pleasing to the "wets" during the last two years and wholly unsatisfactory to the "drys." As a result, the Anti-saloon league has encouraged the Rev. Mr. Boynton to run for congress against Hon. Mann. The campaign is sure to be an interesting and spectacular one.

JOURNEYING TO JERUSALEM.

Lesson for August 27.

Golden Text: I commend you to God, and to the word of his grace. Acts 20:32.

Lesson Acts 20:16-38: verses 16-27 printed.

Memorize verse 24.

(16) For Paul had determined to sail past Ephesus, that he might not have to spend time in Asia; for he was hastening, if it were possible for him, to be at Jerusalem the day of Pentecost.

(17) And from Miletus he sent to Ephesus, and called to him the elders of the church. (18) And when they were come to him, he said unto them,

Ye yourselves know, from the first day that I set foot in Asia, after what manner I was with you all the time, (19) serving the Lord with all lowliness of mind, and with tears, and with trials which befell me by the plots of the Jews; (20) how I shrank not from declaring unto you anything that was profitable, and teaching you publicly, and from house to house, (21) testifying both to Jews and to Greeks repentance toward God, and faith toward our Lord Jesus Christ. (22) And now, behold, I go bound in the spirit unto Jerusalem, not knowing the things that shall befall me there: (28) save that the Holy Spirit testifieth unto me in every city, saying that bonds and afflictions abide me (20) But I hold not my life of any account as dear unto myself so that I may accomplish my course, and the ministry which I received from the Lord Jesus, to testify the gospel of the grace of God (25) And now, behold, I know that ye all, among whom I went about preaching the kingdom, shall see my face no more. (26) Wherefore I testify unto you this day, that I am pure from the blood of all men. (27) For I shrank not from declaring unto you the whole counsel of God.

VERSE BY VERSE.

16. To spend time. The word carries the suggestion of a waste of time. Something like our expression "fritter away" time.—He was hastening. In a large congregation like Ephesus there would have been many chances for delay.

17. Miletus. At this time Miletus was a seaport town of some importance, but at the present it is an inland town about ten miles from the sea.—He sent to Ephesus. It was about thirty miles away.—The elders. These evidently were the key men in the church. They are called overseers in verse 28.

18. From the first day that I set foot in Asia, after what manner I was with you all the time. The length of his stay is recorded in the 31st verse. The time of Paul's entering Asia is stated in Acts 16:6, 7. His first preaching in Acts 18:19. The manner of his life is given in the next three verses.

19. The tears. This is the measure of Paul's anxiety for the people at Ephesus.—With trials which befell me by the plots of the Jews. Read in this connection 1. Cor. 15:32 and also 2. Cor. 1:8-10. He was a good soldier in Jesus.

20. How. This expression depends upon "Ye know" in verse 18.—I shrank not. The word means to draw in or contract. It is used of furling sails, closing of the fingers, and drawing back for shelter, etc.—That was profitable. Unselfish service on the part of Paul. It means encouragement, reproofs, helps, training, and truth.—From house to house. Visited the members in their homes. This is the part of good teaching.

21. Repentance toward God. Repentance and faith have the article and hence means the repentance which is due God and the faith due his son Jesus Christ. This is action which results in the change of character.

22. Bound in the spirit. Constrained by the spirit. Constrained by an invincible sense of duty.—Not knowing the things that shall befall me there. He was intent on his great mission. He did not know what the results would be.

23. The Holy Spirit testified unto me. The word testifieth signifies full, clear testimony. See chapter 21:4-11.—Bonds. Imprisonments may be in his mind.—Afflictions. Troubles other than punishment.

24. I hold not my life of any account. I hold nothing higher than accomplishing my task. The metaphor "accomplish my course" is suggested by the Greek games. The world needs such men today. See the American Revised version on this verse.—The ministry. Object of the verb "finish."—I received from the Lord. For the meaning read Col. 1:23-25, and 1 Tim. 1:12.—To testify the gospel of the grace of God. To make known the good news of God's salvation to the world was the purpose of Paul's ministry.

25. Preaching the Kingdom. The kingdom Jesus came to establish. Spiritual power working a new social order.—Ye shall see my face no more. This was Paul's conviction. The signs of his time lead him to this state of mind.

26. This day. Literally on today's day. This our parting day.—I am pure from the blood of all men. He had faithfully warned all, and instructed them in the way of life. See Acts 18:6 and Ezek. 3:18, 20.

27. I shrank not from declaring unto you. This is the foundation of a clear conscience.—The whole counsel of God. The good news concerning Jesus Christ the Son of God and the founder of the new kingdom.

TEST QUESTIONS.

1. What was Miletus in Paul's day?
2. Why did Paul not want to stop at Ephesus?
3. What does "bound in spirit" mean?
4. What does verse 23 mean?
5. How did Paul point to his record?
6. For what purpose was Paul in the world?
7. What purpose have you in life?

Paul's Journey

The Lesson in Today's Life.

BY ASA McDANIEL.

PAUL knew why he was alive. There was a great underlying purpose in his life. His work contributed to some end in the world. He was anxious to apprehend and do his part in God's great redemptive purpose in the progress of mankind.

On this journey Paul had the end in view. It is worth while to have the plan of your life so clearly in mind as to be able to see the end from the beginning. The great Architect has a picture of the building in mind before he begins to put it on paper or set the workmen to the task of construction. It is only in this way that he is able to maintain the harmony and proportion so necessary to a pleasing and lasting structure. It is only as we build our characters with a worthy end in mind that we are able to perfect a life of harmony so much to be desired among men. It is this quality that makes a man great.

In order that he should accomplish the end in as short a time as possible it would be necessary for him to pass Ephesus. The stay at this interesting city and among so many kind and interesting friends would have been a great delight, but the purpose of his life would not permit him to stop. There are times without number in life that we are called upon to choose between the good and the best. There are always a number of good things in life, but they will not fit in our scheme of life. The goal and purpose will determine our choice in life. Hence we should not live without a purpose.

No doubt the time element had to do with Paul's course at this time. Had he made the stop at Ephesus he could not have reached his destination in time. The value of time is too little appreciated in our day.

Paul was anxious to put his influence where it counted most, so he called the key men from Ephesus to give them the instructions for the church in that city. Are we looking for the key men in our classes? The future depends upon our faithfulness in this field.

The story of Dr. Gunsaulus' nephew should suggest to us the lesson for us at this time. It was just before the great Iroquois theater fire in Chicago that the doctor's nephew asked, "What's the text you are taking for next Sunday?" The great preacher replied, "To this end was I born, and for this cause came I into the world." The nephew next asked, "Uncle, what do you think I was born for?" It is more than I know," said the doctor. "The same with me," added the young man, and away he went wondering what opportunities life had in store for him. He soon reached the burning theater and learned that the passage way was choked with people. Instantly he plunged in and dragged out one after another from the seething mass of humanity, until he had succeeded in saving thirteen people.. Once more his brave heart sent him on his mission of helpfulness. He was struck by a falling timber. As he lay dying in the hospital his uncle leaned over him and caught his whispered words: "Uncle, to this end I was born, and for this cause came I into the world, that I might save those thirteen."

It was this self-forgetful service that sent Paul on his journey not knowing what might be in his path. It is this same spirit that will make our journey in life worth while to the world.

DANIEL WEBSTER'S FAITH.

The following inscription on Mr. Webster's tombstone, dictated by him in the last year of his life, is sufficient evidence that he held to the Confession of Faith to the end:

"Lord, I believe; help thou mine unbelief."

Philosophical argument, especially that drawn from the vastness of the Universe, in comparison with the apparent insignificance of this globe has sometimes shaken my reason for the faith which is in me; but my heart has always assured and reassured me that the Gospel of Jesus Christ must be a Divine Reality. The Sermon on the Mount cannot be a mere human production. This belief enters into the very depth of my conscience. The whole history of man proves it.

On a Sabbath morning near the close of his life—possibly on the very last Sabbath on earth—he conducted family worship. He read from the Sermon on the Mount, and dwelt especially upon that part which speaks of the divine nature of forgiveness.

News and Hopes of the Colleges

EUREKA COLLEGE.

H. O. Pritchard, President.

Eureka College has been making rapid progress during the last year and more toward the securing of a thoroughly adequate equipment. During the past year a President's residence was purchased at an outlay of $6,000. A new gymnasium was opened February 1, 1916, representing a cost of $30,000. This gymnasium is thoroughly modern and complete and is one of the best gymnasiums of the minor colleges of Illinois. The gymnasium has added greatly to the efficiency of the institution on the physical side. A complete corps of instructions will be in charge of the physical training of the young men and women in Eureka during the coming year and all who attend the institution will be compelled to take at least one year's physical training.

On commencement day President Pritchard was privileged to announce the gift of a new Science building to be built at a total cost of $50,000. This building is to be erected as soon as plans can be drawn and contract let. The plans are now well under way and it is proposed that the ground for this new building be broken with the opening of College on September 19. The building will be completed before the school year is ended. The basement will be devoted to Manual Training and College Physics. The first floor to College Chemistry, the second floor to Biology and the third floor to Domestic Science. The completion of this building will give to Eureka College a thoroughly up-to-date scientific equipment for all branches of college science.

The donors are F. B. Vennum and wife of Champaign. Mr. Vennum is a pillar in the University Church of that city and has given largely of his means to the up-building of the cause at the University centers. He is a friend of Eureka College and has been a trustee of the institution for the last three or four years. No man has ever made a larger gift to Eureka College than this one. Coming as it does at this time its influence will be immeasurable.

The building of the Gymnasium and the Science building has made it possible to remodel the middle building, which is known as "Old Middle," and convert it into a Library and Administration building. A large gift from the class of 1900 has made this remodeling a reality and work on the building is now well under way. It will be completed and the library will be housed in its new quarters by the beginning of College in September. The Girls' Dormitory is also being completely overhauled this summer.

When the above program is completed Eureka College will have a thoroughly up-to-date physical equipment second to no school among us.

The increase in the student body is equally encouraging. Last year there was more than 30 per cent increase in the total number of students and every indication for the coming year is that the increase of last year will be equalled and probably surpassed. Mr. L. O. Lehman, the Field Secretary, is touring Illinois during the summer months with a Quintet representing the student body of Eureka rendering programs each night of the week and twice on Sunday, in the different cities of the state. More than sixty centers will be touched this way and the program is such as to arouse enthusiasm and cultivate good will everywhere the company goes.

There is every indication that a new day has dawned at Eureka College. It seems that the time has arrived when this institution which has contributed so much to the advancement of the cause of the Disciples of Christ shall come into its own. The problem of current expenses is the only one which has not yet been fully solved but plans are under way for the solution of this problem. Let us hope that it may speedily come to pass.

Eureka, Ill.

DRAKE SUMMER SCHOOL.

That a large summer school can be built up from students taking collegiate work has been proved by the experience of Drake University in the last two or three summers. This season Drake enrolled almost five hundred students, the largest enrollment of the summer quarters since 1901. Of this five hundred more than one hundred were graduates of some department of the University and so many of the others were taking college work that classes were crowded to the limit. In 1915 sixty per cent of the total enrollment of the summer quarter was of collegiate students. The percentages for the year have not been made out but it is the belief of the people in charge of the summer school that the figures for 1915 will be bettered this year..

So intense has become the interest in summer study that it has been found practical to offer some studies in almost every department of the University, the law college and the Conservatory of Music remaining open this year for the larger part of the summer session to take care of the people desiring work. The largest number of students entered the departments where the work of Liberal Arts and Education are combined, and in some of these classes the management had difficulty in taking care of all who wished work.

THE COLLEGE OF MISSIONS.

Charles T. Paul, President.

The College of Missions was one of the first institutions of the Christian world, if not the very first, to announce a complete curriculum in direct response to, and in conformity with, the recommendations of the Edinburgh conference. Its courses were drawn up with the advance sheets of that report in hand.

Occupying, in common with a small number of similar centers, a comparatively new field, namely, that of the special education of missionaries, the College of Missions is not in competition with regular academic institutions. It is neither a general college, nor a university, nor a theological seminary, but a graduate institution devoting itself exclusively to the advanced preparation of both men and women for missionary service in home and foreign fields. The courses designed to prepare for home service have been formulated on the recommendations of Home Mission Boards and on the reports of interdenominational surveys of America, with special reference to regions and peoples not adequately reached by existing Christian agencies. The aim is to train workers especially (1) for Christian social service in American cities; (2) for work among foreigners in America; and (3) for constructive leadership in rural communities. As regards foreign countries the college provides preparation for all the principal mission fields. Experience has led to the development of special facilities relating to India, China, Japan and Latin America.

The development and progress of the College during the first five years of its history have been most encouraging, and may be briefly indicated as follows:

1. A faculty of specialists has been secured and organized, each instructor giving full time to a group of related subjects.

2. A curriculum of seventy-five courses has been provided, including some offered by a neighboring institution, Butler College, and made available, when necessary, for College of Missions students. The courses are arranged in eight main groups, as follows: (1) Missionary Science and History; (2) Biblical Literature, History and Interpretation; (3) The World's Religions; (4) Philosophy and Education; (5) Social Science and Home Missions; (6) Medicine and Hygiene; (7) Languages of Mission Fields, and (8) Economics and Political Science. Besides these a number of subsidiary courses by special lecturers are given each year.

3. Recognition and approval, interdenominational and international, from universities and missionary societies has been won, of the college's high entrance requirements and the solidity of its work.

4. A valuable library has been built up of the most authoritative and recent books and magazines relating to all phases of missionary science and practice.

5. An annual College of Missions Lectureship has been established with the object of securing each year some original and timely contribution to missionary science or history, to be presented in a course of special addresses and published. Four such series have already been issued from the press.

6. A number of scholarships have been established making possible the attendance of deserving students, who otherwise could not proceed with their preparation.

7. An increasing enrollment has been the best evidence that the college is meeting a real need. Since 1910 there have been in attendance 112 regular students; i. e., those definitely preparing for, or already engaged in, missionary service in connection with a mission board—in other words, all college graduates, missionaries on furlough, or virtual appointees. Besides this number, 260 occasional students have been admitted to elective courses. The regular students came from fifty-nine different institutions of learning and represented seven religious communions. Of missionaries on furlough the enrollment has included twenty-eight, representing India, Japan, Arabia, Belgian Congo, Mexico, Porto Rico and Turkey.

8. Of those who have completed required courses at the college fifty have received foreign appointments as follows: Twenty to India, six to China, eight to Africa, six to the Argentine Republic, three to Tibet, one to Porto Rico, three to the Philippines, one to Japan, one to Mexico and one to Cuba. One was assigned to Chinese work on the Pacific Coast of America, and two have been appointed to mountain schools in Kentucky and Tennessee.

The College of Missions already has its graduates in all the continents. All of the missionary societies of the Disciples of Christ, and some of other communions, are looking to it for workers

Indianapolis, Ind.

PHILLIPS UNIVERSITY.

I. N. McCash, President.

Phillips University is among the youngest of the schools belonging to the church of Christ. But it is by rapid growth and its unflagging energy making up for the years before its birth. In nine years the university has secured $125,000 in permanent endowment, $150,000 in temporary endowment, and $140,000 in buildings, grounds and equipment.

In 1907 the corner-stone of the first building was laid at Enid, Okla. Now, in 1916, five splendid buildings adorn the campus, beautiful with trees and flowers. The buildings are the Administration Building, Library, Fine Arts, Gymnasium and Girls' Hall. A men's dormitory is planned for the immediate future.

Last year between four and five hundred students were in attendance. We confidently look for six hundred or more the coming year.

The broad, general aim of this school is to offer liberal courses of instruction in a healthy Christian atmosphere. The members of the Board and of the Faculty are not limited to any one religious body, by charter or by-laws. It is the aim of the promoters of the school to avoid the narrowing tendencies of sectarian bias in the general policy of the school and to exemplify the cosmopolitan spirit of the Master in the character of the conduct of the school, so far as it is possible to fallible human beings.

The Bible College has a fine body of young men studying for the ministry, who, at this time, supply more than fifty churches in Kansas and Oklahoma.

Phillips University has called to its presidency I. N. McCash, of Spokane, Wash. Dr. McCash has very few equals as an educator, orator and administrator. He is a man of travel, broad education and strong personality. His coming to Phillips University, with the splendid foundation already laid, marks a new epoch in its history. Dr. McCash began his work August 1.

HIRAM COLLEGE.

Miner Lee Bates, President.

The most outstanding fact of the year at Hiram was the adoption of a five-year program to double the enrollment, equipment and endowment of the college by 1920. A two years' study had shown that a college enrolling from four hundred to five hundred students of college rank is the unit in which the highest educational efficiency may be attained at the lowest per-capita cost. We resolved to reach this efficiency-economy point by doubling the enrollment of 1915.

The first and most striking result was the increase of the Freshman class from 82 to 113, and the total attendance from 232 to 278—a gain of 20 per cent. We are already certain of a greater gain in 1916-17.

Attracted by our constructive policy, three men of notable strength have this year accepted chairs in our faculty. Prof. John S. Kenyon, B.A., Hiram, and Ph.D., Harvard, for ten years past head of the department of English in Butler College, becomes our senior professor of English.

Prof. Lee E. Cannon, B.A., Eureka, and M.A., Harvard, for one year a student in Germany, becomes professor of German. For eight years past he has been head of the department of modern languages at Eureka College. As ranking professor he will have general supervision of all courses in modern languages.

Prof. Thomas B. Ford, B.A., Missouri, and M.A., Harvard, for the past five years dean of Lincoln Memorial University, comes to the headship of the department of education. He comes to his work with wide experience as teacher and supervisor, both in the secondary school and in the college.

The graduating class was smaller than usual —twenty-eight—but one member, Mr. Harry C. Munro, is already at work as our first missionary to Alaska. Another enters Oxford in October as Rhodes scholar from Ohio, to spend three years in preparation for service in China.

WILLIAM WOODS COLLEGE.

The growth of William Woods College, located at Fulton, Mo., in every way is marvelous. "A building each year" is the promise of Dr. and Mrs. Woods. Last year, in reality, two were erected—the president's residence and the gymnasium. This year a new, modern sanitary kitchen and a complete water-works system are being erected, and plans are being made for the new academic building.

But the growth in buildings is only a part of the story, for even more wonderful has been the transformation that has gone on within the school. The curriculum has been completely changed and greatly enlarged, while the faculty has been put on a university basis. The academic work of this school compares favorably with any to be found in a junior college anywhere.

The student body of William Woods shows the same growth. Students are coming from every State of the central West, and represent some of the best homes of our people. In fact, no institution among the churches of Christ is more proud of its students of this and other years than this school.

William Woods is a Christian school; every girl who goes through either its preparatory department or collegiate course must take a thorough course in the English Bible. Emphasis is laid upon church attendance, and other religious activities.

The academic year which just closed was most successful in every way. Commencement season, with its celebration of the golden wedding of Dr. and Mrs. Woods, was a season of great joy. And when school closed there were more reservations for next year than at any similar date for many, many years. Unless all signs fail, we shall not be able to care for all the girls who hope to attend this school next year.

Fulton, Mo. Jos. A. Serena, Pres.

TRANSYLVANIA AND COLLEGE OF THE BIBLE.

R. S. Crossfield, President.

The session which closed in June was marked by advances in every direction, and Transylvania and the College of the Bible are enthusiastically preparing for the realization of still higher aims during the coming session.

There were 488 enrolled in Transylvania, Hamilton College (the junior college for women) and the College of the Bible during the past session. Fifty-six per cent of these came from Kentucky, and 44 per cent from forty states and six foreign countries. The attendance in Transylvania was 258; in the College of the Bible, 155, and in Hamilton, 165. This represents an increase of 10 per cent over the enrollment of the session which closed one year ago.

On account of the increased attendance in Transylvania, two new professors will be added to the faculty for the coming session. G. A. Reichling, of Brooklyn, M.A. and Ph.D. of Columbia University, comes to the department of German, and an additional man will be added to the science department, giving practically all of his time to the courses in physics. In order further to strengthen the teaching force, several fellowships have been established.

Transylvania has inaugurated the slogan, "Five hundred college students won by 1921," and, in order to realize this goal, Homer W. Carpenter, for seven years minister of the Shelbyville (Ky.) Christian church, has been appointed chancellor. His duties will be mainly in connection with enlarging the student body, and he will work especially with the high schools and the churches of Kentucky in his effort to realize the above aim.

Perhaps the most unique feature connected with the student life was the number making all, or part, of their expenses during the session. More than one hundred pulpits in Kentucky were supplied by the ministerial and missionary students, and a large number of non-ministerial students made their way by working in Ewing Hall or in the city during the afternoon and early morning hours.

The following professors are pursuing special courses of study in Chicago University during the summer: C. C. Freeman, A. F. Hemenway, R. L. Records, E. W. Delcamp and the librarian, Mrs. Charles F. Norton. Prof. Irene T. Myers and Prof. A. E. Monroe are attending the University of Michigan, and Prof. W. C. Bower, of the Department of Education, is in Columbia University.

HAMILTON COLLEGE.

E. W. McDiarmid.

For forty-seven years Hamilton College has had an uninterrupted record of faithful adherence to the ideals of its founders and has enjoyed a continuous period of popular favor and patronage. In 1869 a group of leading spirits among the Disciples of Christ organized at Lexington the educational institution which for nine years bore the name of Hocker College, and which, since 1878, has been called Hamilton, in honor of William Hamilton, of Woodford County, Ky., who, in that year made an important contribution to the college.

For many years Hamilton following the lead of older colleges for young women, offered the typical, general course of the Southern college. This course was, in reality, a combination of the modern high-school curriculum and of the baccalaureate course in a college proper. Hamilton was among the very first of Southern colleges to reject this general course, adopting, in its stead, the standardized college preparatory course of four years, and adding two years of distinctively college work, conforming, in every particular, to the standards for the parallel courses in its sister institution, Transylvania College.

The present policy of the college is (1) to keep at its present high level the college preparatory course, now approved and credited by Smith, Vassar, Mt. Holyoke and other colleges; (2) to conform, in every particular, to the constantly growing requirements for the junior college in library facilities, faculty preparation and scholarship, classroom methods and hours, college life and spirit; (3) to offer subsidiary courses in the Fine Arts, Music, Art, Expression and Domestic Science, and (4) to provide a pleasant college home for those ambitious young women of Kentucky, the South and elsewhere, who have a right to find at Hamilton, when they come to her halls, full opportunities for gracious self-realization.

Hamilton is bringing to a close her forty-seventh session, and is preparing for the opening of a new and better year in September, 1916.

Lexington, Ky.

BUTLER COLLEGE.

Thomas C. Howe, President.

The sixty-first year of Butler College has just closed, and with it the most successful session in the history of the institution. The first semester began with a very substantial increase in the enrollment over that of previous years, and this was maintained throughout the college year. The increase in attendance has been steady and gratifying for a number of years past, during which time the admission standard has been constantly raised. The total enrollment for the year, including all departments, was 622. The school spirit has been excellent, and the work done marked by a greater earnestness than ever before.

On the Monday following the commencement, the summer school began with an increased attendance over last year. In addition, the State Library Commission is conducting its library school for six weeks at Butler College. Some thirty-three students are in attendance in this school. For next year, the prospects of the college are better than they have ever been before. More and more, young men and young women are feeling the need of college training. More and more, the State of Indiana is appropriating large funds for the development of well-equipped graduates coming from the high schools.

The campaign of the Men and Millions Movement in Indianapolis and central Indiana last spring has resulted in untold good for our educational interests in Indiana. This movement, by laying great stress upon the importance of our educational institutions, is rendering a wonderful service to all our colleges. It means that more of our young men and young women are urged to enter our own colleges and equip themselves by means of a full course for the Christian leadership in the various communities where they will settle after they have finished their college days. The coming of Mr. Cory and Mr. Miller, together with the consecrated members of their team, to Indianapolis, was a very great blessing, not only to Indianapolis, but to the whole of central Indiana, and Butler College is already feeling the effect of their efforts.

Indianapolis, Ind.

CHRISTIAN UNIVERSITY.
Earle Marion Todd, President.

During the last two years much progress has been made towards higher educational standards. The educational forces of the school have been completely reorganized, and this year the Christian churches of Missouri can, for the first time, boast of an institution of learning of standard college rank.

A year ago, spurred on by a necessity that brooked no delay, the trustees resolved to organize the school, equip its laboratories and create a library, and put it in a position to command recognition by virtue of the quality of its work.

This reorganization has proceeded apace. During the last two years, the personnel of the faculty has been almost completely changed, ony three members of the original staff being members of the present faculty. The professors are all now men of modern and adequate training, holding higher degrees from leading universities. They form a group that would do honor to any Christian college.

The most important advance has been made in the department of physical science, where five instructors now do work formerly done by one. Important structural alterations have been made so as to accommodate these departments, and several thousands of dollars have been spent in equipping the various laboratories, which are now complete and up to date in all their furnishings, and adequate for all courses offered in biology, chemistry and physics.

The College of the Bible, always one of the strongest departments in the school, and greatly strengthened by the coming of H. B. Robison to the deanship a few years ago, and, later, by the coming of Prof. H. M. Garn to the chair of Old Testament and Religious Pedagogy, underwent a change of name in order to indicate more accurately its scope, and is now the "School of Religion." This department has been rendered far more efficient by the new library facilities now afforded. It is also gratifying to note the increasing number of graduate students in the School of Religion.

The outlook for a large attendance next year is very bright.

Canton, Mo.

EUGENE BIBLE UNIVERSITY.
E. C. Sanderson, President.

Eugene Bible University has just closed its twenty-first year of work. One hundred and five students were enrolled in the Bible College, which shows an increase over preceding years. The character of the work done in the various classes throughout the school reflected the earnest purpose which is common to the consecrated ministerial student.

An important event in the past year was the celebration of the twentieth anniversary of the founding of the school, which was held on November 15 last.

The past year has been one of special activity on the part of the administrative forces. The endowment campaign, which was inaugurated two years ago, has been a great blessing to the school in many ways. It closed May 31. The Eugene Bible University and its work were brought close to the heart of many faithful disciples who formerly were not aware of its blessed and far-reaching influence. It is now making an appeal to the young men and women of the Pacific Coast, such as was impossible before. As a consequence, we have reason to expect for the coming year a greatly increased attendance in the various departments of our school work.

Eugene, Ore.

MISSOURI CHRISTIAN COLLEGE.
R. L Thorp, President.

Missouri Christian College, of Camden Point, Mo., finished its sixty-seventh year June 1. High-class recitals were given by pupils in music and expression. The baccalaureate sermon was given by Pres. R. L. Thorp. A splendid commencement address on "Ideal Womanhood" was delivered by F. D. Kershner, of St. Louis. An interesting feature of commencement week was the meeting of the alumnae. This school has over five hundred alumnae. Some were present from points as far distant as New York and Los Angeles. The alumnae voted to support an annual scholarship for some worthy, dependent girl.

The school has seen some changes during the year. On January 1, F. J. Yokley resigned the presidency to look after the field work. R. L. Thorp, who has done his college work and two years' graduate work in religious education in Drake University, was called to the presidency. The school has launched its junior college course and the Board has voted to carry out the recommendations of the university committee in order to make the college work first-class in every particular.

All literary teachers for next year have had at least one year's graduate work.

Camden Point, Mo.

CHRISTIAN COLLEGE.
Mrs. Luella Wilcox St. Clair Moss. President.

During the year the college enrolled 242 students from seventeen states. The largest increase was in the department of home economics, due largely to the enlargement and improvements made possible by the gift of a friend in Kansas City. Six students received three years' teaching certificates from the State Department of Education.

Next year, Christian College will have students at the Universities of Missouri, Illinois, Iowa, Kansas, Oklahoma, Colorado, New Mexico, Chicago, at Vassar and at Smith Colleges.

Columbia, Mo.

THE BIBLE COLLEGE OF MISSOURI.
G. D. Edwards, Dean.

The Bible College closed in June the most successful year of its history with an enrollment of 239 students. All save fourteen of these were of collegiate grade. Forty-six were graduates of some college. Fourteen were university graduates.

Twenty-three students were preparing for the ministry, seven for the mission field, eight for special forms of social service, and five for other definite lines of religious work. Seventy-seven will be teachers; sixteen, journalists; eight, lawyers; twelve, physicians; ten, business men. The remaining eighty are divided among nine other callings.

Ten religious bodies were represented in the student enrollment. Two foreign countries and sixteen states were represented.

During the past year the University of Missouri has approved another course for credit towards the A.B. degree. Eight courses are now approved towards that degree, and a further course for the degree of B.S. in Education.

The Bible College is this summer, for the first time, offering courses in connection with the university summer session. The older religious schools of the State were invited to join in this. It is hoped, in the course of time, that the summer session will be an interdenominational affair.

The principle of the Sabbatic year for Bible College teachers was endorsed at the last meeting of the Board of Trustees. The extension of its privileges will be accorded, subject to financial conditions, and to the provision that the work of the institution shall not suffer.

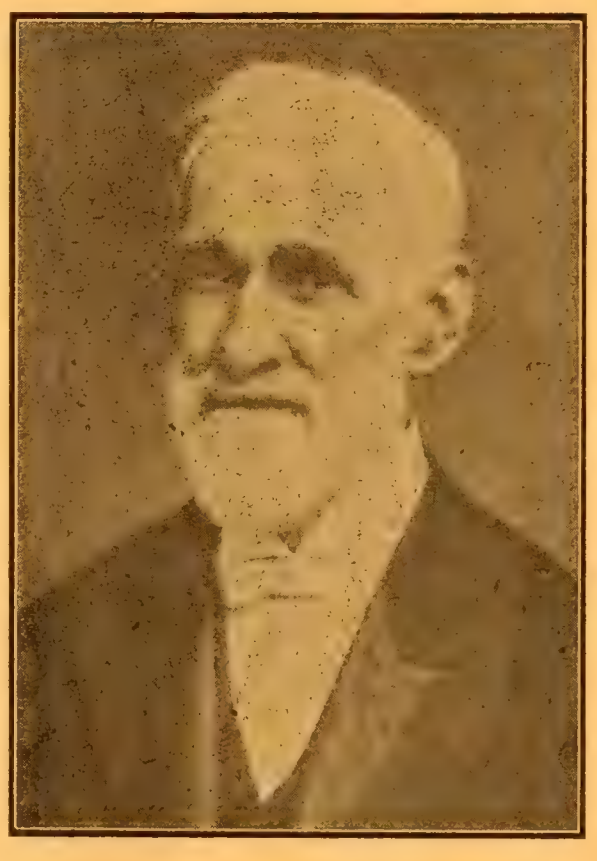
Disciples Table Talk

Ten Lectures by Ten Hoosier Ministers at Bethany Park, Ind.

Between the dates Aug. 8 and Aug. 18 are being given each day at Bethany Assembly lectures by Disciple ministers of Indiana. The following are the dates, the speakers and topics discussed: Aug. 8—"The Legend of the Hunchback," Frank E. Jaynes, Wabash. Aug. 9—"The Culture of the Church," F. E. Smith, Muncie. Aug. 10—"Modern Heresy and Heretics," E. R. Edwards, Logansport. Aug. 11—"The Research Magnificent," E. W. Cole, Huntington. Aug. 12—"The Vacant Niche," C. M. Yocum, Rushville. Aug. 14.—"The Church and the Present Crisis," A. L. Ward, Lebanon, Aug. 15.—"How Big Is Your Bible?" D. H. Shields, Kokomo. Aug. 16—"New Wine in New Bottles," B. F. Dailey, Indianapolis. Aug. 17—"Self-made Men," Prof. C. E. Underwood, Butler College. Aug. 18—"The Primacy of the Ministry," W. R. Warren, Indianapolis.

Arthur Stout in Victories at Bowling Green, Mo.



Nelson Trimble, of Columbia, Mo., reports a recent visit to Bowling Green, Mo., where Arthur Stout ministers. Mr. Trimble found the new $20,000 edifice rapidly approaching completion. It is to be dedicated in late October by C. H. Winders, of Indianapolis. Mr. Winders preached at Bowling Green early in his ministry; a brief meeting will follow the dedication services. Mr. Trimble writes that Mr. Stout, by his rare personal charm, has endeared himself to his own congregation and to the entire community. Over a hundred persons have been added to the congregation during his ministry. The influence of the Bowling Green pastor is seen in the fact that he served for some time as secretary of the local Commercial club. The young men of the community backed Mr. Stout in his efforts to organize an inter-church baseball league which met during the week and solved the Sunday baseball problem. Under his leadership a victory has been recently won for better schools. Speaker Champ Clark is an elder in the Bowling Green congregation, and contributes liberally to the work of the church. He occasionally preaches from the pulpit.

Disciples at Mt. Hermon Federate School of Missions.

The 1916 program of the Mount Hermon Federate School of Missions, held at Mount Hermon, in the Santa Cruz mountains, California, showed a number of Disciples in places of leadership. The chairman, Mrs. N. E. Galloway, of Healdsburg, is secretary and field worker for California North for the C. W. B. M. Another representative of the Disciples fellowship was Mrs. Chas. Titus, of Sacramento, president of the North California C. W. B. M. Mrs. Titus led the morning Bible hour on Friday and Saturday of the School of Missions, giving talks on Abraham and Jacob. Mrs. Ella M. Humbert, teacher of the history of missions in the Bible University of Oregon, gave messages during the morning Bible hour on three days. Mrs. Humbert is an ordained minister. H. O. Breeden, pastor of the Fresno church, gave an address on "The Inspiration of the Scriptures," his address being followed by stereopticon pictures of the life of Christ. A feature of the week's program was the presentation each evening of pictures of various kinds. On one evening, for instance, George Brewster gave a reading of Van Dyke's "The Other Wise Man," accompanied by beautiful pictures. Another evening Miss Katherine Maurer, Methodist deaconess at the Immigration station at Angel Island in San Francisco Bay, told of her experiences there, showing pictures of Hindus, Japanese "picture brides," etc. Great crowds came to hear Mrs. Hallie Hill, of New York City, who gave daily text book lessons on "Old Spain in New America" and "World Missions and World Peace." Mrs. F. M. Jones, of First church, Oakland, graced the program with her beautiful solos, writes Mary E. Bamford, reporter of the school.

Woman Lecturers at Bethany Assembly, Indiana.

The women have a prominent place at Bethany Park, Ind., this year. Ten lectures are scheduled for this week and next, all by women. These lectures are given at 10:30 each day, except on August 13, which is Education day. The following is the schedule of lectures for the dates August 8-18: Aug. 8—"The Twentieth Century Woman," Mrs. Judge S. R. Artman, Indianapolis. Aug. 9—"Modern Literature and Modern Women," Mrs. Demarchus Brown, Irvington. Aug. 10—"The Woman Who Spends," Miss Lella Gaddis, Purdue University. Aug. 11—"Food and Health," Miss Lella Gaddis, Purdue University. Aug. 12—"Girls," Mrs. Felix T. McWhirter, Indianapolis. Aug. 14—"Ye New Woman of Ye Olden Times," Mrs. Effie L. Cunningham, College of Missions. Aug. 15—"Woman and Democracy," Mrs. Dr. Amelia R. Keller, Indianapolis. Aug. 16—"General Federation of Women's Clubs," Mrs. Grace Julian Clarke, Irvington. Aug. 17—"The Dominant Minority: A Resume of Social Conditions," Mrs. J. McDaniel Stearns, College of Missions. Aug. 18—"Women and the Church," Mrs. O. H. Griest, Carlisle.

The late L. L. Carpenter, who was for a score of years the leading spirit of Bethany Assembly, in Indiana, which is now in session.

—Toronto Disciples lost three ministers recently: W. H. Sperry, of Keele Street; T. A. Manly of St. Clarens Avenue, and A. L. Cole, of Cecil Street. A. L. Cole writes that the Disciple churches of Toronto have a combined membership of but 600. This total has been sadly cut into by the outgoing of about 65 men, to the army. Cecil Street church is in a downtown district which is inhabited largely by Jews of the lower class. Encumbered by a heavy indebtedness on the property, it seems impossible for the congregation to carry the load. The difficulties in the Toronto churches are illustrated by the fact that in 25 years' history of Cecil Street, the average pastorate has covered sixteen months. Mr. Cole will seek a field in the United States, and is open to invitation.

—The record of J. H. Coil, retiring pastor at New Philadelphia, O., is a good one. During the two years of his service he cleared an indebtedness upon the church, which had been a handicap to the work for years. Mr. Coil takes up new work in Missouri.

—Some of the Sunday-schools of Tacoma, Wash., are contesting. First Christian school, to which W. A. Moore ministers, was at last report in the lead.

—Some of the leaders of the Doctrinal Congress at Canton, O., which has just closed, were the following: H. H. Webb, of Covington, Ky., was the dean of the Bible-school department; W. H. Wagner, of Kansas City, Mo., dean of the department of missions and benevolences; T. L. Lowe, of Columbus, O., dean of the church efficiency department and H. N. Miller, of Bethany, W. Va., was at the head of the educational department. The sessions were presided over by George A. Miller, of Washington, D. C. One of the feature events of the gathering was a communion service which was held Sunday afternoon in the auditorium. Earl Wilfley, of Washington, D. C., pastor of Vermont Ave., church, made the address Special musical numbers were arranged for each meeting. The music was in charge of Leroy P. St. John, of Spokane, Wash.

—C. C. Rowlison, former pastor at Iowa City, Ia., but now Congregational pastor at LaCrosse, Wis., recently paid a visit to his old Iowa field and occupied the pulpit there.

—The building of the Rochester, Ill., church, a landmark of Sangamon county for forty years, was recently struck by lightning and destroyed by a resulting fire. The loss is estimated at $5,000.

Session begins Sept. 11, 1916.

Write for catalog and literature.

The President, Lexington, Kentucky

Shelbyville, gives out the information that preparations are being made for a banner convention.

—Fifteen Kentucky schools are reported to have reached the 100 per cent mark in the Standard of Efficiency set by the leaders, and others were expected to be added within a short time. The following are the first record schools: Antioch (Fayette), Buckner, Corinth (Montgomery), Corinth (Scott), Hartford, Jacktown, Lebanon Junction, Lexington Maxwell, Louisville Broadway, Louisville Crescent Hill, Mt. Sterling, Murray, Sadieville, Stanford and Whitesville.

—Miss Josepha Franklin, for many years missionary in Damoh, Central Provinces, India, as a living link of the Disciple churches in Johnson county, Ind., is spending the last weeks of her furlough in this county, with quarters at Franklin. While in Franklin she is speaking in many churches of the county telling of her work. Miss Franklin has two sisters who are also missionaries in India.

—On the Sunday after the death of James Whitcomb Riley, the Indianapolis ministers were profuse in their praise of the great man. Clay Trusty, of Seventh church, is reported as speaking of him in the following words: "He is to be remembered for his appreciation of only the best things in life, and his power to portray the really significant feelings that come into the minds of all people. His contributions to literature will be of great value in the future, for his ability to portray human nature, especially the characteristics of children, will ever be known. His love for children will forever be a mark of great distinction. The loss of such a man is a great one, and will be keenly felt by all." It is reported that Mr. Riley's favorite hymn, "There's a Wideness in God's Mercy," was sung in many of the pulpits of the city on this Sunday.

—George E. Roberts, of the Trenton, Mo., church, makes it a custom to preach almost every Sunday for some weak church within reach of Trenton. He recently spoke at Farmersville.

—During the four years of work of L. H. Otto at Bethany, Mo., nearly 500 persons have been received into the church membership, $2,500 has been raised on a parsonage debt, and $5,000 has been expended in improvements on the church building. Mr. Otto will close his work at Bethany about Sept. 1.

—W. R. Warren, the Ministerial Relief promoter, occupied the pulpit of Third church, Indianapolis, recently in the absence of the pastor, T. W. Grafton. His theme was "The Church's Chief Asset."

—There is talk of a national assembly of the Disciple churches, with an assembly hall and a hundred cottages at Traverse City, Mich. This report comes from the Grand Rapids, (Mich.) News.

—Verle W. Blair, pastor at Eureka, Ill., preached the sermon on the occasion of the laying of the corner stone of the new building of Howett street church, Peoria, Ill. The date of the event was July 30.

—W. T. Moore, son of A. R. Moore, pastor at Savannah, Ga, is serving as chaplain of the field artillery at Camp Harris, near Macon, Ga. Mr. Moore spent last year in Transylvania college, and upon returning for his vacation received his vacation. He was at one time a student at Atlantic Christian college, Wilson, N. C. The young chaplain preached one Sunday in July at First church, Macon.

—Jos. A. Serena, of William Woods College, preached for the Mexico, Mo., congregation last Sunday. This congregation, though without a pastor, keeps a high standard in church activity through the summer. They expect soon to call a regular minister.

Des Moines Preparing for Convention

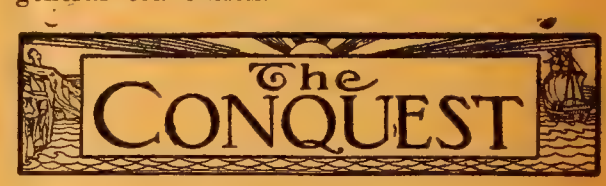
The Des Moines churches are making extensive preparations to entertain several thousand of their fellow churchmen when the international convention of the Disciples meets in this city October 9 to 15. The tentative program has been formulated and at a recent meeting of the executive committee, the Coliseum was looked over with a view to locating the exhibits of the various societies of the church.

The preliminary draft of the program follows:

Monday evening, October 9—Opening services under direction of general convention.

Tuesday, October 10—All day program: Christian Woman's Board of Missions.

Wednesday, October 11—All day program: Foreign Christian Missionary society.



Thursday, October 12—All day program: American Christian Missionary Society and Church Extension, with National Benevolent association address at evening session.

Friday, October 13—Forenoon: Bible-school session with forty-five minute address on "Ministerial Relief."

Every member canvass under direction of Men and Millions Movement.

Saturday, October 14, begin at 9:00 instead of 9:30 a. m. Forenoon: General convention, one hour and a half. National Benevolent association, 30 minutes. Temperance board, one hour. Afternoon: Board of education. Evening: Joint session of Christian Endeavor and Bible-school.

Sunday, October 15, at the Coliseum. Forenoon: Bible-school at 9:30 under direction of American Christian Missionary society. Convention sermon. Afternoon: Communion service. Evening: Christian Endeavor at the Christian Endeavor hour. Commission on Christian Union 7:30-9:00. Fraternal closing service under direction of general convention.

This winter scene on the north campus of William Woods College at Fulton, Mo., gives an excellent idea of the fine equipment in buildings of this great girls' schol. The building on the extreme right is the new McBride gymnasium, probably the finest woman's gymnasium in the central west. It contains every facility for physical education—a fine floor for apparatus and class work and special rooms for individual instruction and corrective gymnastics. The natatorium is to every student a thing of beauty and a joy forever. Since William Woods has had its course thoroughly approved and standardized by the University of Missouri it has grown in every way. Students upon graduation are entering Missouri and other first grade universities. The other departments, Music, Art, Domestic Science and Expression, are growing each year. The prospects for the coming year, which opens September 13, are brighter than they have been for years.

—Chas. M. Fillmore, leader at Hillside church, Indianapolis, writes commending the work of Miss Letonia McDowell, of Bunker Hill, Ind., as singing evangelist or pastor's assistant. He states that he has known her from her infancy. Her father was a useful Disciple minister. She has real talent both in solo work and in directing chorus and congregational singing. At one time she served as music supervisor in one of the best consolidated schools in Indiana, and taught in high school.

—H. W. Hunter, of Wellington, Kan., who is spending his vacation in Higginsville, Mo., has planned a month's meeting with the mission church in Wellington. The date will be October 15 to November 15.

President Earle M. Todd, of Christian University, Canton, Mo.

—O. J. Cohee was installed as pastor at Indiana Avenue church, South Bend, Ind., by the First church pastor, John M. Alexander. He delivered the charge both to the congregation and to the new pastor. Mr. Cohee received his bachelor's degree several years ago at Wabash College, Ind., and then did three years of work at Union Theological Seminary, in New York City. He has served for some time as missionary in Mexico, but came to South Bend from Second church, Columbus, Ind.

—A. D. Harmon, the new dean of Cotner University, Bethany, Neb., and head of the department of sociology, comes as no stranger to Cotner and her work. He graduated from this school in 1893 and was later one of the teachers. He was pastor for two years at Hiawatha, Kas.; 15 years at St. Paul, Minn., and later at Omaha, Neb. For the past two years Mr. Harmon has been on the lecture and chautauqua platform.

WHAT THEY SAY.
of The Christian Century.

"You are givig your readers a most excellent paper. I am partial to the 'Century.'"—Scott Anderson, South Park Church, Los Angeles, Cal.

"Your paper is holding up to the usual high standard."—Allen T. Shaw, Mt. Sterling, Ill.

"I certainly enjoy every issue of the 'Century.'"—E. N. Hayden, Canton, Mo.

"I don't know what I would do without the 'Century,' with its uplifting editorials and contributed articles."—E. B. Lyman Oakland, Cal.

"You are to be congratulated on giving us so fine and readable a journal. It is stimulating and worth reading entire."—Wm. B. Clemmer, Central church, Rockford, Ill.

Christian University
Canton, Missouri

Christian University appeals for the generous support of the churches of Missouri on account of—

1. The strategic importance of the small Christian college, as the institution from which the church recruits her leaders;
2. The importance of Christian University to the churches of Missouri, as being the only Standard College of the Christian Church in the State;
3. The recent progress made by the institution, enabling it to obtain full recognition as a Standard College;
4. The probability that the school will soon become one of the strongest, if not the strongest church college in the State.

No other investment is open to the churches of Missouri offering such large returns as an investment in Christian University; it will repay the churches a thousand-fold in trained and consecrated leadership.

An Ideal Course
for your Adult or Young People's Class
The Life of Jesus

It is always in order for Sunday School classes to study the life of Jesus. Young people's and adult classes want the very best text that can be found. This is simply to remind them that there has never been offered to the Sunday School world a Life of Christ so practicable, so usable, sotrue to the best scholarship, so bristling with questions that wake up the pupils, so well proportioned, as Dr. Loa E. Scott's "LIFE OF JESUS" in Fifty two Lessons. This book is being widely used in Sunday Schools both of the Disciples and other religious bodies, and in Y. M. C. A. classes. This testifies to its popularity. You must have it in your school. It will create a new interest in Bible study among your young people and younger adults. Price of the book, 50c. In quantities of 10 or more, 40c each.

—W. C. Ferguson, pastor at Kingsville, Tex., has been preaching a series of sermons on war. Here are his topics: "War and Peace Ideals of the Old Testament," "Jesus and War," "Are Jesus' Ideals Impossible Attainments?" "False Ideals of Nationalism," "What Makes a Nation Great?" "What Should be a Christian's Attitude Toward War?"

—W. T. Fisher, a member of the faculty of the Phillips Bible Institute, of Canton, O., recently visited the church at Newark, O., with view to considering the pastorate there. Mr. Fisher was at one time Iowa's state Bible-school leader.

—Indianapolis will have another Disciples' church, which will be a result of the holding of tent meetings for some time at the East End. B. L. Allen will preach for the new organization, which will be called the Eastern Heights Christian church.

—More than a hundred men of the churches at Moline and Rock Island, Ill., and Davenport, Ia., met a few days ago to discuss the advisability of effecting a tri-city organization of the men of these churches.

—O. D. Thomas, pastor at Havelock, Neb,, is an inventor as well as preacher. He has invented a machine for making a new anesthetic which eliminates the gas tank and the use of oxygen in restoring patients to consciousness. This anesthetic is made from ordinary air. Mr. Thomas is an expert chemist.

—E. E. Violett paid a visit to the church at Paris, Ky., and after a brief talk cleared a debt of $5,000. Mr. Violett also gave his lecture on the Passion Play at Oberammergau while in Paris.

—A mortgage has been burned by the Frankfort, Ind., congregation and the church is reported free from debt.

—Z. T. Sweeney, of Columbus, Ind., in an address on Preparedness at the Tabernacle Sunday-school there, said, "The history of the world shows that its prizes have gone to those nations which were prepared for conflict," and advocated thorough preparedness for the United States as the part of wisdom.

—Graham Frank, Liberty, Mo., pastor, has not been well for several weeks, and his congregation has given him a leave of absence for the rest of the summer that he may entirely regain his health. Mr. Frank does not think he needs to leave home to recuperate, but says he will heed the physician's advice.

—V. H. Miller, the new leader at Kendallville, Ind., is planning with his congregation, to lend aid to near-by helpless churches.

—The church at Oakland, Cal., has a men's club that is a success. It meets each Sunday morning at 9:45 as the "Everyman's Bible Club," and on the third Tuesday of each month assembles for club dinner. At the last dinner held the following were among the speakers: Roy O. Youtz, assistant pastor of the church at Fresno; Victor Hovis, of the Chinese Christian mission; Lew Ben, of the Chinese mission, and E. J. Bradner, a local pastor of the Methodist fellowship. Dr. J. F. Moore, of the Oakland congregation, also gave a talk. Will Brown, of Loyal Movement fame, presided over the meeting.

—C. L. Johnson, pastor at Paulding, O., is doing missionary work on the side. He has just closed a meeting at Broughton, a near-by town where was recently organized a Disciples' church He reports sixteen additions as a result of the meetings, —The church at Greensburg, Pa., for which Ben S. Johnson ministers, recently closed a deal for a $12,000 building site. The money was procured in six weeks and the lot taken over entirely free from indebtedness. The old church property will be sold and a modern plant erected on the new site. The building will cost $35,000 or more, and will be situated in the very best part of the city. The people of the church and community are manifesting much interest in the new project.

—J. A. Barnett, of Bloomington, Ill., will assist C. G. Cantrell and his church at Literberry, Ill., in a meeting beginning August 27. Mr. Barnett has decided to remain in evangelistic work for several months, with headquarters at 512 Grove street, Bloomington.

WHEN A MAN'S A MAN

By Harold Bell Wright

Illustrated by the Author Cloth 12mo $1.35

WHEN A MAN'S A MAN is a fine, big, wholesome novel of simple sweetness and virile strength. While the pages are crowded with the thrilling incidents that belong to the adventurous life of the unfenced land depicted, one feels, always, beneath the surface of the stirring scenes the great, primitive and enduring life forces that the men and women of this story portray. In the Dean, Philip Acton, Patches, Little Billy, Curly Elson, Kitty Reid and Helen Manning the author has created real living, breathing men and women, and we are made to feel and understand that there come to everyone those times when in spite of all, above all and at any cost, a man must be a man.

—L. J. Marshall, pastor at Wabash Ave., Kansas City, Mo., is a strong and successful advocate of foreign missions. During the six years of his service with this congregation there has been a notable development in interest and offerings to missions. The total contributed to missions during these years is $2,535.49. For other causes and the regular expenses of the church work a total of $32,844.95 has been raised. A large feature of the work of Mr. Marshall at Wabash Avenue has been the erection of the fine building in which the congregation now worships. About 400 persons have been added to the membership.

—The first year of E. P. Wise at East Market church, Akron, O., has been a fruitful one. The Bible-school attendance has been increased by about 100 and the school has been thoroughly graded. A hundred persons have been added to the church membership, and a strong Intermediate Endeavor society and Boy Scout organization added to the church forces. Certain institutional features have been introduced, among them a tennis court for the use of the young people.

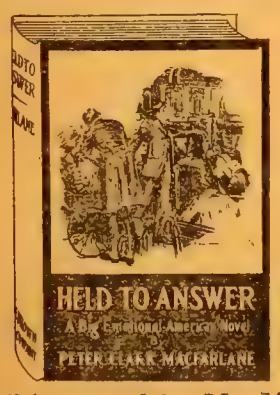
SERMON INSPIRES SONG-POEM.

R. Douglas Bird is a singer and composer of San Diego, Cal. Mr. Bird recently wrote Dr. Edward Scribner Ames the following letter:

"My Dear Sir: I read with deep and profound interest your sermon, 'Prayer' as Published in 'University of Chicago Sermons,' and am forwarding you a copy of hymn poem inspired by its message. I will later set same to suitable and religious music and mail you a copy. If the inspiration appeals to you I will feel honored with your acceptance of the dedication.

"With every good wish for you in your noble work, I am cordially and sincerely yours,

"P. Douglas Bird."



The following is the passage from the sermon which especially impressed the hymn-writer:

"But there is a type of prayer in which a nobler faith utters itself, faith in the divine reason and law of the world, which calls forth expressions of the profoundest gratitude, of dependence and need, of aspiration and hope. It is the child talking to the Father."

The poem was printed in the Sunday-school page of last week's "Century," and is entitled, "Safe In Thy Love."

"Held to Answer"

By Peter Clark Macfarlane.

This striking novel by Mr. Macfarlane has created a larger advance interest than any other novel ever put out by the publishers; and they have had to their credit some of the "best sellers" of the last few years. A slogan of "100,000 by Christmas" has been set as the selling slogan on this book for this year. The price of the book is $1.35, postpaid. Send your order in today and it will be filled at once. HIRAM COLLEGE

A college of high rank, devoted to undergraduate work of the best type.

A college which strongly emphasizes the supreme value in education of intimate personal contact between teacher and student.

A college which attracts a choice body of students and commands the service of a group of teachers hardly excelled for ability, character and devotion.

A college which prepares men and women for effective leadership in Christian service, whether as ministers and missionaries, or as lay workers.

Some Noteworthy Facts

The College is recognized by the Department of Instruction of Ohio as a school for the training and certification of high-school teachers.

Hiram is a member of the North Central Association of Colleges and Secondary Schools and its work is given full recognition by Columbia University and other graduate schools of similar rank.

Hiram is a great missionary center of the Disciples of Christ. The Wharton Memorial Home for the children of missionaries is here, and more missionaries have gone out from Hiram than any other school of the brotherhood.

Hiram offers a strong, well-balanced and ably manned undergraduate course to students preparing for the ministry, for missions and for other fields of Christian service.

Hiram offers attractive combined courses to students interested in engineering, agriculture, medicine and law.

Thorough courses in English and in public speaking, including argumentation and debate, are offered, and four strong literary societies give stimulus and practical training in both fields.

A strong department of music with competent teachers offers high-grade instruction in voice, theory, piano, organ, violin and other instruments. Entire new piano equipment this year—Haines Brothers, for teaching and practice, and Knabe Concert Grand for concert work.

The College maintains no preparatory school, but offers special advantage to students twenty years of age or older who have not completed the high school course.

Expenses are very moderate for the advantages offered and many opportunities for self-help are open to earnest students.

Earnest young men and women and parents seeking a good school for the education of their children should write for full information and make known their special interests and needs

DISCIPLES PUBLICATION SOCIETY, PROPRIETORS, : 700 EAST 40th STREET, CHICAGO

Disciples Publication Society

The Disciples Publication Society is an organization through which churches of the Disciples of Christ seek to promote undenominational and constructive Christianity.

The relationship it sustains to the Disciples is intimate and organic, though not official. The Society is not a private institution. It has no capital stock. No individuals profit by its earnings.

The charter under which the Society exists determines that whatever profits are earned shall be applied to agencies which foster the cause of religious education, although it is clearly conceived that its main task is not to make profits but to produce literature for building up character and for advancing the cause of religion.

The Disciples Publication Society regards itself as a thoroughly undenominational institution. It is organized and constituted by individuals and churches who interpret the Disciples' religious reformation as ideally an unsectarian and unecclesiastical fraternity, whose common tie and original impulse are fundamentally the desire to practice Christian unity with all Christians.

The Society therefore claims fellowship with all who belong to the living Church of Christ, and desires to co-operate with the Christian people of all communions as well as with the congregations of Disciples, and to serve all.

* * *

The Christian Century, the chief publication of the Society, desires nothing so much as to be the worthy organ of the Disciples' movement. It has no ambition at all to be regarded as an organ of the Disciples' denomination. It is a free interpreter of the wider fellowship in religious faith and service which it believes every church of Disciples should embody. It strives to interpret all communions, as well as the Disciples, in such terms and with such sympathetic insight as may reveal to all their essential unity in spite of denominational isolation. The Christian Century, though published by the Disciples, is not published for the Disciples alone. It is published for the Christian world. It desires definitely to occupy a catholic point of view and it seeks readers in all communions.

Annual Offering for Church Extension

Begins Sunday, September 3rd

"AN APPEAL TO REASON"

Are figures dry? Not when they tell the story of a live subject. We challenge any person who loves the Kingdom of God, and wishes to see it permanently built up and its borders continuously extended, to read the following Church Extension facts and figures and not be interested in taking the Church Extension Offering in September.

GAINED.

1. In 27 years 1,814 churches have been built in the United States and Canada.
2. 1,156 of these paid their loans in full, aggregating $1,864,903.34.
3. There is $1,195,868.98 in the Fund.
   There is $1,864,903.34 returned on loans.
   Therefore $3,060,772.32 of work has been done in 27 years. The churches aided raise $2 for every $1 loaned. Therefore, the churches borrowing this $3,060,772.32
   have raised. $6,121,544.64
   bringing into existence. $9,182,316.96
4. These Missions, while building their church homes at a cost of over $9,000,000 have given over $1,195,000 to missions, benevolence and education, 91 per cent of them gave.

LOST.

1. In the last ten years there have been 1,601 churches appealing, yet unanswered for lack of money.
2. Had we answered them as we did the 1,814 opposite, and had they given as well as the 1,814 they would have produced $8,000,000 of church property, and would have given $1,053,458 to missions and benevolences.
3. By failure to help these 1,601 The Kingdom has lost over $9,000,000.

RESOLVED, That to atone for past neglect our Church will raise a liberal offering for Church Extension some Sunday in September.

Remit to Board of Church Extension

Finding Life's Deeper Values

"HIC JACET"———.

All too soon the ancient formula will be filled out for each of us. Kind friends will do their best to formulate an epitaph which will express the meaning of our lives.

It will be an easy task in the case of many individuals. "He gave his life to pay for a farm," might truthfully be said of one man. Only courtesy to the dead will prevent many an unpleasant truth being said about most of us after we are gone.

The Fourth gospel speaks of an ever-present judgment process. "They are judged already." The choice of darkness rather than light, of error rather than truth, of sin rather than purity is our judgment on ourselves. Were you put into the balance of God's judgment now, what would be the verdict? Would your life be found altogether light? The average man will feel that there is something to be said for him. He admits that he is not good enough for heaven, but he thinks he is not bad enough for hell. His is a kind of moral and spiritual mediocrity.

Writing a serial story is always an interesting process. The fiction writer, from chapter to chapter, plays upon our emotions and keeps us guessing the fate of the hero. An even more interesting process is that of life itself. Each of us keeps his friends in suspense while the drama of life unfolds. We express our value judgments by the manner in which we live day by day.

We all want life in the largest measure. The mistakes of life are due to false conceptions of what life really is. The poor drunkard or drug victim thinks the fantastic drug consciousness worth more than that of the healthy normal man. He pays his price for this error. Misers, spendthrifts, money-bags and tramps, all seek the same great goal of life with varying conceptions of what life really is.

When Christianity is rightly interpreted, it is just a Way of Life. It has doctrines and ordinances and work to do, but all of these are to be included in the larger formula. The Way was a mode of description frequently used in the early church for those who walked in the footsteps of Jesus. Christianity undertakes to help with the business of living so that the judgment upon one's life by one's self and the community and by God himself may be a favorable judgment.

What Christianity does first of all to make life worth while is to furnish a guide. This guide is one who has traveled the road and knows it from beginning to end, Jesus Christ. There may have been certain short-sighted individuals in Jesus' day who thought his life was a failure but as the centuries have rolled on the world has grown increasingly certain that his is the only Way of Life which is worthy of being adopted by the whole human race.

We are united to our Guide in an act of Faith. This act of faith is the simple friendship and trust which marks all of our deeper human relations. If our faith in Jesus Christ is greater than in any man, it is only because his worth is more.

The influence of Jesus upon us is not such as to take away our personality. He asks no slavish imitation. "What would Jesus do?" is not the question he would have me ask. "What ought I to do as a good friend of Jesus Christ?" is the true question. There are many kinds of roses, but each is a rose. There are many Christian souls, each with his own personality developed and glorified, but there is the family mark upon every Christian soul. This great family mark is the spirit of love.

Those who travel the Jesus Way of Life shall miss nothing that is essential. The sacrifices are nothing. The compensations are everything. Let no man talk of sacrifices who finds clean friends in place of evil ones, or good habits for bad. The grass on our lawn grows too thick for weeds after awhile. The friend of Jesus Christ finds goodness choking out the evil weeds of sin.

The glories of the Way are many. They include Joy. With the shadow of the Cross already resting upon him, Jesus spoke of leaving his joy with his disciples.

This wonderful Christian journey involves growth and health. As the anemic student fills his lungs with the Alpine breezes, he finds new vigor and new power. His eyes become acquainted with great distances. He lives near the stars. It is so with the man who follows in the Christian Way of life.

The goal of the Christian journey is worthy. The Christian soul dares to talk perfection. The moral and spiritual possibilities of the race are yet to be truly tested by any other than Jesus Christ. Each of us may aspire toward the moral beauty and grandeur of our Guide. We are never too old for this process to continue. So long as life itself shall go on, we may hope that our personalities shall take on new elements of power and strength.

The Christian life is not a lonely life. Neither is its goal an individualistic one. A redeemed race as well as a redeemed individual is our hope. A Buddha might lose himself in lonely contemplation and find his Nirvana thus but the Christian's goal is not to be sought in solitude. Concern for the life of others is our surest guarantee that we ourselves have found the way that is eternal.

The supreme goal of all religion is union with God. The Buddhist has conceived it one way, and the neo-platonist another. The mystic, though profiting by the religious experience of the past, has had his own way of finding union with God. Jesus found this great goal. He said, "I and the Father are one." In the deeper passages of scripture we are told, "Eye hath not seen, neither hath ear heard, nor has it entered into the heart of man, the things that God has prepared for those that love him." We can no more set bounds to the possibilities of religious development than we can to scientific discovery. The realm of the spirit is for most of us the Neglected Continent. If we walk in the Jesus Way we shall go forward to explore it and test its divinest opportunities by experience.

The Age Needs a United Church

By W. S. Lockhart

HAS God any task for this generation to perform? Will he mysteriously work out the needed reforms in some secret, mysterious way? No—we are no longer deluded by such mysticism. We understand that he will use his spirit-filled men and women (his church) to bring about the needed changes. Undeniably progress has been made in the solution of the world's problems—but there is much land to be possessed.

There never was a time when the world called more loudly for moral reform than the present. It seems to me that God is saying to the church of the present age as Prince Albert said to his young men: "Young men, find out the plan of God in your generation and fall in with it." This is surely necessary if the cause of truth and righteousness committed to the keeping of the church is to be carried out. Truth is ever truth, but it needs adapting, socializing, fitting, to the wants and needs of mankind. The ideal of Jesus was clearly "that all men should know the Father and make his will theirs, his purposes theirs, his life theirs.

The age to which we come is, first of all, a materialistic age. This needs no argument. The first thought of the great commercial centers of our cities and towns is material progress. The kingdom is secondary. Around this idea the laws and plans of councils and the chief thought of the major part of its citizens revolve.

WHAT SHALL BE THE MESSAGE?

What message shall we preach to this money-mad age, this luxury-loving generation? These who are kings in commerce and queens in luxury, these who are so frequently the most cultivated of people? Can the little church around the corner, with its small, wheezing organ, and its poorly equipped ministry, its lack of sufficient apparatus for the Sunday-school attract their attention? The church must expand its entire energies to keep things going. The town has ten churches, it needs two. It has ten choirs, ten preachers poorly paid and with no money with which to travel or buy the best and latest books and thus keep themselves in touch with the world; it needs but two. These people of culture and wealth spend a part of every season abroad, have on their tables the best and latest books; they do not, as did their colonial fathers, seek information of the parson. Is it any wonder that the church does not attract them?

If there were a fine building, an able minister, a good choir of talented singers —and this would be possible if there were only two churches in the town—then you might first attract and then win them for the church, then preach to them consecration of wealth to the service of the Lord. The church will need to do some reflecting on its own condition before it can hope to do the largest possible service for these materialistic sons and daughters.

AN AGE OF COMBINATION.

This age stands confessedly as an era of combination in labor and capital.

In labor circles we hear of trades unions of every kind. All crafts are organized for self-protection. Long ago the working man found himself and his family only too often the victims of unscrupulous greed. With the introduction of steam came the demand for woman and child labor; they could work for less, great strength was not needed, so that a child could now do the work of a man; so that men were thus thrown out of work and as the individuals could do nothing to alleviate this situation they must combine.

In the realm of capital we have gigantic trusts and corporations. These bloodless, conscienceless beings are ever ready to absorb—but not so ready to nourish. Every interest of trade is carefully guarded. Prices go up and down at will. This is found to be a convenient way to do great things. Humanity as individuals is as so much grist for their hopper. Why not the church use this method, not for oppression, but for the larger interest of the kingdom?

What can a divided church do in this age of combination? Our business men are fast learning. Men are coming more and more to lose the prejudice of their fathers and mothers over the small things of former years. The sentimental idea that so and so was my father's or mother's notion will not hold much longer. We are learning that Christianity is not identical with sentiment.

WE LIVE IN AN AGE OF UNIVERSALS.

The achievements of this age are quite beyond the dreams of the former ages. The inventions and discoveries of the scientific realm have greatly enlarged our circle of knowledge. Astronomy has given us an infinite space to dwell upon. "Our vision has been enlarged in the mighty reaches of time, measured by geological research." Enlarged in the finding of psychology concerning the inner movement of mind and soul, enlarged by the microscope as well as by the telescope. We hear of international instead of national organizations and of world congresses of peace and religion. We are being introduced to that new expression of a "world conscience"—that recognition of worldwide interest.

The talk about the "solidarity of the world" is a vision that will presently be realized. Great commercial enterprises are being launched, but not until their bearing has been estimated from a world-wide standpoint. Governments in making their laws have come to recognize the worldwide effect, rather than as formerly, the national effect. In the social realm, we find ourselves in a vastly larger environment than ever before. We must recognize that every part of the earth is neighbor to every other part. Each is sharing the life of all. There must be no exceptions.

Christianity has ever been claiming to have the principles of a universal kingdom—such truths as will unite all nations into a common bond of brotherhood. Surely this day of universals is the time that the church has been working and praying for and now she can rejoice with this age of universals in science, commerce and government. As a matter of fact, is the church ready for this? I fear that this is coming sooner than we anticipated. Shall the church lead on triumphantly or fall behind in this race of universals? I sometimes fear that the divided church of the present will not fulfill her mission to this generation as well as did the early church to its age.

A UNITED CHURCH FOR THE AGE.

In this age of organization to conserve the best interest of labor, and of combination to utilize the monetary matters of the realm of commerce, and the dawning age of universals—how can a divided church be adequate to this enlarging vision. It will soon, if it has not already, awaken to the realization that its message is too narrow for this age.

Larger church buildings, better equipment are everywhere being demanded by the enlarging conception of the age. It will be only in a few places that this can be supplied. The remainder will cripple along and fail of accomplishing the real work of God in that community. A divided church can not, in the very nature of the case, bring the results that should come. It wastes too much energy on itself. The Master prayed that all might be one to the end that the world might believe on him. The cause of Christ in the mission fields, at home and abroad, has already taught us this lesson. The Oriental Christians can see no reason why they should be divided over the purely local differences of the home land.

They tell us "we have not the wealth to support many churches as you do in America; we must have one church." The united church of Christ in Japan bears witness to this fact. The age of solidarity and fraternity is upon us, and we must be swept off our feet, or bow to the progress of Christianity. I truly believe that the consummation of the wondrous teachings of the Man of Galilee, the dreams of the prophets, and the resurrection of the dead hopes are all to be realized in the triumph of the spirit of fraternity as taught in the present age."

This era of fraternity will call for less of wrangle, less of strife and more of peace and conservation of energies. What a wealth of meaning is contained in that one word "fraternity." It contains the "happiness of the present and the peace of the future." This is the button which when pressed will turn on the arc lights of world-illuminating brotherhood. The present church stands for the highest and best there is in the individual, but the united church will stand for the truest and divinest there is in society.

SOCIAL NEEDS CALL FOR A UNITED CHURCH.

The one thing that has cost the kingdom many a friend has been the fact that the church was not able, not inspirited, to accomplish the reforms that the times call for and the condition of humanity demands. Relief work in all its various forms has been neglected by the church in the years gone by. On every hand may be seen the direful conditions, hotbeds of crime and corruption, and no fountain from which to draw sweet satisfying waters. 'Tis sad indeed. A few brave souls have gone in and established almshouses, clubs, social settlements and the like, but what are they among so many? The church as such has not even touched the hem of this ragged garment.

The oppression of the poor, the strengthening and blessing of family ties, the duties to neglected girls and orphan children, the training of parentless boys, the various problems of religious education, the public health interest of our cities, the congestion in the poor districts, grafting in municipal affairs, the duty to workingmen and foreigners in our midst, the problem of the leisure class, the defective and delinquent, our attitude toward the great corporations, and many other problems ever present themselves for solution at the hands of the church. Knocking they stand—shall the church keep them waiting any longer? Shall these seek to enter and find the door closed? Let us catch the spirit of God himself, reconciling the world to himself through Christ and his church.

A UNITED CHURCH FOR THE HASTENING OF THE KINGDOM.

That this was Jesus' program no one will surely deny. That the kingdom has not come surely every one knows. I am saying that a united church will hasten it greatly. When all the forces of Christendom are united, marching under one banner, praying the one prayer, "thy kingdom come," wearing the one name, led by the captain of our salvation, then shall the church come to know the tremendous power that she is able to exercise in destroying the power of sin in the world. His truths, when put forth in terms of action, are adequate to the conquest of the world.

"He has the central truth of Buddhism—purity and self-denial—but he has more. He taught the high morality of Confucius and more. He taught the great doctrine of Mahomet—the existence, unity, and omnipotence of one God—but he taught more." He recognized the virtue in Moses' legislation, the great purpose of Jehovah in the Jewish race, and uses these as accumulated data on which to build his kingdom. In all these religions we have great truths—each gives light, one is starlight, one is as the twilight, one is as the light of dawn, and one is sunlight. His truth is adequate, for it hath translated itself from the heart of God into the life of man..

WILL COME ONLY THROUGH SACRIFICE.

Progress is slow, "but not in vain have martyrs given their bodies to the flames, not in vain have been the tears and the blood of the Gethsemanes and Calvarys, not in vain the battle fields where men have fought for truth and justice—but it all contributes to the happiness of the present hour, and puts into our hands the torch with which to light up the future."

The world is ours—and when the forces will enter as did the united armies into China—the walls of dogmatic theology and religious differences will be leveled, and the triumphant forces of our God will march in.

It will come about only by sacrifice—much will needs be given up—and when we have enough of the spirit of Christ to throw aside the trivial things of a former generation or two—when we are determined to do his will—to seek first his kingdom, then all may be one, and the world can and will be speedily conquered for our king.

The Fetish of the Open Door

By Shu Hu

WHEN any historic policy is stripped of its proper setting or background, it soon degenerates into a meaningless catchword and its real value is often lost sight of. Thus the policy of the "Open Door" in China, because it is little understood, has come to assume in the minds of many Americans such an undue importance as actually to obscure the real issues of the Far Eastern situation and to obstruct the minds of America and China from seeking their solutions in more fruitful and constructive directions. It seems that the time has come for us to properly evaluate this traditional policy in order that we may determine whether it may not yet serve as a guiding principle in dealing with the new complications that are rapidly developing in the Far East.

For the sake of invitng fruitful discussion on this subject, the present writer wishes to frankly state his own opinion that the Open Door policy is no longer adequate as a constructive "China policy." This contention is based on three reasons: first, the Open Door policy is purely economic; second, its effect with respect to the maintenance of Chinese independence and integrity is merely nominal and essentially negative; and, thirdly, it ignores entirely China's own rights and interests.

POLICY CHIEFLY ECONOMIC.

That the Open Door is purely economic is evident. The John Hay note of September 1899 which inaugurated the policy was actuated by "a sincere desire to insure to the commerce and industry of the United States and of all other nations perfect equality of treatment within the limits of the Chinese Empire for their trade and navigation." The three articles contained in this note merely pledge each of the powers, first, not to interfere with any treaty port or vested interest within any so-called "sphere of influence" or leased territory it may claim in China; second, to apply the Chinese treaty tariff to all imports without distinction; and, lastly, to levy no excessive harbor dues or railway charges in discrimination against the shipping or transportation of merchandise belonging to other nations within its "sphere." It may be noted in passing that the John Hay note officially recognized the "spheres of influence" as an accomplished fact.

The inadequacy of such an exclusively economic principle as a constructive policy in China was pointed out as early as 1900 by Prof. Paul Reinsch, now American Minister to China, who wrote in his World Politics: "As long as freedom of opportunity is preserved within these spheres, as long as treaty ports are kept open and their number is gradually increased, THE POLICY DESIGNATED BY THE TERM 'OPEN DOOR' IS PRACTICALLY IN FORCE, EVEN THOUGH THE POLICING OF THE EMPIRE MAY HAVE BEEN DIVIDED UP AMONG THE POWERS." To confirm Prof. Reinsch's words, the reader may be referred to a letter from a Japanese publicist, Mr. K. K. Kawakami, published in the New York Times for April 11, 1915; that is, in the midst of those exciting days of Sino-Japanese negotations. After quoting the John Hay note in full, Mr. Kawakami maintains that the Japanese program in China violates neither the letter nor the spirit of the Open Door as conceived by Mr. Hay and accepted by the powers. He then proceeds to quote from a letter written by a British merchant in Chang-Chun expressing his deep gratitude to the Japanese administration in Manchuria. The British merchant's letter ends in these words: "Woe betide the day if the country is handed back to the control of the Chinese!"

A LOGICAL CONCLUSION.

In other words, if your object is merely to secure equal opportunity of commerce and industry in China, then it matters very little whether China be under British control or Japanese control. Thus the New York Evening Post in an editorial published on June 17, 1915, after pointing out the increase of American trade in Korea from about $2,500,000 in 1911 to $4,000,000 in 1913, arrives at this perfectly reasonable conclusion: "The problem of foreign opportunity in Korea therefore assumes this aspect: whether Japan's efforts in developing the resources of the country, and so widening the opportunities for foreign trade in general, do not compensate for such special advantages as Japan enjoys. American trade in the old Hermit Kingdom was negligible. American trade under a modernized Korea shows a veary healthy increase. IT IS A CONSIDERATION WHICH HOLDS FOR OTHER REGIONS OF THE FAR EAST." I have italicized the last sentence to show the logical conclusion of a purely economic policy.

"But," the defender of the Open Door will perhaps say, "has not the Open Door always been associated with the principle of maintaining the independence and integrity of China?" It is true that the maintenance of the independence and integrity of China was fully embodied in all such international agreements as the Anglo-German Agreement of October 1900, the three Anglo-Japanese Treaties of Alliance, and the Franco-Japanese and the Russo-Japanese Agreements of 1907. But the essentially negative and nominal character of such stipulation only lends support to the contention that the Open Door, even though widened to include the maintenance of Chinese territorial integrity, can no longer meet the new exigencies of the Far East.

THE POLICY HAS NO CONSTRUCTIVE VALUE.

In the first place, this principle has no positive or constructive value: it was necessitated by a sort of balance of power in China, and has aimed only at maintaining a territorial and political status quo in China as long as any failure of such maintenance is feared to be disastrous to all powers concerned. Its sole object has been to muddle through a complicated situation without making any attempt at fundamentally improving it.

In the second place, all such pledges and arrangements seem to have no more than a mere nominal force. As soon as the balance of power breaks down,—as it is now breaking down,—as soon as any power, with the acquiescence of its allies, is in a position to dictate the terms of dividing the spoils, so soon the phrase "the independence and integrity of China" becomes a mere scrap of paper. The first treaty of alliance between Great Britain and Japan (1902), for example, specifically stipulates the maintenance of "the territorial integrity of the Empire of China and the Empire of Korea." But when Japan had established her rule over Korea by right of the Russo-Japanese War, it was an exceedingly easy matter for the Two High Contracting Parties, when renewing the treaty, to strike out the few insignificant words "and the Empire of Korea." To use the words of the editorial quoted, "it is a consideration which holds for other regions in the Far East."

CHINESE NATION NOT CONSIDERED.

The last and fundamental defect of the Open Door, however, lies in the fact that, while professing to be a "China policy," it completely ignores the interests and rights of the Chinese nation. All the treaties and agreements relating to China read very much like "Hamlet with Hamlet left out." Each power is actuated by its own "special interests" in China; and if the powers are pleased to insure the independence and integrity of China and the principle of equal opportunity for the commerce and industry of all nations, it is only because such insurance is deemed expedient for the preservation of the common interests of all powers in China.

In all their dealings with China, there has never been any consideration of China's own rights and claims in her own land and in the world at large. This total disregard of China's own interests and aspirations seems to be a fundamental defect in all the traditional "China policies," the Open Door not excepted. For after all, the real and final solution of the China problem must be sought in China herself.

And if the world cannot rid itself of the sentiment of nationalism, China has an equal title to the rights and claims appertaining to a self-conscious nationality. Any policy which refuses to reckon with the just claims of this rapidly growing national consciousness will in the end defeat itself, and the world will pay heavily for it. Are we not now witnessing the fruits of a Turkey policy with Turkey left out?

AS TO A NEW POLICY.

As to what the future American policy in China should be, that is a problem we must leave to American statesmanship to solve. It seems to the present writer, however, that if there is to be a new "China policy" at all, it must possess, among other things, these main characteristics. First, it must aim at removing the source of all international rivalry and friction by helping the Chinese people in their struggle to secure a good and enlightened nationalistic government. Secondly, it must be a world-policy: that is to say, it must constantly take into consideration, not merely the "special interests" of any one nation or nations, but also the fundamental and lasting interests of the whole world of which China forms an integral part.

A policy so characterized cannot content itself with merely insuring an economic equality of opportunity and treatment in China. Indeed, in realizing its object,—namely, the strengthening of China—the new policy may even require some such economic sacrifices as the revision of the outrageously unjust treaty of tariff of 5 per cent ad. val.—a revision which China so badly needs. In short, no new "China policy" can be worthy of its name unless it be one which strives to aid and facilitate the creation and development of a New China of the Chinese, by the Chinese, and for the common advancement of humanity.

A Preacher's Ideal for His Pulpit

Extract From Tenth Anniversary Sermon of Edgar DeWitt Jones, at First Christian Church, Bloomington, Illinois, July 9, 1916.

IN J. H. Gilliland's tenth anniversary sermon, delivered in this building in the month of February, 1898, that great preacher affirmed his conviction that the pulpit is the "preacher's throne." I am in heartiest and fullest agreement with this statement. However efficient the minister may be in mastering details and routine of church work, he cannot thereby atone for neglect of his pulpit ministry. A minister who comes into the pulpit without painstaking preparation and expects the inspiration of the occasion to supply food and fire for the sermon will be woefully disappointed.

Throughout these ten years I have never come into this pulpit for a single service without preparation. There have been times when I have been compelled to preach under stress without adequate preparation, and there have been times despite careful preparation when I fell so far below my ideal as to experience most poignant regret. At my best I have not been able to reach my ideals as a preacher of the Christian faith, but I do not remember ever to have gone into the pulpit without something of the thrill and flutter of heart that a young lover experiences when he reaches the threshold of his sweetheart's home. To me there is a witchery about preaching. To me the pulpit is rainbowed with glory.

THE PROPHETIC FUNCTION.

I have tried to realize in my pulpit ministry somewhat of the prophet function of the preacher. I have tried to be loyal to the truth as God has given me to see truth. Undoubtedly, in the course of my ten years as minister here my preaching has undergone a change of emphasis. Some things I stressed eight or ten years ago I do not stress now, and the reason is that there has been borne in upon my conscience the conviction, not that the things I formerly stressed are untrue, but that other things are more vital.

I have been intensely interested in movements for social justice, and while approving some of these movements I have not for a moment believed that there is any substitute for the spiritual. I have greatly desired not to be suspicious of any doctrine simply because it is new, or ashamed of any doctrine simply because it is old, and to be ready to defend either or both if I believe them to be true.

AS TO THEOLOGY.

I have endeavored to keep abreast of the times in the reading of the best books, new and old, and in the study of the Scriptures, using every scholarly and reverent aid that would illumine new treasure chambers in those mines which are "richer than Golconda." I have not been especially interested in theological controversies. I believe I have a natural tendency of liberality toward those from whom I differ, and a sort of temperamental sympathy for "the under dog."

I have not wished to be identified wholly with any school of theological thought, but have rejoiced in the liberty that all may enjoy in Jesus Christ, our Lord. I have persistently studied variety in the matter of pulpit themes, and have found a special delight in giving book studies from the Holy Scriptures. Every year of my ministry here I have given a series of Sunday evening sermons, spending annually a part of my vacation preparing and planning for the same.

I have diligently sought to bring from this pulpit a devotional enrichment, to give a larger vision of the marvelous scope and wealth of the Holy Scriptures, and to show that without the spiritual any movement destined to help humanity is sooner or later to meet disaster. Whatever my theme I have tried to exalt the Christ, and in all things to give Him the pre-eminence.

Horace Bushnell said: "One more revival, only one more is needed—the revival of Christian stewardship; the consecration of the money power of the church unto God; and when that revival comes the kingdom of God will come in a day. You can no more prevent it than you can hold back the tides of the ocean."

Help us, each one of us in his place, in the place which is providentially allotted to us in life, to act well our part, with consecrated will, with pure affection, with simplicity of heart, to do our duty and to leave the rest to God. —Horatio Stebbins.

Again the Underpaid Clergyman

ALONG with some other advice he gave to a class of ministers who were admitted into the New Jersey Conference membership in Asbury Park recently, Bishop Quayle said:

"Don't go into debt! Better go underclothed and underfed than go into debt!"

The good bishop's remarks serve again to remind us that the great majority of clergymen, not particularly of the Methodist denomination but all denominations, are woefully underpaid for the services they render. While doubtless Bishop Quayle did not have it in mind that his remarks to the new ministers constituted a rebuke to those who pay ministers' salaries, this surely is nothing other than a rebuke to all of those of us who go to church and permit our ministers to struggle along with barely enough to keep them and their families alive unless perchance they happened to be possessed of independent incomes.

Ought we to feel just a little bit ashamed of ourselves because we have permitted a condition to exist in which it becomes necessary for a bishop to get up and tell the ministers who work under him that they must take the choice between going into debt or going hungry and insufficiently clothed, simply because their congregations do not pay them enough?

The chief reason why the average clergyman, of any denomination, is so woefully underpaid, is simply that he is not enough of a manager of his own business affairs to insist upon being paid an adequate salary for the services he renders his people. Usually he is the type of man who devotes his energies so enthusiastically to the material and spiritual welfare of his church and the members of his congregation that he has no energy left to devote to the development of his own material welfare. It is a sad commentary upon the lack of appreciation on the part of those of us for whom he works so self-sacrificingly that we don't interest ourselves enough in our clergyman's welfare to insist that he receive ample remuneration for his services when he is too busy looking out for our welfare to insist upon it himself.

The average man in any other line of endeavor is a good enough manager of his own financial affairs to demand of his employer that his pay be made commensurate with the quality of service rendered, and if the employer doesn't "come across" the employe gets a job somewhere else. If a clergyman were to keep insisting that his employers pay him what he is worth he would be put down as "too worldly," yet few of those who employ him ever volunteer to attend to those little financial matters in his behalf.

At the Day's End

BY THOMAS CURTIS CLARK.

THERE shall come a time, with the tide of years,
When all that counted most to pride and sense
Shall be as naught: gold and the pomp of power
And the flaunt of fame. Even the love of friends
Shall be less prized, when from the flush of youth
And from the day of deeds we turn, to look beyond
Toward that dark certainty which men call death,
But which in truth is life that shall not end.

What shall it profit then that lands are yours
And stately palaces and garnered gold?
All these shall bear the rust of time
And shall be seen as vanity.

What shall avail the wild huzzahs
Which greet your ears from thoughtless throngs?
This men call fame, but as the empty wind
It shall appear to your late thoughts.

True friendship lasts, the young heart boasts.
Alas, those bonds which hold so fast in youth,
When all is summer and the breath of roses—
How soon they break when autumn comes,
When winter winds do blow, and the heaping snow
Buries youth's hopes and all the loves of life!

When that time comes, Friend, where shall be
The things you now count wealth?

May God to you be then no stranger.
May it be that having long companioned with Him
Through years that blessed,
Your soul shall not in after years
Be comfortless.

An Ideal Course

for your Adult or Young People's Class

The Life of Jesus

It is always in order for Sunday School classes to study the life of Jesus. Young people's and adult classes want the very best text that can be found. This is simply to remind them that there has never been offered to the Sunday School world a Life of Christ so practicable, so usable, sotrue to the best scholarship, so bristling with questions that wake up the pupils, so well proportioned, as Dr. Loa E. Scott's "LIFE OF JESUS" in Fifty two Lessons. This book is being widely used in Sunday Schools both of the Disciples and other religious bodies, and in Y. M. C. A. classes. This testifies to its popularity. You must have it in your school. It will create a new interest in Bible study among your young people and younger adults. Price of the book, 50c. In quantities of 10 or more, 40c each.

A HIGHER STANDARD IN OUR COLLEGES

THE Disciple colleges in the past were not always aware of standards in education. They depended upon a special constituency whose loyalty was based upon other than educational considerations, to a very considerable degree.

If the Men and Millions movement has done nothing more for us than to bring to all our institutions higher ideals educationally, it has justified itself. There is one engrossing theme in all our colleges now and that is higher standards. Our educators will henceforth be satisfied only with those methods and kinds of equipment which will justify themselves in the eyes of impartial investigators of education.

To meet the new standards there must be great changes in many of our schools. Several of them have courageously lost large numbers of students in ridding themselves of preparatory schools. These colleges decline to compete further with the good high schools now to be found everywhere.

It is necessary to secure a large increment in the way of equipment. The physical laboratories of our best institutions compare unfavorably with those of the state universities. In days gone by the library reports were padded with "congressional records" and other equally valueless impedimenta. Now laboratories and libraries are receiving attention as rapidly as conditions will permit.

High grade education limits the number of pupils that may be received in a class. Cheap schools once made money out of education by having enormous classes under a single instructor. That day is past with self-respecting institutions. There must be a sufficient number of instructors to insure each pupil a reasonable amount of personal attention.

It is clear that these new ideals of education involve the expenditure of immense sums of money. It will require the best efforts of the Disciples of Christ for years to properly equip and endow their colleges and bring them up to the best standards.

A NEW ATTITUDE TOWARD ALIEN RELIGIONS

EVER since the Congress of Religion was held in Chicago, in connection with the great World's Fair years ago, there has been a growing spirit of tolerance in Christianity. This is especially marked among the more intelligent missionaries. They no longer find delight in reporting the failure of the religions they have studied in other lands, but rather delight in finding in these religions spiritual aspirations akin to their own.

Probably no religion has been more hated by Christians in the past than Mohammedanism. We still feel something of a thrill of horror at the very name. Since this has been so outstanding an example of a religion despised by us, we may find in the present attitude toward it an illustration of the modern catholic-mindedness which has entered into Christianity.

The religion of the Prophet may be appreciated by us because it teaches with great emphasis a strict monotheism, indeed a stricter form of the doctrine than many of us hold. Thus it was a great religious reformation in the sections which Mohammedanism influenced, doing for Arabia what Jesus had done for Palestine and Martin Luther for Germany. The Mohammedans have also given a place to Jesus, mentioning him only with deepest respect. It has been a religion which has stressed greatly the practice of prayer.

It is now known that we have been wrong in many of our conceptions of Islam. The Koran teaches, "Let there be no compulsion in religion," though disciples of the Prophet and of the Christ have alike lived otherwise on occasion.

This new spirit of appreciation does not cut the nerve of missions. It only puts us in sympathetic touch where we may invite fair and unbiased study of religious values. Can any devout Christian doubt that the cause of Jesus Christ will go forward mightily when there is, the whole world over, a fair and spiritually minded study of religious truth?

A MERRY FIGHT

IT IS a merry fight which is going on at the present time between the mayor of Chicago and the Anti-Saloon League. The mayor accepted the congratulations of church people when he announced that he would enforce the Sunday closing law in Chicago. The ministers met and listened to the most solemn assertions on the part of the mayor that he intended to enforce the law whether anybody was with him or not.

The Anti-Saloon League has been busy ever since uncovering offenders and dragging them into the public light. There have been charges that the mayor protected his friends. The mayor has deeply resented the interest of the Anti-Saloon League when it has offered to assist in the enforcement of the law.

Some licenses have been revoked, but mostly those of foreigners whose political influence was small. At the present time, there is a new group of sixty-five offenders in the public light who are worth catching.

The danger to the Sunday closing law is that after the mayor has proposed to enforce it, if he shall do so laxly and inefficiently, it will still be said that the law is obsolete through non-enforcement, however absurd that may be legally.

Meanwhile Christian people will do well to keep informed on this issue, which affects a principle of even greater importance than the question of drinking on Sunday. If, in the end, it will still stand that laws are to be enforced at the pleasure of the executives, then our American institutions are in deep peril.

PASTOR TO ABSENT MEMBERS

FEW church people realize the varied duties of a modern pastor. The keeping of an accurate list of members with their addresses is a task which must always have attention, every week in the year. The average church never has an up-to-date printed list of members. Even while the list is on the press, some one goes away. Especially is this true of the young people who are employed away from home.

The pastor who takes his duties seriously is compelled to write letters all the time. He often remembers his young people away at college with a word of greeting and of kindly solicitude. He writes absent members in another city to see whether they have placed their letters in the local church.

But for this care and solicitude on the part of ministers, the loss to the church would be far greater, in the midst of the social unrest in which we live. The average city church has fifteen to twenty-five per cent of its members move every year. On the average, there is a new church every six or seven years. Only the most patient care prevents the cause of Christ from suffering a great loss. Yet few people would suspect that this work of conservation is an important part of the duties of a pastor.

THE INVASION OF SOUTH AMERICA

THE Protestant missionary work in South America has been vigorously denounced by certain leaders of the high church wing of the Episcopalians and by Roman Catholics, as an invasion. The missionaries have been called intruders. South America has been regarded by these critics as an already Christian country.

In the first place, it is to be replied that in many instances missionary work in Latin countries has been begun by direct invitation of great leaders in those countries. It was so in Guatemala. That was also the manner in which much of the work in Argentine was inaugurated. Broad-minded Catholic men, witnessing the spiritual poverty of their continent, have sought the stimulus which would come by Protestant mission work. They have hoped the Roman church in South America might become as virile as in North America, through contact with Protestantism.

The assumption, however, that Latin America is adequately Christian has no foundation in fact. The great institutions of learning are dominated by an agnostic attitude toward religion. The students are not churchmen. The future leaders coming from those schools will be unfriendly to religion.

Not only at the top of society but at its bottom, there is a deep need of the gospel. Many of the aborigines in the more secluded portions of the country still worship according to heathen rites and have practically no knowledge of the deeper things of religion.

The right of a religious organization to enter a field is a proposition rather difficult to argue. Most modern-minded men would argue it from the viewpoint of the influence the proposed activity would have upon the people to be served. Judged thus, there can be no question of the right of missionaries to go to South America. Any well-informed person would admit that the southern continent has been very backward in its development, however admirable many of its people are. They have the right to receive their portion of the new life that is pulsating through our world.

INDUSTRIAL WARFARE

ALTHOUGH the millionaire operators in New York have in many cases made more profits in twenty-four months than in all other years of their lives, there has been so little disposition to share this prosperity with labor that the threat of strikes has spread all over the land. There is friction especially in the transportation ranks, which have been particularly hard worked during the handling of enormous quantities of goods for European nations.

The average wage of a railroad man is less than nine hundred dollars a year. The purchasing power of that wage under present economic conditions is enormously reduced. Unless a man has had a good increase in wages, he has actually suffered a cut in his income.

There can be no qestion as to the obligation of the church in these times. It should be frankly sympathetic with the workers, not as a question of policy, but as a question of right. It is not a matter of balancing the rich man's contributions over against the poor man's more active personal participation in religious activities, but a matter of seeking the good of the whole social order in which we live.

In the long run, the hoarding of great fortunes and spending them again in fruitless luxury and frivolity is not to be compared with giving the working man a decent schedule of hours and a living wage. The employer who would make up for his robberies of his employes by seemingly generous contributions to charities has insulted our intelligence and forfeited our esteem.

It is not a time to stir social antagonisms, but on the other hand it is of no use to lay any rotten foundations for industrial peace. The peace that shall at last bind together industrial leaders and industrial operatives is one which must rest on justice and mutual consideration. It must be a peace of the Golden Rule.

A RIVAL OR A HELPER

IT IS always gratifying to hear of the progress the adult Bible-class movement has made in building up large classes, especially in the county seat towns throughout the country. It is not uncommon for a hundred men to be meeting together for Bible study under a popular leader. This may be observed in churches in all the states.

It is a sad fact that in many of these churches there are fewer men at worship than used to be before the Bible class was organized, and that the class itself does not attach men permanently to Christianity. If in the end it can be said this is the typical result, then it may be sadly but confidently predicted that the big classes of men will pass away. Religion must have larger expression than meeting once a week for Bible study.

Of course, there is an implied criticism on the minister in many of these situations. If he were as interesting as the Bible class leader, it is argued, the men would go to church. This does not necessarily follow, for the bond in these classes is often that of social activities and good fellowship. How many heavy-hearted ministers there are in such situations, no human being knows.

No auxiliary of the church ought ever to become its rival. Whenever it does, the cause of religion suffers.

We think we see signs everywhere of a deepening of the program of men's classes. These classes are being made rallying centers from which men go forth to great enterprises for the cause of religion in the community. The smaller group is separately organized only that the good of the larger organization may be carefully sought..

The men in any church ought to be made to feel the burden of caring for the spiritual welfare of the whole community. Only by fostering the great historic organization, the church, may this be accomplished in largest measure.

GOSPEL SONGS

HE WOULD indeed have a closed mind who would make a sacred canon of church hymns which was never to receive further additions. Yet we can understand the violent reaction of some who have witnessed with disgust the debauching of musical taste in churches.

The "Glory Song" that raged a few years ago helps to illustrate the point. Everybody was singing "Glory for Me," seemingly with no sense that the predominant sentiment of this song was not in its heart truly Christian. We need no Tipperary jingle songs in our hymnology, though we may ever open our hearts to receive the treasures of poetic sentiment that are continually being revealed.

Union Churches

In order to break down the sense of isolation which exists among union churches, and to let workers in this field know of the progress of the movement toward unity in other communities, we are maintaining this open forum. We wish to present plans of organization and work of united, federated and community churches, and to chronicle the progress of the movement as a whole. We ask any reader who knows of any union church that has not previously been reported in this current series to send us information concerning it. Address: Howard E. Jensen, care of "The Christian Century."

Five Years of Federation

THE Federated Church of Collegeport, Texas, has been in existence over five years, and has passed beyond the experimental stage. Mr. Murray A. Travis, a Baptist Minister, originator of the movement and still the pastor of the church, has this to say in regard to the origin of the idea:

"I recall that I sometimes used to express the desire that some day I might be a member of a Christian group made up of people of all denominations, each free to hold his own peculiar views, but organized upon the platform of worshiping God and serving his fellowman. I have learned that my idea was by no means peculiar to myself, for, after more than five years as minister of just such an organization, I have met and heard from many earnest people who had treasured a similiar desire long before the idea had occurred to me. The probability that there are many others who are interested in the practical working of the idea encourages us to tell our story."

The church now has upon its roll members of fourteen denominations. Article Four of their Articles of Association has the following: "It shall be distinctly understood that members of this church are free to claim relationship with the church of their preference, and to hold the views of said church so long as the practice or dissemination of these views does not militate against the harmony and usefulness of this church." Many members bring letters of dismissal and join, while a few accept a duplicate membership still holding active relations with a church of their denomination.

Candidates for membership, upon confession of faith, receive baptism according to the form they would use were they affiliated with the body of their choice. The minister enjoys the same privilege as do the members, and if the form desired is not according to his persuasion or the custom of his church, he is free to invite another minister to officiate. The communion is held with the members gathered about a table spread for the entire family. The organization is democratic. In addition to the minister, moderator, recorder, and treasurer, they have four committees, on religious work, finance, music, and social life.

The missionary offerings are received in duplex envelopes, and the missionary end is printed thus:

For HOME AND FOREIGN MISSIONS.
Through my Denomination.
.....
(Name of denomination.)

Money not designated is left to be appropriated by the committee on religious work.

The success of the work has been most gratifying. The temporary idea has become permanent. There has not been an instance where a member has had to be reminded to refrain from arguments that might be detrimental to the cause, while all are as loyal as ever to the doctrines they have previously held dear.

The following definite, constructive results have followed the one church idea: 1. A fine community spirit is marked among the Christian people. They meet at the church as brothers, and not as a sort of cousins. 2. The influence upon the town's morals is direct. All Christian people gather habitually in one body, and, if occasion demands it, action is promptly directed against any practices or institutions that threaten the public good. 3. The question of economy is important. One building to erect, insure, repair. One lighting plant, one wood pile, one janitor, etc. 4. The entire attention of one minister is secured. He can be aggressive without being accused of proselyting. He can also take a prominent place in civic affairs without being accused of trying to eclipse his less aggressive brother. 5. The church stands pre-eminently as the community church. It is everybody's church. The building takes its place as the true community center.

In conclusion, Dr. Travis says: "We never comprehended the wise man's statement, 'Behold how good and how pleasant it is for brethren to dwell together in unity,' until we actually experienced a real demonstration of the idea during these five years. If we have been of any service in hastening the answer of the prayer of the Teacher, 'That they may all be one, that the world may believe that Thou hast sent me,' we are glad, and any sacrifice of personal preference for the united testimony has been more than compensated by the consciousness that we are 'working together with Him.'"

A NEW FEATURE IN THE PRACTICE OF CHURCH UNITY.

The Union Church of Congregationalists and Disciples at Toppenish, Washington, which received brief mention in the "Century" a few weeks ago, has evolved a unique plan for the administration of baptism whereby this ordinance is performed, not by the minister, but by an Elder for the Disciples, or by a Deacon in case of the Congregationalists. Both churches regularly recognize the right of the officers in question to administer the sacraments of the church. Consequently a short and impressive service was held in which a Disciple, Mr. M. D. Moody, and a Congregationalist, Mr. D. F. Olds, were ordained for this purpose.

A union baptismal service was held on Easter Sunday morning in which each body was able to feel its loyalty to this historic practice and at the same time give expression to that spirit of co-operation in work and worship which is rapidly making all Christ's people one.

Dr. Scudder, Superintendent of Congregational Missions of Washington, has declared that the church at Toppenish "looks as if it were going to be one of the most successful works of the kind in the state." Rev. Oliver Hower is the Disciple pastor of the congregation.

It must be admitted that this plan involves a distinct loss in religious leadership to the minister in that it removes him from intimate association with an event of greatest significance in the spiritual life of the individual. Nevertheless, it represents an earnest effort to overcome an actual obstacle in the way of Christian union, and furnishes a suggestion which will no doubt be of value in many local situations in bridging the way to a more catholic Christian fellowship in the future. For in all movements looking toward the reunion of Christendom we must recognize that

"The common problem
Is—not to fancy what were fair in life
Provided it could be,—but, finding first
What may be, then find how to make it fair
Up to our means; a very different thing!"

General Convention of Protestant Episcopal Church.

The General Convention of the Protestant Episcopal church will be held in St. Louis beginning October 11. There will be an elaborate church pageant. At this convention there will be serious issues arising out of differences of opinion over the Latin American Congress. The English church will be represented in the convention by Bishop Montgomery, who is secretary of the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel, and by the Bishop of Worcester and Dr. H. W. Yeatman Biggs.

Take No Decisive Action on Saloons.

At last the wave of temperance sentiment that is being felt around the world has reached some of the dignitaries of the English church. At a meeting of great leaders Canon Braithwaite offered a resolution favoring state control of the liquor traffic. He supported his motion by commenting on the good effects of the war measures affecting the traffic. The Dean of Lincoln stated he would not do away with the public house, as Protestant Dissenters recommend. The resolution was defeated by an overwhelming vote and a temperance committee will bring in a resolution less dangerous and radical.

Missionaries Have Trouble Getting to India.

The restrictions for entrance into India have grown more rigid and missionaries will have a hard time reaching there this year. Non-British missionaries must make application to the British embassy in Washington. They must answer many questions and sign a statement that they will not work against British authority in India. Ten missionaries of the American Board are immediately affected. The Methodist Board has 22 persons involved, the Presbyterians a considerable number, the Baptist Board some fifty and the Christian Missionary Alliance eleven.

PAUL'S SORROWS AND COMFORTS.

Lesson for September 3.

Golden Text: My grace is sufficient for thee: for my power is made perfect in weakness. 2 Corinthians 12:9.

Lesson 2 Corinthians, 11:21-12:10: 2 Corinthians 11:21-33 printed.

Memorize verses 25, 26.

(21) I speak by way of disparagement, as though we had been weak. Yet whereinsoever any is bold (I speak in foolishness), I am bold also. (22) Are they Hebrews? so am I. Are they Israelites? so am I. Are they the seed of Abraham? so am I. (23) Are they ministers of Christ? (I speak as one beside himself) I more; in labors more abundantly, in prisons more abundantly, in stripes above measure, in deaths oft. (24) Of the Jews five times received I forty stripes save one. (25) Thrice was I beaten with rods, once was I stoned, thrice I suffered shipwreck, a night and a day have I been in the deep; (26) in journeyings often, in perils of rivers, in perils of robbers, in perils from my countrymen, in perils from the Gentiles, in perils in the city, in perils in the wilderness, in perils in the sea, in perils among false brethren; (27) in labor and travail, in watchings often, in hunger and thirst, in fastings often, in cold and nakedness. (28) Besides those things that are without, there is that which presseth upon me daily, anxiety for all the churches. (29) Who is weak, and I am not weak? who is caused to stumble, and I burn not? (30) If I must needs glory, I will glory of the things that concern my weakness. (31) The God and Father of the Lord Jesus, he who is blessed for evermore knoweth that I lie not. (32) In Damascus the governor under Aretas the king guarded the city of the Damascenes in order to take me: (33) and through a window was I let down in a basket by the wall, and escaped his hands.

VERSE BY VERSE.

21. I speak. The message is forced upon him by the conduct of his critics in Corinth.—By way of disparagement, as though we had been weak. The expression is intensely ironical. You have extended to these smiters and enslavers a tolerance I could never ask at your hands.—Yet whereinsoever any is bold, I am bold also. Whatever claims the critics at Corinth are bold enough to make, I am able to do better. If they can boast, I have more to boast of. I speak in foolishness. Here Paul gives his idea of boasting Yet speaking in the foolish way, I possess every qualification on which they pride themselves

22. Are they Hebrews? One who speaks the Hebrew and is of pure descent. Some Jews spoke also the Greek. Refers also to nationality.—Are they Israelites? Are they attached to the covenant privileges of his nation? Are they worshiping the true God?—Are they the seed of Abraham? This phrase suggests the promise made to Abraham. Are they the inheritors of the promises, of the Messianic hopes, and the kingdom of God?

23. Are they ministers of Christ? This refers to his opponents' claim to have a closer connection with Christ than he had.—I speak as one beside myself. The expression is stronger than the one in verse 21. It is a sort of apology for his boasting.—I more. He is a minister of more parts, greater power, and he gives the reasons for the claim.—In labors more abundantly. In a larger field, and with greater results.—In prisons more abundantly. Some of these imprisonments are not recorded. One recorded in Acts before the date of this letter and two later.—In stripes above measure. Some are recorded in Acts 16:22, 23.—In deaths oft. Perils of death. As for example Damascus, Antioch, Iconium, Berea, etc.

24. Of the Jews five times received I forty stripes save one. See Deut. 25:3 for the legal number. The scourge was made with three thongs Great care was exercised so as to not exceed the legal number

25. Thrice was I beaten with rods. This was the Roman scourging.—Once was I stoned. At Lystra, see Acts 14:19.—Thrice I suffered shipwreck. These have not been recorded, for we do not have them mentioned in the book of Acts up to this time.—A night and a day have I been in the deep. This may refer to a time after a shipwreck when he floated on a raft.

26. In perils of rivers, in perils of robbers. From the sudden swelling of mountain streams, or flooding of dry water-courses. The tribes inhabiting the mountains were notorious for robbery. Paul may have met them on his missionary journeys.—In perils from my countrymen. See Acts 8:23, 13:45-50; 14:5; 17:5 etc.—In perils from the Gentiles. See Acts 14:5, 19; 13:23.—Among false brethren. See Gal. 2:4. In the first case of his countrymen many references could be given.

27. In labor. and travail. See 1 Thess. 2:8. 2. Thes. 3:8. These were connected with the former making them all the more intense.—In watchings. See Acts 16:25; 20:7. Repeated nights of sleeplessness from pain and anxiety.—In hunger and thirst. These are the things Paul had to endure while working among the churches.—Nakedness. Not sufficient clothing to protect him on his journeys.

28. Beside those things that are without. The things which are left out of my story. Things too numerous to mention.—Anxiety for all the churches. The letters to the Corinthian church show how many things he had to be anxious about.

29. Who is weak, and I am not weak? My sympathy is so keen that I suffer with others.—Caused to stumble. Led to sin Caused to do wrong.

30. If I must needs glory. His boasting was forced upon him. It was a duty.—I will glory of the things that concern my weakness. My opponents glory in their strength; I shall glory in my sufferings.

31. The God and Father. He calls God to witness to the truth of this summary of suffering.

32. In order to take me. This was his first trial and it was a peculiarly trying experience for Paul.

33. In a basket. A rope basket or hamper, as the word indicates.

TEST QUESTIONS.

1. Why does Paul give this account of his suffering?
2. Wht sufferings have been recorded?
3. What had Paul in greater measure than his enemies?
4. What is the meaning of verse 21?
5. What is the meaning of verse 29?
6. Are Paul's words about himself boasting?
7. Was Paul complaining?
8. How do your trials for Christ's sake compare with Paul's?
9. Why did Paul write Second Corinthians?
10. What is your impression of Paul's argument?

Human Suffering

The Lesson in Today's Life.

BY ASA McDANIEL.

IT IS a law of all love, human and divine, that he who has the highest privilege in life must suffer in the sorrows and for the failures of his beloved, even as he also rejoices in his joys. This is the meaning of the cross of Christ. It shows us something of the horror of all sin, and stirs us out of our dull indifference and apathy and transforms all our judgments about human life.

The problem of suffering is as old as the world. The Jews always regarded it as a sign of God's disfavor. The book of Job as well as many lesser statements, are attempts to solve the problem of the ages. One of the great unknown prophets of Israel clearly saw that suffering is a blessing in disguise. Hard was the lot of this stranger prophet, despised and downtrodden in a foreign land. Most of his countrymen had lost sight of God. They were rich and prosperous, he was poor and downtrodden. Was he, then, deserted by Jehovah, and they in favor with him? God forbid! In this moment of crisis there dawned on the darkness of that lonely soul the greatest revelation in the Old Testament, the truth that he who loves most, must suffer most; that the more Godlike a man is, the more will he be tortured by the sin of the world. To suffer thus is God's own life, and blessed is his servant who can share that privilege.

There is so much suffering if we take life as a whole and not piecemeal, that, without the cross of Christ, a man who thinks might well be crushed by the load. This is surely true, even though we believe that the joys of life far out-weigh its sorrows. But the cross of Christ transforms suffering. It assures us that not one sorrow is ever wasted or useless; but that in the wisdom of God, which we cannot fathom ,it is working out the redemption of the world; is drawing man up to glories beyond and ever beyond; to sublime heights scarcely dreamed of by men.

Paul believed this at least; for standing on the summit of this mount of privilege he shouted to the Romans: "For I reckon that the sufferings of this present time are not worthy to be compared with the glory which shall be revealed in us."

A New Honor for Professor Athearn.

From a bulletin issued by the International S. S. Association it is learned that Prof. Walter S. Athearn has become the superintendent of the educational department of the International Sunday-school Association. He undertakes this task without any financial remuneration and with the understanding that he is not to be assigned to field work as are other representatives. Nevertheless, at certain times during the year Prof. Athearn will be available. The educational department has to do with the erection of educational standards and the establishment of educational policies.

Midsummer Rally Day at Goldfield, Ia.

It is a brave school that ignores the seemingly inevitable "summer slump" and plans a midsummer rally. That is what the school at Goldfield, Ia., did this year. R. B. Hyten leads in this work. The school has an enrollment of an even hundred, but on this special day had an attendance of 203, with 181 on time. Of this total eight visitors were present from other schools. The record for the day, as regards efficiency and numbers, was made by the Young People's class, with an attendance of forty. The Men's class stood second in point of efficiency with fifteen present, while in numbers the Loyal Women stood second, with twenty-eight present. One person attended this session who had not been present for forty-five years, another who had been missing for twenty-seven years. Another rally is being planned for September.

Three New Life-line Christian Endeavor Societies.

The Christian Endeavor society of the Park Avenue Christian church, East Orange, N. J., has become a Life-line in the Foreign Society. Evangelist "Isaac" at Damoh, India, will preach the gospel for them on the foreign field. The Ocean Park, Cal., Endeavor society has assumed the support of Evangelist Njoji, Lotumbe, Africa, thus becoming a Life-line society. The organization at Warrensburg, Mo., has just taken up the support of the evangelist Rajish war, at Harda, India.

Training School at Bethany Assembly, Ind.

This is training school week at Bethany Assembly, Bethany Park, Ind. This is a fitting manner to wind up the season at Bethany, with emphasis on the teaching function in religious work. Garry L. Cook, Indiana's Sunday-school and Christian Endeavor superintendent, is dean of the school, and the following are some of the speakers and experts who are making the week memorable: Miss Hazel A. Lewis, Miss Cynthia P. Maus and W. J. Clarke, all department superintendents of the Bible-school departments of the American society; Alva W. Taylor, of Columbia, Mo.; F. D. Kershner, of the Christian-Evangelist; E. B. Barnes, pastor at Richmond, Ky.; H. O. Pritchard, president of Eureka; A. McLean and E. W. Thornton, of Cincinnati; Mrs. Ida W. Harrison, of Lexington, Ky., and Claude E. Hill and Frank M. Lowe, Jr., of the national Christian Endeavor organization. International certificates will be awarded students at the school upon complying with certain conditions. Prizes will be awarded Bible-schools for largest mileage traveled by members present and matriculated in the school. Prizes will also be given to Endeavor societies on similar conditions. Garry L. Cook and his aides deserve hearty appreciation and commendation for the work they are doing toward bringing Indiana up to modern standards in religious education.

September 17 Sunday-school Rally Day for Ohio Schools.

The Ohio state convention at Mt. Vernon voted that each Sunday-school of Ohio plan and observe a Rally Day during the month of September All schools are asked by W. H. McLain, state superintendent, to plan for a rally for September 17. A rally on this date will be an excellent preparation for promotion day the following Sunday. Previous to September 17 suggestions for preparing for the day will be sent by Mr. McLain to each superintendent in the state.

—Russell F. Thrapp, pastor at First Church, Los Angeles, Cal., writes that a public reception was tendered to the former pastor of that church, A. C. Smither, on August 4. Mr. Smither's family were also included as guests. The Smither family are spending the summer in Los Angeles, where Mr. Smither ministered at First church for twenty-one years. The reception also celebrated the twenty-fifth wedding anniversary of Mr. and Mrs. Smither. Speeches were made on this occasion by Mr. W. H. Wagner, who was present at the wedding, by Mr. Thrapp, by Mrs. Sarah E. Clough, mother of Mrs. Smither and the only living charter member of First church, and by Mr. and Mrs. Smither and son Chester. Mr. Thrapp writes that Mr. Smither is in exile in the city of Saint Louis, and that "the hope of some day returning to the western coast keeps him alive, body and soul."

—Walter Scott Cook, who leads in the Wilkinsburg, Pa., church sends word that Miner Lee Bates of Hiram College, is to lead this church in the dedication of its new $43,000 building on September 24. President Bates dedicated the church at Nelsonville, O., in 1908 under Mr. Cook's ministry. The Wilkinsburg pastor writes that an aggressive campaign is planned to follow the dedication, a part of which campaign will be a meeting led by W. H. Boden. Mr. Cook recently spent two hours with his father at Mungen, O., and preached for him in his pulpit on July 23—just twenty years after his first attempt to preach, in the same pulpit. He reports that he had twelve people in his audience who had heard him in the earlier effort and "had courage enough to listen to him again." They told him that they had forgiven and forgotten what he said!

The Debate at Canton

Invited by the management of the "Doctrinal" Congress" C. C. Morrison, the editor of The Christian Century, and S. S. Lappin, editor of the Christian Standard, discussed at Canton, Ohio, last week the proposition of receiving unimmersed members of other evangelical churches into the membership of churches of Disciples. The debate occupied two sessions of the Congress, afternoon and evening Mr. Morrison led off with a fifty minute address, followed by Mr. Lappin with an address of the same length. In the evening Mr. Morrison spoke twenty-five minutes, Mr. Lappin thirty-five minutes and Mr. Morrison closed the discussion with a fifteen minute summary. Large crowds attended both session. Dr. Abram E. Cory acted as moderator, declaring in his introductory remarks that he considered the debate as a revival of the open forum of discussion for which the Disciples were more noted in the earlier days than today. Dr. Cory asked that all applause be repressed during the discussion. His rule was followed without a single exception. The finest spirit prevailed throughout. Mr. Morrison in opening said that he welcomed the invitation to participate in the discussion regarding it as a sign of a new and better day among Disciples when the vituperative discussions which have characterized our journalism would give place to friendly face to face talking over of our differences. Mr. Lappin in opening praised Mr. Morrison's courage in being not only willing, but eager to come to a Congress overwhelmingly of a contrary mind from his own to bear testimony to his convictions. The debate closed with similar gracious expressions from both disputants. On all hands there seemed to be great joy, when the debate was ended, that it had been conducted in such manifestly good spirit. There was probably not a person present, whatever his type of theological conviction, who felt that anything but good could result from the discussion. The debate was taken down stenographically, and it is our hope that it may be given in some form to the larger public.

Church Extension Fund Rapidly Growing

During June the new receipts for Church Extension were $22,398.07. Of this amount $20,250 was from Annuities and $1,200 from Bequests. The Annuity Fund is very popular and is nearing a half million and is now $465,690.09.

An Annuity of $14,500 was given by Wm. L. Powell, of Lebanon, Indiana. He is 73 years of age. He is not a member of the Christian Church, but thought this was the best investment he could make at his age. He is really happy over his gift. It may be the means of his entering the Church of Jesus Christ before he dies. This is a generous gift on his part If men of the world have such a vision what should we not expect from Christian people! The Board and the mission churches needing buildings are grateful for this magnificent gift.

At the July Board meeting the following loans were granted: Hampton, Ia., $5,000 at per cent; Lonoke, Ark., increased to $1,500; Jamestown, Ky., $400 at 6 per cent; Glendale, Ariz.. $2,000 at 4 per cent; Polo, Mo., $2,000 at 4 per cent; Woodville, Texas, $800 at 4 per cent; Hunnewell, Kans., $1,500 at 4 per cent; Cicero, Ind., $2,000 at 4 per cent; Nacogdoches, Texas, $750 at 4 per cent and Marquette Park, Chicago, $7,500 at 4 per cent; Galveston, Tex., $12,500 at 4 per cent.

The following loans were closed in June as the buildings were completed; New Kensington, Pa, (General Fund) $5,000; Cadiz, Ohio, (General Fund) $3,000; Lambert, Miss., (St. Louis, Mo., Union Avenue Church Fund) $500; Bicknell, Ind., (Annuity Fund) $4,000; Mt. Vernon, Mo., (Paul Austin Mem'l Fund) $1,500; Portland, Ore., Kern Park Ch., (Paul Austin Mem'l Fund) $1,250; Streator, Ill., (General Fund) $3,500; Attica, Kansas, (M. H. Shelton Fund) $1,250.

There is a new plea for Church Extension this year. The Board should be encouraged by this offering to do some generous things in the way of needed buildings in Latin America. Our first missionary went to Alaska on June 25. The Board promised him, when he met the Board at a special meeting in Kansas City early in June, that he should have adequate support in the way of buildings.

Will the pastors and correspondents please order their supplies? Good literature "Lifting The Lien" and envelopes will be sent free.

Address G. W. Muckley, 603 New England Bldg., Kansas City, Mo.

—Madison A. Hart was the chief lecturer at the 1916 Seventh District (Mo.) Retreat, held at Camden Point the last week of July.

—Charles A. Stevens of the Flanagan, Ill., church, is making special plans for Labor Sunday. The meeting will be held outdoors, and features will be a special speaker and music by the Flanagan band. Mr. Stevens reports excellent Sunday evening meetings through the summer, these being held in the open.

—The second Sunday in September is the date set for the dedication of the new house of worship of the Oak Cliff church, Dallas, Tex. F. M. Rains will be the dedicator, assisted by L. B. Haskins, the pastor.

—T. J. Allen has been superintendent of the Sunday school at Charleroi, Pa., for twenty-five years, and recently left the work to make way for a younger man. E. N. Duty is pastor at Charleroi, and he writes that Mr. Allen has several times before urged that he be released from this responsibility.

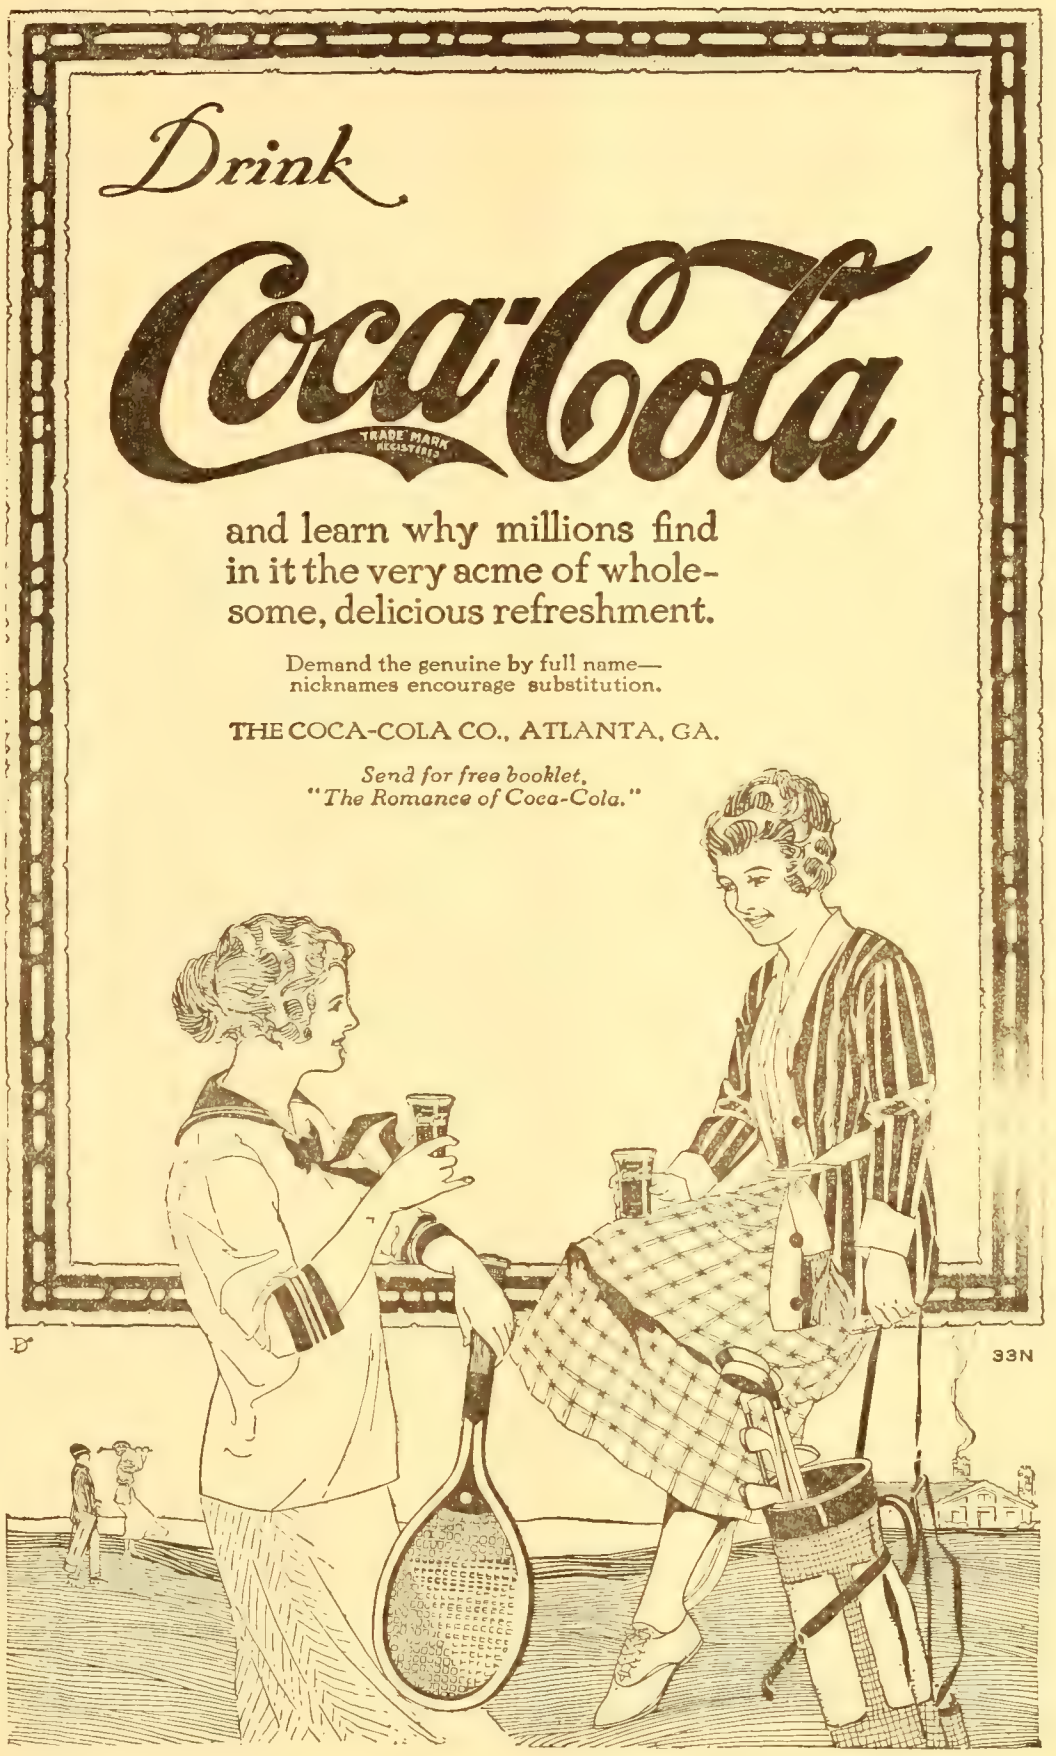
—The Norwood church, Toledo, O., to which J. J. Tisdall ministers, recently held a dedication service for a brilliant electric sign which burns forth the message "Others" to the Toledo public. In dedicating this sign Mr. Tisdall said, "When a church fails in its mission to stand for others and shows to the world a selfish, narrow spirit of living unto itself, that church deserves to die." The Norwood troop of Boy Scouts were present in uniform at the dedication meeting. Open air evening meetings are proving a great success at Norwood.

—The Cuyahoga, O., County Sunday School Association provided over a thousand Bibles for Cleveland soldiers at the Mexican border.

—During the first three months of Gilbert Zink's ministry at Onargo, Ill., the Sunday school has been doubled in membership.

—Mrs. Rose Goslee, superintendent of the secondary division of the Sunday school at Hot Springs, Ark., was a member of the graduating class of the Training School at Lake Geneva, Wis., this year.

—The Disciple churches of Lincoln, Neb., have organized a City Missionary Society. T. A. Maxwell has been employed as evangelist.



—B. H. Melton of Richmond Va., has received a call to the pulpit being vacated by E. B. Bagby, at Twenty-fifth Street church, Baltimore, Md. Mr. Melton has made a record in Richmond, not only in his church field, but as a member of the vice commission which has won real results during the past few years. He is also an active worker in the Juvenile Court. At one time Mr. Melton was president of Atlantic Christian College, Wilson, N. C.

—Prof. Walter S. Athearn will be in Des Moines, Aug. 28-Sept. 1, to give a course of lectures at a public school conference. He is spending the summer in Columbia University, New York City, as special lecturer.

—The death is reported of Harrison Hight, one of the oldest and best-beloved ministers in Southern Indiana for many years. He died at his home in Spencer late in July, at the age of seventy-five. Among the pastorates occupied by Mr. Hight in Indiana were at Bloomington, Ladoga and Spencer. Mr. Hight made the statement shortly before his death that he must have married at least two thousand couples, and had perhaps presided at as many funerals.

—Prof. Lewis Worthington Smith, of the English Department of Drake University, had an article on the "new poetry" in a recent issue of the Atlantic Monthly. Professor Smith is the author of two volumes of verse, and is a genuine poet, in these days of much writing.

—Cecil V. Pearce, of the church at Albia, Ia., serves as editor of the "Monroe County Organizer," which is devoted to the interests of the churches of the county. Mr. Pearce is spending part of August ministering to some of the weaker churches of the community, there being no evening services at Albia on Sunday evenings.

—Walter Scott Priest of Central church, Wichita, Kan., preached at Cheney, Kan., on the occasion of the second anniversary of the dedication of the fine building there. The date was August 6.

—M. Lee Sorey, who leads at First church, Hutchinson, Kan., preached a sermon on "World Peace," and in the course of his talk made the following statement: "I am going to try to show how the present situation, the world over, is the result of an Old Testament conception of God, of national life, of politics and of life itself, and that nothing short of a New Testament conception of these will bring about the peace for which the world craves."

—C. O. Stevens, pastor of the Park Avenue church, New Albany, Ind., delivered a sermon to the Junior Order of United American Mechanics at First church, Jeffersonville, Ind.

—W. H. Smith of the Kirkwood Avenue church, Bloomington, Ind., is spending a short time in Chicago, and attending a course of lectures at the University of Chicago.

—The death is reported of William Edwards, aged ninety, a pioneer Disciple minister of southern Indiana. The funeral was held in Jeffersonville.

AMERICAN TEMPERANCE NOTES.

Secretary L. E. Sellers spent two weeks in June in the Nebraska state-wide campaign, and two weeks in July in the Michigan campaign. It is almost certain that these two states will join the ranks of Prohibition on November 7.

Offerings from the churches are reaching the office by every mail. If every church could but have fellowship in this great work what a blessing it would be.

The work of this Board has been recently encouraged and commended by a large number of our State conventions, and the brethren everywhere have made up their minds that this enterprise is the most vital now among us and should be given the support its importance demands.

The Methodists are strong on strategy. They have now removed the headquarters of their Temperance Board to Washington City that they might be on the ground to assist every temperance measure brought before Congress. The great battles for Prohibition from this time on will be fought out in Washington.

The Temperance Society of the Presbyterian Church is enjoying the greatest year and doing the best work in their existence. What other Churches are doing our own Brotherhood should do through the one organized agency among us to help on this great work.

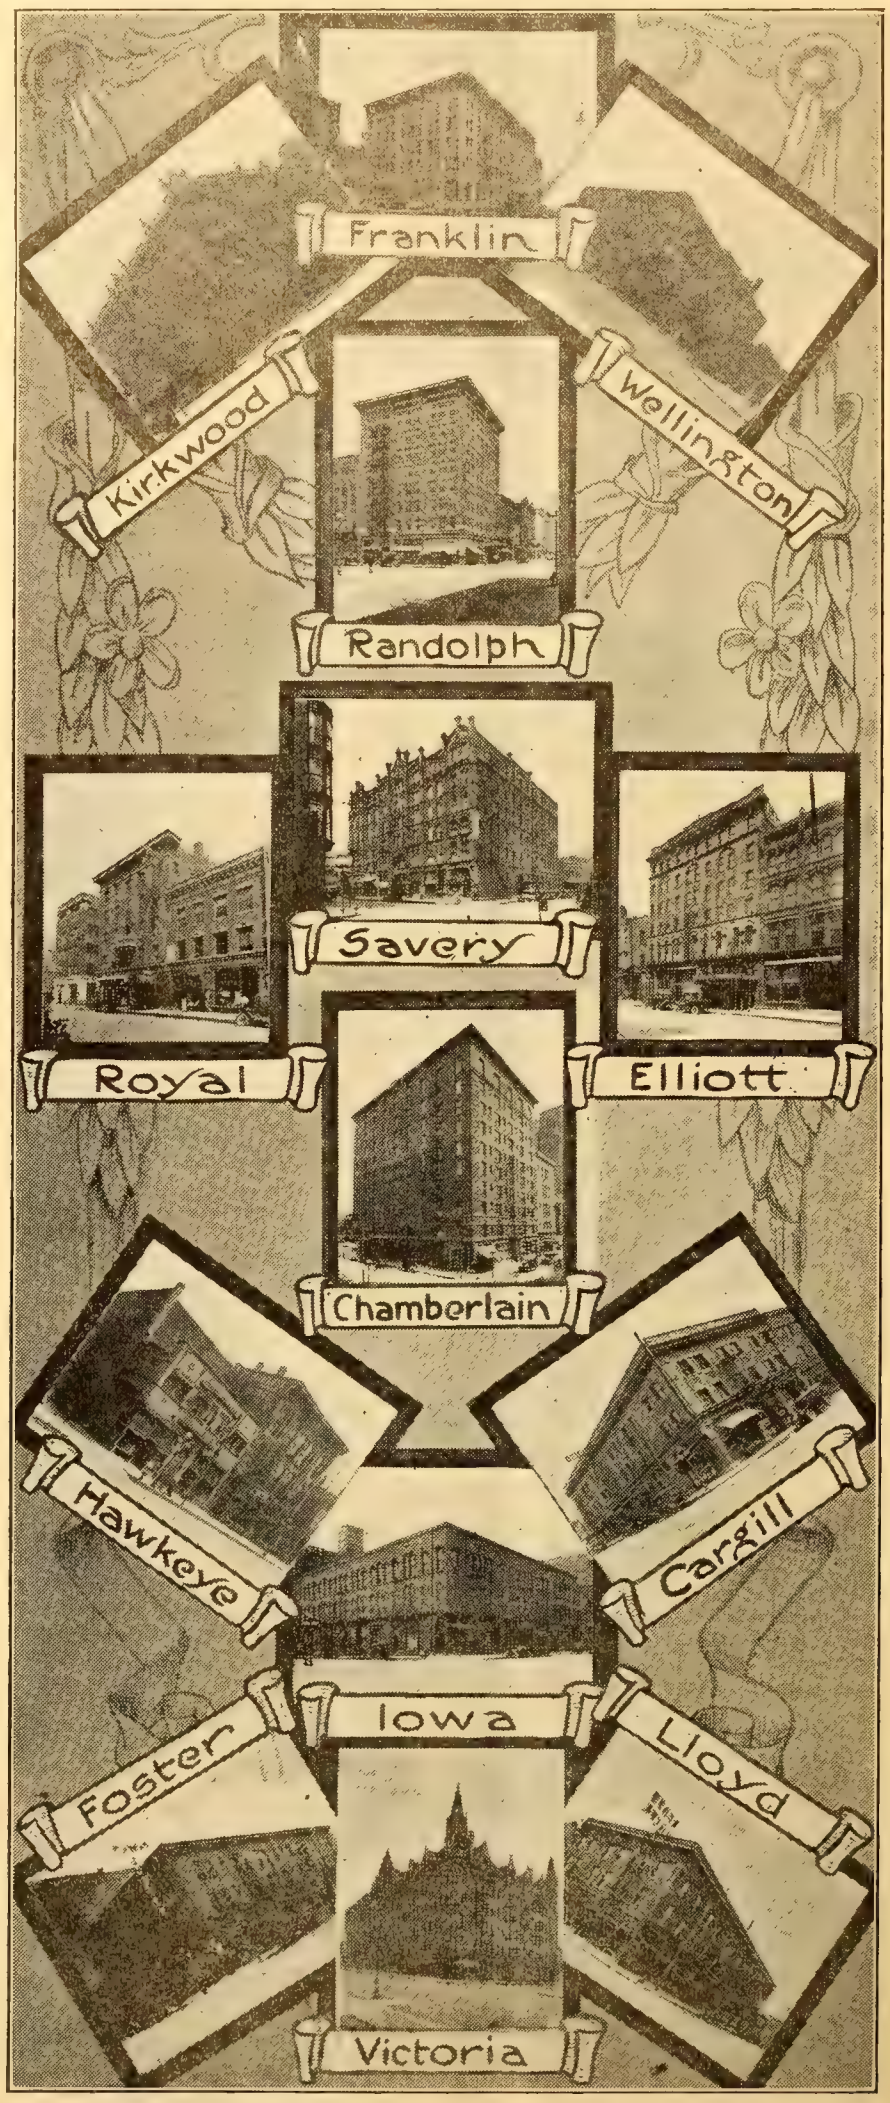
CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR AT THE DES MOINES CONVENTION.

There will be two Christian Endeavor sessions in connection with the International Convention of the Disciples of Christ. The session on Saturday night will be a joint session of the Sunday School and Christian Endeavor interests. Claude E. Hill, National Superintendent of Chritian Endeavor, will have charge of the Christian Endeavor part of the program, which runs from 7:30 to 8:30. There will be two features of this program:



(1) The introduction to the convention of Frank M. Lowe, Jr., of Kansas City, Mo., the National Field Secretary of Christian Endeavor of the Disciples of Christ, and the reading by him of the report of the National Board of Christian Endeavor for the year. This will be Mr. Lowe's first appearance before one of our general conventions. As Field Secretary he has made a very favorable impression upon our people. He is in constant demand as a convention speaker, both among our own people and in conventions of City, District and state unions.

(2) The second feature of the Saturday night program will be an address by Dr. Ira Landrith of Boston. Dr. Landrith is an ardent Christian Endeavorer and one of the great religious leaders of the nation. He is the nominee for Vice-President on the Prohibition ticket. The Endeavor session on Saturday night promises to be most interesting and helpful.

(3) The second Endeavor session will be held Sunday evening from 6:30 to 7:30 o'clock in the convention auditorium. This will be the union Christian Endeavor prayer meeting. All of our Des Moines societies are requested to adjourn their Endeavor meetings and unite in a great rally at the auditorium. Frank M. Lowe, Jr., will have charge of this meeting.

The general aim of both the Saturday and Sunday night sessions is to so emphasize the value of Christian Endeavor and its necessary place in the life of the church and to so enthuse our young people as to insure sufficient funds from the Societies for the support of Mr. Lowe as National Field Secretary during 1916 and 1917.

Board of Education at the Convention

For Saturday P. M., October 14, the Board of Education announces the following convention program.

President's report. President R. H. Crossfield.

"The Student Situation in our Colleges," President Joseph A. Serena.

"The Financial Status and Needs of our Colleges," Prof. Charles E. Underwood.

"An Educational Conscience Among the Disciples of Christ," Prof Herbert Martin.

The purpose of this convention program may be stated in a single sentence. Note this statement carefully: Christian Education is now a major factor among the Disciples of Christ and deserves recognition on the part of the churches as a major interest.

That Christian education is a major factor may be seen by the following statement of facts:

Not one of the missionary Boards will now send out missionaries who have not a college education. Therefore, colleges today fill a large place in the program of the Disciples of Christ, and the support of Christian education alone can guarantee proper preparation for mission work, and the proper cultivation of the mission fields.

More and more the great leaders of the church are college trained men. These men fill our leading pulpits in both city and rural districts. All the churches now call for college trained men. Therefore, the need for adequate support of Christian education and also the demonstration of the fact that Christian education has today large fruitage from its work.

Again, many of the great lay leaders of the church are trained in our own colleges. The great development of religious education, of instruction of the position of local church officers and of other fields of lay service, combine to make the Christian college indispensable to the future of the church. The contribution already made to the lay leadership of the church by Christian education is beyond computation.

The twenty-four educational institutions represented in the Board of Education now enrol more than 7,000 students and the growth in attendance is so rapid that in many it has forced a crisis in respect to endowment and equipment to care for them.

The twenty-four institutions represented in the Board of Education possess endowments amounting to more than $3,500,000, and equipment approximating $5,000,000 This total vested interest of $8,500,000 is sufficient alone to mark Christian education as a major factor among the Disciples of Christ. Furthermore, these institutions expend annually more than $800,000. This fact again marks Christian education as a major factor.

The immediate pressing needs of these institutions challenges the church to adequate consideration of the claims of Christian education. The income should be increased immediately by approximately $400,000. This statement of immediate need is based on a study of present conditions including low salaries, inadequate laboratory and library facilities, the need for new teachers, the handicap of inadequate administrative resources.

As rapidly as possible, permanent endowments and fairly permanent equipment should be provided to insure efficiency. $10,000,000 should be added to the endowment of these institutions within the next ten years. $5,000,000 should be added to the equipment within the next ten years. When these sums have been raised, our Christian colleges will be on the threshold of the greatest opportunity they have ever faced.

There is in the average standard college a budget that calls for expenditures so large that the tuition pays approximately one-third of this budget. No other plan can govern the finance except that of establishing classes so large that the teachers cannot do justice to the young people and by limiting the number of courses to such extent that the whole educational work of the college would be wrecked. The need therefore of large support in gifts to endowment, equipment and current expense funds is clearly seen.

In the statement of purpose noted above, attention was called to the fact that Christian education is now a major factor among the Disciples of Christ. The facts herein presented we believe sustain this conclusion. There is one weakness in our present situation and that is that our churches and our individual members have not as yet recognized Christian education as a major interest. This has been due in part, at least, to the fact that until recent years, there has been no successful co-operation of these educational institutions in a nation wide propaganda for recognition.

Nor have these institutions co-operated until recently to the end that they might stimulate each other and enlighten each other in respect to standards of administration and education to compel the respect and support of our own Christian people. This deficiency the Board of Education, in small part actually, in large part potentially, supplies. Through this co-operative work, the Men and Millions Movement makes its plea for increased endowment for our colleges. Through this co-operative movement, the executive heads of the several educational institutions confer on common administrative and educational problems. Through this co-operative movement, the cultivation of every church in the brotherhood for Christian education makes rapid strides. By participation in the Joint apportionment, the gathering and publication of statistics and the general work of correlation, the Board has already made a splendid beginning.

Some time in the next few years, the Board of Education will call to its leadership ,as general secretary, an Educational Prophet who will give his entire time to deepening an educational conscience among the Disciples of Christ, and to strengthening the administrative and educational work of all the constituent institutions of the Board of Education.

A Notable Success

The welcome that has been given by the leaders in the churches and Sunday schools to the little book just issued by the Disciples Publication Society:

"The Training of Church Members"

is evidence that this text has come to meet a very definite need in the churches.

The following are typical letters received from leaders concerning the book:

FROM REV. H. CLAY TRUSTY, Seventh Street Church, Indianapolis: "I have examined thoroughly the manual, "The Training of Church Members," and think it a very fine thing. We need to spend some time with young Christians on the fundamentals of our Christian religion and church life. This affords a splendid guide."

FROM REV. L. C. MOORE, Waterloo, Ia.: "This book is filling a long known need in our mid-week service. I am more than pleased with it. The attendance was doubled in four weeks by the use of the text."

FROM REV. IRVING BROWN, Sac City, Ia.: "I am much impressed with it. Shall introduce it either at the C. E. or mid-week prayer-meetings. We all need the training it supplies."

FROM REV. L. J. MARSHALL, Wabash Ave. Church, Kansas City, Mo.:

"This is a timely piece of work. Its clear and simple presentations of the lessons to be taught should make it popular among Christian workers."

How You May Use This Text:

(1) As a book of study in your mid-week or Endeavor prayer-meeting.

(2) As a text-book in your young people's Sunday school classes.

(3) As a text for study in a special "Pastor's class" organized for training of young Christians and meeting either through the week or on Sunday.

(4) As a teacher-training course.

Disciples Publication Society

The Disciples Publication Society is an organization through which churches of the Disciples of Christ seek to promote undenominational and constructive Christianity.

The relationship it sustains to the Disciples is intimate and organic, though not official. The Society is not a private institution. It has no capital stock. No individuals profit by its earnings.

The charter under which the Society exists determines that whatever profits are earned shall be applied to agencies which foster the cause of religious education, although it is clearly conceived that its main task is not to make profits but to produce literature for building up character and for advancing the cause of religion.

The Disciples Publication Society regards itself as a thoroughly undenominational institution. It is organized and constituted by individuals and churches who interpret the Disciples' religious reformation as ideally an unsectarian and unecclesiastical fraternity, whose common tie and original impulse are fundamentally the desire to practice Christian unity with all Christians.

The Society therefore claims fellowship with all who belong to the living Church of Christ, and desires to co-operate with the Christian people of all communions as well as with the congregations of Disciples, and to serve all.

* * *

The Christian Century, the chief publication of the Society, desires nothing so much as to be the worthy organ of the Disciples' movement. It has no ambition at all to be regarded as an organ of the Disciples' denomination. It is a free interpreter of the wider fellowship in religious faith and service which it believes every church of Disciples should embody. It strives to interpret all communions, as well as the Disciples, in such terms and with such sympathetic insight as may reveal to all their essential unity in spite of denominational isolation. The Christian Century, though published by the Disciples, is not published for the Disciples alone. It is published for the Christian world. It desires definitely to occupy a catholic point of view and it seeks readers in all communions.

Annual Offering for Church Extension

Begins Sunday, September 3rd

"AN APPEAL TO REASON"

Are figures dry? Not when they tell the story of a live subject. We challenge any person who loves the Kingdom of God, and wishes to see it permanently built up and its borders continuously extended, to read the following Church Extension facts and figures and not be interested in taking the Church Extension Offering in September.

GAINED.

1. In 27 years 1,814 churches have been built in the United States and Canada.
2. 1,156 of these paid their loans in full, aggregating $1,864,903.34.
3. There is $1,195,868.98 in the Fund.
   There is $1,864,903.34 returned on loans.
   Therefore $3,060,772.32 of work has been done in 27 years. The churches aided raise $2 for every $1 loaned. Therefore, the churches borrowing this $3,060,772.32
   have raised. $6,121,544.64
   bringing into existence. $9,182,316.96
4. These Missions, while building their church homes at a cost of over $9,000,000 have given over $1,195,000 to missions, benevolence and education, 91 per cent of them gave.

LOST.

1. In the last ten years there have been 1,601 churches appealing, yet unanswered for lack of money.
2. Had we answered them as we did the 1,814 opposite, and had they given as well as the 1,814 they would have produced $8,000,000 of church property, and would have given $1,053,458 to missions and benevolences.
3. By failure to help these 1,601 The Kingdom has lost over $9,000,000.

RESOLVED, That to atone for past neglect our Church will raise a liberal offering for Church Extension some Sunday in September.

Education and Life

"WHAT SCHOOL SHALL I CHOOSE?"

At this very moment, this question is agitating the minds of many parents and many young people. Some young men aspire to make a foot-ball team. They will not consider anything, therefore, but a school which emphasizes athletics. Some young women have heard of the wonderful parties and dances at another school.. This will determine their choice. The parents are more apt to be thinking of ideal values in education.

There is no subject on which people can develop more lively differences of opinion than on the subject of education. The true education is just as nebulous and uncertain in its quality as is the true standard of living. So long as people differ about life, they are very apt to differ about education.

The Greeks divided all education into two parts, the development of the body and the development of the mind in aesthetic appreciations. Physical training was believed to be helpful in mental development; this we now know to be true.

During the revival of learning, in the Middle Ages, great stress was laid upon language study. The habit of learning "dead" languages was at that time formed, and has been continued in modern times, often with no better reason than that the ability to quote Latin is a mark of culture. There are men who might study the classics and relate them definitely to life. There are other men who never could.

Education has often been stubborn and conservative. The English once had a form of business association called compound partnership. For two hundred years after this kind of association ceased, the arithmetics continued to carry a section on compound partnership because the working of these difficult problems meant great development to the mind!

Educators have often been stubbornly suspicious of utilitarian education. It has been assumed that the study of some rare crystal is very cultural, the knowledge of the chemistry of a loaf of bread being coarse and vulgar. The state university has made its contribution to education by opposing this absurd attitude. It has ventured to employ contemporary processes in education, just as the kindergarten does for little children; and the thousands in attendance on these schools are a testimony of the appreciation of the people.

Religious schools once hedged their pupils in with rules without number. Reacting from this, there has come the "broad" school which is indifferent, or nearly so, to the moral influences at work among the students. These too have missed the point. Education is life. A school cannot afford to be indifferent to the moral and spiritual needs of its students. It may not meet these needs by rules and special enactments.. It is certainly under obligation to care whether its students are drunken, or dishonest, or profligate. A school that does not care has not only a narrow view of education, but also a socially dangerous view.

It is now regarded by our best leaders in education as heresy to talk as if education is preparation for something. Education is life itself. The man who spends until he is thirty getting ready to live has wasted much time. Even in college and university, he ought to live a normal life, recognizing social obligations, seeking in every way the best things. It is not a time to break down the physical health by lack of exercise, to dwarf the social nature by endless devotion to books, or to become in any other way warped and eccentric. More than one specialist has lost his soul in the pursuit of his special knowledge. He wonders why his talents are despised by the world. It is because he is only partly a man. He is a mental hunchback.

Is religion to be included in a program of education? It is when education is defined as the imparting of specialized information, and religion is defined as the teaching of specialized doctrines, that we find a great chasm between religion and education. When we say education is just life and when we say religion is life, we no longer find a reason for an educated man being indifferent to religion, any more than we find justification for a religious man ignoring education.

Most men are religious in some respect. Most systems of education both primitive and modern have found some place for religion. These facts make us suspect America's divorce of religion and education. This divorce is the result of our sectarianism. It springs neither from any deep conception of what the educational process is, nor from any true perception of the importance of our religious differences.

In no one thing is the Roman Catholic church so criticised as in its rejection of our public school system. Their substitute does not impress us as valuable, but there is ground for their instinctive reaction against an education leaving out the most important element of life, ethics and religion. Our American education is producing its own harvest. By some method, the intellectual, moral and spiritual values must at last all be united in a comprehensive system of training our youth.

If our sectarianism persists, we must at last find some mode of co-operation between the church and the state in education. Great educators feel the need and are now working at the problem. Perhaps the true solution has not yet been found. It is well for us all meanwhile to be discontented with regard to our schools. We shall never be truly happy over American education until a child may live his whole life, and not a part of it, in school.

Religious people have a contribution to make to educational theory in offering to the world their faith in what life really is when at its best. What is there in us which we may well allow to atrophy and perish? What other elements in our life need development through exercise? These questions are to be answered from the stand-point of life's values as we appreciate them.. The educational expert may monopolize the matter of school-room method. It is for all of us to say what life ought to be. When with finer vision we perceive the goal of the race, through the guidance of the Holy Spirit, we shall know what education ought to be.

The Debate at Canton

A Triumph of the Christian Spirit

EDITOR'S NOTE:—Since receiving this interesting article from Mr. Jordan there has been considerable editorial perturbation to know what to do with it. It is such a fine piece of writing that it manifestly ought to be given to "Christian Century" readers. And the event of which it is a report is, in some respects, one of the most significant occurrences in the recent history of the Disciples of Christ. But considerations of editorial policy as well as personal modesty put us under inhibition in publishing the article. It is fitting, therefore, that our readers should be advised of the final motive to which the editor yielded in granting permission for the article to appear. In his first draft of the article Mr. Jordan declared at the end that, in his opinion, Mr. Morrison won the debate. When it was suggested that a judgment of this sort had better be omitted and that the emphasis be allowed to rest upon the triumph of the Christian spirit in a controversy that has for years been carried on in a scandalously un-Christian fashion, Mr. Jordan replied, "All right, I'll make the story say that both men won!" In that spirit we are sure Mr. Jordan,—though frankly avowing his own convictions on the points at issue,—has written the entire account, and it is from that point of view that we can find ample justification for allowing the article to appear.

He drew a circle that shut me out—
Heretic, rebel, a thing to flout.
But Love and I had the wit to win:
We drew a circle that took him in!

—EDWIN MARKHAM.

ALEXANDER Campbell, the most conspicuous debater on religious subjects in the past century, hesitated very greatly the first time he was challenged to a public discussion, not "regarding public debates as the proper method of proceeding in contending for the faith once delivered to the saints." He soon overcame this repugnance, however, and came to look upon the public platform as a real opportunity of giving his views to the world. He debated with pedo-baptists, Roman Catholics, free-thinkers and others on occasion, and a large part of the published utterances of the great leader is in the form of debates.

The debating habit in less worthy hands suffered by abuse. Victory was more prized than truth, and argument was often displaced by personalities. For many years now, the debate has been practically unknown in religious circles. In its place, among Disciples, has come a fawn-like timidity which has feared not only debate but any kind of discussion in which two men differed in their views. If unlicensed debate led to personal differences at times, the suppression of discussion has led to a stagnancy in the thinking of the movement which has proved too stifling for endurance. "In opinions, liberty," has ever been good Disciple doctrine.

When the suggestion first came to Charles Clayton Morrison to enter into a public debate with S. S. Lappin, editor of the Christian Standard, on the question of receiving unimmersed members of evangelical churches into the membership of Disciples' churches, he hesitated for a time, since men of his training and culture are not accustomed in these days to discuss questions in the way debaters usually employ. It seemed upon reflection, however, that the invitation was a real opportunity for the testimony he has to bear. He was reminded, too, that debating was a historic Disciple method of settling moot questions, and he felt that a debate might be conducted on a high level of truth seeking.

BEGINNING A NEW EPOCH.

The discussion at Canton, O., may not mean the revival of debating, but it certainly does mark the beginning of a new epoch in which there will be no inhibition on the free expression of religious opinion in our circles. A pussy-footing peace of compromisers is to be followed by the better peace of free men who have brought their ideas out into the battle field of discussion and allowed these ideas to win victories and suffer defeats.

The first suggestion for such a debate came from the management of the Doctrinal Congress, a gathering promoted by, and under the auspices of, the Christian Standard. The Congress was called by that newspaper for the purpose of reviving the old-time statements of the Disciples' message. The personnel of the management of this Congress was entirely conservative, and were it not for the debate, it could be said that the whole Congress passed without anything being taught that was unwelcome to the most conservative leaders.

The invitation to Mr. Morrison to speak before the Congress at Canton is the more significant in view of the journalistic controversey which has been waged for years in the pages of the Christian Standard. It has been persistently urged by that paper that no sort of recognition should be given the liberally-minded men of the brotherhood. They were to be refused calls to the churches. They were to be driven out of the colleges. A flood of ink was poured out protesting against the use of such a man as Dr. H. L. Willett on the centennial convention program. These progressive men were openly invited to betake themselves out of the church, and when it seemed too mild a recommendation to offer them to the Congregationalists, they were invited to betake themselves into the Unitarian fold.

ONE IMPLICATION OF THE DEBATE.

Yet the thing which was done at Canton was more radical than any proceeding at a national convention. Mr. Morrison was not invited to make a speech on some very pleasant theme that everyone would agree with, but he came to Canton on an invitation to state his position on a matter which affects the practice of the Disciples in a most vital way.

One ventures to hope that our controversies over opinion may henceforth be carried on without attempted excommunication.

The subject of the debate at Canton is no new one in Disciple circles. The Brush Run church, the first and mother congregation of the movement, was originally constituted of pedo-baptists, chiefly Presbyterians. When the Campbells accepted immersion, the majority followed their example. Quickly the young church, adopting the Baptist practice of immersion, adopted also the Baptist practice of an exclusive membership of the immersed only. The procedure resulted in forcing out of their fellowship a number of the choicest spirits of the movement, among them Thomas Acheson, who shared with Thomas Campbell the historic honor of having his name signed to the Great Charter of the movement, the so-called "Declaration and Address."

When the movement led by Barton W. Stone, of Kentucky, united with that of Alexander Campbell, there was in the former a considerable percentage of unimmersed people. History is silent with regard to the terms upon which these were received, but so far as the record goes, Alexander Campbell never required their re-baptism.

THE SECOND GENERATION.

In the second generation of Disciples there came about a crystallization of doctrine, with a greater insistence upon immersion, but in spite of this there have always been evidences of restlessness and discontent in the movement against the practice of restricting church membership to the immersed. The movement had begun in a protest against close communion. It has never been satisfied to end in the practice of close membership. Many times during our history, as Mr. Morrison pointed out, the "more generous attitude" has found expression. But now there is widespread feeling throughout the churches that the traditional practice of restricted membership is contradictory of the ruling ideals of the Disciples, and the new conviction is clamant for embodiment in a more generous practice. Various expedients have been devised by those churches which have chosen to make room in their fellowship for Christians who have not been immersed. Some take them into full membership. Others have adopted a basis of associate membership. Another plan is called "membership in the congregation," and in at least one church in the brotherhood this last named device is extended so as to include not only those who are members of other evangelical churches, but those of good will and Christian purposes who have never previously made any profession of Christian faith.

THE PRINCIPLE UNDERLYING THE DEBATE.

With these expedients the debate at Canton had nothing to do. It dealt in the principle underlying them all—the principle of practicing Christian union with all Christians and with all churches of Christ, a principle which is the very genius and passion of the Disciples' history.

The great auditorium of the Canton church was well filled when the debate was called to order at 4 o'clock. It was an interesting audience. There were a few greybeards, men who had grown old in the service. There were present the men who knew how to state and champion the most conservative brand of Disciple doctrine. These had seen the old days of our debating history and upon their countenances was all the interest of younger days. A fire-engine horse can never stand still when a gong is sounded, but will gallop even in his old age. So these old warriors, when they heard the gong, were alert for the discussion.

YOUNG MINISTERS PRESENT.

In the audience, too, were many young men who had gone into the ministry by a short-cut from the high school. They sat beside their young wives, and their souls were full of the good emotions of youth-time. This discussion brought trouble to their faces. Reared in the straitest dogmatic fashion, it seemed to some of them that the pillars were falling out from under the universe when it was proposed to modify in any fashion a traditional practice of the Disciples. Their hearts were open, however, for the appeal of the big, human motives.

Then there was in the audience "the new woman in theology," which is a less advertised personality than the new woman in politics. Sunday-school teachers of intelligence had gone to the meeting hoping to learn not only how to teach, but what to teach. Such as these, too, found the discussion of the big fundamentals of Disciple teaching of absorbing interest.

The most pathetic figures in that great congregation on that day were the timid souls who had been running around vainly imploring the management and the leaders of the discussion to postpone the debate indefinitely for the sake of good feeling. They were of the type who have lived softly in religion. They were as badly frightened as Little Lord Fauntleroy would be at a baseball game.

Rev. George A. Miller, of Washington, D. C., had been presiding at the Congress, but he was on his way to Illinois to visit his people and felt that he could not delay another half day to preside over the debate. It was agreeable to both Mr. Morrison and Mr. Lappin that Abram E. Cory, the noted leader of the Men and Millions Movement of the Disciples of Christ should preside over the discussions.

AN IMPRESSIVE OPENING.

When the moderator stood up there was no need for him to ask for silence. The silence that precedes the thunder shower had fallen upon the assembly.

Mr. Cory opened the meeting with two or three practical suggestions. He asked that neither speaker be interrupted with applause. He further suggested that the debate was a search for truth and it should be conducted in the spirit of prayer. The audience arose and with bowed head sought the blessing of Almighty God upon a discussion that represented the search of that audience for the Higher Will in a matter of vital moment to the Kingdom of God.

A dramatic thing happened just before the speaking began. The moderator asked both debaters to stand and the audience was allowed to applaud both at the same time. While the people cheered Mr. Morrison walked toward Mr. Lappin and extended his hand which Mr. Lappin took. The two men stood with clasped hands a moment, not in the attitude of antagonists, but as brothers. No one but a Disciple well-informed in the events of the past twenty years can understand the emotions called up by this simple pantomime.

In days gone by, the editor of The Christian Century, and the paper itself, were declared by Mr. Lappin to be aliens from the fellowship of the Disciples of Christ. The sight of these two editors, shaking hands in the presence of the Doctrinal Congress was so impressive that after everything that was said that day shall fade from memory the people who saw it will still be able to visualize that picture and all it meant. Luther and Zwingli never learned to shake hands. We live in a better day than theirs.

THE PERSONALITY OF THE DEBATERS.

Mr. Morrison is to be described for the benefit of those who never looked upon his tall figure. Of Scotch ancestry, a solid chin and a firm mouth betokened one who was willing to stand for conviction. His keen grey eyes looked steadily at the audience, until later they were lighted with a fire and passion that betokened the intensity of his feeling. His head is that of an idealist, and a phrenologist might have found the romantic bump rather prominent, if he knew where to look for it.

Mr. Lappin is a shorter man, but built to suggest power. Some of us knew that he had not come up through the manse as had Mr. Morrison. He was a child of adversity. Self-made, he had gone through an Illinois college and by sheer force of his ability had come to be editor of the paper which for many years led all other Disciple papers in size and circulation. His eyes seemed to look straight through those before him. A gleam of humor twinkled around his face which was not seen in the other man. He knew how to hit hard at an antagonist, when occasion demanded.

Mr. Morrison began speaking in such a low tone of voice that people leaned forward to hear and some called "louder." It was not a trick to gain attention, but it is the way his voice works until it is warmed with emotion and made vibrant with passion. He outlined his motives for accepting the invitation to come to Canton. He asserted that nothing but a real search for truth would guide his utterance, as he felt sure that this love of truth would also characterize the words of Mr. Lappin. He said he would not adopt the language of controversy, that he would refer to Mr. Lappin not as "my opponent," but would think of him as a comrade and a brother. This gracious approach to the discussion determined its character throughout. There was difference of opinion of the most marked sort, but no breach of the code of gentlemen or of Christians. Neither of these two Christian men had any apologies to make to the other after a keen discussion lasting through a day and an evening. The timid souls went away afterwards breathing a sigh of relief. All their prognostications of some great impending evil to one speaker or the other proved to be no more than vain imaginings.

THE PROPOSITION CONSIDERED.

The question affirmed by Mr. Morrison was as follows: "Should the churches of the Disciples of Christ receive into their membership persons who bring credentials of membership from other evangelical churches without demanding that such persons who have not been immersed in water should be so immersed before being received?"

Mr. Morrison had carried to the desk with him notes from which he spoke, faithfully adhering to the plan which he had made in outlining the discussion. He began by stating three axioms which he presupposed as accepted by all Disciples of Christ. They were:

1. The members of other evangelical churches are Christians just as truly as are members of Disciples' churches.
2. The churches whose credentials of membership such persons bring are churches of Christ, just as truly as Disciples' churches are churches of Christ.
3. The members of these churches are not without baptism, albeit a baptism imperfectly or irregularly administered.

MR. MORRISON'S MAIN ARGUMENT.

Upon these axioms Mr. Morrison did not dwell more than five or six minutes, assuming that they could be taken for granted in his argument and would be of course, conceded by Mr. Lappin. His main argument was organized under four heads and dealt with the genius of the Disciples' plea for Christian unity, with the modern social ideal which takes Christianity in terms of brotherhood, with the urgent demands of Christian missions, with the demands implicit in the present stage of the Christian unity movement, with the complex and staggering social conditions of the great cities and the rural sections, and with the desire and will of Christ. He declared that the church of today is engaged in an enterprise so vast, so human, so vital, that it was a sin against Christ and against the Kingdom of God to allow a mode of baptism to take on so great importance as to divide Christ's followers from one another.

AN APPEAL TO THE CONSCIENCE.

The argument was first of all an appeal to the hearts and consciences of the hearers. The varying theological points of view of the two speakers were nowhere better illustrated than in this. Mr. Morrison found the living testimony of God in the hearts of his audience, and in using the Scriptures he sought no mere proof-text but brought the whole Book into court. Mr. Lappin later on quoted many texts of Scripture and made these the basis of his defence. The first method would appeal to those who are still alive to the influences of the big world in which we live. The proof text method would appeal to those who handle holy scripture in a different way.

The appeal to Disciple history and precedent for the defense of the proposition was full of power. It was shown that Disciples have ever been restless under a sectarian use of immersion that did not fit their attitude in other matters. An open communion table and a restricted fellowship did not go well together.

After speaking for fifty minutes, Mr. Morrison was just in the midst of his final appeal to the Scriptures and especially to the prayer of Jesus for the unity of his disciples, when the moderator said the time had expired. He had closed his first address with great thrilling sentences. An audience hostile to his opinions had given him a courteous attention that was rapt. When Mr. Morrison finished, anxiety was everywhere visible. Would the Cincinnati editor be able to meet and overcome the arguments of his valiant fellow craftsman from Chicago?

MR. LAPPIN'S BEGINNING.

Mr. Lappin began his speech by expressing admiration for the valor of a speaker who would come to Canton and face an audience known to be out of sympathy with the positions he would take. Mr. Lappin related a personal reminiscence of days long since gone by, when the two speakers returning from a convention in the middle west had traveled together and talked together of spiritual things. He expressed the hope that the brilliant mind and facile pen of his brother editor might yet be turned to the defence of the more conservative interpretation of the Disciples' plea.

With the felicities of introduction past, Mr. Lappin sought the hole in Mr. Morrison's intellectual armor. Taking up the first axiom which had been laid down, he asserted that if Mr. Morrison would prove to him that the members of these evangelical churches were Christians, he would receive them. He refrained, however, from taking at this time anything more than a non-committal attitude toward the Christian status of the members of other evangelical churches.

He challenged Mr. Morrison to bring forth a text of Scripture in behalf of the reception of the unimmersed. At this place Mr. Lappin called attention to the lack of Scripture quotations in Mr. Morrison's address and regarded this as significant of the scriptural weakness of the position taken. "Mr. Morrison knows he could convince this audience with the Scripture. Why did he not bring it? Because he could not find it in the Book." This was one triumphant period in the address which grew in spirit as it proceeded.

THE BAPTIZING OF CORNELIUS.

The house of Cornelius was a family of the pious unimmersed. Did Peter just take them into the church, or did he baptize them? The record indicates that although they had already received the Holy Spirit, they were baptized. Thus Mr. Lappin claimed to bring forward a scriptural precedent on the contrary side of the position which was being affirmed by Mr. Morrison.

Alexander Campbell was quoted as having said that he could have found union with the religious sects long ago if he had been willing to give up the plain teaching of the Book. This, Mr. Campbell asserted, he would not do.

Mr. Lappin's illustrations were at times full of deep interest. Naturally gifted with humor, he was under restraint not to break down the dignity of the hour with any unseemly mirth. He used, as illustrating his attitude, the possibility of taking a drunken man into a total abstinence society without giving him the pledge. It would not help the man any and would break up the society. Mr. Lappin argued that in a similar way the reception of the unimmersed would affect the Disciples. It was a contravention of their habits and most sacred beliefs.

Mr. Lappin also attacked the reception of the unimmersed by asserting that those churches which practiced it were failing. Statements were made in detail of different cities, with stress upon Chicago churches. These churches were likened to a perpetual motion machine that was once put on exhibition. It was a perpetual motion machine, but it wouldn't run.

The speaker asserted that he did not need all his time, as no scriptural argument had been brought forward, and finally sat down after making a request that at the evening session Mr. Morrison would answer certain questions concerning three passages of Scripture, Mt. 28:19, 20, Acts 2:38 and Rom. 6:4.

SELF-RESTRAINT IN THE AUDIENCE.

The audience was now visibly revived in spirit. There was good cheer among the people who were opposed to the Chicago editor. During the course of Mr. Morison's address an elderly brother sitting near the front was at one time about to stand up and interrupt, but I saw his good wife by a vigorous use of her elbow bring him to order again. Otherwise the audience had been perfectly quiet through the two speeches, a most remarkable exhibition of self-restraint. At the close of the session they crowded up and congratulated both speakers upon the skill which had been shown, though Mr. Morrison was often assured, "I don't agree with you, though."

The evening session brought large numbers of the members of the local churches and some of the outside public. The audience was larger than in the afternoon and had grown in interest as well as size.

THE SECOND SESSION.

Mr. Morrison opened the discussion by referring to the three passages of Scripture which had been given him for interpretation. He made short shrift of the questions, answering categorically every one and repudiating the position which they, by implication, imputed to him. He then proceeded to make the distinction between the practice of Christian union and the practice of baptism. He had asserted in the afternoon that he held a view of the design of baptism, and of its proper mode, not essentially different from that held by Mr. Lappin. It was in the unscriptural matter of denying fellowship to people who though not immersed had nevertheless been received into the Church by the Lord of the Church —it was here that he parted company with Mr. Lappin. This distinction seemed to dawn on the audience for the first time. This was not a debate on baptism, but a debate with reference to the practice of Christian fellowship. A deep trouble settled down on the faces of a great number of people. Could the traditional practice of the Disciples be inconsistent with the ideal of Christian unity, and disloyal to the will of Christ?

Mr. Morrison gave detailed figures with regard to those churches in Chicago that practice the larger fellowship. He spoke cordially of every Disciple church both conservative and liberal, but showed that the year-book revealed far larger percentages of gain in the liberal churches. These percentages were given as they had been published some months ago in The Christian Century, and as they are shown in the year-books of five years ago and this year.

HYDE PARK CHURCH, CHICAGO.

If Mr. Morrison could have been excused for losing his temper anywhere in the debate it was at this point, but he met Mr. Lappin's reckless description of Chicago conditions with a kind but firm statement of the facts. The latter, in his afternoon address, had used ridicule in characterizing the Hyde Park church of Chicago, of which Dr. E. S. Ames is pastor. He called it a "cheese-box," and contrasted it unfavorably with Mr. Welshimer's great church whose guest the Congress was. In reply Mr. Morrison turned to Mr. Welshimer, who was on the platform, and praised the Canton pastor for his great work, expressing the pride we all felt in it; but, he declared, the Hyde Park church in Chicago is in some respects a church of greater significance to the Kingdom of God than is this splendid church in Canton. Though in an inadequate building the Chicago church stands at the front of the brotherhood in its gifts to missions and in its many-sided social interests and ideals.

When Mr. Morrison closed his speech, he put several questions to Mr. Lappin to be answered categorically. They related to the three axioms he had laid down in the beginning. Mr. Lappin was asked to declare whether members of evangelical churches, such as Methodists and Presbyterians, were Christians. Is the Calvary Presbyterian church of Canton a church of Christ? Are its members baptized? If they are not, baptized but are conceded to be members of the Church of Christ, how did they get into the Church without baptism?

REFUSES TO ANSWER QUESTIONS.

Mr. Lappin arose in good spirit and addressed himself to Mr. Morrison's questions by summarily declaring he would have nothing at all to do with them. They are purely assumptions by Mr. Morrison, he said, and until Mr. Morrison proves them by the scripture he would not consider them. The outside public in the audience looked astounded, as did many Disciples. Many of them did not know there was a brand of Disciple who would refuse to openly acknowledge evangelical Christians as being Christians. In effect Mr. Lappin denied the Christian status of these people. He said he would favor receiving them if they were proved to be Christians.

In mitigation of this seemingly ungenerous attitude, Mr. Lappin then proceeded to tell how he gave these people various courtesies, receiving them at the communion table when they presented themselves and exchanging pulpits with their ministers.

As the evening address of Mr. Lappin proceeded, his love of humor betrayed him. His final effort was a reading from various passages in Mr. Morrison's book on "The Meaning of Baptism." In this book, passages were found which seemed self-contradictory and other passages which seemed to espouse an extremely critical position toward the New Testament. Following this, Mr. Lappin took a pair of shears from behind the reading desk where he had previously concealed them, and proposed to Mr. Morrison to cut out of his Bible anything that Mr. Morrison wanted cut out. He closed by asserting that when the Bible was mutilated to suit the Chicago editor, it would belong to him and not in the Cincinnati office.

THE INCIDENT OF THE SHEARS.

The trick with the shears is now done in all the reactionary evangelistic meetings, and has failed to excite much notice in recent years. In spite of the weakened front that the conservative position showed in the evening address, there was a hum in the audience and a feeling that, at least in the matter of his book, Mr. Morrison was in too deep a hole to ever climb out.

But the closing speech of Mr. Morrison was the most powerful of all, so far as an immediate verdict was concerned. Having laid down his big propositions, he was now ready to demolish the few props left under the opposing argument. Rising with a copy of his own book in his hand, he read one single passage from his book which effectively answered every point in Mr. Lappin's critique and made the little drama with the shears look ridiculous. Every smile that had been blooming under Mr. Lappin's attack fell under a cloud. At least Mr. Morrison knew what he was about, and his book on "The Meaning of Baptism" held together as a consistent work.

Mr. Morrison referred to Mr. Lappin's generous attitude in according to unimmersed people a certain kind of fellowship. These people are given the only kind of fellowship that is known in the New Testament and denied a fellowship about which the New Testament makes no restriction at all. "Where is a church roll book mentioned in the New Testament?" challenged Mr. Morrison. This challenge left Mr. Lappin under the burden of denying fellowship in a matter which is purely a human invention, and therefore by his definitions an unimportant matter. This seemed to be a poser for those who listened.

GOOD SPIRIT AT THE CLOSE.

Mr. Morrison disposed of all the opposing argument in sight and spent the last few minutes in compliment to an audience which had heard him patiently, if not at the beginning sympathetically. He expressed good will for the editor of the Christian Standard. Mr. Lappin asked for two minutes to answer two things which he regarded as new argument in the closing speech of Mr. Morrison and Mr. Morrison generously granted this privilege. In this period, Mr. Lappin spoke generously of his brother editor and his talents, paying him a very high compliment. The two editors shook hands again and the audience, no longer able to restrain its emotions, greeted them with a great burst of applause. Each had done his best. Mr. Lappin's only handicap had been the fallacy of his position. Mr. Morrison's greatest strength was the certainty with which he could appeal to the conscience of his audience.

The people who came up to congratulate the speakers were also an interesting study. A Disciple wife (of the Canton church) and a Presbyterian husband came up to speak to the Chicago editor. The Presbyterian, a judge and a gentleman of distinction, would like to be in the same church with his wife, but cannot accept the implications of the practice which the Canton church shares with most Disciple churches. Both husband and wife warmly seconded the position which Mr. Morrison had championed.

Has the debate done harm? It is hard to see in what way. Two free men have looked each other in the eye instead of writing impersonally at each other's positions in a newspaper. We venture to suggest that they will ever have a greater consideration for each other's feelings.

BOTH SPEAKERS WON.

In the audiences of that day were young preachers who for the first time have learned that they have a duty to their evangelical neighbors which is different than that of proselyting them. These young men will always be easier to live with in their communities. In the Canton church itself, a more liberal attitude has been set forth. That light will never go wholly out. The bigger public through the secular press has come to know sympathetically the problems which the Disciples face. They may be counted upon to help when they can against any obscurantism that would divide the Christian world into hostile camps.

It is not necessary to decide who won the debate. Had Mr. Morrison failed instead of making the brilliant exposition of his position which he did, there would have been the resistless force of God to bring to pass the things that are upon his heart. The Christian interests are upon the side of the universal brotherhood of all Christian believers.

The social student soon comes out for the open fellowship. He cannot talk brotherhood and democracy in one breath and divide men from each other by a form of an ordinance in the next. The spirit of the living God dwelling and working in the souls of modern men makes of social students friends of the larger fellowship.

The missionary enthusiast is also forced to learn the lesson. A missionary conference these days is more like a conference on Christian union. There is the demand everywhere that members be exchanged freely on the mission fields. Conservative missionaries come home liberal on the question of fellowship.

No matter what the discipline, modern study leads in a path other than toward sectarian practice. It allows a place for the beautiful ordinance of baptism administered in the original New Testament way, but it allows none for the unscriptural practice of separating men and women into sects upon the basis of their divergent understanding of the administration of that ordinance.

SIGNIFICANCE OF THE DEBATE.

It may be said, therefore, that Mr. Morrison has simply told the Disciples in the striking form of an old-fashioned debate what they either already know, or will soon know, from their meditation and study in our modern world. His courage in speaking openly, in these critical days, upon the most important problem of the entire history of the Disciples is to be greatly commended.

The strength of Mr. Morrison was not in mere dialectical ability. The power of Mr. Lappin was in his manifest desire to take no unfair advantage of his brother. Each man made the Disciples proud of him that day. The friends of both disputants declared that neither had ever appeared to better advantage, for each man in Christian spirit was contending for deep convictions.

Who won the debate? Both men won, for both lived through a trying day with grace and courtesy and Christian spirit. Each has won a deeper place in the affection of the Disciples of Christ.

Motion Pictures Versus Saloons

BY P. A. JEROME.

Purchasing Agent, International Committee of Y. M. C. A., and New York Member National Board of Review of Motion Pictures.

AFTER supper is over and night falls these two forces with glittering lights and attractive exteriors on prominent corners in every city contend for the patronage of every young man. The place in which the lad of this country spends his leisure hours will hold the position of leadership for good or evil according to his choice. In many a city boarding house this question used to come up after supper was finished: "Well, what shall we do tonight? Let's go down to 'Jack's Place' with the boys." Nowadays we hear another question and answer, "What is on for tonight?" and the answer is almost a chorus, "The Movies for mine!"

The corner saloon has been known for years as "The Poor Man's Club." As some one has said, it is also his sitting room. He does not always go there because he is depraved or because he craves intoxicants. He goes in response to a desire for rest, sociability, and amusement. Settlements and Church Houses have not been markedly successful in furnishing these natural things to men.

SOLVING THE PROBLEM OF THE EVENING.

The naturalness of all this is so evident. The day's work has had its monotonous grind, its success or failure, and the average young man has felt the repression of spirits in this routine life. The leisure hour after supper brings the time of temptation.

If there is no other place to go he, and thousands of others, find their way to the saloon where they drink, and talk or listen to the music and singing. With the advent of the picture show on the street, comes a new avenue of enjoyment. Children see the posters as they come from school. Mother stops to read the announcements on the way to market. At supper the conversation turns to the pictures, and the world of interest they create. Early in the evening the family starts off for an evening packed full of enjoyment. At the "Movies" they find their neighbors, young men and sweethearts, the employers, too, and likely enough the growing boys with their "gang" are in the front seats.

After two or three experiences like this the father finds that he has had fully an evening with his family as he had alone in the saloon, although he has spent only half as much as would have gone across the bar. He has seen many things he could discuss with his wife and fellow workmen and without the usual result of a clouded brain the next morning. He has also set an example that he is not ashamed of for his son, whose surplus energies are getting beyond control.

"THE PEOPLE'S UNIVERSITY."

Religious people have been slow to recognize the splendid influence of the "movie." They also go to see the pictures without reasoning why. If you will look the next time you are comfortably seated watching the films go by, you will at once discover that this is surely the kind of amusement for which Christian people have been praying. It holds together the whole family and ministers to starved minds and spirits as well as to tired bodies. Its interests are rapidly covering the whole round globe. In North America the financial investment is over $500,000,000 and this "people's university" with 22,000 theatres supplies the recreational opportunities to 20,000,000 persons daily.

Are young men really being kept out of saloons? Do these young men prefer to spend their leisure hours in the clean atmosphere of refined entertainment or are they more inclined toward the kind of an education which comes from being lined up with one foot on a brass rail? Is it true that saloons are decreasing in industrial and residential districts? Can this change be attributed to the "movie?" Or are these claims only the fond hopes of those opposed to the saloon? Read the proofs which follow:

"What are we going to do about the Movie Menace?" asks Mida's "Criterion," of Cincinnati, the official organ of the wine and liquor interests. It continues: "That's its name (Movie Menace)—in capital letters. It is the subtle, insidious, back door gossip of the industry, and it has made a million hammers, but not a solitary horn, for the liquor business."

CRIPPLING THE LIQUOR TRAFFIC.

Is it possible to get a stronger endorsement of the influence exerted by the silent drama for morality and reform? In visualizing the havoc wrought by liquor, the screen is making it unpopular. It is decreasing the volume of liquor business to such an extent that those engaged in it are alarmed at the inroads of the "movies." So much so that to them the "movie" is a menace. The truth of the matter is that at last the saloon has a competitor which competes.

The National Board of Review of Motion Pictures which endeavors to reflect public opinion for the whole country in its work of constructively reviewing motion pictures, has recently sent the following admonition to all manufacturers and directors of motion pictures:

"Unnecessary Use of Liquor Scenes."

"A great deal of promiscuous drinking is now shown in motion pictures when entirely unnecessary for any dramatic purpose. For example, if two men meet on the street, they dash into a cafe for a drink; if a man enters his library, he at once rushes to his decanter for a drink; in a club scene the principal occupation of club members appears to be constant drinking. Advices reaching the National Board's office indicate serious objection to the constant drinking shown in motion pictures. This frequently lays open to criticism pictures which are otherwise of a high character. This constant repetition of unnecessary drinking merely indicates the limitations of the director in charge. We urge you to eliminate all unnecessary drinking incidents."

In support of this advice to the makers of pictures the National Board has secured the opinion of a number of police officials indicated below showing the results of the conflict between the saloon and the motion picture industry. In New Haven the chief of police states that "the introduction of motion pictures has taken away an enormous trade from the saloon." The report from Houston, Texas, says: "It has lessened the number of arrests and there is not so much business done in the saloons." "Decided decrease in the saloon business," says Hartford, Conn. In Jacksonville, Fla., "motion pictures have greatly decreased the amount of business done by the saloons." "A marked diminution in the drink habit among young men. In 1915, 2473 saloons were in operation and in June, 1916, the number is 2,149, showing a decrease of 124 saloons" from St. Louis, Mo. In Worcester, Mass., the chief of police says that "motion pictures have diminished the profits of the liquor dealer." In Seattle, the "Washington Post" claims that "saloonkeepers have concluded that the motion picture theatres are their chiefest enemies and in some places are combining to oppose the movies."

SOME STRONG TESTIMONY.

Magistrate Leach, of Queens Borough, New York, interestingly discusses the matter from another angle. He says: "In the second district, which includes Queens, Brooklyn, and Richmond Boroughs, in 1907, when the total population of these boroughs was 1,775,000, there were 16,000 arraignments for intoxication. Last year in the same district with a population of 2,267,625 there were only 8,382. Every magistrate in this city is commenting upon this remarkable decrease in intoxication. In courts where there were from fifteen to twenty cases of intoxication a day it is now rare to hear of more than three or four. We magistrates agree in attributing this condition to education and to the publicity given by newspapers showing the general distrust of drinkers by employers, but principally to the moving picture theatres. The workingman who formerly went to the saloon as the "workingman's club" now goes to the picture show and takes his family. That is now the chief amusement of the workingman, and not only the magistrates have noticed the effect upon the liquor traffic but the saloonkeepers themselves admit it."

HOW WORKINGMEN ARE AFFECTED.

Mr. Robert A. Woods, of the South End House, Boston, who is perhaps the most eminent social worker in the United States, says that in his neighborhood there is much less drinking among workingmen than ever before because of the influence of the picture shows.

Dr. Charles Stelzle in the "Ladies' Home Journal" calls the movies the most formidable rival of the saloon. He says that the most successful substitute for the saloon will include a complete motion picture outfit of the best type. The "Washington Times" is responsible for the testament that in the National Capital moving pictures have practically ruined the saloon business.

In New York there are 530 fewer saloons than five years ago. This is remarkable in a city which has grown to a population of over five million. On Washington Heights, after the establishment of a motion picture theatre, two saloons went out of business and a third has been running at a loss. In Ithaca, with its large college and industrial population, five or six drinking places, hitherto profitable, have closed. Newspaper reports from Washington, Providence, Detroit and smaller cities indicate that this same condition is there evident.

JACK LONDON'S BOOK NOT POPULAR.

It has been widely reported that the company circulating Jack London's story, "John Barleycorn," among motion picture houses in one state was offered $25,000 to suppress it until after election. The liquor men of Connecticut are filled with apprehension as they see their profits dwindling. They are fighting for a law compelling motion picture exhibitors to pay to the state the same license fee as the liquor dealers pay for the sale of liquor. In the business section of most large cities, the motion picture shows are wide open during the noon hour. They attract a solid audience of men who have been too often drawn into the cafes with the bribe of a free lunch and a good time. For those who have eyes to see, the moral influence of two motion pictures shows on 14th Street in New York is powerful. All day long these theaters are exhibiting pictures to crowded houses. The men are made up in a large part of those who are out of work, weak and down at the heel. For five cents they can sit for an afternoon or evening and have their spirits revived. Any observer would be convinced that the saloons in the neighborhood have lost a profitable clientele.

As complaints are registered by liquor dealers and distillers, as liquor licenses fall off and as shrewd manufacturers comment on the relationship of the motion picture to increased efficiency our opinions become convictions. Here is a positive substitute for the saloon..

OLD EVILS "DROWNED" BY THE MOVIES.

It is unnecessary to multiply witnesses; the case is not hard to prove. Look for yourself at the prosperous movie house and glance in at the thinning line before the saloon bar. A large public service is being held by the pictures. They have progressed far since the days when they were used as "chasers" at continuous performance vaudeville houses. The old "black top" tent of the carnival and the old store theater with its physical dangers have gone. In their place the public has the opportunity of seeing wonderful dramatic presentations in handsome little theatres. And not only has the saloon suffered but its side partners, the burlesque house, and indecent side show as well are victims of the pictures.

Mormons Oppose Public Schools.

President Smith, of the Mormon church, in an address at the General Conference declared the high schools of the state godless. The church has undertaken to control education in Utah. In some cases the schools have escaped sectarian control. Utah is now full of the scandal of a prohibition law defeated by the governor at the behest of the church.

What is a Christian?

BY J. R. PERKINS.

THE early followers of Jesus did not call themselves Christians. The name was foisted upon them. It all happened in Antioch, of Syria, a Greek city. A few men and women, chiefly of Jerusalem, who had known of a certain Jesus of Nazareth, became devoted to his ideals, and Antioch felt a certain force resting on it.

That pagan city saw another thing, too—a cosmopolitan crowd imbued with one idea. There were men of all nations in that crowd—men who held the new teaching; the new ideal. So the pagan city cast about for a new name and hit upon a nickname—Christians. Let us take this simple historical fact and interpret the significance of the word Christian.

THE CHRISTIAN "IDEA."

First, the early Christians, weak numerically and without business or social standing, made themselves felt in that great heathen city. How and why? By the forcefulness and carrying power of their idea—the Christian idea. And what was that idea—the Christian idea? In passing, let me say that the original idea of those Antioch Christians has passed through many and astounding modifications. It has been run into the crucible of metaphysics and philosophy; it has been made the voice of supermundane speculation, and often it has been used to bolster the very injustices that sought to slay it and that did crucify its founder. Drummond was right when he said, "Great is the mystery of that which has passed for Christianity in this world."

But what was the original idea of that little group of disciples in the pagan city of Antioch? It was nothing more than the contemplation of a new heaven and a new earth wherein dwelt righteousness. Now, in early Christian thought the word righteousness did not mean supine piety, remote spiritual yearnings, and other worldism. It had the unmistakable quality of robustness. It was a vigorous, startling idea—one that had promise of overturning, uprooting, even destroying. Substitute the word justice for the word righteousness and you get close to the early Christian idea.

RIGHTEOUSNESS DEMANDED.

But the Antioch Christians not only made themselves felt in that pagan city because of the new idea they preached. They put that idea into operation. Faith rose to action. Dr. Maclaren thinks that these Antioch Christians did not advertise themselves by ostentatious trumpet blowing. He is right. Neither with banners nor peculiar dress did they go forth and win the name, Christians. They won it because they were Christmen. They made their faith effective—efficient, if you wish the term. But I think it was not the anemic efficiency of our modern catchword.

For example, I cannot think of those Antioch Christians basing the success of their church on the petty and ineffective theological and ecclesiastical twaddle often characteristic of the church today. No, but rather did they affect the life and thought of the great city. They affected its markets, shops; its barter and gain; its whole round of social and commercial being. And the church that does not do that, the church that sits apart mumbling its worn theological shiboleths, is not a Christian church in the sense that the church at Antioch was a Christian church.

I am frank to say to you that I prefer the name disciple to the name Christian. For disciple means one who follows, while Christian has degenerated into being one who professes. None of us should shut our eyes to the fact that the word Christian has lost much of its force. The reason is not far to seek—it has been applied to so many things as far removed from the spirit and aim of Christ as one could imagine. The war nations of the hour are known as Christian nations. In them all the church is rich, powerful and allied to the state. But I do not think anybody will rise up and say that militarism is consonant with the spirit of Christ. Now, if we were disciples—followers—Jesus of Nazareth would not lead us to the bitterness and tragedy of the forces in play that shake society to its very foundations.

THE MODERN PULPIT UNWORTHY.

I want to be perfectly frank about another thing—the low tone of the modern Christian pulpit. None of us are standing up and rebuking as we should the empty assumptions that pass in the name of Christianity. While we clergymen are giving ourselves to prayer and golf society is going to hell in its lust for money, ease and entertainment. The church is just like other institutions, it is being swept into the current of superficial and popular movements and is taking on the conservative color of the staid and selfish institutions about it. If it keeps on it will pride itself more on its shrewd investments than on its regenerative influence in a community.

What is a Christian? Well, I deny that one is a Christian because he carries a hymn and prayer book, or because he drops on his knees and groans in his petitions, or because he is chairman of a committee for the suppression of vice, or because he has appointed himself the guardian of the petty in the public morals, or because he has been christened or baptized, or because he recites a creed and gives intellectual assent to the divinity of Christ.

WHAT DISTINGUISHES THE CHRISTIAN?

The men in the pagan city of Antioch were first called Christians because they were different, different from the smug easy going, conforming citizens. The difference was not one of dress, signs, symbols, grips and silly passwords. Nor was it a difference of pious eye rolling and ecclesiastical posing. It was a difference in what constitutes righteousness and justice and fraternity.

Now, just pass on to modern life and replace Antioch with Sioux City and Chicago and New York City, and the same holds good. What is a Christian here and now? He is one whose sense of righteousness, justice and fraternity rises above the dead level of commonplace morality and one whose direction of activity makes those things effective in his community. He may be minus many little tricks and acts of the ecclesiastical type, but he is a disciple of Christ in the larger and richer sense and is the only kind that makes any permanent contribution of religion to his time.

An Ideal Course

for your Adult or Young People's Class

The Life of Jesus

It is always in order for Sunday School classes to study the life of Jesus. Young people's and adult classes want the very best text that can be found. This is simply to remind them that there has never been offered to the Sunday School world a Life of Christ so practicable, so usable, sotrue to the best scholarship, so bristling with questions that wake up the pupils, so well proportioned, as Dr. Loa E. Scott's "LIFE OF JESUS" in Fifty two Lessons. This book is being widely used in Sunday Schools both of the Disciples and other religious bodies, and in Y. M. C. A. classes. This testifies to its popularity. You must have it in your school. It will create a new interest in Bible study among your young people and younger adults. Price of the book, 50c. In quantities of 10 or more, 40c each.

Spirit With Spirit Can Meet

By Joseph Fort Newton

"Lo, I am with you alway even to the end of the world." Matt. 6:20.

"Where two or three are gathered together in my name, there am I." Matt. 18:20.

"Ye shall know that I am in the Father, and ye in me and I in you." John 14:20.

MY TALK today is less a sermon than a meditation, asking you to consider certain things that have to do with our highest and deepest life. So many texts come fluttering from the rustling leaves of the Bible, each one eager to be heard, that it is not easy to select. They come with the whirr of happy wings, like doves to the window, each one bringing a token telling of a land of light and joy and freedom. Indeed, the whole Bible might serve as a text for such a theme, its pages are so aglow with those "flashes struck from midnight," those white flames kindled by noondays, and memories of those moments.

"Sure though solemn
When the spirit's true endowments
Stand out plainly from the false."

Such a meditation is surely timely, since the peril of all modern religious movements is that they are apt to be strong in organization and weak in inspiration. Plans and schemes we have aplenty, but the most perfect machinery is useless without power. Like Martha, we grow anxious and troubled about many things, and miss the heart that knows God and the spirit that through fellowship grows like him.

MODERN RELIGION WEAK IN INSPIRATION.

Many forces have been at work of late years breaking up and broadening our thought, but we are in danger of losing in depth and vividness of faith what we gain in largeness of outlook. Our thought may be so liberal that it runs to thinness and spiritual futility. No doubt the men of other days held many dogmas that have grown dim, but they had a profound religious experience, and if our feet have been set in a larger room there is the more need for a deeper life.

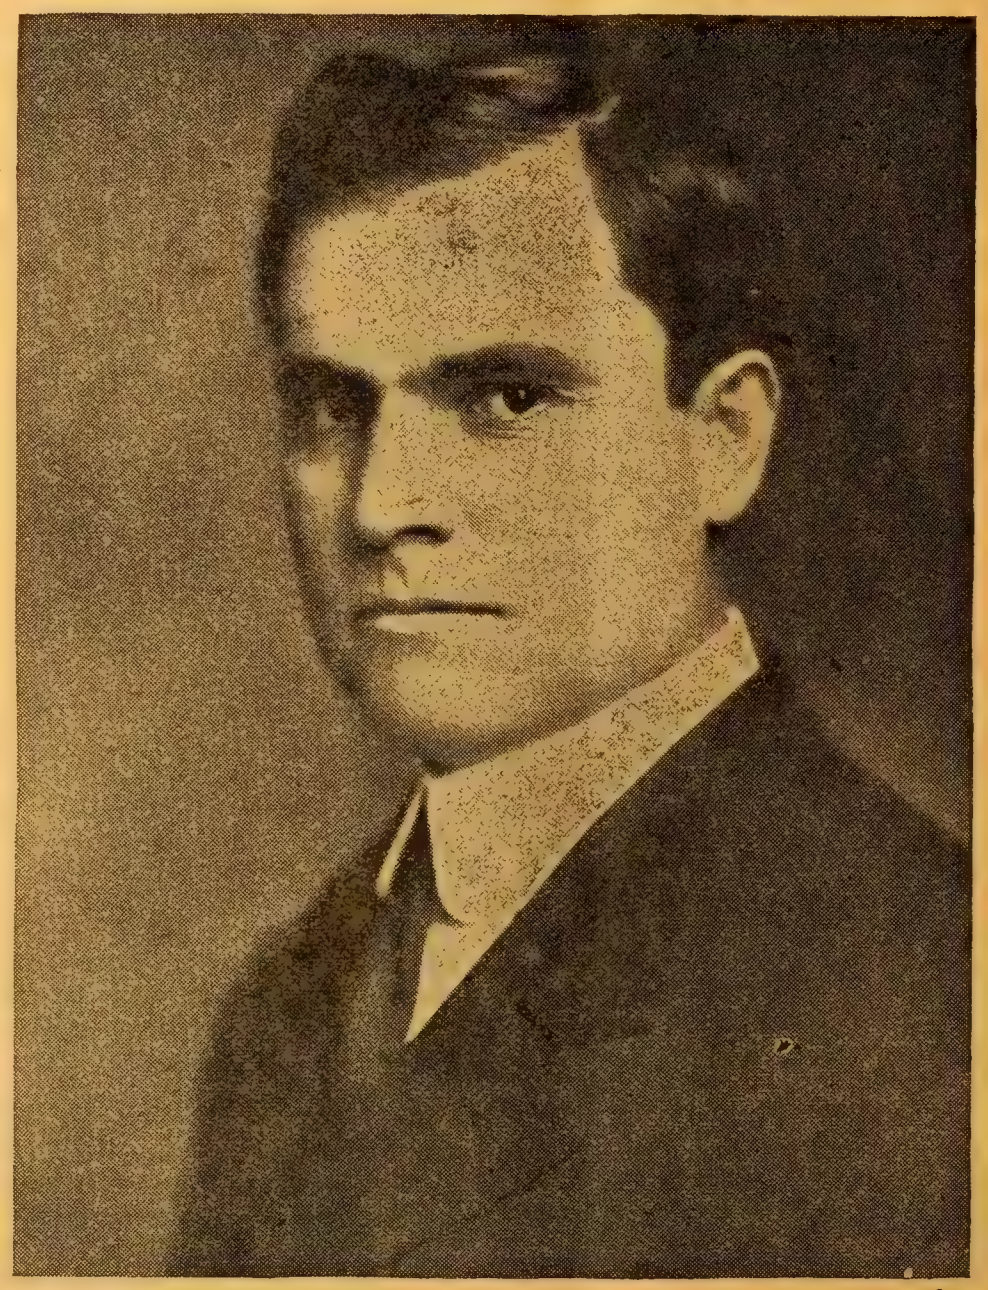
Now, as prayer is the essence of religion, so it is its origin and inspiration, and we may test our own religious life and that of our age by our faith in prayer—but also, and still more, by our practice of it. Our fathers prayed; we argue about it.

The objections urged against prayer in our time show that for many it has become not only irksome, but unreal and unrewarding. When science unveiled the vastness of nature and its universal reign of law, many felt that God was not simply far off but shut out of his own world by his own laws. Prayer became a puzzle, if not a problem.. Men who believed in thinking, and who wished to "think in believing," as Augustine put it, were deeply troubled, as we see in the life of Tennyson who groped his way in the twilight, climbing dim altar stairs that sloped through darkness up to God.

PRAYER TO MANY IS A PUZZLE.

At last, after long searching, he found the truth of the everywhereness of God, held and treasured by a few mystics in every age, and the light shone amid shadows. He saw that if all is Law, it is none the less true that all is Love, its reality revealed in the lucid and wise order of life. Hence his noble lines:

"God is law, say the wise;
O Soul, and let us rejoice.
For if He thunder by law
The thunder is yet His voice.



Speak to Him thou for he hears,
And Spirit with Spirit can meet—
Closer is He than breathing,
And nearer than hands and feet."

Lyman Abbott, in one of his Knoll Papers, seeks to make this truth real to us after this manner. A young man is going away from home, and an hour before he takes his train he has a heart-to-heart talk with his mother. Both are spirits veiled in flesh, and if each looks lovingly into the face of the other, neither really sees the invisible soul of the other. The boy takes his train, and next morning calls his mother up on the long distance telephone. She hears his voice and knows it, and they talk again, albeit she does not see his face. Next day she finds a letter from him in the morning mail. Now she neither sees him nor hears his voice, but she knows his handwriting and spirit with spirit meets without either sight or sound. Another day she has a telegram from him telling her that he has decided to take her advice. Now she neither sees nor hears him nor has his hand-writing. When her birthday comes she finds a bunch of forget-me-nots on her plate. Of a truth spirit with spirit can meet, as is every hour made plain to us.

VISION OF AN UNSEEN REALM THROUGH BOOKS.

When we go to the library and take down a great book, the grave gives up its dead and we meet and commune with the great spirits of the past—their words, like wires, bring their thoughts to us from afar. Perhaps it is the life of Socrates, and we are back in ancient Greece walking with that wise and merry old man in a time long gone. There is no joy in reading such a life, but only prostrating humility, and such sadness as one feels in the presence of one who was not only brave and happy, but so playfully wise in his mastery of the vicissitudes of mortality. And as we read, we learn that what was true in that far time is true today.

From Greece to China is a long journey, but we are sure that Socrates and Confucius would have understood each other had they met. For the slant-eyed Sage teaches the same wise and beautiful truth taught by the fat and homely Greek. At last we have a vision of that unseen realm of truth, in which we are citizens with the men of ancient days, we know that our thought is but a fragment of an inclusive experience of truth which unifies and binds together all ages and all thinkers.

Rev. Joseph Fort Newton, Litt.D., of Cedar Rapids, called to be minister of the City Temple, London, England's most conspicuous Free church pulpit. Dr. Newton has never been in England until his present visit this summer. He is a frequent contributor to The Christian Century. His messages have greatly delighted and edified our readers for a number of years.

What is true of the Kingdom of Truth, is equally true of the unseen empire of the moral life. The thunder of Mt. Sinai finds echo in our hearts today, because its deep tones of moral command are as true now as they will be ages hence. We cannot account for the awful sense of the moral law within us without finding its root in a larger Reality of Truth and Right, as Infinite voicing itself in the finite.

SEEKERS AFTER HIGHEST REALITIES.

Let us now carry this profound truth into the higher realm of spiritual aspiration and experience, for religion has its root and reality in the same eternal communion. If the prayers of men on yonder side of the Pyramids stir our hearts like music, it is because we are seekers after a like precious reality. Luther was alien in many points from St. Bernard, and yet Luther said: "In the faith wherein St. Bernard prays, do I pray also."

When Lincoln left his home city to take his oath of office, we hear him commending his friends to One "who can go with me and remain with you, and be everywhere for good," and then we see how and why it is that, despite time and distance, spirit with spirit can meet. For in God we are one, and in him we live and move and have our being as one age goes and another age comes. As Whittier said:

"All souls that struggle and aspire,
All hearts of prayer, by Thee are lit;
And, dim or clear, Thy tongues of fire
On dusky tribes and centuries sit."

Long ago William Law said that "God is more present to and in our souls than our own bodies," only we do not know Who it is that stirs within us. They err who think that prayer begins with man, for nothing in man begins with man. It is God who inspires and evokes within us the impulse to pray, as the sun draws from the sea the vapors which later return in showers of blessing.

GOD IS REAL.

The reality of God is pressed upon us by our very senses in contact with the universe, but his indwelling as the life of our life, upon whom we every moment depend, is a discovery of religious experience and reflection. Shut in by visible realities, each of us dwells, as it were, in a walled city, outside of which lies a rich country out of sight from its streets. But the walled city has gates for outlet, one of which is prayer, through which we pass into a larger, freer, sunnier land. If those gates open of themselves betimes, it is because, as Faber said, it is God who seeks us even before we seek him.

The religious man has no powers or faculties not possessed by other men, but he interprets the facts of his inner life differently. What is an instinct and impulse in all men, becomes in him a conscious quest and fellowship. All men, whether they know it or not, are unconsciously dependent upon God, else no man could live out a day. The religious man is one who is aware of that truth, and who seeks by active choice and will to know and do the will of him in whose great hand he stands.

From this point of view, prayer is not so much a problem as the key to all other problems, and the proof of it is the practice of it. The Sermon on the Mount falls, for the most part, into two main headings, like Milton's golden gate on golden hinges turning: the love of God and the fact of prayer. Both are summed up in those words which mean more than all the philosophies of the world: "Your Father knoweth what things ye have need of before ye ask him."

THE FRIENDLESS MAN.

For many a man—many more than we know—it is the worst misery of life that he does not possess a single friend who thoroughly understands him. No other person can turn the key to that secret inner chamber where his real self dwells solitary and apart. He himself is proud or shy or reserved, and so he goes his lonely way through the world, isolated, misinterpreted, thirsty for sympathy which no one seems able to bestow. Yet, however grievously misunderstood by his fellows, he can always reckon on the absolute love and sympathy of God, did he only know it. "Speak to him thou for he hears," speak simply as a little child, and you will know the truth upon which Jesus based his gospel of prayer.

Yet, strangely enough, in our day this most revealing of all truths is made an excuse for the neglect of prayer by those who say that, since God knows what things we have need of, what is the use of prayer? Certainly we receive from God without asking, and it is a mercy that he does not wait for us to ask. Nor does he need to be reminded of what is most worth remembering, of what he would leave undone did we not pray; but we need to be reminded both for our dignity of soul and our highest development.

UNCONSCIOUS CONTACT WITH GOD.

As has been said, there is in every human being an unconscious contact with God, and to that contact all moral and spiritual advance is due, as the growth of the flower is due to sun and air. But how vast the difference in depth and sweetness and joy when that contact becomes conscious communion, when instinct becomes choice and directed exercise. Such fellowship induces a fineness in our nature not known before, a rhythm else unheard, the sense of a Presence which sets us free from a great loneliness. Those who walk the quiet way of prayer know of a truth that "spirit with spirit can meet," and that in the meeting life drops its veil and reveals its worth, its meaning, and its melody.

What should we pray for? Everything, but chiefly for those things which come through spiritual channels, for they are the most needed, and once we have the one thing needful, as Jesus said, all else will be added. Better pray for everything than to pray for nothing, and live in a shallow sense of complacent self-sufficiency; pray as if we can do nothing of ourselves, and labor as if nothing can be done for us. Often we ask amiss for what we already have or for what would be our undoing, for we know so little how to pray, much less what to pray for. If we are ignorant of our present needs, still less can we foresee what will befall us in the future. To-morrow may bring a new temptation, next day a bitter bereavement, next week a long lingering illness—how can we guess what grace we shall need to bear what may come upon us?

If this is so of ourselves, how little can we know what is best for others, yet how can we come into the presence of the Eternal without having the thought of others, and especially of those nearest to our hearts? What is the highest, and what will prove best for them? We cannot tell. When we remember those who are never absent from our prayers, it must be in the faith that our Father knoweth what they need.

Howbeit, let us always remember that those for whom we pray are partakers of the same Divine nature as ourselves. God dwells in them as in us. They, as we, need to know him in whom we may be drawn closer together in a more intimate fellowship than we have yet imagined. There is an invisible union of spirit with spirit the hidden processes of which we may not trace. Of those finer laws of life, those deep registers of the soul whereby one may seek and find another afar aff, we must pray for one another, each offering himself as a medium, if need be, between God and those for whom he intercedes, as we do in the education of the little ones given to our care.

Prayer—not saying prayers—is the deepest fathoming of the soul, as it is the loftiest achievement of the intellect. Every real prayer is a force in the universe. It moves in the realm of law, as truly as the stars in their orbits, and unguessed power and blessing, both for himself and others, awaits him who will master this highest and finest of all arts.

THE PATH OF PRAYER.

At best we are only pupils in a Divine kindergarten, spelling out here a letter and there a line of profound and melodious language. For prayer, like music, deals directly with eternal reality, and happy is he who learns the scale of that melody. Above us, beyond us there are heights of spiritual achievement of which we have hardly dreamed, as in music there are "long reaches of the peaks of song" which are silent to most of us.

How vividly this been brought home to me in a study of "The Way of Divine Union," by a dear friend across the seas. For thirty years he has been an absorbed student of the great masters of the life of the spirit, led thereto by certain deep experiences of his own life which gave him a clue, if not a key, to a realm beyond my ken. He has reached only the foothills, as he humbly confesses, but what he has found fills me with a great longing for a higher and sweeter life. "Thou wouldst not seek Me hadst thou not already found me," whispered the Voice to Pascal long ago.

Ever the path lies at our feet, even the Way of the life everlasting, and for those who follow it in faith it shines more and more unto the perfect day.

"Life of my life, than self more near,
Thou veiled Presence infinitely clear;
From all illusive shows of sense I flee
To find my center and my rest in Thee."

The Christian Endeavor Societies of the whole South met in Atlanta, Ga., July 13. In spite of storms there were 750 delegates from outside Atlanta. The report of Secretary Lehman was full of good cheer. There are 2,257 societies in the twelve states of the South which have an enrolment of 76,000, and of these 26,000 are new members. The Presbyterians lead with 639 societies and the Disciples come next with 566. They propose to hold another southern C. E. convention at Memphis in 1918.

THE CASE OF DR. GAIRDNER

THE newspapers have been spending columns of space upon the adventures of Dr. Gairdner, an Episcopal rector of Austin, a suburb of Chicago. He was represented as having been drunk and having registered at a hotel with a woman of questionable character. There were intimations of other women. The rector was found wandering in the streets of Detroit and almost out of his mind.

Loyal friends took his case in hand. It was found that he was not drunk and had not been drinking. He has often helped unfortunate people, and meeting in Detroit a girl he had once aided, in company with another man and woman, he ate lunch with her in a hotel giving her further advice about her conduct. That she was not worthy of his attention is shown by the fact that on the same day she committed a theft. Dr. Gairdner returned to his own hotel. Rumor did the rest and the newspapers just about finished the career of a useful man. The vestry of the church afterwards gave a unanimous vote of confidence in their rector.

The story is not lacking in lessons for ministers of every denomination. The minister is expected to be the friend of every one in the parish. He is consulted by women in trouble with their husbands. He receives the confessions of young women who have fallen from purity. It is always possible that a man of the purest life should suddenly become the subject of the meanest calumny. That so few ministers even fall under suspicion is a tribute to the purity of the Protestant ministry.

There is, of course, the occasional man with no reality to his religious profession who uses the unique opportunities of the ministry for a life which, wearing the robes of heaven, is inwardly of the hue of hell. This man makes the work of a thousand men difficult and in some cases impossible.

Probably no kind of story could better teach the need of a married clergy. The preacher's wife is an invaluable companion in certain kinds of delicate tasks. It is well when her spirituality and her reticence commend her to struggling sinners, equally with the minister.

A BODY GUARD FOR YOUR PASTOR

DO YOU want your pastor to fail? It may be that he does not please some member of the congregation, and as a result that member is not co-operating very loyally, but instead waits sulkily for the minister's departure. Taking it out on the minister is expensive for the church.

There are few ministers who please everybody. There ought not to be any. Jesus said, "Woe unto you when all men speak well of you." Since the ideal minister is not universally liked, we must co-operate with the man who is criticised, or we risk opposing a man whom God has chosen to use.

Every pastor, whatever his peculiarities, has a right to his chance of success. To succeed, there must be a period in which his leadership is accepted and in which he is introduced to the community with warm and hearty words of commendation.

We know a certain church where fifteen people meet with the pastor for awhile before the service for prayer. They receive assignments for personal work. The "almost persuaded" person is given attention. The loose ends of the parish activities are gathered up.

This minister finds his influence multiplied many times. More than this, his personal power is intensified and deepened. The consciousness that the prayer and good wishes of the congregation follow him everywhere adds new power to his life.

There is no true success for the minister apart from the success of the church. Their interests are common. The man who is devoted to the church and would see it go forward will take no grudging or critical attitude to the leader the people have chosen, but will join his efforts enthusiastically to the labor of all those who seek the coming of the kingdom.

A COMFORTING RELIGION

PRIMITIVE religion often lived by the terror which it created and maintained in its worshipers. Christianity, on the other hand, has declared itself to be a comforting religion. The gospel is not tidings about a burning hell, but the good news of the Christ and his kingdom of love. It is not the wrath of God, but the love of God which is properly related to the gospel story.

Few are the lives that do not feel the need of this comfort. There are the people who work long hours and are always tired, such as the housewife or the factory laborer. Life becomes a dull gray for these if it is not illuminated with religious interest. The world is full of despairing souls who regard their sin as unpardonable. Having made a great failure in their moral choices, they need the comforting assurance of the gospel that God is able to abundantly pardon.

There are the people that have faced losses and crosses. Business reverses have swept away their carefully hoarded savings, or worse, they have lost their loved ones. Such as these need to get the bigger look at life so that they may appreciate how much is left after they have suffered all their losses.

The little child goes to its mother to have its pain soothed away. The church is a real mother of troubled souls when it fulfills its proper function. The pastor with deep human sympathies is soon made to realize the necessity for his keeping close to his people. It is his task to mediate the comfort of religion to needy souls.

THE HUMANITY OF JESUS

THE church was a long time in formulating a doctrine defining the person of Jesus Christ. There were various heresies which arose in the early church with effects hurtful to the religious life.

There were some who denied the divinity of Christ. These looked upon Jesus as a prophet but held that he bore no unique relation to God. This heresy did not gain the power and momentum which came to another, of which we shall speak. There were those who denied the real humanity of Jesus Christ. His humanity was only an appearance, some said. This removed Jesus from the field of human history.

This attitude has not been without its expounders in modern times. A certain school of German theology professes to be indifferent whether Jesus ever lived or not. The Christ idea is enough for them. Mrs. Eddy said a few years ago, "Jesus Christ was never born and he never died." The Christian Science attitude removes Jesus from a plane of sympathy with us.

We need a human Jesus. So long as he was a crucified god who went away on the clouds with a halo about his head, men almost forgot him. In their despair, they learned to pray to saints. The revival of interest in a human Jesus has brought a decline of interest in saints. The Christian world is being filled with books expounding the career of Jesus among men. Some may even take away from him his character as a religious teacher, as does Bouck White in "The Call of the Carpenter." They all interpret him as a helpful human soul and the Elder Brother of us all.

The church fortunately learned to hold its humanity and his divinity as not incongruous notions. It is faith in the divinity of Christ which is the cornerstone of the church. But it is faith in his humanity, and belief that we may follow him and be like him that gives greatest help to the religious people of our age. We must never again lose our human Jesus in the fog of metaphysical speculation.

THE SALOON ISSUE IN POLITICS

THE national issues will not be able to obscure the interest in many a local fight this year which involves the saloon issue. In Illinois, the contest will be peculiarly bitter since the drys have shown such great strength in recent years and a majority sentiment of the state is even now in favor of wiping out the saloon.

The campaign against Representative Mann by Rev. M. P. Boynton in the race for Congress will attract national attention, as Mr. Mann has been the minority leader in the house. He has been in Congress for twenty years and his retirement on account of hostility to temperance measures would teach politicians a much needed lesson. The campaign for the republican nomination for governor takes on deep significance since nomination this year practically means election. The Anti-Saloon league has endorsed the candidacy of Senator Hull whose record is good on all temperance measures.

The attention of Christian people to such contests all over the country is imperative if we are to have real progress for the cause of temperance.

HAS YOUR SUNDAY SCHOOL SCATTERED?

THE vacation time is a time of disintegration for religious work in most communities. In many Sunday-schools an effort will be made to have a "Rally day" in which some special program will call the people together again.

Many Rally day programs eliminate the class work altogether. The visitor gains no impression at all of what the school is like under normal conditions. Feeling that the whole thing is quite different from the atmosphere of a school he does not come back again.

Rally day should be a day when every teacher should make special preparation to teach with renewed interest and power. An improvement should be made in the music. The devotional spirit of the school should be quickened. Into such a school the visitor may come and desire to come again.

Rally day should be a day when every teacher should make special preparation to teach with renewed interest and power. An improvement should be made in the music. The devotional spirit of the school should be quickened. Into such a school the visitor may come and desire to come again.

Better than any other kind of system for re-organizing the school in the fall is a system of visitation. Few schools will have over a third of their enrollment absent the first Sunday in September. These schools will easily be able to send out visitors, two by two, who on Saturday afternoon of each week will find the delinquents of the previous Sunday and follow up reports on new families. Such quiet and persistent work throughout the month of September would soon result in a school which would have no Rally day inflation; rather, Rally day would be only the beginning of a growth that would continue through the autumn season.

The printed matter of a school should not have the flavor of an auction sale, but announce with dignity and interest an educational program. It would be worth while for your school to put out a leaflet with the course of study for the fall, the ages, the names of the classes and teachers for the different ages, as well as the officers. A tract on the educational program of religion, or on the value of systematic Bible study in the Sunday-school could be used in the work of some of the older classes. All our schools should measure up to their opportunities for a great development this fall.

JESUS AS A BIBLICAL CRITIC

THE exponents of the conception of a "level Bible" find small comfort in the attitude of Jesus toward the scriptures known in his time. He used these scriptures and his life was so saturated with them that he seemed always to speak in biblical language. Yet he was under no inhibitions when it was necessary to criticize those elements in holy scripture which were transient in their value.

He found in the book of Deuteronomy a law of divorce which was wholly unfair and which contributed to the indulgence of men. A man had the fate of his wife in his own hands. When weary of her, without appearing before a court, he had only to write her a bill of divorcement and she was his wife no more. One rabbi living near the time of Jesus argued that a wife who burned the dinner might be divorced. Jesus bravely faced this evil thing and declared that the law was given because of the hardness of men's hearts. It had no place in the eternal scheme of things. His own attitude toward the family was that of an indissoluble union, save for one cause of separation, and this exception may have been made by his followers and not by himself.

He also criticized and utterly rejected the Old Testament law of revenge. The law stood, "An eye for an eye, and a tooth for a tooth." It was justice, but it had none of the elements of the nobler principle of mercy. In place of this, he gave his vigorous homily with regard to non-resistance.

No wonder the hearers were astonished. He did not preach by declaring proof texts but by appealing to the hearts and consciences of men. He was no mere quoter of other men's ideas. He came with the authority of a fresh revelation. Law made place for gospel and coercion gave way to freedom.

The man who would follow Jesus Christ in his biblical study will love and appreciate the greatest of all books to such an extent that he may dare to pass by the transient and temporal.

The Larger Christian World

A DEPARTMENT OF INTERDENOMINATIONAL ACQUAINTANCE :: By Orvis F. Jordan

Joseph Fort Newton Reported Called.

Persistent reports are in circulation that the City Temple in London has called to its pulpit the Rev. Joseph Fort Newton, of the Liberal Christian church, of Cedar Rapids, Iowa. Mr. Newton was for a time a minister among the Disciples of Christ, but in recent years has been preaching for independent congregations of the liberal persuasion. He is one of the editors of "Unity" and is the author of a number of books. Though living in a city relatively small, his sermons have been given wide circulation and have been printed in England in recent years. He has been supplying the pulpit in the City Temple this summer.

Religion Aggressive in Cleveland.

The federation of evangelical churches in Cleveland is a very live organization. It unites the churches in a wide variety of activities. Ten thousand new members united with the Cleveland churches the past year as a result of a united program of evangelism in the churches. A similar program is being launched for the coming season. The federation is also giving considerable attention to the subject of law enforcement.

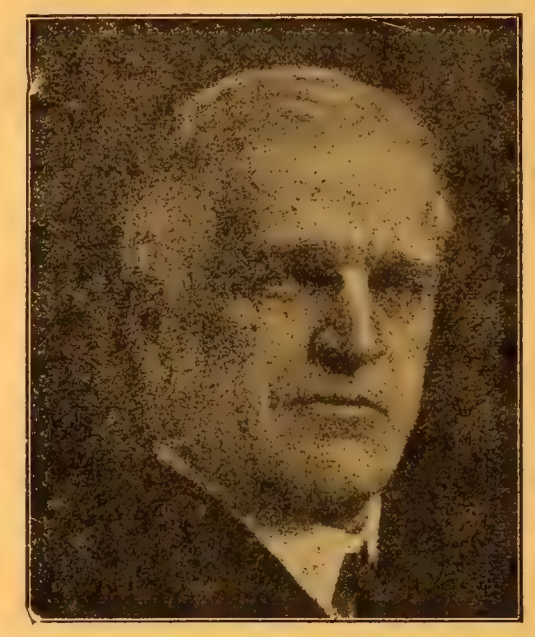
Presbyterian Vacation Schools Successful.

The Vacation Bible School movement in Chicago has met with great success this season. The Presbyterian schools held a joint picnic recently with 1,400 boys and girls in attendance. A hundred teachers have been employed in these schools during the summer.

British Theologian Visits Canada.

Principal E. Griffith-Jones will visit Canada in the fall and give a course of lectures before the theological colleges of that city. Dr. Jones is best known among us by his book, "The Ascent Through Christ." This book has guided many young men who had been disturbed by evolutionary theory to a new basis for faith. It is expected that Dr. Griffith-Jones will visit the United States for some addresses before he returns to England.

Reindeer Meat and Missions.



It is very interesting to note that the high price of meat will bring a number of reindeer meat shipments from Alaska this coming winter. This may not seem like news for the Christian World department, but the connection appears when we are told that it is not so long since Sheldon Jackson, a missionary, introduced the reindeer into Alaska. There are like evidences all over the world of progress in material things which has come from missionary effort.

Let the Women Keep Silent.

During the recent convention of southern Baptists at Asheville, two women were allowed to speak at an evening session with great edification to the audience. Since then several Baptist papers of the south have taken the brethren to task. They call this incident an "unscriptural innovation" and an "anti-Pauline performance." This reactionary journalism will probably not be able to turn the brethren back again to the "safe traditional paths."

Bishop McDowell Has Been Ill.

Bishop McDowell, of the Methodist Episcopal church, who has recently been transferred from Chicago to Washington, has been very ill and has spent some time at the sanitarium at Battle Creek, Mich.

Bishop W. F. McDowell, who is reported ill.

He is now gradually improving in health and has gone to Evanston, Ill., his old home, to continue his recuperation. He will not accept any appointments to speak until the summer is over.

Quakers on the Increase.

It is the popular impression that the Quakers are a dying sect, but the facts are quite to the contrary. Some of the peculiarities of the movement, including dress and prejudice against a "hireling" ministry, are disappearing. The division in the body is in prospect of being healed, and if it is, there will be a total of 150,000 Christians in one organization. About thirty thousand of these hold to doctrines not acceptable in evangelical circles. Indiana is the leading state for the denomination and Ohio is a close second.

Roman Catholics to Have Seminary in Chicago.

Chicago is coming to be a great center for the education of ministers. The Roman Catholics now propose to have a seminary in the city by the lake. Archbishop Mundelein has just purchased a site for $122,000 and upon this ground a group of buildings will be erected at a cost of a half million of dollars. It is proposed that these buildings shall be a memorial to the late Archbishop Quigley.

Trial of Insubordinate Rector.

The trial of Rev. George Chalmers Richmond for insubordination to the Protestant Episcopal Bishop of Pennsylvania has been a very sensational one. The decision in the case will not be given until in September. Since his suspension last February Mr. Richmond has been preaching every Sunday in a private hall. It is now rumored that he will enter the Roman Catholic church. Mr. Richmond says: "I do not intend to leave the Protestant Episcopal church until I have fought out my present trial, if it takes five years. I have stood up for common justice and righteousness and have attacked big ecclesiastical sins. For this I am condemned. I am going to put the Episcopal church on record in some things before we get through, so a young man may know whether our church is on the side of Christ and his people or in league with capitalism and fashionable society."

Unitarians Go to Isle of Shoals.

The Unitarians hold annual conferences on the Isle of Shoals, off Portsmouth, New Hampshire. A corporation has purchased the island and dedicated it to religious purposes forever. Each evening a highly ritualistic service with candles is held. One speaker this year found a kinship between "non-gloomy" men like St. Francis of Assisi, Walt Whitman and the Unitarians.

Roman Catholic Social Service.

The Roman Catholics of Chicago are developing new interest in social service under the leadership of Archbishop Mundelein. An old high school building has been purchased in Oak Park and this will serve as a mothering home and school for the children of workingmen who have lost their wives. The Sisters of St. Joseph will have charge of the school.

A Christian Nurture Series.

The Board of Religious Education of the Episcopal church is preparing for publication this fall a series of helps for Sunday-school teachers entitled, "The Christian Nurture Series." The church will in the future give greater attention to the proper education of its children in religion.

Presbyterians are Growing.

The Presbyterians are showing the results of their wise statesmanship in the growth which they are making. They now report 1,560,009 in their northern body and the increase last year was 46,769. There are 9,739 ministers and 9,953 churches. The benevolent budget was over ten millions of dollars and the money used in local expenses was over twenty millions.

Missionary Bishop Makes Tour.

Bishop Hunting is the missionary bishop of the Protestant Episcopal church in Nevada. He has just completed a long tour of the isolated sections of his state in an automobile. He has gone to a number of places where there has never been a religious service before.

Methodist Chaplains on the Border.

The Methodists feel well represented in the force of chaplains with the army on the border. Dr. Appleton Bash, of Pittsburgh, who has charge of the campaign for annuity funds for aged ministers, is with the Eighteenth Pennsylvania Infantry. Chaplain Emery, of Olivia, Minnesota, is with the Third Minnesota Infantry and Rev. E. C. Clemans is chaplain of the Second Minnesota Infantry, and is now at Llano Grande, Tex.

Union Churches

In order to break down the sense of isolation which exists among union churches, and to let workers in this field know of the progress of the movement toward unity in other communities, we are maintaining this open forum. We wish to present plans of organization and work of united, federated and community churches, and to chronicle the progress of the movement as a whole. We ask any reader who knows of any union church that has not previously been reported in this current series to send us information concerning it. Address: Howard E. Jensen, care of "The Christian Century."

IS IMMERSION A BAR TO FEDERATION?

IT IS frequently asserted that differences as to the proper mode of baptism are the one great barrier which renders church union on a comprehensive scale impossible. But the practical experiments in Christian unity which we are reviewing from week to week clearly establish the fact that where a real desire for Christian co-operation exists no such formal question can hinder the taking of very positive steps toward its consummation. Federations of immersionist and affusionist bodies are quite as frequent and as successful as those in which the baptism question is not involved. It frequently occurs that federation takes place between churches holding opposing views on this question in localities where one would expect the federation of churches holding similar views.

Thus at Parma, Mich., where there were three churches, Presbyterian, Methodist and Baptist, the affusionist Presbyterians federated with the immersionist Baptists, while the affusionist Methodist congregation remained apart from the movement. After four years of united effort the pastor, Rev. George H. Waid, describes the church as most harmonious. Nor is this harmony "the peace of death" which is so often predicted for such churches, over fifty persons having been received into the church since December 1, 1915. Relations have been cordial from the first. The federation was suggested by the general denominational boards of both churches and the resolution for federation was unanimously adopted by the local organizations.

The congregation at present uses the Presbyterian church and Baptist parsonage. The Presbyterian parsonage has been sold, a testimonial as to the permanency of the present relationship. The combined congregation has gained immensely in community prestige, while those who bear the burdens of the work feel the inspiration that goes with greater numbers. The members are received into the separate denominations of the federation according to the customs of each church.

It is frequently asserted that federated and union churches lose their missionary zeal, become self-centered and perish for lack of vision. There seems to be little warrant for this assertion.

At Parma, the pastor asserts that missions and benevolences are better supported than under separate organization. "Last year the Baptist apportionment was raised thirty-three and one-third per cent over the previous year; this year the committee asks an additional increase of twenty-five per cent over last year. The Presbyterian church is contributing to the support of Presbyterian missions in like manner." Funds are raised by an Every member canvass, and contributed weekly in duplex envelopes. The current expense envelope is retained by the treasurer of the congregation, while the mission envelopes are given to the missionary treasurers of the denominations, according to the affiliation of the contributors."

Unity and the Christian Consensus.

Federations such as that at Parma should convince us that differences as to the mode of baptism are no bar to practical co-operation and furnish no natural line of cleavage between Christians. We shall be better able to solve the problems raised by such differences after we have labored side by side for the realization of the Kingdom of God in the social life of today. A long step toward unity has been taken in any community when its people realize that they have no right to exalt the minor doctrines of a particular sect at the expense of those great fundamental Christian principles that are basic to every creed. "The consensus of Christianity," says Charles A. Briggs in Church Unity, "is far more important than the dissensus. No one who has not studied it can estimate how vast and important it is when compared with the dissensus. It is like a mighty river, flowing on in majestic silence, whilst its surface is disturbed by erratic currents and noisy wavelets, stirred by mischievous or angry winds. It is the murmur of the everflowing stream as compared with the occasional croaking of frogs upon its banks. Taking our stand upon the consensus of Christianity we may thank God for the progress already made, and look forward with confidence toward a future of complete unity and perfect accord."

Opponents of unity would have us put first things last. They would have us demand our doctrinal pound of flesh at the expense of Christianity's life-blood. How dare we quibble over minor matters of the law while a materialistic philosophy is challenging and undermining men's faith in the fatherhood of God, the brotherhood of man, the worth of life and the immutability of the moral order?

Dr. Aked Will Make Statement.

Dr. Charles F. Aked is announced to make a statement at an early date as to his reasons for leaving the Ford peace party. He resigned his church in San Francisco and is at present making his residence near New York City..

The first street railway in the United States was built in New York in 1842. Horse cars were used as motive power.

FORWARD STEPS AT DRAKE UNIVERSITY.

A notable addition to the faculty of the College of Education of Drake University for the coming year is that of John Jeffrey Smith, A.M., D.B., Ph.D., who will have charge of the classes in Comparative Education, Educational Measurements, and some of the work in Methods and Practice. As his different degrees indicate, Mr. Smith is thoroughly educated for the place he has held in the ministry and for the place he has held and will hold in the field of education.

He holds his first degree from Bethany College, and took his Master's degree from the same school. From the time of his graduation in 1908 to 1910 he taught in the Beckley Institute at Beckley, West Virginia. Then for several years his attention was divided, as he was both a student at Yale University and the pastor of the Church of Christ at Sherman, Connecticut. During this time he secured his Bachelor of Divinity degree from Yale University, and a little later he won the degree of Doctor of Philosophy. He was such a success as a pastor in this time that the church at Sherman would not part with him when he ended his regular school work at Yale in 1912, and he continued with them for two years more, then removing to Cadiz, Ohio, from which pastorate he was called to the place on the faculty of the College of Education of Drake University.

Dr Smith will have an ample field, for the College of Education of Drake University is one of the largest Schools of Education connected with the universities of the Middle West, especially those not supported by the states. It was the first college of education connected with a university or college in Iowa, and the training has been such that teachers from this school are in large demand. One of the notable instances of the success of this college was the 1915 class of one department. All of the thirty-five members of this class were elected to positions before they graduated from Drake, and before the end of the first school year each one had been re-elected to the position held, each one with an increase of salary.

Dr. Jesse Cobb Caldwell, for the last eight years President of Atlantic Christian College at Wilson, North Carolina, will greet the visitors of the 1916 Convention of the Churches of Christ in Des Moines as the dean of the College of the Bible of Drake University. He will not have become accustomed to his new position before the opening of the Convention, as the Drake school year opens September 18 and the Convention opens October 9. While Dean Caldwell is not yet a resident of Des Moines, he has been placed at work on the Convention committees, and will be one of the special members of the Registration Committee.

Dean Caldwell comes to Drake at a time when it seems probable that the Drake Bible College is just at the beginning of its greatest growth. For some years, the Bible College has been acknowledged to be the largest theological school west of the Mississippi river. In this time in the number of students, it has ranked well with all of the Bible colleges and seminaries of the country. With a large demand for men and women, both from the church and the mission field, it is certain that Drake will have some additions, while the character of the faculty of the Bible school cannot but attract many men and women looking for instruction in the ways of doing the best work in the world. During the last few months, the authorities of Drake University have gone from one end of the United States to another, seeking men to work with and under Dean Caldwell. The result has been the selection of a faculty to offer complete training for any department of church work.

The faculty of the Bible College which Dean Caldwell heads, follows:

Jesse C. Caldwell, A.B., D.B., LL.D., Dean.
Professor of Theology.
David R. Dungan, A.M., LL.D.
Professor Emeritus of Sacred Literature.
A. M. Haggard, A.M.
Professor Emeritus of Christian Evidences.
Ambrose Veatch, A.M., D.B.
Professor of Semitic Languages and Literature.
Ervin E. Longfellow, A. M.
Associate Professor of Church History, and New Testament History and Interpretation.
Thomas J. Golightly, A. M., D. B.
Associate Professor of Religious Education.
J. Walter Carpenter, A.M., D.B.
Associate Professor of Christian Missions.
Charles S. Medbury, D.D.
Lecturer on Church Management.

Dean Jesse C. Caldwell, a new leader at Drake.

William A. Shullenberger, A. B.
Lecturer on Pastoral Theology.
William C. Cole,
Lecturer on Business Management of the Church.
Clarence M. Eppard, S. L. B.
Special Lecturer on the Rural Church.
Lillian A. Munkres, Ph.B.
Instructor in Religious Education.

J. Walter Carpenter, in offering to students the first courses in Mission study ever presented to undergraduates in the schools of the Churches of Christ, will try first to give a thorough understanding of the needs of mission work, the fields which are open to mission effort; and then will attempt to present the best methods of reaching the peoples of these mission fields. The courses will consider the problems of Missionary Administration, Missionary Sociology, and Missionary History.

The students also will be asked to investigate the intellectual development of the peoples in the different mission fields, their training in life and in religion, and the basis of the different religions of the fields. The History of Missions, also will present in large measure the fields of work and the elements which led to the success of men and women in some fields, and the reasons for the failures which have been recorded.

The American city and the American rural community will also be considered as mission fields in this course; and the problems of the different churches. those in the downtown section, in the foreign section, and in the sparsely settled suburbs, will be considered. The object of the courses is to give to the students, both those preparing for the mission field and the ministry, a minute and authoritative understanding of mission problems, both at home and abroad.

T. J. Golightly, as the teacher of Religious Education in Drake University, will seek to co-ordinate the Sunday-school and the church, to make each a part of the other, each one working out to the fullest the education of man in Bible subjects, but never losing sight for an instant that the real end of the Sunday-school is to lay the basis for actual and productive Christian living in the church. He will combine his training as minister and educator in the work he will present in the Bible College. Mr. Golightly's work will cover the whole field of Religious Education. The lessons Christ himself taught, his problems and his methods and educational principles will receive attention. The second stage will be the organization and material of Religious Education, with an intensive study of the Sunday-school from the standpoint of Psychology.

In addition to the work offered by Prof. Golightly, Miss Lillian Alberta Munkres, a teacher in Religious Education in the Drake school for the last year, will offer a course in Methods, a supplementary and companion course of Professor Golightly's course in Organization; and also, a course in Primary Methods.

The course as outlined is one of the most thorough ever offered by any school in Religious Education, and it is the belief of the Drake authorities that the training for the Sunday-school, as offered in this course, is thoroughly sound and scientific.

Practical ministers, men who are meeting the problems of the church every day, men who are making a signal success of special departments of church work, will bring their experience before the students of the Drake University College of the Bible during the coming year. Four men have been selected for this work:

Dr. Charles S. Medbury, of the University Place Church of Christ, who will give of his life to the young ministers of Drake in a discussion of Church Management; William Arthur Shullenberger, the brilliant young pastor of the Central Church of Christ, will come to the students of his Alma Mater with a course upon Pastoral Theology; William Clifford Cole, pastor of the Capitol Hill Church of Christ, a man who has made an unusual success of his work as a leader of the church, will discuss Business Management of the Church; and Clarence Monroe Eppard, a graduate of Drake, and holding the degree of S.T.B., from Harvard, the successful pastor of a rural church, will bring to the Drake ministerial students the problems, as well as the untold opportunities, of the rural congregation. Mr. Eppard, after successful pastorates in some of the larger city churches, is now the pastor of an unusual rural church at North River, Iowa.

These lectures are open to all of the students of the College of the Bible, and form the basic work in church problems which any young minister, just beginning his work will have to face. Dr. Medbury has long given an hour a week to the students of the Bible, in which they have worked out the problems they all must face; and this year, these other three men, who are really practical specialists in the fields they will discuss, will also help in the development of the young ministers of the school. Most, if not all, of these lectures will be given at 4 o'clock in the afternoon, an hour when it will be possible for the students to be free from the work of the other courses of the colleges.

EUREKA PREPARES FOR GREATEST YEAR.

Eureka College has been making as great progress on the side of its educational standards as it has on the side of the physical equipment. During the past year the college has secured advanced standing for its graduates in the universities in Yale, Chicago and Illinois. The Committee on Transfer of Credits at the University of Illinois under date of December 15, 1915, was put in class A among the colleges of the state of Illinois. This means that any student going from Eureka College to the University of Illinois to pursue further work will be given full credit for all work which they may have taken in Eureka College. In addition to the ranking which the institution has been accorded the graduates of Eureka College have made enviable records the past year in Harvard, Yale, Wisconsin, Chicago and Illinois.

A very strong faculty has been assembled at Eureka for the coming year. Mr. Rodney L. McQuary has been called to take the John Darst chair of Sacred Literature. Mr. McQuary did his undergraduate work at Cotner University. He completed the three years' course in Yale School of Religion in June 1916. While in Yale he won a Fogg scholarship, which was the highest honor during each of his three years in Yale. During his senior year he won the Hooker-Day fellowship which entitled him to two years' post-graduate study in any of the universities in Europe or America free of his own charges. Mr. McQuary turned down this fellowship to come to Eureka College to teach. In addition to the honors already mentioned Mr. McQuary was President of the Senior class and Editor of the Yale Quarterly during his Senior year. Very few stronger men are ever turned out by one of our colleges than Rodney McQuary, and Eureka College counts itself particularly fortunate in securing his services as a teacher.

The Department of Physical Instruction has been greatly strengthened for the coming year. A competent coach with able assistants has been secured and not only the athletics but the general physical education will be of the very best.

The Department of Music has been growing very rapidly. Three new teachers have been added to the staff for 1916. Under the direction of Prof. Elias A. Bredin, who was for nine years connected with the Department of Music at the University of Wisconsin, this same department at Eureka has assumed large proportions and is growing in a remarkable way. Professor Bredin will be the head of the Department of Voice and Prof. Clarence Eidam, of the Cosmopolitan School of Music of Chicago, will head the Department of Piano. Prof. H. O. Merry, Secretary of the Illinois Music Teachers' Association, will head the Department of Violin and Band instruments. There is a Boys' and Girls' Glee Club, an orchestra and a band made up entirely of the students; each of which organizations give a number of concerts during the year. The crowning feature of the year is the May Festival, at which time an oratorio is rendered and soloists from Chicago and New York are imported to take part in this musical event.

A new Dean of Women has been called to the leadership of the Girls' Dormitory in the person of Miss Lydia Wampler. Miss Wampler is a graduate of the University of Kansas and has taken special work in the University of Missouri, the University of Nebraska, the University of Chicago and the University of Columbia. She is an excellent teacher of more than ten years' experience and has had experience also in the capacity of Dean of Women. She comes to Eureka College from Cotner University, where she has served for ten years and where her influence has been immeasurable for good upon the lives of the young people of that institution.

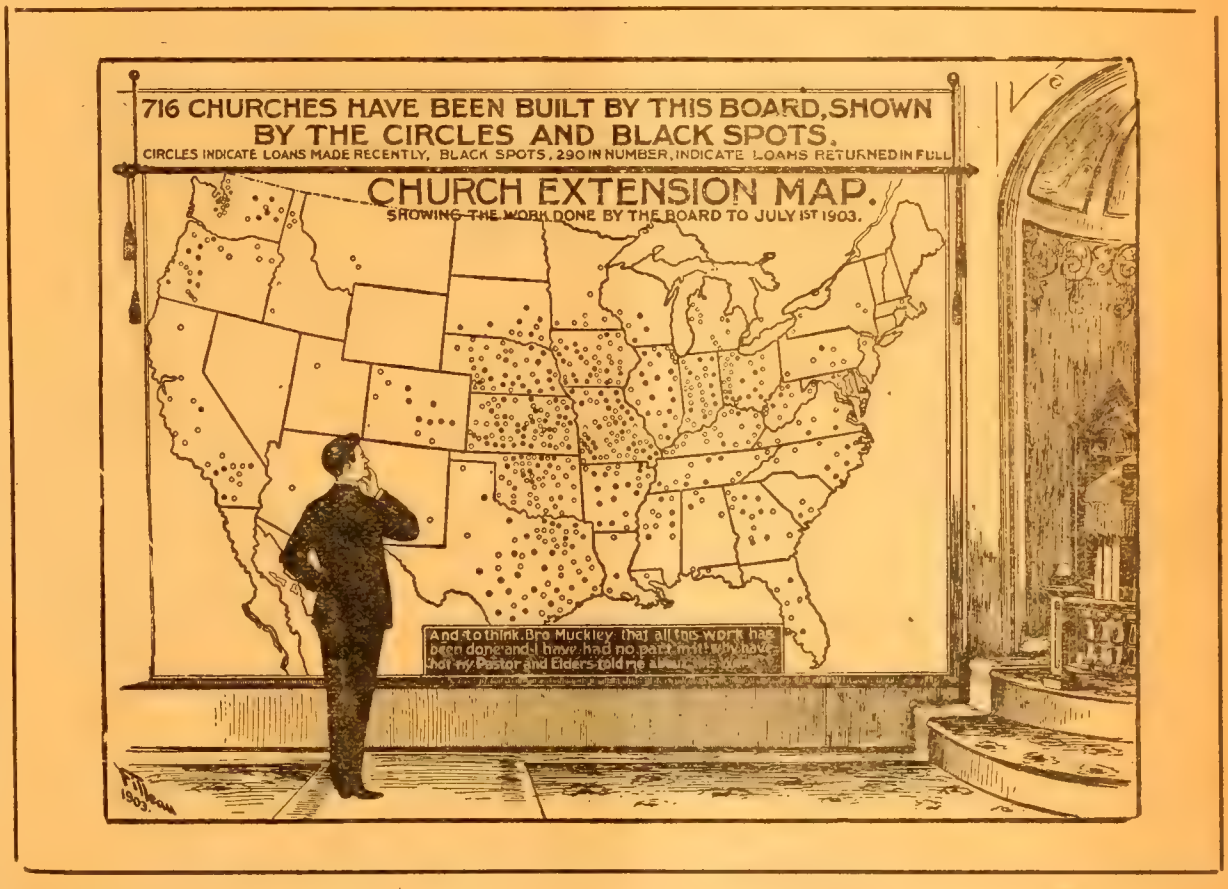
The Art Department will be headed by Miss Mildred Camp, who has been specially trained for this work, while Mr. Mark Gordon will have charge of the Department of Modern Languages for the coming year, which place was made vacant by the resignation of Prof. L. E. Cannon, who goes to Hiram College to fill a similar position. Mr. Gordon has done work in the Universities of Wisconsin and Chicago. The faculty for the coming year is complete and it is safe to say that no stronger array of talent has ever been lined up by the institution than the present one.

The prospect for students is all that could be asked. Mr. L. O. Lehman is touring the state during the summer months with a company of five students who are rendering musical programs wherever they go and the reports from the trip indicate that the Freshman class will be the largest in the history of the institution.

Some Things the Church Extension Board Should Do

By G. W. Muckley

Every benevolent enterprise should move forward, with a history of a past record of which we are proud and with the impelling power of new enterprises. It is well known that the Church Extension Board helps to erect houses of worship by making loans of about one-third the cost of house and lot, and that these loans are returned in five equal, annual installments, beginning two years after the loan is made, with a low rate of interest. The church needs the two years in which to gather up its strength after a special effort in building.



It has also been found by referring to the Year Books of recent years that 91 per cent of the congregations thus helped to efficient workshops contribute to our missionary, benevolent and educational work. 1,717 congregations that have been helped to their buildings by Church Extension loans up to 1915, gave in 1914 $141,234.09 to the above enterprises.

Other values that come to the kingdom locally are to be considered. When a mission gets the new church building, up to date for service in its community, the congregation soon doubles and trebles its numbers in the church and Sunday-school.

As fast as the money returns to the Board it goes out again to help build other houses of worship, since there are generally two calls to one that can be answered. It has been demonstrated by the actual work of the Board, that by the money coming and going in the fashion named, it does the work of $6,257 every six years.

It has also been demonstrated that the churches aided by the Church Extension Board raise on an average $2 for every dollar loaned. If the Board loans $1,000 the church raises $2,000, thus producing a $3,000 property. In this way over $9,000,000 of church property has been brought into existence during twenty-seven years.

This is briefly the record of Church Extension work in the United States and Canada. The Church Extension Board must continue its work in North America and needs constant increase of its permanent fund to help erect better buildings for some of our old congregations that are making no growth because of out of date buildings and for our missions that they may secure good foundations for their work just beginning.

New Enterprises.

Many sincere souls in our communion know that the Disciples of Christ have not borne their share of the work that should be done among the immigrants of the United States. We cannot shirk this work any longer. A great religious body must have programs worthy of its ability. The Board of Church Extension will propose to the Des Moines Convention that all the receipts of the churches beginning October 1, 1916, be used for the erection of a strictly modern Community House, either in Chicago or New York City. The House is to be a donation to the community, but the Board of Church Extension will hold title to the property thus making it one of the permanent assets of the Board. The immigrants using it will not pay interest nor will they return the money to the Board. It is thus a donation to that kind of work, and yet the property is owned by the Disciples of Christ through their Board of Church Extension. The American Christian Missionary Society will furnish an American superintendent who will have qualified foreigners working under him. It is hoped that one year's receipts from the churches to Church Extension will produce the first Community House with the ground on which it stands. Then, as fast as the receipts permit and the Convention recommends, other Houses shall be built and manned. Properly done, no work of the two Home Boards will be more inspiring or far reaching in America's evangelization.

Latin America.

The group of Disciples who attended the Congress on Christian Work in Latin America recommended among other things that the Board of Church Extension extend the sphere of its work into Latin America. At a recent meeting of the Board it expressed its willingness to do work in Latin America, in the erection of buildings, provided the National Convention recommends and provided its charter permits. The Board believes it can make necessary arrangements provided only the churches will give the money. There is no greater field because of the future world place of Latin America —commercially, that country is making a place. There are 8,500,000 square miles with a population of over 80,000,000. The valley of the Amazon could feed the world. Water supply is abundant. The Orinoco basin with 400 affluents is navigable for 4,000 miles. The Amazon has three times the volume of the Mississippi navigable 2,000 miles.

There are 65,000 miles of railroads and fifty steamship lines to foreign ports. The new shipping bill passed by Congress in May appropriates $50,000 for steamers between the United States and Latin America. Every nation in the world could find congenial climate here.

Intellectually and scientifically Latin America is finding a world place. There is a system of scholarships which provides that students doing certain high grade work shall have scholarships in universities of Europe and America. They bring home the latest methods of research. There is also an arrangement to provide for an exchange of professors between certain universities of the United States and South American countries.

In government development Latin America has already taken a world place. They had great difficulty in developing their governments, for the yoke of Spain and the Catholic church was fastened upon them. Their transition from colonial dependencies to self-governing republics was fraught with difficulties we in Anglo-Saxon America can not appreciate, since we in the the United States had our government founded by men who were prepared from the beginning to govern themselves through years of training. And yet in Latin America there is a pan-American fraternity of nations and all boundary disputes are settled by arbitration. Springing from a race of warriors they now lead the world in settling disputes by methods of peace. What a lesson to warring Europe!

Are we big enough and Christian enough to help Latin-America to a world place in Christian work and ideals? Consecrated Christian business men, teachers and missionaries can put a new spirit into these people—the spirit of freedom, the hunger for truth, a boundless hope. It is our duty, yea, it is our great privilege to do a worthy part in this most worthy enterprise.

News Notes

—Fred S. Nichols, of the church at Iowa City, Ia., is on the Mexican border with the First Iowa Infantry, as chaplain. Another Disciple minister who has taken a chaplaincy is O. J. Cohee, who recently resigned as pastor at East Columbus, Ind., to take the work at South Bend, Indiana Avenue church.

—Tolbert F. Weaver, who recently resigned the position of district superintendent of the Dallas district, Tex., to take up the pastorate at Rosemont church, Dallas, reports nineteen additions already in this field. Mr. Weaver held a meeting in February at Rosemont by which forty persons were added to the membership. A loan of $2,500 from the Church Exension board has put the work on a good financial footing. A Christian Endeavor organization has been recently effected.

—Christian Endeavor societies of the Disciples in Des Moines are planning a Four Hundred Banquet for those who attend the International Convention of the Disciples to be held in the Iowa city, Oct. 9-15.

—Vaughn Dabney, former pastor at Oakland, Cal., is on a preaching tour in the White Mountains of New Hampshire. A successor to Mr. Dabney has been called at Oakland—H. A. Van Winkle, of Tillamook, Ore.

—The Flat Rock church (Paris, Ky., R. R. 3) is in a protracted meeting, with "big crowds, big preaching and big singing," reports J. H. Fillmore. W. J. Hudspeth is preaching, Miss Fred Fillmore is assisting with her solos and a large choir leads the people's hearty congregational singing. Eight additions were reported for the first three services.

—Wm. E. Adams, whose resignation at First church, Seattle, has been reported, announces that he will enter the Chautauque field for a time, preaching also at the same time to union churches. W. A.. Moore, of the Tacoma, Wash., church, has been called to succeed Mr. Adams, but no decision has yet come from him.

Christian University
Canton, Missouri

Christian University appeals for the generous support of the churches of Missouri on account of—

1. The strategic importance of the small Christian college, as the institution from which the church recruits her leaders;
2. The importance of Christian University to the churches of Missouri, as being the only Standard College of the Christian Church in the State;
3. The recent progress made by the institution, enabling it to obtain full recognition as a Standard College;
4. The probability that the school will soon become one of the strongest, if not the strongest church college in the State.

No other investment is open to the churches of Missouri offering such large returns as an investment in Christian University; it will repay the churches a thousand-fold in trained and consecrated leadership.

A Notable Success

The welcome that has been given by the leaders in the churches and Sunday schools to the little book just issued by the Disciples Publication Society:

"The Training of Church Members"

is evidence that this text has come to meet a very definite need in the churches.

The following are typical letters received from leaders concerning the book:

FROM REV. H. CLAY TRUSTY, Seventh Street Church, Indianapolis: "I have examined thoroughly the manual, "The Training of Church Members," and think it a very fine thing. We need to spend some time with young Christians on the fundamentals of our Christian religion and church life. This affords a splendid guide."

FROM REV. L. C. MOORE, Waterloo, Ia.: "This book is filling a long known need in our mid-week service. I am more than pleased with it. The attendance was doubled in four weeks by the use of the text"

FROM REV. IRVING BROWN, Sac City, Ia.: "I am much impressed with it. Shall introduce it either at the C. E. or mid-week prayer-meetings. We all need the training it supplies."

FROM REV. L. J. MARSHALL, Wabash Ave. Church, Kansas City, Mo.:

"This is a timely piece of work. Its clear and simple presentations of the lessons to be taught should make it popular among Christian workers."

How You May Use This Text:

(1) As a book of study in your mid-week or Endeavor prayer-meeting.

(2) As a text-book in your young people's Sunday school classes.

(3) As a text for study in a special "Pastor's class" organized for training of young Christians and meeting either through the week or on Sunday.

(4) As a teacher-training course.

REMEMBER THE ANNUAL OFFERING.

The Month of July in Church Extension. Did You Put Up the Wall Chart?

Our pastors should be ordering their supplies of literature for the Annual Offering Day for Church Extension. Every one believes in the Church Extension work. The trouble with many is that they do not know the needs. It is the duty of the Board of Church Extension to furnish a knowledge of the needs and the pastors must pass this knowledge on to the churches. The Board has done its duty in furnishing the facts. We pray that every pastor may do his duty. Choose the best day in September and secure a great offering. Many of our churches are very rich and should give liberally. Every church, however weak, can give something to house the Homeless.

The new receipts for July were $8,707.42. Recently the Board received an Annuity of $10,000 from a well known preacher among us. He gave $10,000 on another occasion making $20,000 in all to Church Extension. A friend in Iowa gave $800 and friends in Indiana gave $1,500. Go thou and do likewise.

During July the following loans were closed and the church buildings completed: Spur, Texas, (Margaret K. Long Fund) $800; Portland, Ore., (Montavilla Church) (F. H. Main Fund), $1,500; Topeka, Kan., Auburndale Church, (S. S. & R. J. Chapman Fund) $1,000; Lindale, Tex., (St. Louis, Mo., Compton Heights Fund) $500; Rosewell, N. Mex., (Annuity Fund) $4,000; Galveston, Texas (General Fund) $12,500; New Boston, Ohio, (F. M. Drake Fund) $2,000; Denton, Tex., (Annuity Fund) $6,000; Fossil, Ore., (Akron, Ohio, First Church Fund) $1,000; Dallas, Texas, Rosemont church (K. C., Mo. Independence Blvd. Church Fund) $2,500.

At the August Board Meeting loans were granted to the following churches: Ashland, Va., $2,500 at 4 per cent; Ogden, Utah, $3,500 a 4 per cent; Des Moines, Iowa, Highland Park Church, $12,000 at 6 per cent and Fruitland, Md., $700, 4 per cent. The loan promised Cicero, Ind., was increased to $3,000.

The time is not far away when the churches will begin sending in their Annual September Offerings. The pastors and churches should be much in prayer over this important matter. Proper interest in this offering and enthusiasm begotten of knowledge, with consecration, will win.

Brother, Pastor, did you put up the Wall Chart we sent you?

Entertainment at Des Moines

You are coming to the Convention of the Churches of Christ in Des Moines, October 9 to 15? Then you are interested in the accommodations to be found here. You are interested in what Des Moines is able to do to entertain what promises to be the largest National Convention since the great ingathering of the people at Pittsburg. You want to know whether you, as one of the possible ten thousand visitors to Des Moines, can be taken care of.

Des Moines has ample hotel facilities for a large convention. The men and women of the church tell us that the Convention this year is to be more than large. Practically every word which has come to Des Moines indicates that there is an interest in the Convention this year, a feeling of devotion which will attract the largest number of people who have attended a convention in some years. To make certain that ample accommodations are ready for the visitors, the Entertainment Committee is preparing for fifteen thousand people. This committee has been working for six months, as have all of the local committees of the Convention. Read the following carefully: If you desire a hotel reservation, write to:

"B. D. Van Meter, Drake University, Des Moines, Iowa." State what you want to pay for a room, and the conveniences you desire. The hotel charges will be from 75 cents a day up. The number of rooms to be secured under one dollar per person is limited. If you wish to be at the hotel used as a headquarters of one of the societies, state so definitely. All of the hotels of Des Moines are on the European plan, but all of the large ones have first class cafes, or grill rooms, in connection.

In addition to the hotel accommodations, the better class of the residences of Des Moines will be thrown open to the visitors. Already the Entertainment Committee has a long list of residents who will take Convention visitors into their homes for the week of the Convention. The charge will be fifty cents per person for lodging, and in some of the homes breakfast can be secured for an additional twenty-five cents. Breakfast will not be served in all of the homes listed, but Des Moines has an abundance of restaurants, cafes and lunch rooms where meals may be secured for as little or as much as the visitor desires to spend.

The street railway system in Des Moines is good, and you will not be inconvenienced if assigned to a home two and three miles from the Coliseum. Twenty and thirty minutes will be sufficient time to reach the downtown part of Des Moines (where the Convention will be held) from all but the most distant points. The system is being rebuilded during the present summer, so all East and West cars will run either past the Coliseum, or within a block. North and South cars either run within a block, or transfer to cars which pass the Coliseum.

Des Moines is in some ways the center of the interests of the churches of Christ. It is here the largest congregation and the largest school of the brotherhood is located. Des Moines probably has the largest number of members of the Church of Christ of any city in the world, between ten and twelve thousand communicants being members of the different churches of the city. Des Moines, with this large body of people, deeply interested in the coming of the Convention, is enthusiastic concerning the coming of the 1916 Convention, and the civic organizations are aiding the eighteen convention committees in every way. Every effort to consummate plans for entertainment of the visitors is being made. Of the convention committees, the ladies of the C. W. B. M. are especially active, and will have some pleasing surprises in store for the visitors. The young people's societies, also, are planning for a gala week in which the work of the Christian Endeavor will be raised on the highest standards.

The sessions of the Convention will be held in the Coliseum, one of the units of the Des Moines civic center. This building will seat 7,500 people, and has committee and exhibit rooms for all of the activities of the Convention. It is possible, should this not be sufficient at all times, to reach other halls and the downtown churches. The headquarters hotels are from two to four blocks from the Coliseum, but it is the belief of the managing committees that the rooms of the Coliseum are such that the Convention will be centered for the entire week in that one building.

Des Moines, with its hosts of members of the churches of Christ, is waiting for the opening of the Convention, a convention promising to be rich in fellowship and significant in its influence upon the life of the church. Des Moines and its Disciples desire to do that which it may to aid you to gain benefit and spiritual uplift from the 1916 Convention of the churches of Christ.

—The Board of Ministerial Relief, of Indianapolis, reports the receipt of $1,000 from the estate of the late William S. Britt, of Normal, Illinois. On the other hand, within a few days the Board has received calls for assistance on account of premature disability from four men: one with tuberculosis, one with paralysis, two with complete nervous breakdown.

—On July 2, Shenandoah, a rural school of Richland Co., O., had 210 present. Forty-five attended the men's class, taught by the pastor, Dana S. MacDonald.

—The Endeavor society at Conway Springs, Kans., has become a Life-line Society in the Foreign Christian Missionary Society, assuming the support of Evangelist Bali Das at Bilaspur, India.

Eureka College

STANDING. Eureka College is put in class A by the Committee on Transfer of Credits at the University of Illinois. The State Certificating Board grants High School Certificates to teach, without examination, to graduates of Eureka College. Full credit is given in the Graduate Schools for work done in Eureka.

EQUIPMENT. The College has an up-to-date equipment. A new gymnasium with swimming-pool, track, stage, etc. A new science building in construction with departments of Physics, Chemistry, Biology, Manual Training, Agriculture and Household Science adequately equipped. A new Library and Administration quarters. Chapel and Conservatory of Music, Girls' Dormitory, Heating Plant and President's Residence.

FACULTY. A strong faculty of college and university trained men and women on the faculty. Every teacher in the college has taken at least two years' post-graduate training in the best universities. All are thoroughly Christian in character and exert an influence unmistakable upon the students. Their work is first class.

COURSES. Courses leading to the A.B. and B.S. degrees are offered. Special courses in Music and Art. Full work leading to technical and professional training can be secured. Special emphasis is laid upon the training of young men and women for the ministry and mission field. Domestic Science and Manual training are offered.

ATMOSPHERE. Distinctly Christian. It is no wonder that Eureka has turned out great leaders in Christian work. The founders of the C. W. B. M.—the leader of the Men and Millions Movement—the president of the American Missionary Society—the president of the Disciples' National Convention—the leader of The Flying Squadron all came out of Eureka College.

A Good Religious Place To Go to School

WHERE?

The Bible College of Missouri in conjunction with the University of Missouri or vice versa.

The state university offers the most and best academic instruction to be found in the state.

The BIBLE COLLEGE offers training for the Christian ministry, for the mission field, for social service, for Sunday School work, Christian Endeavor work, church leadership and for other forms of religious service. Young men from a number of religious bodies are preparing for the ministry. Nearly two dozen are preparing for the mission field.

Studies in the Bible College are credited towards degrees in the University, and University work is credited in the Bible College.

The community influences are of the best. There is a flourishing Y. M. C. A. of over 800 members, and a Y. W. C. A. of 300 members. Above 70 per cent of the University student body and practically all of the Bible College student body are members of some church. All of the Bible College faculty and more than three-fourths of the University faculty are members of some church. Some of the church boards of the town are more than one-half from the University faculty. The churches themselves are aggressive and are ministered to by well trained preachers.

You cannot do better than come here to school. Write for catalogue.

HIRAM COLLEGE

A college of high rank, devoted to undergraduate work of the best type.

A college which strongly emphasizes the supreme value in education of intimate personal contact between teacher and student.

A college which attracts a choice body of students and commands the service of a group of teachers hardly excelled for ability, character and devotion.

A college which prepares men and women for effective leadership in Christian service, whether as ministers and missionaries, or as lay workers.

Some Noteworthy Facts

The College is recognized by the Department of Instruction of Ohio as a school for the training and certification of high-school teachers.

Hiram is a member of the North Central Association of Colleges and Secondary Schools and its work is given full recognition by Columbia University and other graduate schools of similar rank.

Hiram is a great missionary center of the Disciples of Christ. The Wharton Memorial Home for the children of missionaries is here, and more missionaries have gone out from Hiram than any other school of the brotherhood.

Hiram offers a strong, well-balanced and ably manned undergraduate course to students preparing for the ministry, for missions and for other fields of Christian service.

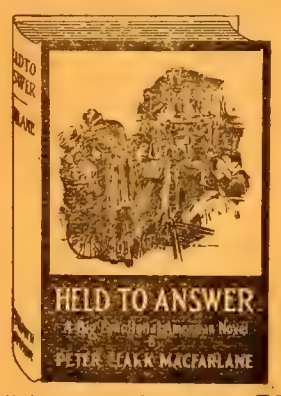
Hiram offers attractive combined courses to students interested in engineering, agriculture, medicine and law.

Thorough courses in English and in public speaking, including argumentation and debate, are offered, and four strong literary societies give stimulus and practical training in both fields.

A strong department of music with competent teachers offers high-grade instruction in voice, theory, piano, organ, violin and other instruments. Entire new piano equipment this year—Haines Brothers, for teaching and practice, and Knabe Concert Grand for concert work.

The College maintains no preparatory school, but offers special advantage to students twenty years of age or older who have not completed the high school course.

Expenses are very moderate for the advantages offered and many opportunities for self-help are open to earnest students.



Earnest young men and women and parents seeking a good school for the education of their children should write for full information and make known their special interests and needs

"Held to Answer"

By Peter Clark Macfarlane.

This striking novel by Mr. Macfarlane has created a larger advance interest than any other novel ever put out by the publishers; and they have had to their credit some of the "best sellers" of the last few years. A slogan of "100,000 by Christmas" has been set as the selling slogan on this book for this year. The price of the book is $1.35, postpaid. Send your order in today and it will be filled at once. More Efficient RELIGIOUS EDUCATION

What They Say

Of Dr. H. L. Willett's New Book

"The Moral Leaders of Israel"

The Living Church, Milwaukee.

FOR many a long year the Old Testament has been a dark continent in education, even in religious education, but now it is coming to its own and experts in religious pedagogy are recognizing its value in instilling the fundamental principles of religion and in the ethical training of the young. The vivid stories and noble heroes of the primitive days of God's religion on earth strongly appeal to the child's imagination, and with grown people, too, the Old Testament, rightly interpreted and rightly understood, is full of inspiration and power. Prof. Willett's book contains a series of twenty-six lessons, carefully worked out, with the Prophets of Israel for its themes, including not only Isaiah, Amos, Hosea, Micah, etc., but also Moses, Samuel, Elisha, etc. With his thoroughness of scholarship, the writer has been able to give not only the very complete and instructive presentations of the great leaders of thought, action, and character in Israel, but also to apply their teachings and experiences to the problems of our own day. Now that all of us are beginning to learn that great truth which was confined to a few until recently, namely, that the chief office of the prophet is not to foretell the future but to teach and preach God's lessons, warnings, and helps for the duty of the hour to the people, we are finding as never before many effective helps in the prophets for our guidance in present-day problems. In this book these are admirably treated and so simply and clearly that their lessons go home to the average layman and do not for their understanding require the technical knowledge of a scholar.

The Heidelberg Teacher, Philadelphia.

We know of no author who has given such brilliant studies on the Prophets and Leaders of Israel. And then it is all so clear and sane, that any teacher can follow the argument all the way through. There are hosts of students who will find themselves wondering that the way was not made so plain long before. There is scholarship on every page, but speaking with such a winsome and sincere spirit that it is heart speaking to heart. It will be a revelation of the permanent value of the truths spoken by the holy men of old, for the stirring and exciting times in which we live. When philosophy is dumb, human speculation humbled in the dust, and poetry dragging along with a broken wing, Amos, Isaiah and the rest of this great spiritual throng will speak a "thus saith the Lord," and the waves and disorder will be stilled.

The Continent, Chicago.

"This is the first of two volumes treating the work of the Old Testament prophets. All the questions arising out of the most recent study of this most important subject are popularly and comprehensively treated."

The Advance, Chicago.

"This is the first of two volumes which are to constitute a survey of the entire prophetic ministry of Israel. Doctor Willett combines in notable degree ripe scholarship and power of popular interpretation."

DISCIPLES PUBLICATION SOCIETY, PROPRIETORS, : 700 EAST 40th STREET, CHICAGO

Disciples Publication Society

The Disciples Publication Society is an organization through which churches of the Disciples of Christ seek to promote undenominational and constructive Christianity.

The relationship it sustains to the Disciples is intimate and organic, though not official. The Society is not a private institution. It has no capital stock. No individuals profit by its earnings.

The charter under which the Society exists determines that whatever profits are earned shall be applied to agencies which foster the cause of religious education, although it is clearly conceived that its main task is not to make profits but to produce literature for building up character and for advancing the cause of religion.

* * *

The Disciples Publication Society regards itself as a thoroughly undenominational institution. It is organized and constituted by individuals and churches who interpret the Disciples' religious reformation as ideally an unsectarian and unecclesiastical fraternity, whose common tie and original impulse are fundamentally the desire to practice Christian unity with all Christians.

The Society therefore claims fellowship with all who belong to the living Church of Christ, and desires to co-operate with the Christian people of all communions as well as with the congregations of Disciples, and to serve all.

* * *

The Christian Century, the chief publication of the Society, desires nothing so much as to be the worthy organ of the Disciples' movement. It has no ambition at all to be regarded as an organ of the Disciples' denomination. It is a free interpreter of the wider fellowship in religious faith and service which it believes every church of Disciples should embody. It strives to interpret all communions, as well as the Disciples, in such terms and with such sympathetic insight as may reveal to all their essential unity in spite of denominational isolation. The Christian Century, though published by the Disciples, is not published for the Disciples alone. It is published for the Christian world. It desires definitely to occupy a catholic point of view and it seeks readers in all communions.

The Church and Labor

THE CHURCH IS NOT A CLASS INSTITUTION. It belongs neither to the rich nor the poor. It is not the property of the brain worker or the hand worker, peculiarly. Man, woman or child equally claims its interest and its help. In the keeping of a Labor Sunday, the church takes no sectarian attitude in economics. On every day in the year, the church is ready, ideally at least, to hear the call for better human conditions in any section of society. Without adopting an economic creed, the church desires to be as human and sympathetic as Jesus Christ.

On Labor Sunday, our attention is drawn to a section of human society for special study, just as it is on foreign mission Sunday. Studying humanity in sections is necessary at times.

This year we may rejoice in the accomplishment of one of the big aims of the labor movement and of the churches in this country. Child labor has been forbidden by federal enactment, so far as it relates to goods offered for interstate shipment. The discussion of this bill showed a tremendously large majority in its favor, however much the bill was entangled with sectional questions. What is left to complete the great reform now rests with the individual states. It has become so odious for adults to live by robbing childhood of its heritage that soon we may expect satisfactory laws to be enacted in every state in the union.

The conditions that surround the labor of women are regulated by law in some state, but not in others. The topic is still a live one. England found that the military prestige of the nation was suffering because of children born with low vitality from factory mothers. In hard times, babies were better off than in good times, for they then had mothers. This led to the great reform in England with reference to the factory labor of women. Illinois now has a ten hour law and other humanitarian provisions safeguarding the labor of women.

The legal safeguards that regulate the conditions of factory labor of women and children are often broken down by the system of home labor known as the "sweatshop." Especially in the clothing industry and in the making of artificial flowers, the work has been taken over by women and children and the economic whip has at last broken down every condition as to hours or sanitary conditions. The church cannot look with favor upon a system that kills the weak of the race and spreads disease among us all.

The hours of labor per week of a workingman cannot be a matter of indifference. In former times the steel industry worked men twelve hours a day and seven days in the week. These men lost interest in the church, the home and all duties of citizenship. They were machines which were used to their capacity and at the age of fifty were thrown into the human junk pile for society in general to support. This in effect meant giving charity to the steel corporations, for they did not pay the social cost of their labor. Conditions in this industry are far better now. In every industry, men must have time for their other social obligations besides the duty of labor. In this the church has the deepest concern. The divorce between the church and labor, so far as it exists, is chiefly affected by the conditions of fatigue among workmen.

The wages of workmen is one of the most sensitive spots in our economic order. When the church chooses between a system involving low wages with charity aiding the unfortunate, or a system of high wages and independence for workmen, there can be no hesitation. If it be argued that wage earners would spend an excess of income foolishly, we have only to point to the over-crowded garages and ostentatious dinners of a certain section of the rich. Wastefulness is not the sin of any particular section of society. The wage standard affects vitally the health, morality, intelligence, and religion of the people.

The church cannot be indifferent to the cost of industry in the way of accidents. The ingenuity of Americans has constructed many wonderful machines. Many of these machines are exceedingly dangerous, such as the power saw. The same ingenuity which constructed the machinery can also safeguard it. It is not a question to be dealt with in cold economics, balancing damage suits against the new equipment. It is a question which makes human life of more significance than dividends.

The industrial conflicts of our age should not be settled by an appeal to force. Neither the fire-brand and dynamite of the agitator nor the cold-blooded starvation system of the organized employers is the right mode of settlement of an industrial dispute. Our complicated economic system has made us all interdependent. The right adjustment of the distribution of the fruits of industry is a question in which more people are involved than employer and employe. Before arbitration eliminates war between nations, it must be shown that it can eliminate civil war between the classes. A labor dispute should find its settlement in the application of both economic and religious principles. Both justice and mercy should have their place.

The abolition of poverty may sound like a fanciful goal But when we reflect upon the enormous resources of our country, it is the most simple problem in economics to show that we have the money to make impossible another death from starvation, to make it impossible that another baby shall die for the lack of ice and milk. We have the money to put a decent roof over every family, thus eliminating the scourge of epidemic. So far as our resources are concerned, our young men and young women can all be educated for their proper work in the world.

The City of God is to be let down from heaven upon the earth.

A divine order of society is even now possible for us, save for the hardness of our hearts.

Does any man say this is not the gospel? Let him read again the Four Evangelists who record for us the ideals of the Carpenter Prophet, the Son of Man. If any man find not the humanitarian viewpoint of the twentieth century in these gospels, then he reads through spectacles that hopelessly distort his vision.

New Testament Christianity involves social Christianity.

How can a man pretend to love God and despise his brother?

The Call of the Deep

By L. O. Bricker

Ps. 42-7: "Deep calleth unto the deep."

GOD and life and the world have something to say to us. It is required of us that we listen. Listening is well nigh a lost art with us. We much prefer to hear. We are great on hearing, and mistake noise for life. There is a vast difference between hearing and listening. You hear sound, you listen to silence. Hearing is sensation, excitement; listening is feeling, emotion, thought.

As Phillips Brooks said: "The world and the man. Behold them standing and looking into each other's eyes and listening to one another's words. Man can speak, and the world hears and obeys; it responds to his advancing character. The world also has its voices; even more sensitively does the man hear them. Its slightest whisper fills him with emotion. The man and the world, looking into each other's eyes and calling out one to the other—that is the deep calling unto the deep."

GOOD LISTENING.

The world's greatest men have been the world's best listeners. The men who have listened have a message. Moses did not invent the Ten Commandments, he received them. Handel did not compose "The Messiah," he transcribed it. When it was first rendered, the vast audience, swept off its feet by the majesty and glory of the great oratorio, broke into tumultuous applause and praise of the musician. Handel stood out before the cheering thousands and with the tears streaming down his face said: "Do not praise me; praise God. It all came from There."

Only little people mistake themselves for causes. Great men always say they are voices. Whenever there comes a man who knows how to listen, we crowd around him to hear the wonders he has to tell. Moses in the mountain heard God speak, and we make him the foremost figure in the first half of the world's life. Beethoven and Mendelssohn had the power to hear the harmonies of the universe, and though they have been long dead, we call them masters. The world and the man, looking into each other's eyes: both can speak, and both can hear.

"THE VOICE OF THE DEEP."

What is the voice of the deep saying unto us, and where can we hear it? There are three primary sources from which the voice of the deep calls unto the deep in us. The first is Nature. In nature there is a voice calling unto man. Nature is a revelation; she is man's first revelation; she is primitive man's only revelation. We have degraded her and taken her for a slave. When you speak of nature, what do most people understand you to mean? To one man, nature means merchandise and gain. He goes to nature for lumber and coal, and iron and oil. To others, nature means amusement; they go to the woods for picnics, to the streams for fishing, to the fields for hunting. To many others, nature means health; they go to the mountains and the sea in search of rest and health and ozone. To others, nature means knowledge; they count the leaves of the trees and the stamens of the flowers; they note the color and song of the birds; they read the rocks and name the stars and call it Nature Study, and set down the facts in Latin names. Nature is to these a cyclopaedia of scientific knowledge. No wonder the poet said: "Little we see in Nature that is ours."

Of course, nature is all these—merchandise, recreation, health, knowledge—incidentally. But first and foremost of all nature is revelation. Nature is God's first Bible. In it we may read the thoughts of God, the wisdom and goodness and beauty of God. Returning from his study of God in nature, David exclaimed: "The heavens declare the glory of God, and the earth showeth his handiwork." Job said: "I have heard of Thee with the hearing of the ear, but mine eye seeth Thee."

LISTENING TO GOD THROUGH NATURE.

The summer is with us. Many of you get away for a little, and the longing of most of you is to get back to nature for a few days. I wish you would go with an open heart, in a reverent listening mood, regarding all things that we see as holy, divine, inspired, because God made them—and let them inspire you. Do not come back morally enervated, spiritually starved; but come back spiritually strong, with the restored and renewed vision shining out of your eyes. It is in the power of nature to do more for your spirit than for your body. Have at least one day when the spirit of silence and reverence is upon you, when there is neither speech nor language, and the sound of your voice is not heard—then you will hear the deep calling unto the deep.

Secondly, there is the voice of God in the Bible. It is the deep calling unto the deep. The Bible has a commercial value. To bookmakers and booksellers it has been a gold mine. It has an historic value; a thousand facts of history and custom and experience are set down there. It has a literary value; it is a literary treasure, enshrining the finest and noblest things in human speech.

One man reads the Bible for figures and facts with which to wing his oratory; another reads it to prove his doctrine; another for proof-texts to support his theological system; another for his controversy, hunting for mistakes and contradictions. For all these, the Bible has no message. Its message is for the deeps of man's soul.

The Bible is not a book of knowledge; it is the literature of the spirit; its dreams are deep; its visions are high; its words are mystical. It can only be understood by the spiritual man. It is the deep calling unto the deep—it can only be read by the heart.

WHAT THE BIBLE IS.

There are some things there that are written for the valley—to be read through the lens of tears—stars that can be seen only when it is dark. Some are written for the day of joy, when prosperity and happiness tell us what God is.

If you would feel the heartbeat of God in the Bible, and hear the call of the deep, open it with this prayer: "O, God, give me such a spirit of mercy toward all my fellows that I may understand the literature of Thy mercy. Give me such a spirit of loving kindness and faithfulness toward all my brothers, my wife, my husband, my children, my church and my God that I may know Thy loving kindness and faithfulness, which is from generation unto generation. Make us so much men and women of love that we may understand Thy book of love and live Thy life of love. Open Thou mine eyes that I may behold the wonders of Thy law, and hear the deep calling unto the deep."

FORMAL RELIGION.

We come now to the deepest deep of all—the voice of God in man's soul. The deepest question of practical religion is: "Where are we to look to find God?" The answer of Jesus and the Apostles is this: "The kingdom of God is within you. If any man love me, he shall be loved of my Father also, and we will come unto him and take up our abode in him. Know ye not that ye are a temple of God, and that the Spirit of God dwelleth in you?" Within our own hearts we are to look to find God; and until we do find Him there we really have no God; God is just a name to us, and our relation to Him is merely formal. The only way for any man ever to have a vital religion—a religion that has power over his mind and life and conduct; that inspires his spirit and thrills his heart—is to look for and find God in his own soul. A formal relation to God has no power over the life.

The woman of Samaria is an example of formal religion. She was religious, as many are religious today. She believed that God could be found in two places: on his throne in heaven, and in the holy of holies of the Samaritan temple. They said he could also be found in the temple of Jerusalem, but she doubted it. Anyway, he could be found in these two places, and both were on the outside of her! She worshiped God in the Samaritan temple, and then went right on living her wicked life without shame or rebuke. When she sought to engage Jesus in controversy over the claims of the rival temples, presenting the cause of the Samaritan temple, Jesus said unto her: "You worship you know not what." She had no inner knowledge of the God she worshiped. Then he said unto her: "The hour is come when neither in this mountain, nor yet in Jerusalem, shall men worship the Father, for God is Spirit, and they that worship must worship him in spirit"—in their own spirit—"and in truth," their life corresponding with their worship. In substance, Jesus told her that God has two thrones, one in the highest heaven, and one in the lowliest heart; and that it is within our own hearts that we are to look to find him. and worship the Spirit in our spirit.

A MODERN WOMAN OF SAMARIA.

I heard some time ago a remarkable confession, which was the Samaritan woman's story all over again. A woman rescued from a life of shame said: "I have found out that God is in my own soul, and I am learning to worship him there."

During all the years of her shame she went regularly to church. She found that she could go through the forms of her church worship, reciting the creed, reading the prayers, joining in the re-him, who lighteneth every man coming into sponses and hymns, without surrendering her heart to God, or quitting her shameful life, or being very sharply rebuked; for you see, it was all on the outside of her, and none of it touched her in any vital way. One day she was told face to face that her body was a temple of God, and that the Spirit of God was dwelling in her, and that she was shaming and befouling and insulting God by the way she was living. The vivid conviction and consciousness nearly killed her. Her formal relation to a God outside of her had no power to cleanse her corrupt life; but a conviction of the presence of the living God within her had that power. She had to put away those sinful practices that were contrary to his nature; she felt compelled to make herself as good and clean as she could. Her change of worship has changed her life.

And anyone, changing from the formal worship of God outside to a living worship and communion with God in his own soul, will experience the same wonderful transformation in thought and conduct and life. When you think of God and Christ and the Holy Spirit, think of them as within your own soul. "You are a temple of God." Christ in you is your hope of glory. "The Holy Spirit dwelleth with you and shall be in you."

"YE ARE A TEMPLE OF GOD."
